2. To juſtifie us from our ſinnes, for whom hee called them hee juſtified, Rom. 8. 30.
3. To ſanctifie us in our lives, as S. Jude teſtifieth, ver. 1.

Three inſeparable effects of effectuall calling. 1 Cor. 1. 2.

But now, to ſpeake of each one of theſe two kinds of calling a little more particularly; and;

1. Tou-

1. Touching the outward calling, we must note, that as many are called; so he calleth them many waies, especially

1. By the painefull preaching of his Word.
2. By the manifold benefits of his grace.
3. By the manifest judgements of his anger.

1. Touching the outward calling.

Vide concionem 3. p. 72.

1. God gave his Word, and great were the number of the Preachers, and he commanded them to preach unto all Nations; and so their sound went unto all lands, to all countries, to all places, but especially to this place, where there are painefull and learned men, that doe often preach, and continually call; and yet I feare their preaching is unrespected, I am sure themselves are unregarded: and I dare boldly testifie these two things;

God calleth us diverse waies. Psal 68 11.
1. By the preaching of his word. Mat. 28. 19.

1. That in all England, I thinke I may say in all the world, there are not more learned, and more painefull Preachers, then in this famous Cittie of London.

Two things affirmed.
1. Thing.

2. That over all England, there are many unworthy men, many a sir Iohn lacke-Latine, many a Priest lacke preaching, that have better respect and more maintenance from poore peasants, then the worthiest Preachers in this Cittie have from your worthy Cittizens: I confesse, you respect them at your tables, and doe much out of your benevolence; but you may assure your selves, that for the Preachers to have their trenchers at your tables, and their meanes ex gratuito, & non ex debito, is neither profitable for you nor comfortable unto them: In this respect it grieveth me when I consider the grave and worthy Preachers of this Cittie, and many others of the Country, &c. I have tried both places, quorum pars magna fui. I have ended this point.

2. Thing.

That it is not good for Preachers to live upon benevolences.

2. God seekes to draw men unto him in the chaines of love, when he gives unto them, beneficia nimis copiosa, multa & magna, privata & positiva, many and great blessings, thereby to allure them unto his service.

2. By the benefits of his grace.

3. If men will not turne, nor answer to the first and second call, then will he whet his glittering sword, and his hand shall take hold of vengeance, he will powre out the vialls of his wrath, thereby to convert them or confound them: and no marvell, for debet amor lasus irasci, love too much provoked must waxe angrie.

3. By the judgements of his anger.

All these waies hath God called us: the Preachers cried, and doe cry and call continually; his blessings have beene manifold, and his judgements have beene manifested in some measure upon our nation: O then let us take heed unto our selves, and not harden our hearts any longer, but let us hearken unto his voice, lest he sweare in his wrath, that we shall not enter into his rest. But

Psal 95. 11.

2. Indeed all these kinds of outward callings are but in vaine, and bring no benefit unto us, unlesse the LORD calleth us inwardly by his Spirit: For

2. Touching the inward calling. In vaine is all our outward calling, unlesse wee bee inwardly called by Gods Spirit.

1. Nisi Spiritus adsit cordi audientis, inanis est labor docentis; In vaine do we preach unto your eares, unlesse the Spirit of God doth open your hearts, as he did the heart of Lydia, that you may beleeve our preaching, as she did the preaching of Saint Paul.

1. In vaine. Greg. hom. 30. super Evangel.

2. All the blessings of the world will but puffe us up with pride (as they did the Israelites, as Moses sheweth, dilectus meus impinguatus calcitravit, my beloved fatted and inlarged spurned with his heeles) unlesse God doth give us the grace to use those blessings to the glory of his name.

2. In vaine. Deut. 32. 15.

3. All punishments and all judgements will sooner worke desperation then conversion in a sinfull soule, unlesse the grace of God work true humility in us, to make a right use of his fatherly chastisements.

3. In vaine.

And this experience daily sheweth unto us; for First, the Word is preached unto us, and the one beleeveth it the other refuseth it: Secondly, God bestoweth his blessings upon men, but the one is puffed up with pride, and the other is truely thankfull: Thirdly, God sendeth his judgements for sinne, but the one groweth desperate with Saul, and the other is humbled with David: And what is the cause of this? to the one sort, he sendeth his messengers onely to call them outwardly, but to the other sort he sendeth his spirit, and giveth his grace, to make them yeeld unto his calling inwardly: and this effectuall calling of the Saints, to believe the Gospell, and to obey the voice of God, is the effect and fruit of the love of God.

Effectuall calling the fruit of Gods love.

Whensoever therefore we be outwardly called, by what way or meanes soever it be, let us presently pray to God, that he would inwardly work in our hearts, to incline them to yeeld unto his calling, or els the outward calling will bring no benefit, but only make us without excuse.

Effectuall calling, what it is.

But to speake a little further of this inward and effectuall calling; which is nothing els, but an internall secret working of Gods Spirit in the hearts of Gods elect, to sever and translate them from the world of unbelievers, to become members of Christ by faith, and to lead a holy and a godly life, according to the precepts and doctrine of Christ; I desire you to consider these few particulars, as Five things considered touching inward and effectuall calling.

1. The meanes by which it is effected.
2. The time when it is planted.
3. The persons in whom it is ingraffed.
4. The tokens whereby it is discerned.
5. The helps that further us to procure it.

} And

1 It is wrought by the Spirit of Christ. 1 Cor.12.13.

1. This effectuall calling of the Saints is inwardly wrought by the Spirit of Christ, in the hearts of all the godly, as the Apostle sheweth; but you must observe that, although God can immediately by himselfe call men unto his grace and faith in Christ, without any other ministery, either of men, or Angels, as he did Adam in paradise, Abraham in Charran, and S. Paul in his journey to Damascus, and doth now likewise call most, or many (no doubt) of those infants that die without baptisme, and of them that are borne dumbe or deafe, if they be of Christian parents, by a way incomprehensible to us; yet usually God doth effect all his inward graces by some outward meanes, and as he produceth us into the world, by our parents seed, he augmenteth us, and preserveth our life by our food and sustenance; so he doth regenerate us by the immortall seed of his Word, and then he increaseth and preserveth this faith in us by the same meanes as it was begotten.

Without meanes.

That the Spirit of Christ usually worketh his grace by outward means

God not tied to meanes.

Neither doth he, which is both liberrimus & potentissimus agens, the freest and the most powerfull agent, tie himselfe to bring his owne purpose to passe alwaies by the same meanes; but as he doth sometimes work without any meanes, so he doth sometimes worke by weake meanes; as when through the foolishnesse of preaching he confounded all the wisdome of the world, & with the words of a few fisher-men he blunted the edge of all the weapons of the greatest Monarchs; and somtimes he doth work by unlikely meanes, as when by crosses and afflictions, which make the wicked to blaspheme God, he maketh many of his children, with Manasses and the prodigall child, to returne home unto their fathers house; and somtimes he worketh contrary to the proper nature of the meanes, as when he humbleth us by our sinnes; and maketh our fals to make us the more warie to look unto our selves.

By weake meanes 1 Cor.1.18, 19.

By unlikely meanes Luke 15.17.

By contrary meanes.

2. The time of our effectuall calling, God decreed to call us from the beginning, but he effecteth the same in time.

2. For the time of this calling, though, as faith and hope, and all other saving graces are virtually or seminally in the Saints from the beginning, as some do think, so this grace, being the fruit of our election, as S. Paul sheweth, Rom. 8. 28. must needs be in us before it be perceived of us; yet, as it is excited, revived, and actually wrought to be perceptible in us and by us, I say that it is in some sooner, and in some later, according as God, in his eternall counsell, hath pre-ordained the time of every ones calling; for so our Saviour shadoweth out the same in the parable of the husbandman, that hired labourers into his vineyard, some at the third houre, some at the sixt, some at the ninth, and some not till the eleventh houre; and the Scripture sheweth it more plainly in the example of Iosias and Timothy, that were called from their child-hood, of Ieremie that was sanctified, and Iohn Baptist that was filled with the Holy Ghost in his mothers wombe;

Mat.20.1,2,3,

2 Reg.22.1. 2 Tim.3.15. Luke 1.

Zacheus

Zacheus and Saint Paul in their full age, and the thiefe at the laſt houre; one example, that no man ſhould deſpaire of his converſion, and but onely one in all the Scripture; that no man ſhould preſume to goe on in ſinne; becauſe one ſwallow makes no ſummer; and though Baalams aſſe did once ſpeake; yet thats no argument to prove that mine ſhall ſpeake likewiſe; and therefore the ſafeſt way is to returne to God betimes, while wee have time to call for grace.

Luk.19. Act.9.

Num.22.28.

3. For the perſons, in whom this effectuall calling is wrought and ingrafted; we muſt know, that in regard of the common corruption of our nature, we are all alike unfit and uncapable of this effectuall calling, and no man hath any power in any meaſure, left in himſelfe, to prepare or fit himſelfe, to receive this grace, when it is offered unto him by God; becauſe wee are dead in treſpaſſes and ſinnes; and the power to will and to doe is of God; when of our ſelves wee are not able to thinke a good thought; yet the Word of God hath reveiled thus much unto us, that in reſpect of the outward condition of man, there bee ſome more indiſpoſed and further from that capability of receiving this grace then others bee; as, for example, to ſet downe both the one and the other.

3. Perſons which are effectually called.

No man naturally more capable to be called then another. Ephe.2.1. Phil.2.13.

1. Though to God it is all alike eaſie to call all, or any one as another, none ſo farre indiſpoſed but he can as eaſily diſpoſe him, either ſecretly without meanes, or according to the uſuall meanes, to be moſt apt and willing to receive this grace, yet, in reſpect of outward appearances, we find theſe men moſt indiſpoſed to be effectually called unto Chriſt.

1. Who are moſt indiſpoſed to bee called.

1. Pagans, Iewes, Turkes, Infidels, that are without the precincts of the Church, and have not thoſe outward meanes of the preaching of the Law and Goſpell, whereby God doth ordinarily worke this inward grace in the hearts of men; for, if God doth the ſame extraordinarily in any one, that belongs to the ſecret things of God, which we can take no notice of, and are forbidden to prie into it.

1. All without the Church.

2. We find many within the boſome of the Church, and of thoſe that have given their names to Chriſt, and doe march under his banner, and profeſſe his Religion, and yet are very much indiſpoſed to receive this grace; as

2. Within the Church.

1. Thoſe proud juſtitiaries, that are puffed up with a conceit of their owne righteouſneſſe; becauſe Chriſt came not to call the righteous unto repentance.

1. Proud juſtitiaries. Mat.9.13.

2. Thoſe deſpiſers of godlineſſe, that, as the Prophet ſaith, doe ſit in the ſeat of the ſcornefull; becauſe God hath forbidden us to give the outward holy things unto theſe doggs, or to caſt our pearles before ſuch ſwine; and therefore, no doubt, but God will hardly give his inward grace unto them.

2 Deſpiſers of good things. Pſal.1.1. Mat.7.6.

3. Thoſe impenitent and obdurate ſinners, that ſtop their eares unto the voice of the charmer, and after their hardneſſe and heart that cannot repent, deſpiſe the bounty and long ſuffering and patience of God; for ſo the Lord ſaith; Becauſe I have called and yee refuſed, I have ſtretched out my hand and no man regarded, but yee have ſet at naught all my counſell and would none of my reproofe; therefore, I will alſo laugh at your calamity, and I will mocke when your feare commeth, when your feare commeth as deſolation, and your deſtruction commeth as a whirlewinde; and

3. Accuſtomed ſinners. Pſal.58.5. Rom.2.4,5.

Pro 1.24,25,26, 27.

4. To be briefe, the worldly wiſe, as Saint Paul ſheweth, and the rich men of this world, as our Saviour teſtifieth, and all ſuch as hunt after the pompe and vanities of this preſent life, are not ſo apt and ſo able, ſo long as they are ſuch, to receive the graces of the life to come.

4. The worldly wiſe, rich, and the like. 1 Cor.1.20. Marke 10.24,25.

2. Thoſe that in our judgement, according to all outward probabilities, that we collect out of Gods Word, are moſt diſpoſed and apteſt for this grace of effectuall calling, are the poore, ſimple, needie, meane, and contemptible men, both in reſpect of birth, wealth, and all other outward dignities; as you may ſee in *Matth.*11.15. where our Saviour ſaith, that the Goſpell is preached to the poore,

2. Who, in all appearance, are beſt diſpoſed to receive this grace poore, and in the 25. verse he thanketh his Father, that hee hid those things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes, that is, to simple and silly ones, in the judgement of the wise men of this world; and in the 1 *Cor.*1.28,29. where the Apostle tells us plainely, that God hath called the foolish, and the vile, and the things that are not in the opinion of worldly men, to condemne the wise, and the mighty, and to bring to naught things that are, that is, splendid and magnificent in the eyes of men.

Vide 1 Cor.1.28, 29,&c.

The reason why God chuseth meane things.

And the reason hereof is rendred by the Apostle, that no flesh should glory in Gods presence, which is a most considerable and a most excellent reason, that when they can finde nothing in themselves, whereunto they might attribute their conversion, they should wholly ascribe the same to the grace of Christ, unto the praise and glory of God, who finding nothing in them but poverty, simplicity, and baseneſse, doth notwithstanding call them into his favour, before all those worldly rich and noble men of this world.

4. The signes whereby this grace is discerned

4. For the signes and tokens whereby this grace is discerned, we must understand, that, although there be three speciall times, wherein a man called to Christ, can very hardly discerne whether hee hath received this grace or not; as

Three times wherein this grace is hardly discerned.

1. Immediately after he is actually called, when he may be so weake in Christ, as a new-borne babe.

1. Time.

2. After a strange and a strong fit of temptation, when a quame of soule-sickneſse comes over his heart.

2. Time.

3. After some grosse and grievous fall into sin, as Davids adultery, and Saint Peters deniall of his Master, when through the stroke and sence of his sinne, hee is like a man in a trance, benummed and become senceleſse of all grace.

3. Time.

That wee may know this calling. 1 Cor.2.12. Act.26 18. Luk.4.18. Ephes.5.8.

Yet questionleſse, at other times, a man may know that he is called unto Christ; for wee know by the spirit the things that are given us of God; and our calling being, an opening of the eyes of the blind: a setting at liberty such as were in prison and a quickning of the dead; it is impossible, that these things should be wrought in them, and they not perceive it; and besides, joy being not of uncertaine or unknowne things, but of things surely comprehended, it is most certaine, that there can be no inward joy, nor any Christian comfort, for the good things that are promised, if there be no sure knowledge of our estate present; but this knowledge is not by any infused revelation, and so infallible a parte ante; but is collected by deduction a parte post, from the effects of grace and the fruits of Gods spirit; which, though indeed they be very many, yet may they be reduced to these two heads,

How wee may know it.

The two surest signes of our calling.

1. To heare the voice of Christ.
2. To doe the will of God.

} For

1. Hearing Gods Word. Ioh.10.27. & v.5.

Of the first our Saviour saith, my sheep heare my voice, and the voice of a stranger they will not heare, that is, the suggestions of the divell, the concupiscence of the flesh, the temptations of the world, and the perswasions of false teachers, Hereticks Schismaticks and the like, which are all strangers unto us, and seeke to estrange us all from Christ; and

2. Doing Gods will. Ioh.10.27.

Of the second he saith, that his sheepe follow him, that is, in their lives and conversations, in the examples of peace, piety and all godlinesse.

5. The helpes to procure this grace, twofold. 1. Private helpes to obtaine this grace. Occasions apprehended do add great strength unto our sinfull natures, but eschewed do further grace.

5. For the helpes whereby, not onely this grace is procured and effected, but is also discerned to be in us, as being both the meanes, by which it is wrought, and also the assured signes of its being in us; they are specially of two sorts,

1. Private.
2. Publique.

} ?

1. Private, as confessions of our sinnes past, feare of offending God, abstaining from all acts of sinne, suppressing of inward lust, eschewing all the occasions of evill, private fasting, often reading of Gods Word, continuall praying, the society of the faithfull, and the avoiding of evill company, whose leand words and and wicked acts, are as pitch to defile us, as poyson to infect us, and as mighty provocations to pull us backe from all good, and to drive us headlong into all evill.

2. The publique helpes and furtherances of our effectuall vocation, are especially foure. 2. Publique helpes

1. To be catechized in the grounds of our Religion.
2. To heare the Word continually preached.
3. To be ever at the publique Lyturgie and service of the Church.
4. To be frequent receivers of the blessed Eucharist.

For so we find, that God hath appointed these as powerfull instruments, whereby it pleaseth him, most mightily, to worke, for the saving of his elect; and therefore, though, as I said before, God can worke any grace in us, immediately by himselfe, when, where, and how hee please, without any outward meanes; yet it is our duty to depend upon such meanes, as wee find in the Word of God to be ordained by God, for such workes; or els the contemning of these meanes may be a just cause of condemning us. And so much for their vocation. We must use the meanes if we desire grace.

CHAP. VII.

God onely simply holy, and holy in all his waies, in the election and reprobation of his creatures, giving of graces, and rendering of rewards. Foure other sorts of creatures holy. 1. Christ. 2. All the faithfull, in heaven, in earth; the Saints departed how farre to be honoured; Ministers to be holier then others; all Christians Saints in a threefold respect; best Saints have their imperfections, and what we learne thereby. 3. All outward professors Saints; the many sorts of fained Saints. 4. Consecrated things holy, and the exeellencie of holinesse.

3. TOouching their sanctification, called to be Saints, we must understand that the word ἁγιος, is derived from the privative particle α, and γη, which signifies the earth, as if it were a separating from earthly things. 3 The Saints are distinguished from all others in respect of Sanctification.

So it signifieth a pure and a cleane thing, free from all contagion and touch of inferiour things; and it is taken two waies:

1. ἁπλως, } simply, or
2. Κατὰ τὶ. } in some respect. Sanctity twofold.

1. In the first sense, GOD onely is of himselfe, and of his owne nature simply holy, and the Author of all holinesse; for God is light, and in him there is no darkenesse at all; and the blessed Virgin saith, holy is his name: and as the Poet saith, 1. Sense God only holy. 1 Ioh. 1. 5. Luk. 1. 49.

Conveniunt rebus nomina sæpe suis. Names doe agree with things; Holinesse the chiefe attribute of God. Esay 6. 3.

For this name sheweth his nature, and the greatest praise of God; for the glorious Seraphims, which Esaias saw, and those wonderous creatures, which S. Iohn did see, cryed three times, holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts, which we doe not read of any other attribute of God. Apoc. 4. 8.

And therefore Damascen reporteth, that when the people of Constantinople were terribly afraid of some dangers, and did humbly pray unto God against the same, a child was suddenly rapt up on high, and was taught by the Angels this holy Song, Sanctus Deus, Sanctus fortis, Sanctus immortalis, miserere nostri, holy God, holy Almighty, holy immortall God, have mercy upon us; and when he was let downe and had declared the same unto the people, the whole multitude sung the same incessantly, and so were delivered from all the dangers that they feared. Damasc. l. 3. c. 10. A memorable storie.

And

3. Person of the Trinity called holy Spirit. Exod.28.36.

And for this cauſe, the third Perſon of the bleſſed Trinity, as by a proper name, is called holy Spirit; and therefore in that golden plate that was to adorne Aarons forehead, was ingraven ἁγιασμα Κυϱιϱ, as the Septuagint tranſlate it, that is ſanctitas Iehovæ, as Tremelius, or ſanctum Domino, as the vulgar hath it, holineſſe to the Lord, or, all ſanctity is to be aſcribed unto the Lord, and doth only proceed from the Lord.

Our Churches higheſt ſtraine of devotion.

In this reſpect, our Church, in her higheſt ſtraine of devotion, immediately after the receiving of the bleſſed Sacrament, ſings unto God, tu ſolus ſanctus, thou onely art holy, thou onely art the Lord, that is, ſimply in all reſpects, eſſentially in himſelfe, and cauſally the fountaine of all holineſſe and purity in all his creatures.

That God is holy in all his doings.

And yet, of all Gods attributes, this is moſt contradicted and murmured againſt by the wicked, as if he were not pure, upright, and holy, eſpecially,

1. In the election of his creatures.
2. In the diſtribution of his graces.
3. In the remuneration of our deſerts.

1. In election and reprobation. Rom.9.21. Exod.33.19.

But for the firſt we anſwer, that he hath jus abſolutum in creaturas, an abſolute right over all his creatures, ſo that he may do with them what he will, even as the Potter hath power of the clay, as the Apoſtle ſheweth; and yet we ſay, that he doth not uſe the ſame, nor præparare filios ad patibulum, but finding them all in the maſſe of corruption by Adams tranſgreſſion, he doth ſhew mercy upon whom he will, and whom he will he leaveth ſtill in that ſtate, wherein they were, not created nor intruded by him, but moſt miſerably fallen in the loynes of Adam. So that herein God ſheweth unto his elect, indebitam miſericordiam, more than deſerved mercy, and to the other, nothing but debitam juſtitiam, what they moſt juſtly deſerved.

2. In beſtowing his graces. Mat.25.15. Mat.20.13.

To the ſecond we ſay, that although he giveth to one five talents, to others but one, to others none at all, that he exalteth one, pulleth downe another, and ſo of all other gifts and graces, whether temporall or ſpirituall; yet we ſay that he doth no wrong to him that hath leaſt, or that hath none at all; quia non tenetur Creator creaturæ, becauſe he is debtor to none, and he is not bound to give unto any; and therefore he may moſt juſtly and freely do what he will with his owne, as our Saviour ſheweth moſt excellently in the parable of the labourers hired unto his vineyard.

3. In rendring of rewards. Rom 2.7. & v.10. Verſ.9.

And to the third we anſwer, that in giving unto them, which by continuance in well doing, ſeeke glory, and honour, and immortality, eternall life, he ſheweth himſelfe moſt gracious and mercifull; as all men will confeſſe; and in rendring vengeance to them that obey not God, indignation and wrath upon every ſoule that ſinneth, he ſheweth himſelfe moſt juſt and upright; as themſelves cannot denie.

And therefore the Prophet Eſay, Chap.5. after he had ſet downe many of Gods judgments againſt the wicked, leſt any ſhould think God unjuſt therin, he addeth, that the Lord of hoſts ſhould be exalted in judgement, and the holy God ſhould be ſanctified in juſtice, Verſ.16. that is, acknowledged pure and holy, and commended for his juſtice. And ſo you ſee, that, as the Prophet David ſaith, the Lord is righteous in all his works, and holy in all his wayes: and though, as S. Auguſtine ſaith, the judgements of God occulta eſſe poſſunt, cannot be alwaies underſtood of us, by reaſon of our owne ignorance, yet injuſta eſſe non poſſunt, they are alwaies moſt juſt and holy; and therefore he is holy, holy, holy; holy in the election of his creatures, holy in the diſtribution of his graces, and holy in the retribution of our deſerts, holy ſimply, holy in all reſpects, and the onely fountaine of all holineſſe. Pſal.145.17.

2. Senſes, other things holy.

2. There are other things called holy, by communication of holineſſe, or by receiving the ſame from this fountaine of holineſſe: and in this ſenſe we find holineſſe aſcribed to the creatures, and eſpecially to foure ſorts of them, viz.

1. To

For
1. To the man Christ Iesus.
2. To all truly faithfull.
3. To all outward Professours.
4. To all things dedicated.

Foure sorts of creatures holy.

1. In this kind of holinesse, the man Christ Iesus holdeth the first place; for he is perfectly holy, and so is none besides him, saith S. Augustine; and therefore Beda saith, that he is singulariter sanctus, singularly holy, and perfectly holy, in a double respect.

1. The man Christ Iesus. Aug. to. 8. Beda in Lu. l. 1. c. 2 fo 3.

Christ holy in a double respect.
1. By reason of the hypostaticall union with the Deity.
2. By reason of the most perfect and most absolute quality of holinesse impressed in his humanity.

For he received the Spirit of sanctity without measure; and therefore he is called that holy thing, and that holy one, conceived without sinne; because conceived of the Holy Ghost; borne without sinne; because borne of a Virgin; and lived without sinne; because in his mouth was found no guile; and therefore among all creatures he onely is perfectly and singularly holy.

Ioh 3.34. Luk 1.35. Mat. 1.20. Ver. 23. 1 Pet. 2. 22.

2. S. Bernard tels us, that among other creatures, there be Saints from heaven, (whereby, as I think, he meaneth the Angels) and Saints from the earth, whereof (saith he) there be

2. All the Angels and faithfull.

For
1. Some in heaven.
2. Some in earth.

1. Those that are in heaven are those holy men, that having overcome the world, and being delivered from all sin, and indued with perfect holinesse, do now triumph with Christ, and alwaies behold the face of God.

1. The faithfull that are in heaven

And because they are perfectly delivered from sinne, and from the striving betwixt the flesh and the Spirit, and are now received into that Sanctum Sanctorum, the holy of holies, into which none uncleane thing shall enter, Rev. 21. ult. and are likewise now, not onely holy, by the imputative righteousnesse of Christ, but also by a perfect inherent righteousnesse, quia facti sunt prope, because they are made neare unto God, not only by a blessed communion through the inhabitation of grace, but also by an immediate conjunction, through the fruition of glory; therefore the name of Saints may more properly be given and ascribed to them, than to the holiest and godliest man upon the face of the earth.

Rev. 21. ult.

The faithfull in heaven most properly called Saints.

And therefore this should teach us, as not to ascribe too much honour, so not to denie their due honour unto them.

Bellarmine indeed doth ascribe too much honour unto them; as Bellar. l. 1. c. 7 de Sanct. beatitud.

First, The canonization of some of them for Saints, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, above all others.

Too much honour ascribed to the Saints departed,

Secondly, The invocation of them in our prayers.

Thirdly, The erection of Temples to them.

Fourthly, The oblation of Eucharisticall Sacrifices upon their Canonicall houres.

Fiftly, The celebration of so many holy-dayes to them.

Sixtly, The collation of their Pictures in our Churches, with too much reverence.

Seventhly, the adoration of their reliques.

All which, the Word of God never commanded, themselves never required, and the Primitive Church never practised, in that sort as our adversaries have maintained; for

1. Canonization of them, when it began Caranza de relig. sanctor.

1. Their canonization began not till 880. when Adrian tooke upon him this authority, and Alexander the third confirmed it, or not before Leo the third, as Bellarmine himselfe confesseth.

2 Invocation of them, when it began. Origen hom. 2. ad Rom. & hom 3 in Cant. Nazian Orat. de laude Gorgonii.

2. Their invocation by us, and intercession for us, was a point never questioned, untill the time of Origen, and afterwards by Nazianzen, it was proposed doubtfully, but never received certainly.

3. Dedication of Temples, how first ascribed to the Saints.

3. The dedication of Temples was but only a naming of the Churches after their names, either becauſe they were builders of them, or onely for diſtinction ſake, to know one Church from the other; for Saint Auguſtine proveth that none but God ſhould have any Temple erected to him, and Saint Baſil and Saint Ambroſe do proove the Holy Ghoſt to be a true God, becauſe he hath a Temple.

Aug. l. 1. cont. Maxim.

4. The Canonicall houres were not inſtituted a long while after the time of the Apoſtles, ſaith Walfridus.

4. Canonicall houres, when firſt invented. Walfridus de rebus eccl. c. 15.

5. For holy-dayes, we celebrate as many as the firſt Chriſtians did.

5. Holy dayes.

6. Their pictures, we confeſſe may be uſed for civill uſes, but not in Temples to be worſhipped, nor for Lay-mens bookes to be accounted, and ſpecially thoſe that have beene heretofore abuſed to idolatry.

6. Pictures how far lawfull.

7. Their reliques are but forgeries, wee know not which they be; for though the Croſſe of Chriſt was no bigger than a man might beare, yet the parcels of wood, that, they ſay, were parts of that Croſſe (if they were gathered together) would load a ſhip: and ſo we may think of all other reliques.

7. Reliques are but meere forgeries.

And therefore, though they be perfect Saints in heaven, yet dare we not give more honour unto them, than the Word of God doth warrant unto us.

But on the other ſide, we ſhould not derogate their due from them; for as Helvidius in the time of S. Hierome was a Mariæ-maſtix, (as Roſſenſis termes him) ſo have we many that are the ſcourge of the Saints, and cannot indure to call them Saints: we muſt therefore underſtand that the Saints in heaven are to be honoured and highly eſteemed of us; for naturale eſt præmium virtutis honos, it is a naturall thing, that praiſe ſhould be the reward of vertue; and ſo God promiſeth that men ſhould ſpeake of their wiſdome, and the congregations ſhould declare their praiſes: and therefore the ſonne of Syrach doth highly commend the Saints of God; and ſo Saint Paul himſelfe, and S. Auguſtine ſaith, in Deo laudandi ſunt, they are to be praiſed in the Lord; and Damaſcen ſaith, that it behoveth us to honour the Saints as the friends of Chriſt, and as the ſonnes and heires of God; and S. Ambroſe ſaith, that whoſoever honoureth a Martyr, honoureth Chriſt, and he that deſpiſeth the Saints, deſpiſeth the Lord.

Not to contemne the Saints in heaven. Roſſenſis l. cont. Lutheranos f. 8. in marg. Ariſt. l. 1. c. 12. alibi.

Eccl. 44 per totum & cap ſeq. Heb. 11. per totum Aug. to. 2. f. 223. Damaſc. l. 4. c. 16. de fide Orthod. Amb. ſer. 6. in fin.

Why the Saints in heaven are to be honoured.

1. For that they are not only the conſorts of Angels, but alſo the glory of God, as Theophilact ſpeaketh, f. 191.

1. Reaſon.

2. Becauſe we receive much benefit by them; for by their paines the Word of God is explaned to us, by their bloud the truth of God is preſerved and ſealed unto us, and by their examples we are provoked to ſanctity, quia ſanctorum vita norma vivendi nobis eſt, becauſe the lives of the Saints is a rule of life to us, ſaith S. Ambroſe, and the hiſtory of the Saints doth induce us to imitate their examples, ſaith Nazianzen de laude Baſilij.

2. Reaſon.

Amb. to. 4. f. 248.

And therefore, ſeeing we receive ſo much good from them, both for illuſtration of Doctrine, and imitation in manners, though we do not adore them as Gods, yet we do reverence and honour them for Saints: and as the remembrance of Ioſias is like the compoſition of the perfume that is made by the Art of the Apothecary; ſo the remembrance of the Saints is precious unto us, their memoriall is bleſſed; we reverence their names, we love their pictures, more deare than the pictures of our deareſt friends, and in all reſpects we give them as much honour as either God commanded, or themſelves required.

Eccl. 49. 1.

2. Thoſe that are Saints on earth, are taken

2. The faithfull that are on earth.

Two ſorts.

For { 1. Primarily, for the faithfull Miniſters. 2. Secondarily, for the godly Chriſtians.

1. Saint Ambroſe in 2 Corinth. 1. ſaith, that by Saints may be underſtood the Prieſts or Preachers of Gods Word: and it is obſerved by S. Cyrill, Maldonat, Bernard, and others, that heretofore the Prophets or Preachers, and holy men, or Saints, were voces convertibiles, equivalent ſpeeches, and ſo it ſeemes that the name of Prophet in Gen. 20. 7. Luke 7. 16. Ioh. 9. 17. doth imply a holy and an upright man.

1. Preachers above all other men ſhould excell in ſanctity.

And

And therefore David aſcribeth this Epithete unto Aaron, the Saint of the Lord; For they are as a Cittie placed upon a hill, on whom every eye doth looke, and of whom every tongue doth ſpeake: and therefore they ſhould approve themſelves to bee Sancti κατ' ἐξοχὴν, Saints above all others, like Gregory Nazianzen, of whom Ruffinus teſtifieth, that ea docuit qua fecit, & ſeipſum minimè condemnavit agendo contraria quam docebat, he did the things which he taught, and did not condemne himſelfe by teaching one thing, and doing the contrarie; for a true Preacher preacheth not only with his words in the Church, but alſo by his workes in the world, and he that preacheth unto others and doth not the ſame himſelfe, is like the Cooke that dreſſeth good meat for others, but taſteth not a bit thereof himſelfe.

Pſal. 105. 16.

Mat. 5. 14.

Ruffinus in vita Naz.

The praiſe of Nazianzen.

But he is a true Preacher, that is in verbis Chryſoſtomus, in factis Polycarpus; the voice of a Cryer in the pulpit, and a Saint of God in the world; a painefull Preacher and a godly liver: and therefore in the garment of the Prieſt, there were to be a golden Bell and a Pomegranate, a golden Bell and a Pomegranate in the skirts of the robe round about; And the Law threatned death unto the Prieſt, if hee made not a ſound with his Bels, that is, if he preached not the Goſpell, as S. Gregory expoundeth it: And you know that in a golden Bell there are two things,

A true Preacher ſhould preach both in life and doctrine. Exod. 28. 34.

Greg. Paſtor. p. 2. c. 4.

Two things in a golden bell.

$$\begin{cases} 1.\ Matter, \\ 2.\ Sound, \end{cases} \text{ or } \begin{cases} 1.\ \text{Price.} \\ 2.\ \text{Pleaſure.} \end{cases}$$

For a golden Bell, $\begin{cases} 1.\ Pretio\ valet, \text{ is very deere;} \\ 2.\ Dulciter\ ſonat, \text{ ſoundeth ſweetly; that is,} \end{cases}$

It is pretious in eſtimation, and pleaſant in the eloquution: So ſhould our Sermons bee full of profitable matters, in a pleaſant ſtile; for a good matter ſlubbered up in rude termes, becommeth loathſome to the hearers; and elegancie of words without ſoundneſſe of matter, is but niceneſſe and vanity: and therefore a Preacher ſhould match words of delight with words of truth: for the lips of the Spouſe, (that is, the Preachers of the Church, as Saint Gregory expoundeth it, nam prædicatores benè labia dicuntur, quia per eos populis loquitur Chriſtus, & populus Chriſto) drop downe hony-combes, that is, excellent matter, and that very ſweetly.

How a Sermon ſhould be compoſed of matter and words.

Idem in Cantic.

And to the golden Bels ſhould be added Pomegranates, which is an excellent fruit, and was therefore added for a ſymboll of good workes; for hee wanteth Pomegranates to his Bels, that joyneth not holy workes unto his heavenly words, ſaith S. Gregory; and all this was to ſignifie what ſanctitie and holineſſe was required in the life of the Prieſts above all other men whatſoever.

Pomegranats the ſymbole of good workes.

And therefore the Fathers of the Primitive Church were wonderfull holy and upright; they had ſtabilitatem in fide, ſanctitatem in opere, ſuch conſtancy in their profeſſion, and ſuch ſincerity in their converſation, as that none could juſtly accuſe them, as Ruffinus ſheweth in the life of Nazianzen, and Nazianzen in the praiſe of S. Baſil, and Poſſidon. in the life of S. Auguſtine, and S. Hierom in the lives of the Fathers, do declare.

What holineſſe was in the primitive prieſts.

But within a ſhort time this ſanctity was changed to iniquity, and that ſaying was fulfilled, qualis Sacerdos talis populus, like Prieſt, like people; nay ſaith Saint Bernard, the Prieſt became worſe then the people, and did burne in luſt and concupiſcence, ſo that

How the ſanctity of the Prieſts became corrupted.

Mane filium virginis afferunt in choro,
Nocte filium Veneris agitant in thoro:

Legi quotiens ex Innocen. 3.

And then they reſpected the ſatisfying of their luſts, more then the ſaving of their ſoules, and regarded their fleeces more then their flockes: for which it was truly ſpoken,

Paſtores odere gregem, nec paſcere curant,
Sed tondere pecus pecoriq; illudere tonſo:

They became moſt wicked in their coeverſations, and at laſt dumbe dogges in their functions; worſe then all, that ſhould bee holier then all: and therefore the

Why the Lord suffered the wicked to rob our Churches.

What we should do. Deut. 33. 8.

wrath of the Lord was kindled against us, and he delivered us into the hands of our enemies, and tooke away the rewards of our labours, to see if this would make us seeke unto his name.

Act. 20. 28.

Wherefore (beloved brethren) seeing the Lord requireth, that the Preachers of his Word should be the holiest in their lives, it behoveth us to pray to God with Moses, that his Urim and his Thummim may bee upon the men of his mercy, that hee would indue his Ministers with righteousnesse, that all his people may bee joyfull, and that he would give us grace to take heed unto our selves and to all the flocke of Christ, whereof the Holy Ghost hath made us Overseers: for it is most certaine, that omnis negligenter pascens toties sibi commendatum dominicum gregem, convincitur summum non amare Pastorem; He that cares not for the flocke, cares not for him whose flocke it is, as Damascen speaketh.

Damasc. epist. 4.

2. All Christians are Saints in a threefold respect.

2. All other Christians, that do truly beleeve in Christ, and that are washed in his blood, and sanctified by his Spirit, are likewise called Saints: and that in a three-fold respect.

1. In respect of their head Christ.

1. In respect of their head Christ Iesus, into whom they are incorporated; for he is the holiest of all holies, as I shewed you before; and therfore they being his members, they must needs be holy.

2. In respect of the graces of Gods Spirit.

2. In respect of the graces of Gods holy Spirit, wherewith they are endued, as faith and repentance, whereby their sinnes are cleansed, and the righteousnesse of Christ imputed unto them, whereby they are accounted holy in the sight of God; For the word Sanctus may be taken, à verbo sanciendi, saith Saint Augustine; becaus that is called Sanctum, which is constant and firme; but there is nothing that hindereth us to remaine firme for ever, but onely sin; and therefore sanctitie consisteth in the condonation and remission of sinne, saith this Father.

Aug. lib. de fide & symbolo.

Idem quo supra.

And so the Apostle doth inferre as much, when after he had rehearsed a Catalogue of the sins of the Corinthians, and said, that sometimes they were such and such, he addeth; But now ye are washed, but now ye are sanctified; to shew that when our sins are washed, our unrighteousnesse forgiven, our iniquities covered, then are we sanctified.

They are Saints that have their sins remitted. 1 Cor. 6. 11.

Chrysost. in hom. 5.

And S. Chrysostome upon these words, called Saints, saith, that the Apostle meaneth hereby all beleevers; And S. Ambrose saith, the Apostle meaneth these by Saints, which doe thinke well of Christ; and hee sheweth them to bee those, Qui censent ei soli fidendum, & in ipso credunt perfectam esse salutem, which beleeve only in Christ, and expect perfect salvation from Christ: and so the Apostle saith, that fide purificantur corda, faith purifieth the hearts; but that which is purified is holy: And therefore they were called Saints, in respect of their faith and repentance, which washed away their sins, and indued them with the righteousnes of Christ.

Act. 15. 9.

Saints must bee penitents.

Ambros. in Luc.

Whosoever therefore would be a Saint, he must be penitent for his sinnes, and wash the same away with the teares of true repentance: So S. Peter did; flevit amarè, he wept bitterly, saith the Scripture, ut lachryma lavarent delictum, that his teares might wash away his sin, saith S. Ambrose: Vade & fac tu similiter; and if thou wilt be a Saint, thou must do the like; Lachrymis diluere culpam, to cleanse away thy sins with teares; for ——Lachrymis opus est non sanguine, dixit,

Sæpe per has flecti Principis ira solet:

Saints beleeve in Christ.

1 Cor. 1. 30.

And we must beleeve in Christ, if we will be Saints; for faith layeth hold of his righteousnesse, and applyeth the same unto us, and maketh us Saints by the imputative sanctity of Christ, who was made unto us wisedome, justification, sanctification and redemption.

3. In respect of their holy life. The Christians of the Primitive Church were most holy in all their life.

3. In respect of the holinesse and piety, which they practised; For though they lived in the world, yet were they separated from the world, and had their conversation in heaven, and respected not the vanities of this life, but deemed them them as nothing and worth nothing, damnum & stercora, as dung, and drosse, and triviall things, as the Apostle speaketh. Philip. 3. 8.

And therefore if we compare the life of the Saints with the life of the wicked, we shall see as much difference betwixt them as is betwixt light and darkenesse; for whereas the wicked have their feet swift to shed blood, and are Mezentius-like, contemners of the gods, or as the Sicilian Tyrants, undoers of men; these godly Saints, saith S. Augustine, did wholly separate themselves from evill, and fixe their whole desire on Christ, & in summo bono sese delectabant, and forsaking all worldly delights, they delighted themselves onely in the chiefest good; and Saint Chrysostome saith, aliena commoda proprijs anteponebant, they preferred their neighbours good before their owne proper gaine, they shed teares for sinners, they were ready to lay downe their lives even for their enemies, and were of all men admired both for their humility and chariry; for cæteris omnibus humiliores fuerunt, saith Saint Ambrose, they were more meeke and lowly then all others, and they were so bounteous, that Christiana Religio, propter Christianorum erga omnes cujuscunque religionis beneficentiam, propagata est, the Christian Religion, by reason of their exceeding liberality to all men, did wonderfully increase, saith Maximinus.

The difference betwixt the lives of the Saints and the lives of the wicked. Aug in Ps. 10. 9. f. 410. Chrys. to. 1. Former Saints what they did.

And therefore, as it was the wish of Cæsar, that he had such souldiers as were in the time of Alexander the Great; so doe I wish with all my heart, that we had such Saints as these our fore-fathers were; for we are but like the leaves of the Cypresse tree, whereof the Poet saith,

Pulchra coma est, pulchro digestaq; ordine frondes,
Sed fructus nullos, hæc coma pulchra gerit.

We are now farre short of the sanctity of our fore-fathers. Alcias. Emblem.

Faire leaves but no fruit; or like the Scribes and Pharisees, whose righteousnesse and sanctity was (saith Saint Chrysostome) in ostentatione operis & non in rectitudine intentionis: in ostentation of the worke, and not in sincerity of intention; or like the meteor, which the Philosophers called assub, that made a great fiery shew for a while, and then suddenly vanisht to nothing. What we are like

But the whole life of the former Saints, was a continuall exercise of piety and sanctity; they were just in promise, though it were to their own hinderance, they were plaine in their attire, and moderate in their diet.

Saint Basil and Sozomene write, that the beholding of their upright and godly life moved many heathens to become Christians; and Eusebius saith, that Maximinus and other cruell Tyrants could not choose but wonder, to see how sedulous they were in doing good, and how carefull in avoiding evill, with true fastings, earnest prayers, diligent wathings, and painefull labours in their vocations; and therefore in respect of their inchoate inherent sanctity, they might well be called the Saints of God, that lived so holily in the sight of God. Basil. Orat. de 40. mart. Sozom. l. 7.

Ob. But against this it may be objected, that they were not so holy, and could not be such Saints, when as the best of them were tainted with great and grievous sins, as Noah, David, Peter, &c.

Sol. I answer, that all Saints in earth have their sinnes; for whosoever saith he hath no sinne, hee deceives himselfe, and there is no truth in him: Quia nihil peccare solius Dei est, sapientis emendare, & pœnitentiam agere de peccato; And yet, if we say we have no righteousnesse, we belye the gifts of God, or else we be no Christians: what then? Aliquid justitiæ habemus, & aliquid non habemus; some righteousnesse we have, and some we want; we are baptized, and therefore our sins are forgiven to us; and yet there resteth a conflict against sin, against the flesh, the world and the Divell; but he that striveth, sometimes striketh, and sometimes is stricken; and therefore though we have some sanctity, yet all sanctity we cannot have, saith Saint Augustine; and therfore the holiest and the purest men are both Saints and Sinners. The best Saints had their imperfections. 1 Joh. 1, 8. The best men are both Saints and sinners. Aug. to. 10. de verb. Apostoli ser. 16. f. 131.

1. Saints; because they beleeve in Christ, and with all desire doe affect sanctity, and doe indevour by all meanes, ut crescat quod habent, & impleatur quod non habent, that that sanctity may increase, which they have, and that that may 1. Saints, and why.

In what reſpect he calleth them Saints. Ber ſer. 3. de duabus menſis. f. 434.

be ſupplied, which they want; for the Apoſtle doth not call them Saints, according to their merit, but according to their purpoſe, not according to what they are, but according to what they deſire to be, ſaith Saint Bernard; and therefore whoſoever (ſaith he) doth purpoſe in his heart, to decline from evill, and to doe good, to keepe what hee received, to pray for what hee wanteth, to ſtrive to grow better and better, and if by humane frailty hee hath done amiſſe, to amend the ſame by true repentance, without doubt hee is a Saint of GOD.

2. Sinners and why. Phil. 3. 13.

2. Sinners, becauſe the reliques of ſin are left in them to ſtrive withall, and their ſanctity is but inchoated; and ſo Saint Paul himſelfe confeſſeth, quod nondum appre hendiſſet bravium, that as yet he had not attained the marke; and therefore ſepties in die cadit juſtus, the holieſt man falleth ſeven times a day, & eorum lapſus utiles, and their falls are profitable, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, & ideo ſcripti ſunt, and therefore they are written, ſaith Theophilact; and that, as we may gather, for two ſpeciall reaſons.

Theophilact. in Marc. 14. f. 75.

The falls of the Saints recorded for two reaſons.

1. For Gods glory.

1. To ſhew GODS goodneſſe, and the riches of his mercy, in forgiving our ſinnes; for where ſinne abounded, there grace ſuperabonnded, Rom. 5. 20.

2. For our good, & that in a foure-fold way.

2. For our manifold inſtructions, that we ſhould learne from the examples of the lapſes and infirmities of the Saints, not for the diſcrediting or diſhonouring of them, which are now in heaven, but for the bettering of our ſelves, wich are yet on earth; for the conſideration of their falls may ſerve,

1. For our humiliation.

1. For our humiliation, When we ſee their frailty, we ſhould learne humility; for God ſuffered them to fall, that we ſhould not preſume when wee ſtand; and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, qui ſtat videat ne cadat; for as the ſtaffe that is held up by the hand, ſo ſoone as ever the hand leaves it, though the hand throwes it not downe, yet it falleth downe of it ſelfe; even ſo we, even the beſt of us, aſſoone as ever GOD withdrawes his helpe from us, wee preſently fall of our ſelves: and therefore in all thy ſanctity learne humility.

1 Cor. 10. 12.

2. For our care and circumſpection.

2. For our circumſpection, to beware of falling; for cecidit Petrus ut reliqui caveant; S. Peter fell, that others might take heed of falling; for if I ſee a Giant throw downe a ſtrong man, I ſhall be more afraid he will ſooner throw downe me; And therefore, non ſit lapſus majorum imitatio minorum, let not the fall of the greater be for imitation to the leſſer, ſed caſus majorum ſit timor minorum, but let the fall of the greater induce a feare and a care in the leſſer, when they wraſtle againſt that roaring Lion, ſaith S. Auguſtine.

3. For our comfort and conſolation. Aug. in l. de Nat. & gratia fol. 316.

3. For our conſolation, that we ſhould not deſpaire when we fall into ſin; for many, falling into ſinne, deſperando plus pereunt quàm peccando, doe ſooner periſh by their deſpaire then by their ſin; for plus peccavit Judas deſperando de venia, quàm tradendo Chriſtum; Judas ſinned more by deſpairing of pardon, then in betraying his Redeemer: and therefore againſt this dangerous diſeaſe, the commemoration of the falls of the Saints may helpe us, ſaith S. Auguſtine; for their ſins are ſet downe, not for their ſhame, but for our conſolation; ut in ijs, tanquam in ſpeculis, divitias bonitatis divinæ contemplemur, that we might in them, as in a glaſſe, ſee the riches of Gods great mery, and thereby conceive hope of pardon unto our ſelves, ſaith Zanchius; for ſeeing they were ſinners as well as we, yet through repentance, obtained pardon; even ſo, if we repent, we ſhall obtaine pardon as well as they: for God is rich in mercy over all, and unto all that call upon him.

Zanch. in Eph. c. 2 f. 85.

Rom. 10. 12.

4. For our inſtruction, to ſhew wee muſt not forſake the Church upon the pretended corruption of the Church.

4. For a confutation of Donatiſts, Catharists, Browniſts, &c. that would have the Church to be of perfect beauty, and from her infirmity, do conclude her nullity; for the infirmity of Gods children doth not preſently denie them to be Gods children: and therefore the rottenneſſe of many members of the Church ought not to induce us to relinquiſh the Church; for ſo long as the Scribes and Phariſees ſate in Moſes Chaire, we are injoyned to heare them as the Church of God, by our Saviour Chriſt.

Yea,

Yea, though they should have many imperfections, both in manners and in doctrine; yet many circumstances are to be considered before we deprive them from being a Church; for no doubt but the Church of Rome at this time, when he wrote this Epistle unto them, had her imperfections in both respects; and yet the Apostle saith, they were beloved of God, called, Saints; or if it be denied, that it had not, then may the same be instanced in the Churches of Corinth, and of Galatia; for in the Church of Corinth, not onely touching manners, the discipline of the Church was loosely observed, but also the sincerity of preaching was much profaned, and a great question was among them, touching the resurrection of the flesh; an article of such waight, that without it, our faith, our hope, and all our preaching were but vaine; and yet the Church of Corinth holds the name of the true Church of Christ; and in the Church of Galatia, the most part of them were turned aside by the false Apostles, from free justification by the grace of Christ (which is the principall pillar of the Christian Church) and yet S. Paul calleth them the Church of Christ.

Many things to be considered before we deprive a Church from being a Church. Touching this point see my true Church, lib. 1.

1 Cor. 15. 17, 19.

Gal. 1. 6.

But the Scripture telleth us, that many should make such schismes, and separations from the Church; and therefore the godly and wise should be nothing moved at their departure; for though they pretend the cause thereof to be the want of sanctity in us, yet the true cause indeed is the iniquity, or at least, the want of judgement in themselves; for whensoever we read of the name of Saints, ne putemus sanctitatis vocem significare perfectionem, we should not thinke that the name of sanctity doth imply perfection, saith S. Augustine; for that there is no Saint that wanteth sinne, and yet hereby he ceaseth not to be a Saint.

1 Tim. 4. 1. & 2 Pet. 2. 1.

Ignorance the cause of separation.

Aug. l. 6. cont. Jul.

And therefore, beloved, seeing the Saints and holiest men were not so holy, but that they had their sinnes and imperfections, ideo patientiam eorum & virtutes imitemur non vitia, we should follow their vertues and not their vices, saith S. Ambrose; for not all the facts of righteous men are to be laid as patternes for imitation, saith S. Augustine, but only those are to be followed wherein they follow Christ; for he is that true way which leadeth unto life, and that true vibilia*, which will preserve every man from wandering, that will be guided by his direction; and therefore to say we have erred with our fathers, whether in life or doctrine, will not excuse us in the day of triall.

What we should follow in the Saints. Amb. to. 4. f. 219

Aug. l. cont. Man. dac. ad Constan.

* the godes of the gentiles seac directed them in their wayes.

3. Zanchie observeth, that all those, which are baptized, and do professe Christian Religion, are likewise called Saints; for though many of the Iewes were wicked people, yet because they professed themselves separated from the world, and associated themselves to the communion of Saints, they were all called gens sancta & populus sanctus, a holy nation and a chosen people; even so, the professours of Christ are called Saints before men, though they be never so wicked before God; but herein standeth the difference.

3. All outward professours are called Saints. Zanch. in e. 1. ad Philip.

The true Saints are not only professours, but also practicers of true holinesse; and therefore they be Saints, Sanctitate sacramentali, imputativa, & inhærente, by profession, by imputation, and by an inchoated inherent sanctity; but the other are only sacramentall Saints, Saints onely by profession, and not by practice, Saints outward, but not inward, a great shew of holinesse ad extra, before the world, but their inward parts are very wickednesse, as the Prophet speaketh.

The difference betwixt true Saints and outward professours onely.

Psal. 5. 9.

And surely these Saints multiplicati sunt super numerum, are infinite in number, and of diverse sorts, as,

There be many sorts of fained Saints.

1. The proud Saint,
2. The idle Saint,
3. The prophane Saint,
4. The verball Saint,
5. The Herodian Saint,
6. The Pharisaicall Saint,

} or Professour.

1. The proud Saints are those, who in their pride and womanish niceneſſe, do withdraw themselves from the Church, and, as if God and his Ministers were all bound to attend them, do turne their parlours into temples, and their carou-

1. The proud Saints.

Chryſ.in 4.hom 1 Cor. hom.36.

ſing pots into communion cups; whereas S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that neq; unguentaria taberna, nec officina forenſis Eccleſia eſt, we muſt not make our ſhops or tavernes to be Temples; for that the Church is locus Angelorum, locus Archangelorum, regia Dei, cœlum ipſum, a place or houſe of Angels, of Archangels, the Court of God, and Heaven it ſelfe.

2. The idle Saints.
Idem in 2 Cor. hom.3.
Amb ſer.19.in Pſal.119.
Iſa.29.13.

2. The idle Saints are thoſe, who, upon a careleſſe negligence, are like thoſe, of whom S. Chryſoſtome complaineth, that toto anno vix ſemel in Eccleſia conſpiciuntur, are ſcarce ſeen in the Church once a yeare; and therefore they are worſe than the very Iewes, as S. Ambroſe ſpeaketh; for that they came neare unto God with their mouthes, and honoured him with their lips, but theſe give him neither ſpeech nor preſence.

3. The prophane Saints.
Sen. Ep. ad Lucil.

3. The prophane Saints are thoſe, who though they come to the Church, yet it were as good they came not at all; for that they make the houſe of prayer, a place of intemperate babling, or els otij diverſorium & ſomni domum, a place of ſleeping and ſnorting, as Eutichus did.

4. The verball Saints.

4. The verball Saints are thoſe, that are like the Iewes indeed, that drew neare unto God with their lips, but their hearts were farre from him: And among the Iewes I beſeech you take a view but of the Phariſees, Sadduces, Eſſæies and Hemerobaptiſts; for

1 The Phariſees.

1. The Phariſees were men ſeparated from others, in reſpect of their pretended perfection; and they would be pure in their garments, in their devotion, in their laundring; for their veſtures muſt be invironed, and the borders made broad, to embroyder thereon the commandements of God, Luke 11. *Matth.*15. Their devotion was ſuch, that they would not cure on the Sabbath, were the ſickneſſe never ſo deſperate, nor pluck an eare of corne, were their hunger never ſo extreame; and their waſhings were diverſe, and of diverſe things, hands, pots, boards, and what not? Yet for all this outward ſhew of pretended ſanctity, Chriſt tels us ſeven times in one Chapter, that they were but meere hypocrites and diſſemblers.

2 The Sadduces.

2. The Sadduces were ſo pure in their owne conceits, that they thought themſelves to be the chiefeſt Saints; and yet they were ſo ſottiſh, that they neither knew Angell nor Spirit.

3 The Eſſæi.

3. The Eſſæi wore white robes at their refections, and obſerved the Sabboth ſo preciſely, that they would not make a fire, nor roſt an apple, nor ſtop a running veſſell, nor knock the table to ſtill a child, nor do the requiſites of nature upon that day; *and yet Epiphanius ranks them, and rightly, among the vileſt and moſt branded heretiques.

*Joſeph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. & de bello Iudaico, l. 2. c. 7.

4 The Hemerobaptiſts.

4. The Hemerobaptiſts were ſo called, becauſe they did every day baptize and drench themſelves in water; thinking thereby to ſanctifie their ſoules; whereas Epiphanius tels us, all the water in the Ocean, and all the flouds in the world, cannot purge one ſin.

5. The Herodian Saints.

5. The Herodian Saints are thoſe, that, like Herod, will be contented to amend many of their leſſer faults, but their deere and darling ſinnes they cannot yet relinquiſh.

6. The Phariſaicall Saints.
Mat. 23.

6. The Phariſaicall Saints are thoſe, that, as the Phariſees devoured widowes houſes under the colour of long prayers; ſo do theſe commit all villanies under this colour of piety: theſe men are oves habitu, vulpes aſtu, crudelitate lupi, in ſheepes clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves; none make more ſhew of piety; none are fuller of iniquity; I will ſay no more of them, but as S. Auguſtine ſaith, Væ illi miſero, qui ſanctitatem ſervat in memoria, & ſcribit in charta, ſed non habet in vita; Woe to thoſe miſerable men that have ſanctity and piety in their minds, in their tongues, and in the ſight of men, but not in their hearts, in their lives, or in the ſight of God.

Aug. l. de Spiritu & anima. c. 62.

How we ſhould be holy.
1 Pet. 1, 16.
Gen. 1.
Eph. 4, 24.

Wherefore (beloved brethren) let not us be ſuch Saints as theſe be; for we muſt be holy as God is holy, that is, truly and ſincerely without hypocriſie; for God made us in his owne image, which conſiſteth in holineſſe and true righteouſneſſe;

ouſneſſe; but theſe men are holy as the Divell is holy, and transformeth himſelfe into an Angell of light, that is, onely in ſhew, that he may deceive us; for that 2 Cor. 11. 14.

Tuta frequenſq́, via eſt ſub amici fallere nomen:
Tuta frequenſq́, licet ſit via, crimen habet.

It is an eaſie thing to deceive us under a fained ſhew: and ſo indeed, the aime of all theſe Saints is to deceive others, and the fruit of their hypocriſie is to deceive themſelves; for the life of any ſuch is but φάντασμα, a masked mummerie, and not φρονήμα, a knowne verity; his faith is νοῦτον, of things imaginarie, and not ὄντων, of ſolidity; his memoriall is as a poſt that haſteth by, his good deeds are as the trace of a ſhip in the waters, that is no where to be ſeene, and his glory is as the waffing of a birds wings in the ayre, when her paſſage appeareth not; and therefore, ſeeing the religion of all theſe Saints is but ſuperficiall and imaginary, and we looke not for an imaginary heaven, or a ſuperficiall reward, but for everlaſting glory in the kingdome of heaven; let us not, with drunken Zebull, take trees for men, or, with mad Ajax, think carts to be caſtles, like thoſe men, qui concipiunt æthera mente, which ſwallow up heaven at a blaſt; that is, let us never imagine that any kind of theſe faigned ſanctities and defective holineſſes, will ever bring us to the eternall happineſſe; but let us ever be mindfull of our Saviours words, Except your righteouſneſſe doth exceed the righteouſneſſe of the Scribes and Phariſees, you cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven, Mat. 5. 20. All vaine ſanctity, what it is like.

4. All other things that are dedicated to holy uſes, and to the ſervice of God, are likewiſe ſancta, ſanctified and holy things; but of theſe I will ſay nothing in this place, as being without the compaſſe of this text: And therefore ſo much ſhall ſerve for the manifold ſorts of Saints. 4. All dedicated things are holy. Zanch. in c. 5 ad Phil.

Yet one thing more I muſt needs note, touching theſe differences of theſe Saints, that ſome would have theſe words, called to be Saints, to be joyned together, as if the Apoſtle meant, that they were called from the filthineſſe of ſinne unto holineſſe of life, and thereby would give them to underſtand two things. Eraſm. in hunc. And others.

1. Terminus a quo; that is, from what they were called, from darkneſſe, from wickednеſſe; and therefore, that they ſhould not returne with the dog unto his vomit, nor with the ſow to wallow in the mire: a doctrine againſt back-ſliding revolters, whereof I have treated before. Two things obſervable. 1. From what they are called.

2. Terminus ad quem; that is, unto what they were called, unto ſanctity, unto light; and therefore that they ſhould walke as children of light, and be now a great deale more holy, and more wary to commit ſinne, than ever they were before; for this is the end of our election, that we ſhould be holy, of our redemption, that we ſhould be holy, and of our vocation, that we ſhould be holy: yea this is the end of all, that we ſhould be holy; for without holineſſe no man ſhall ſee the face of God; but the pure in heart are bleſſed, becauſe they ſhall ſee God; and no marvell, for though the Philoſophers ſay, penes ſcire maximè attenditur ſimilitudo hominum ad Deum, that knowledge makes men come neareſt to the ſimilitude of God; yet Divinity ſaith, that by ſanctity and purity we are made θείας κοινωνοὶ φύσεως, conſortes divinæ naturæ, partakers of the divine nature, not by transformation or incorporation of us into the identity or nature of God, but by the conformation of us to the ſimilitude and likeneſſe of God; eſpecially in this one attribute of being holy as he is holy; for licet poteſtas ſubjectionem, & majeſtas admirationem, neutra tamen imitationem; though the power of God inciteth us to ſubjection, and his majeſty moveth us to admiration, yet none of them requireth imitation, but only this one attribute of ſanctity, and all the reſt, that do proceed from this, or be like unto this; For as Chriſt ſaith not, diſce a me mundos fabricare atq́, mortuos ſuſcitare, learne of me to create worlds, or to raiſe the dead men out of their graves, ſaith S. Auguſtine, but learne of me to be meeke and lowly in heart, Matth. 11. 29. ſo God ſaith not, be infinite, be eternall, be omnipotent, but be ye holy, be ye pure, be ye cleane, becauſe I am holy, I am pure, I am cleane. 2. Vnto what they are called. Eph. 1. 4. Holineſſe, the only thing that God requireth of us. Heb. 13. 14. Matth. 5. 8. Holineſſe makes us likeſt to God, 2 Pet. 1. 4. Bern. ſer. 1. in Die Nat. Dom. 1 Pet. 1. 16.

Wherefore

The chiefeſt things that ſhould incite us to holineſſe and ſanctity.

Wherefore beloved brethren, let us ſet before our eyes,

1. God, that is ſanctity and purity it ſelfe.
2. The Saints of God that lived heretofore in all purity.
3. The benefits of ſanctity and holineſſe. As

1. How acceptable it is to God, for

1. How acceptable it is to God.

ἐυσεβέσι βροτῶν γανυμαὶ τοσὸν ὅσσον ὀλύμπω;

Zach. 2. 8.

The very Heavens do not ſo much delight our God, as the holineſſe and ſanctity of the ſonnes of God; quia delicia Dei cum filijs Sanctis, for his onely delight is ſanctity, and in holy men, he loveth them as the apple of his eye.

2. How commendable it is among men. Chryſ. in c. 4. ad Epheſ.

2. How commendable it is among all men, the very wicked commend it, τοιόυτον γὸ ἢ ἀρετὴ, κ) τοῖς πολεμίοις αὐτῆ θαυμάζε), τοιόυτον κακία κ) τοῖς μετ ἔχουσιν αὐτῆ κατανώσκε); For ſanctity is ſuch a thing, that the very contemners thereof admire it, and ſinne is ſuch a thing, that the very ſinners themſelves condemne it, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome.

3. How comfortable it is unto the Saints.

3. How comfortable it is to the Saints themſelves; for it makes them neither deſirous to live, nor yet afraid to die; and, as the Poet ſaith,

Miſſa triumphalem non tangunt fulmina laurum: So

Their ſanctity doth ſo ſettle them in the aſſurance of Gods love, that all the thunders of this world can never ſhake them; ſed mens immota manet, for this rooteth them here in the love of God, and uniteth them hereafter with the nature of God, that they ſhall be bleſſed for evermore. And therefore I ſay, let us alwaies ſet theſe conſiderations before our eyes, and I hope we ſhall be moved thereby to ſtudy and to endeavour to become true Saints on earth, that we may be Saints with God in heaven.

And ſo much of the Saints and their deſcription, which is the firſt part of this text.

Now followeth the ſecond part touching the bleſſings requeſted, wherewith the Saints are delighted.

And I would ſay more of ſanctity and holineſſe in this place, but that I intend, by Gods helpe, to ſpeake more fully of it in another place, in a Sermon upon Heb. 13. 14.

The second part.

Grace be to you and peace, &c.

CHAP. I.

Diversity of mens desires; grace and peace the chiefest good; the acceptation of of grace; that we are justified freely by the favour of God; a threefold lesson that we learne thereby; of infused graces, and that we are not justified thereby.

THese are the things requested by the Apostle, these are the things wherewith the Saints are delighted: And yet that is true, which the Poet speaketh, 1. Part.

Inveniat quod quisq; lubet, non omnibus unum est
Quod placet, hic spinas colligit ille rosas. Ovidius.

All men be not of the same minde, for some affect one thing, some another; as we see, All men are not delighted with the same things.

Some delight in bravery, a vanity onely fit for women, of whom the Prophet setteth downe their desire and delight at large; and of whom the Poet saith, Esay 3.16.

Fœmina culta nimis,
Fœmina casta minus.

The more proud, the lesse honest; for where great pride is, there can be but little honesty; pride ever going before a fall, and often tripping up the heeles of chastity.

Others delight in pleasure and voluptuousnesse, which, as the Philosopher saith, is prater modum elata latitia, idq; opinione tantum præsentis alicujus magni boni; an exceeding gladnesse puffed up above measure, and that onely in the opinion of some great good; but nocet empta dolore voluptas, they shall pay deare enough for their pleasure, when the bread in their bellies shall be turned into the gall of aspes, as Iob speaketh. What worldly pleasure is. Horiem. Mouſor. in Lucanum l.2. p.214. Horas. l.1. Ep.12. Iob 20.14.

And most desire the wealth and honours of this world; they spend all their time and all their strength in the pursuit of this vanity; and yet most of them never attaine unto it, and they that have it, have it peppered and poudered with cares, griefes, and sorrowes; for cuncta mortalium incerta, all mortall things are uncertaine things, saith Tacitus; & omnia terrena cacumina temporalis mutabilitate nutantia, and all terrene heights doe reele with temporall mutabilities, saith Saint Augustine: and this may be seene in those great Commanders, Xerxes, Bajazet, Crœsus, and Belisarius, to whom Rome owed her selfe thrice at least, and yet at last came to date obolum Belisario, quem virtus exaltavit, malitia depressit, & fortuna cæcavit, ô give one halfe-penny to him, whom vertue exalted, envie suppressed, and fortune blinded, to make him most miserable, being deprived of the light of the Sun: and therfore, how can it be but that they should be full of feare of losing those things, which they got with such cares? and if they do leese them, their sorrow is doubled; for non est tanti gaudij excelsa tenere, quanti mœroris est de excelsis corruere; nec tanta gloria sequi potest victoriam, quanta ignominia sequi potest ruinam; it cannot be so much joy to be exalted, as it is griefe to be Tacitus annal. l.1. Aug. de civit. Dei. l.1. c.1. What worldly things are full of cares and dangers.

be dejected; nor ſo much glory to triumph, as it is a ſhame to be vanquiſhed, ſaith Saint Ambroſe: and therefore,

Claud. l. 1. in Ruffin

——Iam non ad culmina rerum
Injuſſos creviſſe queror, tolluntur in altum,
Vt lapſu graviore ruant——

It grieves me not, ſaith Claudian, that wicked men are hoyſted up to the height of all proſperity, becauſe this is done, that their fall may be the more grievous into the depth of miſery.

Bern. Ep. 113.

And ſo you ſee that ipſe mundi qualiſcunque ſtatus plus anxietatis quam jucunditatis habet, this proſperity and ſublimity of men in all worldly things have more anxiety and griefe then joy or comfort annexed to them; and if there be any joy, yet præterit jucunditas non reditura, & manet anxietas non relicturа; the little joy will ſoone vaniſh and never returne, but the griefe and ſorrow will ſtill increaſe and never vaniſh. And therefore, ſeeing that bona hujus vitæ ſunt vaneſcendo tranſeuntia, the goods of this world are but vanities flying away, ἀδιάφορα, things indifferent, as the Peripateticks terme them; or ἀ δετερα, goods, not in their owne nature, but in our judgement, as Plato calleth them; the Apoſtle wiſheth thoſe goods, quæ ſunt ſine fine manſura, which ſhall remaine for ever; and ſeeing the goods of this world are full of ſorrow and griefe, he wiſheth thoſe goods, that might fill us with joy and comfort; for he leaves wealth and plenty to the worldlings, and wiſheth grace and peace unto the Saints. And

Aug. l. 20 c. 3. de civit Dei.

Grace and peace are the chiefe & only good things.

Grace is the beginning of a ſpirituall life; becauſe by grace we have our ſins remitted, ſaith the gloſſe, and are thereby freely juſtified, ſaith the Apoſtle; and peace is the quieting of the mind in faith, which the gloſſe termeth a reconciliation with God; and it is the very end of all the happineſſe that is deſired, as the Prophet ſheweth, ſedebit populus meus in plenitudine pacis, my people ſhall ſit downe in the fullneſſe of peace; for then ſhall be perfect peace, when the will doth reſt it ſelfe ſatisfied in the fullneſſe of all good, and is fully freed from all evill; and ſo the Apoſtle, in wiſhing grace and peace, wiſheth the α and ω, the beginning and ending of all ſpirituall good: And becauſe the two chiefeſt fiends of man are ſinne and a bad conſcience, therefore the Apoſtle wiſheth grace to releaſe us from ſin, and peace to quiet our conſcience; and becauſe there can be no peace with God, except we have the grace of Chriſt, therefore firſt and chiefly he deſireth grace, and then peace.

The two fiends of man.

Lutherus in Gal. c. 1. v. 3.

All things droſſe in reſpect of grace

Eſay 44. 4.

And this point puts an end to all thoſe large diſputes of the learned Naturaliſts de ſummo bono, touching mans chiefeſt good, wherein all of them did, but, like a blinde-folded man, ſeeke the doore, when hee ſees not the way; for if Saint Paul had knowne any better good then grace, I aſſure my ſelfe, he would have wiſhed the ſame unto the Romanes: and therfore I conclude that all earthly comforts, yea the greateſt preferment, the largeſt poſſeſſions, and the moſt excellent endowments either of body or mind, are but as dung and droſſe in reſpect of grace; for vertue, in the judgement of the heathen, was a ſufficient dowry, but grace is ſo farre beyond vertue, as vertue is beyond vice; becauſe grace is the onely thing, that makes us lovely in the the ſight of God, and without grace all earthly things are unſanctified unto us.

Foure points handled touching grace.

Now touching grace, I will onely obſerve theſe foure points, viz.

The { 1. Acceptation / 2. Diviſion / 3. Neceſſity / 4. Certainty } Of the grace of God.

1. Grace how taken.

Bel. l. de grat & lib arbit. Tho. 1. 2æ. q. 110. ar 1.

1. To omit all acceptations of ſmall purpoſe to know, ſet downe by Bellarmine, and Aquinas, and others; I ſay grace is taken two waies.

Grace is diverſly taken.

Gen. 6. 2. Luk. 1 30.

1. For the free favour of God whereby he pardoneth our ſins, and receiveth us into his grace; and ſo it is underſtood in Gen. 6 2. that Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord: Luke 1. 30. that Mary found grace with God; and in this ſenſe we are ſaid to be juſtified by grace; for that nihil boni feciſti, & datur tibi remiſſio

Aug. in Pſ. 31.

remiſſio peccatorum, thou haſt done no good, and yet thy ſinnes are forgiven thee; and ſo Fulgentius ſaith, God giveth grace freely to the unworthy for his juſtification; & datur ex prima gratia non ſolum juſtificatis vita beata, ſed etiam glorificatis vita aterna, and by the firſt grace, that is, the love and free favour of God, is given not onely a happy life to them that are juſtified, but alſo eternall life to thoſe that ſhall be glorified; So that all our happineſſe, juſtification and glorification do proceed onely from this firſt grace, that is, the free love and undeſerved favour of Almighty God, whereof the Apoſtle ſaith, he hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his good purpoſe and grace.

Fulgent. l. 1. ad Monimum.

2 Tim 1 9.

And therefore this doth utterly exclude all the merit of man, which is ever ex diametro, oppoſed unto grace, as much and more then light is contrary unto darkneſſe, for if it be of grace then it is no more of workes, or els grace were no more grace; and ſo it excludeth not only works done, but alſo all proviſion of works to be done, which ſome make either the maine ground, or a great motive to incline God to love us and to beſtow his graces upon us; becauſe the nature of grace will never admit any ſuch fore-ſight of our workes to move God to doe any of theſe things for us; and therefore the Prophet tells us that God found us in our blood, unlovely and unworthy to be beloved; and the Lord ſaith as much unto the Iſraelites; to ſhew that nothing without God can be any cauſe to allure God to beſtow this grace upon us.

Rom. 11 6. Ephes. 2 8, 9.

All merit hereby excluded.

Ezechiel 16. 6. Deut 7 8.

And this one point may ſerve for this threefold leſſon.

1. The confutation of the erroneous
2. The confuſion of the unthankefull
3. The conſolation of the diſtreſſed

} ſoules; for

Former point ſerveth for three things.

1. Whereas the Church of Rome, being much puzled about the doctrine of juſtification, doth affirme the ſame to be, not by the free grace of God, reſiding in himſelfe, or the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt freely imputed unto us, but by thoſe habituall graces of faith, hope, love and the like, which God ſay they freely works in us likewiſe, I ſay that it overthroweth one of the chiefeſt grounds of our Religion, and it perverteth the nature of Gods grace, and takes away the truth of our juſtification; for the Apoſtle tells us plainely, that God hath ſaved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his owne purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt Ieſus before the world began; and againe he ſaith, that God hath predeſtinated us to be adopted, through Ieſus Chriſt unto himſelfe, according to the good pleaſure of his will, to the praiſe of the glory of his grace; and therefore, as Iohn Baptiſt, when the Prieſts and Levits ſent meſſengers to know who he was, confeſſed, and denied not, but confeſſed and ſaid plainely, I am not the Chriſt, nor Elias, nor the Prophet, that they looked for, and ſo geminateth his ſpeech, and trebleth this truth unto them, and ſtudieth for words to explaine his mind; ſo the Apoſtle telling us, that we are juſtified by grace, and freely by his grace, and not by workes, but according to his will, and the good pleaſure of his will, and that before the foundation of the world, and ἐν αὐτῷ, in himſelfe, and to the praiſe and glory of his grace, and that he doth this leaſt any man ſhould boaſt, if he had done it otherwiſe; I doe not, I cannot imagine, how the wit of man could poſſibly collect words to expreſſe any truth more plainely then this is done, or how any, but the ſubtletie of Satan, could picke any quarrell againſt a point ſo plainely and ſo fully expreſſed as this is; becauſe that although the other habituall graces are freely wrought in us by God, yet can theſe Epithites, in all and every reſpect, agree to none, but to the free grace and favour of God, reſiding in God, and not inherent in us.

1. The confutation of the Romiſh doctrine about juſtification.

2 Tim. 1. 9.

Ephes. 1. 5, 6.

Iohn 1 20, 21.

How plainely our juſtification is aſcribed to the free grace of God, taken in this firſt ſence.

2. Seeing our caſe was ſo deſperate, and our condition ſo damnable, that we had not any thing of our owne to bring us into grace and favour with God, but that Gods owne and only goodnes moved him to take pittie upon us, and to juſtifie us freely by his grace; it ſheweth us how infinitely we are bound unto the Lord for ſuch an infinite mercy, and ſuch an incomprehenſible love; for the more freely

2. The reprehention of the ungratefull for Gods grace.

Rom. 3. 24.

any benefit commeth, the more strongly it obligeth the receiver unto the giver; and therefore, the Sunne shining not so freely upon the earth, as the grace of God is freely bestowed upon us, it cries shame and brings confusion unto our faces, if we prove unthankefull for so free and such undeserved grace.

3. The consolation of the dejected through the sight of their sins.

3. This point may serve for a comfort to all dejected spirits, that droope under the waight of their sinnes, and the sight of their owne unworthinesse, when their consciences doe speake bitter things against them, and passe the sentence of death upon them, because they are uncapable of any grace, in regard that they are guilty of so many sinnes; for these deluded soules must know, that no mans goodnesse is the ground or cause of Gods mercies, but the love and mercy of God is the cause of our goodnesse; and they doe but rob God of the glory of his grace, and defraud their owne soules of comfort that thinke to purchase Gods love, as we doe mans favour, by any thing that we can doe; and therefore the unworthy sinner may herein be comforted, that the love of God is a free grace, and though he hath nothing whereby he can deserve any grace from God, yet God hath inough in himselfe to move him to give all grace unto him, and requires no more goodnesse of us to deserve his grace, but to see our selves bad inough and unworthy of any grace; for he filleth the hungry with good things, and the rich he sends empty away.

Our goodnesse not the cause of grace.

Luk.1.53.

2. It is taken for all those gifts that are given unto us by grace, whether they pertaine to salvation, as faith, hope, and charity, or only for the edification of others, as the gift of tongues, of miracles, of healing, and such like; and so it is taken in Acts 11.23. 2 *Cor.*6. *Ephes.*4.7.

1 Cor.13.

More particularly; it is sometimes taken for the guiding direction and the powerfull operation of Gods Spirit in the hearts of them, that are called by this grace; as, Sinne shall not have dominion over you, because you are not under the law but under grace, that is, guided and directed by grace. Sometimes it is taken for the practice of a godly life, as where Saint Peter exhorteth us to grow in grace, that is, in the fruits and the workes of grace: Sometimes it is taken for that happie state of Gods children, wherein they stand after they bee sanctified; as where Saint Paul saith, by whom we have accesse through faith unto this grace wherein we stand: And sometimes it is taken for the glory of the kingdome of heaven, which is the summe and perfection of all grace, as where the Apostle exhorteth us, to hope unto the end for the grace that is to be brought unto us, at the revelation of Iesus Christ.

Rom.6.14.

2 Pet.3.18.

Rom.5.2.

1 Pet.1.13.

And in this sense, that is, for the gift given us by grace, doe almost all the Schoolemen expound the word grace, whersoever they find it, which made them ascribe our justification to these gifts of grace, and not to the free favour of God, from whence proceed all those gifts and graces: And on the other side;

That we are justified only by the free love and favour of God, and not by the infused graces. Rom 3.24.

We say these gifts are meanes, whereby we are brought to eternall life, but that by them we are justified, or made worthy of eternall life, wee utterly denie; For the Apostle, after he had fully proved all to be sinners, addeth, as many as are justified are justified freely, τῇ αὐτοῦ Θεοῦ χάριτι, through his grace, by the redemption which is in Christ Iesus; where, by the name of grace, is understood the free favour of God, without any our dignities, either naturall or supernaturall;

For the word justified hee opposeth to the two former things that hee had proved.

1. That all were sinners.

2. That therefore they were deprived of the glory of God.

* Of the first grace, with habituall graces. *Aug. in Ps.*34.

And the word grace he opposeth to all our workes; yea, though done by the helpe of Gods Spirit; so that workes and grace * cannot agree to justifie; for if of grace, then not of workes, otherwise grace were no more grace; quia gratia nullo modo gratia, nisi sit gratuita omni modo, it can be grace no way, unlesse it bee free every way; and the habituall graces are some waies ours, because they are in us and in in ſome reſpects done by us, and by the name of workes, he doth not only meane externall workes, but alſo all inward vertues, and faith it ſelfe, as it is a certaine act of the underſtanding and will.

And this our Saviour confirmeth, ſaying, when you have done all that are injoyned you, that is, whatſoever the law requireth (and it requireth faith, love, &c.) when you have done it, not attempted to do it, and when you have done all this, not ſome part of this, but all, both the inward and the outward workes; yet even then ſay, that you are unprofitable ſervants, and what is that, but that you are unworthy of eternall life? Luk. 17. 10.

And this might be proved further by the example of Abraham, and by many other arguments, but that I hope this is ſufficient to prove, that the Apoſtle excludeth from our juſtification, not onely outward workes, but alſo all inward graces and vertues; and by being juſtified by grace, doth underſtand this free favour of God, which is reſiding in God and not in us, as the Philoſophers ſay, honour reſideth in the perſon honouring, and not in the perſon honoured; and doth not underſtand any vertue infuſed into us by grace, for that all ſuch graces and vertues, be they never ſo excellent, yet are they imperfect, and tainted by our infirmities, and therefore cannot juſtifie us, and make us worthy of eternall life. Ariſtotiles ethic. l. 1. c. 3.

And yet we muſt underſtand, that it is one thing to ſay faith juſtifieth and not workes: and another thing to ſay, that juſtifying faith may be without workes: And that it is one thing to ſay, the free grace and favour of God juſtifieth us and not the gifts of grace, (that is,) regeneration or renovation of workes; and another thing to ſay that this free grace of God doth juſtifie us without renovation of good workes. That he which is juſtified cannot be without good workes.

For as the fire hath heat and light, both inſeparable in it, and yet warmeth us by the heat and not by the light; ſo the free grace of God, and the gift of grace, are inſeparably conferred upon a true Chriſtian man; and yet we are juſtified by the former, and not by the latter; and therefore whoſoever ſaith he is juſtified by grace, and yet is voide of good workes, he deceives himſelfe, and there is no truth in him; For as the fire doth ever yeeld forth his heat and light, ſo the love and favour of God doth ever infuſe his graces and effects of his love into our hearts, though not thereby to make us worthy of eternall life, but thereby, as by externall meanes, to bring us to eternall life: Theſe infuſed graces being via ad regnum ſed non cauſa regnandi, the way that leadeth us, but not the cauſe that procureth us eternall life, as Saint Bernard ſpeaketh. And ſo much for the acceptation of grace. As I have more fully ſhewed in Concione 17. The three chiefeſt graces.

CHAP. II.

Of the divers kinds of infuſed graces; of the neceſſity of grace, ſhewed from the divels great ſubtiltie and mans infirmity; who can doe no good; not avoid ſin; nor riſe from ſin; but all good is from grace and all evill for want of grace.

DE 2. Having ſpoken of the firſt grace, (that is,) the free favour of God, from whence all other gifts and graces do ſpring, we are now to conſider of the infuſed graces, or the effects of the favour of God; touching which we muſt underſtand, that the favour of God is diſtinguiſhed into 2. The diviſion of graces, or the divers ſorts of infuſed graces.

{1. Grace purpoſing.
{2. Grace working.

Favour of God twofold.

The 1. is the grace of election, whereby he hath choſen us to ſalvation before the beginning of the world. 1. Grace of election. Epheſ. 1. 4.

The 2. is the actuall execution of this decree, generally by creating the world, and ſending his Sonne, that whoſoever beleeveth in him might have everlaſting 2. The grace of execution.

Infused graces of two sorts.

life: And more particularly by giving unto every one those helpes that are necessary, for to bring them to salvation: and these helpes the Apostle calleth, ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι, The gift by grace.

Aquinas 1,2.q.3. art.1. Durand in 3. sentem. Distinct.13 q.1.

And they are distinguished by the Schoolemen into
- 1. Gratias gratis datas, graces freely bestowed.
- 2. Gratias gratos facientes, graces that make us acceptable.

1. Graces freely bestowed.

Why so called.

Of the first sort are those nine graces which the Apostle reckoneth 1 *Cor.*12. 14. and are given for the good of others, more then of our selves, as when I preach to others and perhaps am my selfe a cast away, and they are called graces freely given, because they be onely given unto us, and yet doe not make us any whit the more acceptable in the sight of God, no more then Iudas was, for all his Apostleship. And.

2. Graces that make us acceptable.

Of the second sort are,

1. And principally the free favour of God forespoken of, that doth chiefly make us acceptable in the sight of God; and which indeed should be left out of this ranke of graces, because it resideth in God and not in us, and wee have but the effects of it, as I shewed unto you before.

Why so called.

2. Those infused graces, and effects of the first grace, that are wrought in our hearts by his holy spirit, as faith, hope, repentance, and such like. And these are called gratiæ gratos facientes, graces that make us acceptable, not because they are sufficient to justifie us, or to make us worthy of eternall life, (as the Schoolemen doe imagine) but because God is delighted and well pleased with the workes of righteousnesse.

Graces that make us acceptable of two sorts.

And these graces which make us thus acceptable before God, are divided into
- 1. Habituall graces as faith hope, charity.
- 2. Transient, which is called the grace of speciall aide, which is a certaine motion of Gods spirit, inducing us to the workes of piety:

1. Habituall.
2. Transient.

And it is,
- 1. Excitans.
- 2. Adjuvans.

1. Inciting.
2. Helping.

1. Inciting man to do well: and

2. Helping him forward to doe that good, which before it had incited him unto.

And this grace of speciall aide is either
- 1. Sufficient.
- 2. Effectuall.

1. Sufficient.
2. Effectuall.

- 1. Sufficient, whereby a man may will and doe well if he please.
- 2. Effectuall, whereby a man is converted indeed, and doth will and doe that which is good; and this effectuall grace is also twofold,
  - 1. Working, which is also called prevenient.
  - 2. Coworking, called subsequent.

1. Prevenient.
2. Subsequent.

The 1. preventeth a man from sinning, and prepareth his heart to will that which is good.

The 2. doth effect, that a man shall doe and performe indeed that good which before he willed and desired: and under these heads may all other divisions of grace be comprehended, and subdivided: and therefore so much shall serve for the division of grace.

3. The necessity of grace.

3. Touching the necessity of grace, there be two speciall things that do declare the same.

Two things shew the necessity of grace.
- 1. The divels great subtilty.
- 2. Mans great infirmity.

1. The divell is our great enemie,

Iob 41.1.

1. Indeed we have many enemies, but the divell is the chiefe of all; for he is not onely δράκων μέγας, that great dragon, but also πολεμικώτατος, the greatest enemie that we have, like Iobs Leviathan, the greatest among creatures; neither is he onely πολεμικώτατος, the greatest; but also πολεμόκλονος, the busiest enemie that we have, like S. Peters roaring lyon, that seeketh at all times, and by

1 Pet.5.8.

all

all meanes, to devoure us: and therefore laqueos ponit in divitijs, laqueos in paupertate, he laieth ſnares upon riches, ſnares upon poverty, and ſnares upon every thing (as Antonie ſaw in a viſion the whole world overlaid with nets) that thereby he may intrap us. Aug. ſoliloq. ca. 16

2. If we looke into our ſelves, we ſhall find our ſelves fragiles ad reſiſtendum, debiles ad operandum, & faciles ad ſeducendum, unable to reſiſt, unwilling to doe good, and ready to be ſeduced, as S. Bernard ſaith: and therefore have wee not need of grace, have we not need of helpe? but becauſe contraria juxta ſe poſita magis elucescunt, the neceſſity of light is ſeene by the horror of darkeneſſe, wee muſt looke a little further into the infirmity of man, that we may thereby ſee the neceſſity of grace. 2. Man is wonderfull fraile. Bern. de advent. dom. ſer. 7.

But a man, without the helpe of grace,

1. Cannot doe good.
2. Cannot avoid ſinne.
3. Cannot riſe from ſinne.

The frailty of man

1. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that ſine gratia nullum prorſus ſive cogitando, ſive volendo, ſive agendo faciunt homines bonum; without grace we can neither doe, nor will, nor thinke any good thing: and therefore Anſelmus ſaith, that as the earth, though it may bring forth of it ſelfe thornes and thiſtles, yet cannot bring forth food fit for man, without the ſowing of good ſeed therein; even ſo, man, though of himſelfe he may produce evill workes, and idle thoughts, yet can he bring forth no good thing without the good ſeed of the grace of God. 1. Man without grace can do no good. Aug. in l. de correp. & gratia. Anſelm l. 1. de corrupt. & gr. 4.

And as the eye of the body, (ſaith Raynerius) though it be perfectly whole and ſound, yet can it not ſee any thing, unleſſe it be holpen with the brightneſſe of the light, ſo a man, though he were perfectly juſt, yet can he not live juſtly, unleſſe he be holpen by the eternall light of grace; and ſo our Saviour himſelfe teſtifieth, ſine me nil poteſtis facere, without me ye can do nothing. Rayner. in. de gratia. Ioh. 15. 5.

2. As we can do no good, ſo we cannot avoid evill; for the grace of God is the light of a Chriſtian, and therefore without grace, we are in darkeneſſe, and they that walke in darkneſſe know not whither they goe: And this the Apoſtle ſheweth, that before we have grace to direct us, we are darkened in our underſtandings; and therefore when our blind judgements do lead our blind affections, they muſt both fall into the ditch. 2. Man without grace cannot avoid ſin. Iohn 12. 35. Epheſ. 4. 18.

3. Being fallen into ſinne, wee cannot poſſibly riſe from ſinne; for ſi ſtare non potuit humana natura adhuc integra, quo minus reſurgere jam corrupta? if man could not ſtand, when he was in his integrity, how can he now ariſe being full of all infirmity, ſaith Saint Bernard? Beſides, the juſtice of God required, that he, which would not ſtand in grace when he might, ſhould not riſe when he would. 3. Man without grace cannot riſe from ſin.

And therefore the gloſſe upon the words of the Pſalmiſt, Spiritus vadens & non rediens, obſerveth a double infirmity in man. A twofold infirmity of man.

1. A paſſing away from the world by death, and not able to returne againe.
2. A paſſing away from grace to ſin, and not able to riſe againe.

And S. Auguſtine ſaith, that non omnino inveniretur ovis aberrata, niſi paſtoris miſericordia quæreretur; the loſt ſheep had never returned to the ſheep-fold, had ſhe not been ſought and brought home againe by the ſhepheard; for as a man that is fallen into a deepe dungeon, can never be delivered, unleſſe he be helped; ſo a man that is fallen into ſin, can never riſe from ſin, unleſſe he be helped by grace; and ſo you ſee the greatneſſe of mans infirmity; he can do no good, he muſt needes fall, and then he cannot riſe: and therefore as Caſſiodorus ſpeaketh, movet pium Iudicem fragilitas conſiderata peccantium, the frailty of ſinners being conſidered, moved the gratious Iudge to pittie us; and ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, recordatus eſt quia caro, he remembreth that we are but duſt, and therefore pittieth us and ſendeth his grace into our hearts, that ſo by the aſſiſtance of that grace, we may doe all things, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, we may riſe from ſin, we may doe good, and perſevere in good unto our end. Caſſiod. in Pſal. God pitieth our infirmities. Pſal. 103. 14. Phil. 4. 13.

From whence all things doe proceed.

By this therefore we may perceive from whence all things do proceed.

1. All good from grace.
2. All evill for want of grace. And therefore

1. All good proceeds from grace.

1. If there be any goodnesse, or any vertue in any of us, hoc totum gratiæ semper reputa, we must ascribe all to grace, and say with the Apostle, by the grace of God I am that I am; for without his grace, I was a persecuter, and that I now preach and labour more abundantly then the rest, it is not I that doe it, (that is, of my selfe alone that doe it) but the grace of God that is in me. So should every one of us in all humility acknowledge and confesse the like, that every one which rejoyceth, may rejoyce in the Lord: for whatsoever good is in us, the same is onely from God, and the grace of God; as, a good thought is gratia infusa; a good word is gratia effusa; and a good act is gratia diffusa; and so all good is from grace.

1 Cor. 15. 10.

2. The want of grace is the cause of all evill.

2. On the other side, if any man committeth sinne, if he comes to an unhappy end, it is because hee wanted grace; and therefore (beloved brethren) as the Apostle, in the beginning of every Epistle, wisheth grace unto the parties to whom he writeth, and concludeth every Epistle, with The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ be with you all, and so maketh grace the α and the ω, the first thing, the last thing, and the chiefest thing he desireth; so should we, before all things, and above all things, desire grace unto our selves and to our children; for quando ignorabam, gratia me instruxit; quando steti, me tenuit; quando cecidi, me erexit; quando veni, me suscepit; If we be ignorant, grace will instruct us; if we stand, grace will hold us; if we fall, grace will raise us; if we come unto God, grace will receive us; and if we want any thing, grace will supply it: O therefore sweet Iesu grant us all thy grace.

Bernard.

CHAP. III.

Of our assurance of having grace; wee know a thing three waies. Of the fruits of grace; inward, and outward; our knowledge of having grace, weake; what the same should teach us; the differences betwixt true grace and counterfeit; foure speciall evidences of saving grace.

4 The certainty of grace.

DE 4. Touching the certainty, or assurance of grace, wee must consider these two points.

1. Of the being or having of it.
2. Of the continuing, or not leesing of it.

Two points handled.

1. Of the having of grace. Many thinke themselves sure of grace, when as indeed they have no grace.

1. If want of grace bee so lamentable a thing as I shewed unto you before, then it is a point most requisite to examine, whether we have saving grace or not: Many indeed are so sure of grace, that they grow careless to seeke for grace; for as multi ad veritatis cognitionem pervenissent, nisi se jamdudum pervenisse putassent, many might have attained to learning, but that they thought themselves learned enough; so it may be these men would seeke for grace, but that they thinke they have grace enough; but I feare me, many of these will prove themselves to be like those, that dreame they are at a pleasant banquet, and when they awake, their soules are fainting; for having slept their sleepe, they finde nothing in their hands.

Esay 29 8.

Psal. 76. 5.

And therefore they should take heed unto themselves, lest they deceive themselves sub specie recti;

Exod. 7. 11. Satans subtilty to make men hypocrites.

Fallit enim vitium specie virtutis & umbra; for nature many times will counterfet grace, as the Magitians of Egypt counterfeited Moses; and it is the pollicie of Satan to make nature play the part of an Ape, to imitate grace in good things, as Pharaoh, Saul, Ahab, and such like, to faine repentance, when as they were hypocrites, to make them careless in seeking for grace, by perswading them through these fained shewes, that they were sure enough of grace. And

It

It is a ſtrange thing to conſider the deceitfulneſſe of mans heart, nondum tibi deſuit hoſtis, ſaith Lucan, man never wanted enemies, yet none is a greater ene my to man than himſelfe; and therefore, in te verte manus; deceive thine owne ſelfe, yea many times in matters of greateſt waight, even in the chiefeſt point of thine owne ſalvation.

Luc an. l. 1.

In ſome things, man is the greateſt enemy to himſelfe.

And therefore, that we may not wholly deceive our ſelves herein, but ſomewhat underſtand our owne eſtate, we muſt conſider that a thing is known three wayes.

1. Certainly.
2. Revealedly.
3. Experimentally.

} And

A thing may be known three wayes.

1. To know a thing infallibly is τὴν αἰτίαν γνωρίζειν, to know the firſt cauſe; but the the firſt cauſe of grace is God himſelfe, and his onely will is the cauſe why he giveth it to one, and denieth it to another; for when he was about to chuſe his Apoſtles, he went into a mountaine, and called unto him, quos voluit, whom he would, ſaith the Evangeliſt; and when the envious labourer began to murmure, why the Lord gave unto him, that wrought but one houre, as much as unto them, that had borne the burthen and the heat of the day, the Lord gives him none other anſwer, but volo huic noviſſimo dare ſicut tibi, I will give unto the laſt, as unto the firſt; and therefore, becauſe God is great, exceeding our capacities, and his councels are unſearchable, (for who hath knowne the mind of the Lord?) the Schoole-men do moſt conſtantly averre, that a priori, from the firſt cauſe, we cannot poſſibly know the certainty of the preſence, or of the abſence of Gods grace in us, according to that of Iob, Si venerit ad me non videbo eum, ſi abierit non intelligam; he goeth by me, and I ſee him not, he paſſeth on alſo, and I perceive him not; and they render three reaſons to prove it expedient that we ſhould not know it.

1. Cert ainly. Ariſt. 1. Metaphiſ.

Mar. 3. 13.

Mat. 20. 14. Iob 36. 26.

Rom. 11. 34.

Thom. 1. 2. q. 112. art 5. Iob 9. 11.

1. That the feare of Gods judgements might humble us.
2. That preſumptuous ſecurity ſhould not overthrow us.
3. That we ſhould watchfully expect, and earneſtly deſire grace, and ſeeke for the ſame as for ſilver.

Three reaſons why we ſhould not certainly know our eſtate.

2. A man may know his eſtate, and the certainty of having grace by revelation, as S. Paul did, when the Lord told him, ſufficit tibi gratia mea, my grace ſhall be ſufficient for thee.

2 Reveaſedly. 2. Cor. 12. 9.

3. A man may know the certainty of having grace by experience, that is, by the effects and fruits of grace that he perceiveth in himſelfe; and this is the only way that we do or may know, that we have any grace, while we are in this world.

3 Experimentally. By the fruits of grace.

Now the fruits of grace are many: S. Bernard reckoneth three.

1. The hatred of ſinnes paſt.
2. The contempt of preſent vanities.
3. The deſire of future felicity.

} And

Three fruits of grace. Bern. in l. de lib. arbitr.

Whoſoever findeth theſe things in himſelfe, he may aſſure himſelfe they proceed from grace: And Aquinas ſaith, that whoſoever doth believe in God, delight in Chriſt, deſpiſe the world, and hate his ſinnes, he may aſſure himſelfe he hath the grace of God; and what can we ſay more than this? Or what can any man ſay leſſe than this? for the tree muſt be knowne by the fruit, ſaith our Saviour: and therefore the knowledge of having grace is not by any preſumptuous ſuppoſition, but by a diligent examination of having the ſame by the fruits thereof; and thus we ſay that a man may know the certainty of his eſtate by the fruits of grace: and thoſe fruits are

1. Inward.
2. Outward.

} For

How we may know whether we have grace or not.

Mat. 12. 33.

The fruits of the Spirit of grace twofold.

1. We may know whether we have grace, by the inward teſtimony of the Spirit; for we have not received the ſpirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are given to us of God: And ſo S. Auguſtine

1 Inward. 1 Cor. 2. 12. Rom. 8. 15.

gustine saith, persuasisti mihi Domine, thy Spirit, O God, perswadeth me that I am thy sonne, and that thou hast given me thy grace, and therefore teacheth me to cry Abba Father. But

2. Outward. How to know whether we have the Spirit of God. Three outward fruits of the Spirit 1 Ioh.4.2. 1. Confession of faith. Rom.10.10. Mat.10.32. Mark 8.38.

2. Because we are not to believe every spirit, but are to try them, whether they be of God, we may know the same by the outward fruits of the Spirit, whereof S. Iohn setteth downe three, as the true signes and touch-stone, whereby we may know the Spirit of truth from the spirit of errour.

1. By the confession of the truth, 1 *Ioh.*3.2. And this S. Paul likewise sheweth, when he saith, that with the mouth confession is made unto salvation; for whosoever confesseth Christ before men, him will Christ acknowledge before his Father which is in heaven: And therefore whosoever is ashamed of his profession, or conceales the truth of Christian religion, he may assure himselfe he wants grace, and he is as yet void of the Spirit of God.

2. Hearing Gods Word. 1 Ioh.4.6. Ioh.20.27.

2. By the receiving of the testimony of the Sonne of God, that is, by the hearing of the Word of Christ: And this our Saviour toucheth, when he saith, My sheepe heare my voice: And therefore they are not of God, that will not heare the Word of God.

3. Love and charity. 1 Ioh.4.7. Ioh.13.35. 1 Ioh.3.14.

3. By love and charity towards our brethren; and so our Saviour saith, Hereby shall all men know that you are my Disciples, if you love one another; and S. Iohn saith, Hereby we know that we are translated from death to life, because we love the brethren.

Gal 5.22.

And S. Paul doth more largely set downe the fruits of the Spirit of God, viz. love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentlenesse, goodnesse, faith, meekenesse, temperance, &c.

1 Ioh.3.10.

These and the like graces unto these, are the fruits of the Spirit of God, whereby a man may know whether he hath the Spirit of God or not; for so S. Iohn sheweth plainely; In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Divell, whosoever doth not righteousnesse is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother; but he that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and he that doth righteousnesse, is righteous, even as God is righteous.

Verse 7.

And so we find that the Saints of God did assure themselves of the grace of God, by the fruits of the Spirit of God, as Iob saith, I know that my Redeemer liveth; And S. Paul saith, I live by the faith of the Sonne of God.

Iob 19.25. Gal.2.20.

The Fathers of the same mind. Epiphan.in anchor. p.496. Basil.in definitionibus.

And least any man should say, that these men knew it by speciall revelation, and not by any outward examination, we find the Fathers of the same mind; for Epiphanius saith, Christ was sent to be a Saviour, that he might redeeme us from bondage, ἵ ἐγένετό μοι δικαιοσύνη, and was made unto me righteousnesse, sanctification and redemption; but how knew he this? S. Basil sheweth, Certo quis persuaderi potest sibi dimissa esse peccata, si odit iniquitatem & amat justitiam; Any man may know this, if he hateth sin and loveth righteousnesse: And so Ferus sheweth the same thing, saying, In Christo si te per fidem & dilectionem inveneris, certus esto te esse a Deo justificatum, whosoever findeth himselfe to be in Christ by faith and charity, he may assure himselfe that he hath grace, and is justified by that grace; and so you see that by the fruits of grace, we may know whether we have grace.

Ferus in Iohan.

All knowledge of having grace is very weak, for three reasons. 1. Reason.

Yet I say that this knowledge of having grace is very weak, and full of imbecillity.

1. Because all our knowledge, our hope, our faith, and all other things that we have, are but imperfect, and only in part, as the Apostle speaketh, 1 *Cor.*13.

2. Reason.

2. Because the works of nature are so like the works of grace, the faith of hypocrites so hardly to be distinguished from the faith of Gods chosen, and the spirit of errour so like the Spirit of truth, ut nec ovum ovo similius, that, without diligent search and examination, we cannot discerne the one from the other.

3. Reason.

3. Because all of us, and the best of us are so prest, and almost oppreſt with sinnes and the cares of this world, that we are careleſse and negligent in trying the spirits, and examining the certainty of our estate, or of having grace, by these fruits fruits of grace: But they that will trie and examine the ſame, may know the ſame, and the more they trie, the better they may know, and knowing the ſame, they may ſpeak of the ſame, to the glory of God, and the comfort of themſelves; for Dicere ſe eſſe juſtificatum non eſt ſuperbia elati, ſed confeſſio non ingrati; for a righteous man to ſay that he is juſtified, is no token of pride and arrogancy, but of thankfulnes and true humility, to confeſſe to others what he received from God; but the boaſting of the wicked is meere preſumption; and it is a wonder to ſee that they are ſo ſure of grace, when as yet the world ſees they are ſo full of ſinnes.

Aug. in Pſal. 85.

And therefore this ſhould teach us to worke out our ſalvation with feare and trembling, and not to be too preſumptuous, or too cock-ſure of grace, but ſometimes to be dubious; for

Phil. 2. 12.

Is qui nil dubitat nil capit inde boni,

He that never doubts of his eſtate, never trieth his eſtate, whereas they that feare and doubt, will be willing to examine themſelves, and to uſe all diligence to know their owne eſtate, whether they have grace or not; for God will not make us too certaine, cauſa ſolicitudinis, leſt we ſhould be too too careleſſe; and yet he would not leave us altogether uncertaine, gratia conſolationis, leaſt we ſhould be dejected; but what he denied us a priori, he granted a poſteriori, that by the fruits and effects of grace, wee might know whether wee have any grace, or not.

Bern.

Yet, as I ſaid before, it is very hard to know it, without a great deale of pains, diligence, and circumſpection about it; for there may be a Phariſaicall Angell, and many are of that ingennity and good nature, as not to be inclined to any exorbitant courſes, or affected with any notorious vices; others by the ſtrength of good education and cuſtome prevailing with them, may be induced to the performance of many pious exerciſes; and yet all this may be farre ſhort of ſaving grace, when as the former is but baſe hypocriſie, the other meere civility, and the latter nothing but formality.

What makes ſome ſeem religious.
1 Hypocriſie.
2 Civility.
3 Formality.

And therefore, that you may a little the better diſcerne true grace from all other counterfeit coyne, I beſeech you obſerve it in theſe few particulars.

The differences betwixt true grace and counterfeit grace.

1. True grace brings us to ſee our ſelves, and to know the deceitfulneſſe of our owne hearts; and the more grace we have, the more will our owne corruption appeare unto us, as Abraham, and Iob, the nearer they drew to God, the baſer they confeſſed themſelves to be, Gen. 18. 27.

1 Property of true grace. Ier 17. 9. Iob 42. 5, 6.

2. True grace doth ever more and more hate all our former evill courſes, as you may ſee in Ezek. 36. 32. & Hoſ. 14. 9.

2 Property of true grace.

3. True grace doth more and more long for Chriſt, and deſireth ſtill to increaſe in all grace and goodneſſe.

3 Property of true grace.

Whereas the hypocrite and formall profeſſour do neither of theſe, but do pleaſe themſelves with their owne preſent ſtate, and, with the Church of Laodicea, think themſelves rich, and want nothing, when, as God knoweth, they are poore, and miſerable, and naked.

Rev. 3. 17.

And further, that you may the fuller underſtand your own ſtate, whether you have the true ſaving grace or not, you muſt examine your ſelves, and ſecure your ſoules thereof, by theſe foure fold evidences of ſaving grace.

Foure ſpeciall evidences of ſaving grace.

1. Knowledge of God.
2. Faith in Chriſt.
3. Subduing of our luſt.
4. Obedience to the commandements.

} For

1. The new man is renewed in knowledge, that is, of God, and of his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt; where likewiſe you muſt obſerve that every bare knowledge is not ſufficient for this end, but it muſt be

1. Evidence, knowledge. Col. 3. 10. Iob. 17. 3.

1. An operative
2. A communicative
3. A ſanctified

} knowledge. For

Our knowledge muſt be
1 Operative.

1. The Prophet ſaith, teach me thy wayes, that I may walke in thy truth; for otherwiſe, Pſal. 86. 11.

otherwise temporizers seeke for knowledge to informe their judgement, but not to reforme their manners; and I had rather doe and not know, then know and not doe the will of my God; because he that saith I know God and keepeth not his Commandements is a lier and the truth is not in him; and the sonnes of Eli are said not to know the Lord, because they were wicked men and would not obey the Lord; and therefore he that knoweth much and doth little, knoweth nothing as he ought to know; because knowledge without practise is but as the shadow without the substance.

1 Ioh 2.4,5.

1 Sam.2.12.

2. Our knowledge must be like the spikenard, which filled the whole house, with the sweet smell thereof; it will open our mouth to praise God and to feed our brethren; and therefore to desire to be great Schollers and no Labourers in Gods vineyard, to have a fame of learning, and not to spread the name of God for the gaining of poore soules to Christ, is to gather arguments for our condemnation.

2. Communicative. Iohn 12.3. Psal.51.15: Pro.10.21.

3. Our knowledge must sanctifie our hearts, and change us from what wee are, into the image and similitude of Christ; to move our hearts to God and to remove them from all evill; because the nature of this holy knowledge is to make us better for God and not wiser for the world.

3. Sanctified. 2 Cor.3.18.

And this point teacheth us, that an ignorant heart cannot be good, nor have any evidence of the spirit of grace; and therefore this should teach us to call for knowledge and to crie for understanding, yea to seeke for knowledge as for silver, and to search for her as for treasures.

Pro 19.2. 1 Cor.2.12. Pro.2.3:4. Vide 2 Thess.1. 7,8.

2. As the well rectified knowledge of God is one speciall signe of saving grace, so true faith in Christ is another signe of the same grace; because faith is a fruit of Gods spirit; but because the presumption of the wicked is many times more confident of Gods favour, then the faith of the godly, as you may see in *Ier.*3.3,4. and Mica. 3.11. and you may heare many leaud livers professe they have as strong a faith in God as the best; therefore you must know, that true faith worketh by love, and this love of God makes us obedient unto his lawes; but the faithlesse confidence, vaine presumption and Satanicall illusion of wicked men doth imbolden them unto liberty, and make them loose in their waies, and licentious in their lives, and yet they think that they shall surely have eternall life; this is no signe of grace, but a most evident argument of the want of grace, when they are not moved by any Sermon nor removed from any sin.

2. Evidence, faith. Gal.5.22. Gal.5.6. Presumption what it is.

3. The subduing of our carnall and worldly lusts is another signe of the grace of God; for we must not thinke that after grace is wrought in our hearts, there will be no lusts residing in our flesh, because that in every regenerate man there is flesh as well as spirit, like Iacob and Esau striving in the same wombe, and as grace inclines the heart to goodnesse, so corruption laboureth to draw it the cleane contrary way; but sinne shall not have dominion over those, that are indued with grace; because that the regenerate man, though upon the assault of some furious temptation, either for his humiliation or correction, may sometimes faile and perhaps fall most dangerously; yet by the vertue of this habituall grace, he conceiveth such a detestation of his sins, and such a resolution to forsake them, that he will pray to God with the Prophet, saying, ô that my waies were made so direct that I might keepe thy statutes; and at last, as the house of David waxed stronger then the house of Saul, so will the grace of God prevaile against the lusts and concupiscence of the flesh: And therefore, seeing it is the nature of true grace, to labour to keepe a good conscience in all things, and to desire to live honestly, as the Apostle speaketh, it is apparant that they, which love sinne, and whose hearts turne after iniquity, have no signe of any saving grace.

3. Evidence, subduing of our lusts. Lust and grace in every Saint. Rom.6.14. Hosea 14.8. Psal.119.5. Grace will prevaile in the godly Heb.13.18.

4. Obedience to Gods law is the last and not the least signe of saving grace; as you may see in 1 *Pet.*1.2. *Rom.*6.17. *Matth.*7.21. Iames 1.22. 1 Iohn 2.4. but because the hypocrite may goe farre in outward obedience, and yet want true saving grace, as we reade that Caine offered sacrifice, Ahab fasted, Iudas preached, Simon Magus was baptized, and the Pharisees did seeme to be very obedient

4. Evidence, obedience to Gods law. Gen.4.3. 1 King.21.29. Act 8.13.

dient unto the commandements of God; therefore you muſt know that the obedience of the Saints, which is the fruit of true grace, muſt be,

1. To all Gods Commandements; Luk. 1.6. Pſal. 119.5.6.
2. At all times,
3. In all places,
4. In all company, for we may not, either for pleaſure, or profit, or feare, or conformity to any diſſolute, prophane, Atheiſticall or papiſticall perſons whatſoever diſſemble the truth that we profeſſe, or doe the leaſt evill, that is contrary to Gods Word.

Properties of true obedience.

Religion not to be diſſembled.

And thus I have ſhewed thee, ô man, the chiefeſt ſignes that I could collect of true ſaving grace, and I wiſh to God, that both my ſelfe and all men els would duly and carefully examine our owne ſtates, by theſe teſtimonies of Gods Spirit, and theſe evidences of Gods grace; and if we find the ſame to be within us, wee need not much care what others thinke of us, that are without us.

De 2. We muſt conſider the certainty of the continuing, or not loſing of grace; a point of more difficulty, and no leſſe neceſſity to bee knowne then the former; For

2. Of the continuance of grace.

I find concerning the ſame three opinions.

Whether ſaving grace once had, may afterward be utterly loſt: Three opinions.

1. Some ſay, that both good and bad may receive grace, and yet both good and bad, by their ſins, may loſe the ſame, both totally, wholly, and finally.

1. Opinion.

2. Others ſay, that both good and bad may have grace, and that both of them may loſe it totally, but that both of them cannot loſe it finally; for that the Saints cannot finally loſe grace, though many times, by reaſon of their ſins, they may totally fall from grace, or loſe all grace untill the ſame be renewed in them againe.

2. Opinion.

3. Others ſay, that thoſe, which have once received grace, can never loſe the ſame finally, nor yet totally.

3. Opinion.

But touching this point, de amiſſione vel retentione gratiæ, of the loſing or retaining of grace; I thinke all muſt confeſſe, that whoſoever findeth grace, that is, the love and free favour of God, can never loſe it; becauſe this is in God reſiding, and not in man; and therefore this grace is immutable and unchangeable: and ſo the Scripture ſheweth, whom he loved, he loved unto the end; for the gifts and graces of God are ἀμεταμέλητα, without repentance: The queſtion therefore (as I take it) is of the infuſed graces, faith, hope, charity, and ſuch like, whether a man may have theſe graces, and afterwards loſe them, either finally or totally.

The firſt grace immutable.

Iohn 13.1. Rom. 11.29.

To this I anſwer, that as there be two ſorts of Saints,

1. Outwardly, by profeſſion only before the world.
2. Inwardly, and truly before God.

Two ſorts of Saints.

So there be two ſorts of graces,

1. Common, to all Profeſſors.
2. Speciall, to the elect onely.

Two ſorts of graces.

Or, to ſpeake more properly, I ſay that God giveth the graces of his Spirit two manner of waies.

God giveth his grace two manner of waies.

1. After a generall manner and more remiſſely, or not very powerfully, to all Profeſſors, or to all that have them, to make them ſee the greatneſſe of his love, and to make them able thereby, if they would themſelves well uſe the ſame, to ſeeke for more grace to continue in Gods love and be ſaved; or if they neglected the ſame, to make them without excuſe.

1. Generally.

2. After a ſpeciall manner and more effectually, or moſt powerfully, to the Elect, to make them not only to ſee his love, but alſo, by this more ſpeciall and effectuall working of his grace, to make them continue therein, and to retaine the ſame indeed unto everlaſting life.

2. Specially.

De 1. Many doe affirme, that the outward Profeſſors have no true graces at all, neither faith, hope, nor charity, but onely a ſhew and an appearance of grace; and ſo Saint Gregory ſeemes to affirme, when ſpeaking of ſuch men, he ſaith, quaſi habitam ſanctitatem ante oculos hominum videntur amittere, ſed eam ante oculos Dei nunquam habuerunt, they are ſeene to loſe that ſanctity, which they ſeemed seemed to have in the sight of men, but in very deed they never had any in the sight of God; and S. Paul seemes to meane the same thing, when he saith, qui videtur stare, videat ne cadat, he that seemes to stand, let him take heed lest he fall; as if he meant that he did not stand indeed.

1 Of the graces that are remiſſely given.

Greg. moral. l. 34. c. 13.

1 Cor. 10. 12.

Whether the wicked and hypocrites have any true graces or not.

But I answer to the saying of S. Gregory, that this and the like speeches may be understood of the faigned shew of Hypocrites, that do seek thereby to deceive the world, but not of those that think themselves to have faith and repentance indeed, and do many services unto God for a time, untill they fall away through the infirmities of their owne flesh; and that the sequent saying of the Apostle videat ne cadat, let him take heed lest he fall, doth, in my judgement, prove that he did stand, or els how could he fall?

That the graces of the wicked are true graces.

1 Tim. 1. 19. Heb. 3. 6.

And therefore, considering what the Scripture saith, Ezek. 18. that the righteous may leave his righteousnesse, that the charity of many shall waxe cold, Mat. 24. 12, 13. that their talent shall be taken from them, Matth. 25. 29. that they receive the word with joy, Luke 8. 13. that they make shipwracke of faith and a good conscience, that they taste of the heavenly gift, and are partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have knowne the way of righteousnesse, 2 Pet. 2. 1. & Vers. 20. and many such like speeches of their relapse, I do not see, but, as their knowledge and understanding of the truth, and assent unto the same, are reall, and not in appearance only, so, the other graces that they have, are true graces, and not seeming graces only; and indeed, quicquid est, dum est, verè est in suo genere, whatsoever is, must needs truly be.

That the graces of hypocrites and formall professors may be lost.

And therefore I must confesse, that many hypocrites and worldlings, and outward Professours may have faith, hope and charity, and such other infused graces of Gods Spirit, in that generall manner, and to those ends, that God bestoweth them upon outward Professours, and that they do utterly lose the same, as wofull experience daily proveth in all revolters: but that hypocrites or worldlings may have saving faith, or justifying grace, or any other fruits of grace, in that speciall and more effectuall manner, as they are given unto the elect, I utterly deny; for if they had been given them in that manner, as they are given unto the elect, then could they not lose them, no more then the elect do.

CHAP. IV.

Of our assurance of the continuance of grace; two sorts of Saints; how God bestoweth his graces; that the wicked have many true graces; that the elected Saints cannot fall away from grace; proved by Scriptures, by Fathers, and by reasons drawne from Scriptures.

a Of the graces that are effectually given.

DE. 2. I say that the elect onely have the true saving graces in the speciall and more effectuall manner given unto them; and I say that they cannot leese them, after they have once received them; and this may be proved,

For { 1. By apparent Scriptures. 2. By the consent of learned Fathers. 3. By reasons drawne from Scriptures. }

That the elected Saints cannot lose wholly the saving grace once received. Proved

1. By Scriptures.

1. The holy Scripture is most plentifull of proofe to confirme this point: I will onely use these few, and I will be ready to bring more,

(ὅσσα τε φύλλα καὶ ἄνθεα γίγνεται ὥρη ἠν τε μυιάων ἀδινάων ἔθνεα πολλά)

if we must needs strive with number. And

1. Testimony.

My first proofe shall be that of Esa 59. 21. I will make this my covenant with them, saith the Lord, my Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of the seed of thy seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth, even for ever: and what can be plainer? for this is a promise made unto the Church of Christ:

Chriſt; and what is true of the whole, muſt be true in every member; and therefore in what true member ſoever the Spirit of God is once put, it ſhall never depart from thence even for ever.

2. The Prophet Ieremie ſaith, I will put my feare in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart from me, that is, my feare ſhall be ſuch, and ſo great in them, that they will sticke and perſevere in my favour, even for ever, ſaith S. Auguſtine.

2 Teſtimony. Ier 32.40. Aug de bono perſeveran c.2.

3. The Prophet Amos ſaith, I will plant them upon their owne land, and they ſhall no more be pulled up againe out of their owne land, which I have given them, ſaith the Lord thy God: where we may obſerve,

3. Teſtimony. Amos 9.15.

1. Who planteth them, I, ſaith the Lord, which planteth, and watereth, and giveth the increaſe.

2. Who ſhall be planted? the elect onely, them, but not all.

3. Where? In their owne land; and what is that? in the myſticall body of Chriſt, in the Favour of God.

4. How ſhall they be planted? So that they ſhall be pulled up no more; and all this is made plaine by Chriſt the true Vine, into whom the elect are planted; for every plant which my Father hath not planted, that is, every reprobate ſhall be rooted up; but every plant that my Father hath planted, that is, every elect that is ingraffed in me, ſhall not be rooted up, but ſhall be purged, that it may bring forth more fruit: and therefore every one that is truly ingraffed into Chriſt, and in the favour of God, cannot fall away from God.

Mat. 15.13. Ioh. 15.2.

4. Chriſt ſaith, My ſheep heare my voice, and none ſhall take them out of my hand, a place ſo plaine, that it needs no expoſition.

4 Teſtimony. Ioh. 10.28,29.

5. S. Iohn ſaith, He that is borne of God ſinneth not, neither can he ſinne, becauſe the ſeed of God remaineth in him; that is, he cannot ſin with all his heart, and a full conſent of will; he cannot do ſinnes to waſte and overthrow his conſcience, but that ſtill there will be a reluctation, and an unwillingneſſe in him to do the thing that he doth, becauſe the ſeed of God, though the fruit failed, doth yet remaine in him.

5 Teſtimony. 1 Ioh. 3 9.

In what ſenſe it is ſaid that the true Saints do not ſin.

For this muſt needs be granted, that every regenerate man doth conſiſt of a double man,

The regenerate conſiſteth of a double man.

1. The inward } man.
2. The outward }

And that, according to the inward man, they do not ſinne, in that very time that they do ſinne; for ſo the Apoſtle ſheweth of the Saints, that when they commit ſinne, it is not they that do it, that is, it is not the renewed man that ſinneth, but ſinne, that is, the originall corruption that is in them; for ſo he argueth, If I do that which I would not do, then it is not I that do it, but ſinne that dwelleth in me, Rom. 7.20.

Rom. 7.17.

And therefore though the ſame ſinne, in reſpect of the act and outward manner of committing it, be done both of the godly and reprobate; yet in the wicked it is a ſinne ſpoyling and waſting his conſcience, but in the godly it is not ſo; for that the one doth it of delight and ſet purpoſe with full conſent of will; the other doth it of infirmity, againſt his will, becauſe the ſeed of God remaineth in him, which cannot be taken from him, or corrupted in him; for that it is an incorruptible ſeed, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

1 Pet. 1.

2. The Fathers confirme the ſame thing; for S. Auguſtine conferring the grace, which Adam had in Paradiſe, with that, which we have in Chriſt, ſaith, that to him was given ſuch grace, that he might ſtand if he would, but not that he ſhould will to ſtand; but to us is given ſuch grace, not onely that we might ſtand if we would, but alſo that we would or ſhould will to ſtand and perſevere in Chriſt.

2 By the Fathers.

What the Fathers think of this point Aug de cor. & grat c.12.

So S. Chryſoſtome, conſidering the word, ἑστήκατε, Rom. 5.2. ſaith, that the Apoſtle ſaid well, wherein ye ſtand; for that the grace of God, non habet finem, non novit terminum, ſed in majus proficit; hath no end, but ever increaſeth more and more; with mens gifts it is not ſo; for if a man receiveth ſome place of honour and dignity; yet this remaineth not alwayes; for either diſlike, or enemies, or death death will deprive him of it; but it is not ſo with the graces and favour of God, nec enim homo, nec tempus, nec rerum viciſſitudo, nec ipſe diabolus, nec ſubveniens mors ab ijs nos poſſint depellere; for neither men, nor times, nor alterations of things, nor the Divell himſelfe, nor yet death it ſelfe, can pull them from us, and deprive us of the graces of God: and what can be ſaid more plaine? Yet S. Ambroſe in Rom. 8. Greg. hom. 3. in c. 1. Ezech. Primaſius, Proſper, and Beda, are as plaine as he.

Chryſ in Rom. c. 5.2

What the Schoolmen think hereof.

And not onely theſe, but the Pontificij, the Ieſuites themſelves, after a manner, do confeſſe the ſame thing; for Cajetan ſaith, A man ſinning mortally, doth not directly exclude grace, ſed ex quadam ſequela, but by conſequent: and therfore if the elect do not directly exclude grace, then they do not wholly exclude grace.

Caietan. in Thom. 2.2æ. q 14. art. 3.

But Thomas himſelfe goeth further, and ſaith, that per unum actum peccati non corrumpitur habitus virtutis acquiſitæ, by one act of ſin, we do not loſe the habit of obtained vertue, or infuſed grace; becauſe every act doth not contrary a habit, but a habit muſt contrary a habit, as the Philoſopher teacheth.

Thom 1.2æ q. 63. art 2.

Suarez tom 4. q. 86 art 3. §. 3.

And Suarez yeeldeth, that a mortall ſinne may be remitted without the infuſing of habituall grace, and he rendreth this reaſon, to ſhew that God can preſerve his grace in a man mortally ſinning; becauſe there can be nothing that ſhould compell God to ſubtract or take away the ſame; for that the preſerving of his grace ſtill in man ſo ſinning, is neither againſt his goodneſſe nor his juſtice.

Concil. Trident. Seſſ 6. c. 15.

Yea, the councell of Trent doth expreſly decree, that faith is not loſt by every mortall ſinne.

Bellar. l. 2. c. 12. de amiſſ. gratiæ.

And Bellarmine himſelfe affirmeth, that thoſe, which are juſt and good men, do receive the gift of perſeverance; and therefore though they fall into adulteries, theſts, or ſuch like mortall ſinnes; yet, that thereby, they do not preſently loſe juſtifying grace, l. 1. c. 8. So great is the force of truth, that the greateſt oppugners thereof muſt many times unawares confeſſe the ſame; ea enim eſt natura veritatis, ut, licet a quamplurimis impugnatur, ſuſcitabit tamen & creſcet; falſitatis autem ea eſt natura, ut nemine impugnante, tandem evaneſcit; for the nature of truth is to prevaile in deſpight of her enemies, and errours muſt needs fall at laſt of themſelves, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome.

Chryſ hom 4. de laude Pauli.

3. By reaſon.

3. We may confirme this truth by reaſon, and arguments drawne from Scripture.

1. From the promiſe of God.
2. From our owne prayer.
3. From the interceſſion of Chriſt.

} For

The perſeverance of the Saints in grace proved by reaſons drawne from Scripture.

1. God promiſed that his Saints ſhould perſevere, Eſa. 59. Ier. 24. 7. & 32. 40. Hoſ. 2. therefore without queſtion, they ſhall perſevere, for he is God, and changeth not; he is truth, and cannot lie.

And if any of them whom the Lord hath effectually called, and purpoſed that they ſhould be ſaved, ſhould totally fall from grace, and finally periſh from eternall life, it muſt needs be either becauſe God wanteth power to effect his owne purpoſe, or faithfulneſſe to performe his promiſe; but for his power, the Lord tels us, I will do it, and who ſhall let it? and our Saviour ſaith, My Father which gave them me, is greater than all, and none is able to take them out of his hands; and therefore S. Peter ſaith, that we are kept by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation; and for the truth and faithfulneſſe of God, that old wizard Balaam could ſay, God is not as man that he ſhould lie, neither as the ſonne of man that he ſhould repent; hath he ſaid it, and ſhall he not do it? and hath he ſpoken it, and ſhall he not accompliſh it? Yes ſurely, he will do it; becauſe the Lord is faithfull, which will ſtabliſh you and keep you from evill.

Eſa. 43. 13.
Ioh. 10. 29.
1 Pet. 1. 5.
Num. 23. 19.
2 Theſ. 3. 3.

Object. But againſt this you will ſay, that the promiſes of God are generall, made unto the whole Church; therefore not to be appropriated to every one in particular.

Sol. I anſwer, that this is but a very ſilly evaſion; for that the whole Church conſiſteth consisteth of all the particular members; and we find that promises made to particular persons, are generally applied to the whole Church, as where the Lord made a particular promise unto Ioshua, saying, I will not faile thee nor forsake thee, S. Paul applies this promise generally unto all Saints; therefore much more and far better may every one or any particular person apply and appropriate unto himselfe those promises, that are generally made unto all.

Ios 1.9. Heb.13.5.

Obiect. 2. But it may be, you will yet say, God promiseth grace not absolutely, but with condition of obedience; and therefore that the covenant or promise of God is not, that he would simply and absolutely love man and save him; but that he would love and save every dutifull and obedient man; because he loveth obedience better than his creature, yea he loveth his creature, but for his obedience sake; and therefore his obedience failing, the promise of God and his obligation ceaseth.

1 Reason from the promise of God.

Promise of God conditionall.

Sol. I answer, that the covenant and promise of God is conditionall in respect of us, but most absolute in respect of his owne purpose; and therefore as he hath decreed to give us glory, so he hath decreed to give us the meanes, whereby we may come unto his glory; for that in us there is neither ability to obey, nor to persevere, nor to get grace, nor to retaine grace, but it is God that hath begun the good work of his grace in us, who will also perfect the same, saith the Apostle.

Promise of God how conditionall.

Phil.1 6.

Albus de verit. gratiæ Christi.

Or to speak more briefly, I say that the promises of God are twofold.

§1. Aliæ de fine, & hæ conditionatæ.
§2. Aliæ de mediis, & hæ gratuitæ & absolutæ.

Promises of God twofold.

1. Some concerning the end, that is, eternall life; and these are alwaies conditionall, as the Legall promises, Hoc fac & vives, Do this and thou shalt live; and the Evangelicall promises, Crede & vives, if you repent and believe you shall be saved.

1 Sort.

2. Others are concerning the meanes, and the helps that bring us to this end, that is, to eternall life, as to doe the will of God, to believe in Christ, and such like, and these are alwaies absolute, and most freely bestowed upon us; for Moses saith, The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soule, that thou maist live. And the Prophet Ieremie saith, that God would put his feare in their hearts, that they should not depart from him; and S. Paul saith, that faith is the gift of God, and so repentance, and all other graces; God doth most freely and absolutely promise to worke them in the hearts of his elect, without any manner of relation or respect to any act of theirs; he will work these graces in us, and he will work that grace in us, whereby we may accept and receive these graces: And therefore it is certaine, the Saints shall persevere in grace, because God hath promised perseverance unto the Saints.

2 Sort.

Free promises, Deut.30.6.

Ier.32.40. Eph.2.8.

2. The Saints do aske and pray for perseverance and continuance of grace; therefore they have it; for Cur poscitur si non conceditur, why should it be sought, if it be not granted? saith S. Augustine. But Christ saith, Whatsoever you aske in my name, you shall receive it; but thou wilt say, thou hast asked many things, and not received them: I say, perhaps temporall things; and temporall things, si defuerint, petenda quidem sunt, sed non nimium requirenda, they are to be sought, but not too earnestly, saith S. Bernard; Deus enim dat prius quod potius, for God giveth first the things that are best, Et non tribuit quod volunt ut tribuat quod utile est, and he doth not give the things which they would have, that he might give them the things that they should have; audit enim ad necessitatem, non ad voluntatem, for that he heareth them according to their necessity, and not according to their importunity, as S. Augustine speaketh.

2 Reason from the prayers of the Saints.

Aug de bono perseverantiæ.cap.2.

Mat 21 22. Ioh.14.13.

The Saints do pray for the continuance of grace.

Bern.de 4.modis orandi.

Why God sometimes denieth our prayers.

CHAP. V.

The chiefeſt objections that are made againſt this doctrine of the perſeverance of the Saints in grace anſwered; and what ſpeciall things this doctrine teacheth us.

Ob. BVt thou wilt ſay, thou haſt requeſted ſpirituall things; and yet thou haſt not obtained them.

Sol. I anſwer; That either thou haſt obtained, or ſhalt be ſure to obtaine them, if thou deſiſt not from ſeeking; for we muſt not preſcribe any time to God; becauſe as he worketh grace in whom he will, ſo he worketh it when he will; Et eſt animi generoſi perdurare, quoad Deus miſereatur noſtri, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, and it is the part of a good Chriſtian to wait untill God hath mercy upon him, for he never failed any that continued to wait upon him, but at laſt ſatiſfied his deſire.

We muſt not preſcribe Gods time.

Why God deferreth to heare our prayers.

And therefore deſpaire thou not, becauſe they are not preſently granted, but though he tarrie yet wait thou, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, Hab. 2. 3. for the Lord ſometimes doth deferre the grace that we ſeeke, not becauſe he meanes to denie us, ſed ut diu deſiderata dulcius obtinentur, but becauſe things earneſtly requeſted and long expected, are ſweeteſt when they are obtained; and ſometimes hee differreth to grant our requeſts, to trie our patience and conſtancy and other vertues, requiſite in them, that will depend upon God; And therefore this reaſon muſt needs hold; the Saints pray for the continuance of grace; therefore it ſhall continue.

3. Reaſon from the prayer of Chriſt.

Chriſt prayed for all Saints, that their faith ſhould not faile Luk. 22. 32.

3. Chriſt prayed for Peter, that his faith ſhould not faile; therefore he obtained the ſame; but what he obtained for Peter, he obtained for every one of his elect; for our Saviour ſaith, Satan deſired that he might ſift them all; but I prayed for thee, (that is,) for thee chiefly, becauſe thou didſt chiefly and moſt fouly fall: and therefore he doth not here deny that he prayed for the reſt, though hee affirmeth he prayed chiefly for Peter.

Iohn 17. 9.

But, that it may more cleerely appeare, that he did pray for all the reſt of his elect, he ſaith, I pray not for the world, but for them which thou haſt given me out of the world: and therefore the Saints cannot loſe his grace, nor fall away from his favour, becauſe Chriſt prayed for them that they ſhould not fall; and I know (ſaith Chriſt) ô Father, that thou doeſt alwaies heare mee, that is, that thou doeſt alwaies grant me the things that I requeſt: neither did hee onely pray for his Saints in the daies of his fleſh, that their faith ſhould not faile; but now likewiſe he prayeth and maketh interceſſion for us, that God would forgive us our ſins, that he would give us his grace, and that this grace ſhould remaine with us, to bring us to eternall life; and therefore we may aſſure our ſelves that hee which gave us grace, will likewiſe preſerve this grace in us.

Rom 8. 34 & Heb 7. 25.

But againſt this it may be objected,

Ob. 1. That God gave his Spirit and his grace unto Saul, Iudas, Simon Magus, Hymeneus, Philetus, and ſuch like; and yet they fell away from grace. Therefore a man may have true grace, and yet loſe it.

The wicked reprobates may and doe loſe all the graces that they have received.

I anſwer to theſe and to all ſuch like examples in one word, that I doe confeſſe the wicked and hypocrites, or whoſoever not elected, may have many excellent gifts and graces of Gods Spirit, and may utterly loſe the ſame; I denie not this; but I ſay, Gods elect, the true Saints and beloved of God, having once received grace and juſtifying faith in that ſpeciall manner, as I ſhewed before, can never loſe the ſame; and therefore all examples of hypocrites or ſuch like, can prove nothing againſt this that I defend in the behalfe of the Saints.

Ob. 2. But then it will be objected, that David and Peter were the true Saints, beloved of God, and elected to ſalvation, and had ſaving grace; and yet theſe men, by their ſinnes, did loſe that grace; therefore the true Saints, after after they have received grace, may by their ſinnes fall away from the ſame.

I anſwer, that David and Peter did highly offend and grieve the Spirit of God, and loſt the comfort and ſenſe of grace, but not all grace: vigor Spiritus repreſſus, ſed non extinctus; mota fides, non amota; the ſtrength of the Spirit was repreſſed, not extinguiſhed, his faith was ſhaken and moved, but not removed.

David and Peter loſt not all graces Bucerus de lapſu Petri.

That there is a difference betwixt the preſence of Gods ſpirit, and the ſence or feeling the comfort of Gods ſpirit.

For if Peter loſt all grace and all faith, then that faith did faile, which confeſſed Chriſt to be the Sonne of God, and for which our Saviour prayed that it ſhould not faile; and another faith, different from the firſt, was given unto him, which is moſt abſurd.

And therefore Tertullian and Saint Auguſtine doe expound the Prayer of Chriſt, that Peters faith ſhould not faile, of his conſtant & firme perſevering in faith unto the end; and Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith that Chriſt did not onely pray, that his faith ſhould not finally faile, ſed etiam ut ne evaneſceret, aut penitus extingueretur; but alſo that it ſhould not vaniſh or be quite extinguiſhed.

Aug. de Cor. & gr. c. 7.

Ob. 3. But David prayed to create a new heart in him, and to reſtore the Spirit of God unto him; therefore there was no grace in the old corrupted heart, but the Spirit was quite taken from him, and his graces quite extinguiſhed.

Sol. I anſwer, that David had diminiſhed the graces of Gods Spirit in him, and quite loſt many of them, as the cleanneſſe of heart, the joy of the Spirit, and inherent ſanctity, and faith it ſelfe, in reſpect of the act or ſenſe of it; for that it did ſleepe in him; but not in reſpect of the ſubſtance or habit of it; for elſe how could he pray for grace, if all grace had beene taken from him? grace therefore ſtill lurked in the ſecret corners of his heart, and ſeemed aſleepe, as Chriſt was in the ſhip: and therefore David awaked it, and deſired it might be reſtored, in reſpect of the ſenſe and feeling of it, and that this grace, which was now like the fire that is in the ſinders, might be kindled; and therefore David loſt not all grace, though he loſt the ſenſe and feeling of all grace.

What David loſt by his ſins.

Mat. 4. 38.

Ob. 4. But yet againe it may be o jected, that ſinne and the Spirit of God cannot dwell together; for the holy ſpirit of diſcipline flyeth from deceit, and dwelleth not in the body that is ſubject unto ſin; and S. John ſaith, he that committeth ſin is of the Divell, 1 Ioh. 3. and againe the Scripture ſaith, he that committeth ſin is the ſervant of ſinne: and therefore we loſe Gods grace, when we commit our ſinnes.

Sap. 1. 4.

1 Ioh. 3. 8.

Iohn 8. 34.

I anſwer, that there are five ſeverall degrees of ſinning.

How ſin & grace may ſtand together.

Five degrees of ſinning.

1. Τὸ ἐξέλκειν, a thought of committing ſin.
2. Τὸ δελεάζειν, an inticing in the affection.
3. Τὸ συλλαμβάνειν, a conſent and purpoſe to do it.
4. Τὸ πίπτειν, an actuall commiſſion of it.
5. Τὸ ἀποτελεῖν, a continuation together with delectation.

In the foure former waies we may ſinne and doe often ſin, and yet not loſe the Spirit of grace, even when we ſinne; for a man may ſinne, and yet loath this ſinne, while he is in the very acting and doing of that ſinne; even as Saint Paul teſtifieth, that evill that I would not doe, that doe I; for the doing of the ſinne is from the weakneſſe and corruption of our nature; but the loathing and diſliking of it is from the power of grace.

Rom. 7. 15. & 19.

But ſin in the latter place, with continuation and delectation, and the grace of God cannot ſtand together; and that is the meaning of the Holy Ghoſt in the firſt of Wiſdome; for he ſaith not, he dwelleth not in a body that is tainted with ſin, but in a body that is ſubject unto ſinne, (that is,) where ſinne doth rule and raigne as it doth in the wicked, but not in the godly; for he that is borne of God ſinneth not, (that is,) with delight and a full deſire of ſinning.

What ſins cannot ſtand with grace.

1 Iohn 3. 9. Greg. lib. 25. cap. 34. in Iob.

And S. Gregory ſaith, ſin is committed three waies.

Sin committed three waies.

1. Out of ignorance, as Paul did, when he perſecuted the Church of God.

1. Way.

2. Way.

2. Out of infirmity, as S. Peter denied Christ, for tenuit corde quem denegavit ore, whom he denied with his mouth, he beleeved in him with his heart.

3. Way.

3. Out of malice, and of set purpose, as the Iewes, which saw Christ and hated him, and his Father also, as our Saviour saith.

In the two first senses sin may be committed, and grace not excluded; In the latter sense sin and grace cannot stand together; But the godly never sin of studie or set purpose and malice, with a full heart and will, and delight in the sin; and therefore though they sin, yet do they not lose all grace.

Or to answer in a word, I say, sin and grace may thus remaine together in the godly, when sin is committed, grace is throwne downe, but not throwne away, it hath a fall, but it is not dead; when sin is repented of, grace is quickened and risen, and sin is vanquished, but not extinguished.

*Ob.*5. Further it may be objected, that the Saints do feare the losing of all grace, and falling to destruction: therefore they may lose it.

A twofold feare.

Sol. I answer, that there is a twofold feare:

§1. A servile feare.
§2. A filiall feare.

1. Forbidden.

Rom. 8.15.

The first is a feare of damnation, and that is onely in the wicked, and is a feare forbidden and not commanded, as you may see *Rom.*8.15. Ye have not received the spirit of bondage to feare; The second is a feare of offending Gods Majesty, and is ever joyned with love and humility, and a great care of avoiding sin; and this is a speciall fruit of grace, and doth preserve them from sin, as the Scripture speaketh, Timor Domini expellit peccatum; And therefore this feare doth not take away, but rather cherish and increase the plerophorie and full assurance of faith and grace in the Saints of God.

2. A religious feare of falling: and that doth preserve men from falling. Eccles. 1.21.

How the true Saints may feare the loosing of grace.

And yet I denie not, but the Saints may many times feare the losing of the same, by reason of their sins, and the infirmities of the flesh; for every Saint consisteth both of flesh and spirit; and therefore, although the spirit be willing to beleeve, yet the flesh is weake, and by reason of its weakenesse, it so weakneth our faith, our hope, our assurance of grace, and all other fruits of grace, that there is alwaies carentia perfectionis & fructus fidei, a want of perfection, and a defect of that faith, which should be in the best men, while they are in this world; yet that doth not prove, that because they cannot perfectly beleeve the same, that the same is not true, for they beleeve it according to the measure of faith that is given unto them.

*Ob.*6. Lastly, it may be objected, that if we cannot fall away from grace, then the Spirit of God doth worke so irresistibly in the hearts of men, that we cannot fall though we would; but we doe often resist the Spirit of God, as S. Steven saith unto the Iewes, Ye have alwaies resisted the Holy Ghost; And our Saviour saith unto Ierusalem, How often would I have gathered thy children, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not: And therefore the Spirit of God doth not worke so irresistibly in the hearts of men, but that they may fall if they will, and doe fall when they please.

Act. 7.51.

Luk. 13.34.

That the Spirit of God worketh two waies.

Sol. I answer, That the working of Gods Spirit in the hearts of men is twofold.

1. Remissely.

1. Remissely, in the wicked; For in them the good motions of Gods Spirit are so wrought, that they may either yeeld unto them, or resist them; for God doth but only shew them, or but a very litle more then shew them what they should do or beleeve, and not effectually cause them to doe or to beleeve the same; for otherwise, if he did effectually worke the same in their hearts, how could they resist it? For who hath ever resisted his will? that is, when he will effectually or absolutely have such a thing to be; therefore he doth no more, or but litle more, then only illuminate their minds, and set the good motions of his Spirit before the eyes of their hearts, whereby they may accept and follow the same if they will; but they, because of their proneneſse to all evill, and unaptneſse to any good, doe alwaies resist these motions of the Spirit of God, and refuse these good thoughts of grace; and therefore they are made without excuse.

Rom. 9.19.

2. Effectually

2. Effectually in the godly; for in them the Spirit of God doth ſo powerfully worke, that they cannot reſiſt, but do moſt willingly yeeld unto the ſame.

2. Effectually.

And yet this effectuall and irreſiſtible working of Gods Spirit in the godly is done, leni ſpiritu, non dura manu, rather by a ſweet influence, than any extreame violence, by way of ſecret alluring, not coacting them, inclinando voluntatem, non intrudendo poteſtatem, by inclining the will and affection, and not compelling it to any action; for as love creeps into the heart of man, he knowes not how, ſaith the Poet,

Ipſa quoq; incaluì, qualemq; audire ſolebam,
Neſcio quem ſenſi corde repente Deum,
Fugerat ore calor.
Nec cur hoc facerem, poteram mihi reddere cauſam,
Nec noram quid amare eſſet, at illud eram Ovid. Ep. 11.

——Nam cæco carpitur igni.

And he cannot reſiſt it; ſo is the love of God and all other graces wrought in the hearts of the elected Saints of God ſo powerfully, ſo effectually, and ſo irreſiſtibly, that they do moſt willingly yeeld unto all good motions, and adhere unto God for ever, and that I ſay by a moſt voluntary yeelding and delighting in that ſweet and effectuall working of grace in their hearts.

Object. But here, it may be, ſome will ſay, that by this doctrine we deſtroy the liberty of mans will, and make the goodneſſe of the Saints to ſpring out of meere neceſſity.

Sol. I anſwer, that when by the power of grace, the will of man becomes willing to obey the will of God, this is not to deſtroy, but to rectifie the liberty of our will, which conſiſteth not in an unſtable changeableneſſe to bend every way with every blaſt of wind, but in a ſetled reſolution of doing nothing contrary to the will of God; and this is no compulſion of the will, or a violating of the liberty thereof; for when we pray, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven, I demand, whether thoſe heavenly Spirits, that do moſt conſtantly obey his will, and have neither will nor power to diſobey it, have the liberty of their will taken from them, or have they any wrong done unto them, becauſe their wils are ſo fettered by grace, that they cannot turne their wils to any evill? By no meanes; becauſe this obeying and ſerving God is perfect liberty, and this work of grace is ſo farre from any unjuſt manacling of our will, that, as our Saviour ſaith, it is the onely thing that makes us truly free; becauſe that before, we were bound in the chaines of ſinne, that we could not go about any work of God; but, when the grace of Chriſt hath once looſened our hearts from theſe bonds of Satan, then can we ſay with David, I will keepe thy ſtatutes, I will delight in thy word, and I will run the way of thy commandements; and this is no compelling of the will, but an inlarging and directing of the ſame by the grace of God, which doth ſweetly incline it, to be moſt willingly obedient to the will of God.

Liberty of our will not deſtroyed

Ioh 8.36.

Pſal. 119.8. Ver. 16. Ver. 32.

And ſo I hope you ſee this doctrine of the certainty and aſſurance of the continuance of grace in the elected Saints, ſufficiently cleared and confirmed.

And this ſheweth the exceeding greatneſſe of Gods love unto his elected Saints above all other men in the world; for that he doth not only offer and give his grace unto them, as he doth unto others, but alſo he doth in a more ſpeciall manner work the ſame ſo effectually in them, as to make them alwaies retaine the ſame, and perſevere therein unto everlaſting life: O that therefore we would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and ſhew the wonders that he doth for theſe children of men: And that this might teach us,

Pſal. 107.8.

What the former doctrine ſhould teach us.

1. To praiſe God for his goodneſſe, and his exceeding great mercy unto us, not only in making us good, but alſo in giving us his grace to perſevere in good; for it is he onely, ſaith S. Auguſtine, qui fecit bonos, faciet perſeverare in bono, that hath made us good, which can and will make us to perſevere in good; & qui jubet credere, facit ut credamus; and he which biddeth us to believe, muſt give us the grace to believe, or we ſhall never be able to believe; and therefore we may boldly, and we ſhould daily ſay with S. Auguſtine, Da Domine quod jubes, & jube quod vis; give us grace, O Lord, and ability to do what thou commandeſt us, and then command us to do what thou wilt.

1. To praiſe God for this grace.

Aug de bono perſeverant.

2. To pray for the continuance of this grace,

2. To pray unto God continually, that he would give us grace to serve him, and grace to perſevere in his ſervice all the dayes of our life; quia incaſſum bonum agitur ſi ante vitæ terminum terminatur, becauſe that good is of no validity that wanteth perpetuity; ſed perſeverantia eſt virtus, quæ coronat omnem virtutem; but perſeverance is the onely vertue that crowneth every vertue; and without which, no vertue will availe us any thing.

Gal 3.3. Mat.24.13.

And therefore we muſt not begin in the ſpirit, and end in the fleſh; but we muſt continue unto the end, if we would be ſaved: and therefore we ſhould pray unto God, that he, which hath begun a good work in us, would continue the ſame unto the end.

Phil.1.6.

3. To make us afraid to ſin,

3. To make us afraid to ſin, and eſpecially, to commit ſin with greedineſſe, as the wicked do, whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed blood, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; for he that ſo committeth ſin, is the ſervant of ſin, and the grace of God is not in him: and he that committeth any ſinne, is in a moſt fearefull caſe; and therefore no man, from this doctrine, ſhould grow ſecure and careleſſe, as if he were now void of all feare, and free from all danger of loſing the grace which he hath received; for though it be true, that a true child of God cannot utterly loſe, or finally fall away from that grace which he received, becauſe he is continually carefull by moſt fervent prayers and deteſtation of ſinnes, and all other exerciſes of piety, to preſerve this grace; yet we ſee, that they, which grow careleſſe of theſe duties, do oftentimes quite fall away from all the grace which they had, and ſo ſhew themſelves to be ſuch, as never were any true members of Chriſt; and others, that are the true Saints of God, when they do neglect their duties, and begin to grow preſumptuous, do fall into ſuch languiſhing fits, that they loſe the ſenſe of all grace, and all comfort of Gods Spirit, untill it pleaſeth God, of his more ſpeciall mercy, to give them grace to quicken and ſtirre up that benummed grace, which is ready to die within them, to make them ſee their ſinnes, and to become the more carefull of their wayes; and therefore this doctrine is ſo farre from giving any incouragement to ſinne or ſecurity, that I know none which can better preſerve us and provoke us to do our duties, than the ſame; becauſe they, that do not perſevere in their graces and ſervice of God, are hereby taught, to aſſure themſelves, that they neither are, nor ever were any true members of Chriſt; For ſo this doctrine is How far ſin doth indanger us.

4. To aſſure us that revolters never were true members of Chriſt. 1 Ioh.2.19.

4. To aſſure us, that all thoſe, which appeared glorious for a while, and ſerved God for a time, and then fell away from God, and ſtarted aſide like a broken bow, were never the elected Saints of God, but were onely among us, and not of us, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us, and have perſevered in grace and their ſervice of God, even as we do.

5. To caſt our ſelves on God, and ſubmit our ſelves to his will.

5. If our faith be ſo weake, as that we cannot believe this truth, and our underſtanding ſo little, that we cannot perceive the working of Gods grace in our hearts, but that we are ſomwhat like unto S. Paul, when he was rapt up into the third heaven, whether in the body, or out of the body, he could not tell, God knoweth, then would I have every man to caſt himſelfe wholly upon God, to relie upon his will, to doe what he commandeth, to believe what he promiſeth, to feare what he threatneth, ſo much as ever he can, and in all things els, in the iſſue of all this, to ſay, thy will be done, I am thine, do with me what thou wilt; and ſo the Poet ſaid well:

As once Euripus with ambiguous flowes
The great Kings learn'd Stagerite did poſe,
Till puzzel'd with the mixture of his theame,
He drown'd his weakeneſſe in the ſporting ſtreame;
So when, my God, I cannot comprehend
The various meanes to mine eternall end,
Fluxe and refluxe of grace, the ebbe and tide
Of temporall contingents undeſcri'd.

When

When this by reaſon is not underſtood,
I caſt my ſoule into thy mercies flood,
And burie all mine unſcal'd intelligence
In the great ſea of thy ſupreame providence;
My will is drown'd in thine, and flowes together
To the ſame act, without or why, or whither:
Thus iron heated in the workemans frame,
Seemes to have loſt his metall in the flame.

And ſo much for the firſt thing, that S. Paul wiſheth unto the Saints, Grace be unto you.

CHAP. VI.

Of a twofold peace; the imperfect peace threefold; the diverſe kinds of peace with men; of the peace of conſcience; the life of the Saints a continuall warre, with the world, with the fleſh, and with the Divell; and how we muſt wage this warre.

2. PEace be unto you, is the ſecond thing that the Apoſtle wiſheth, a companion of grace; and therefore ſure a moſt precious thing, being one of the two moſt excellent things that can be wiſhed, and the onely thing, which our Saviour alwaies wiſhed unto his Diſciples; for when he came unto them, he ſaid but pax vobis, peace be unto you; and when he went away from them, he ſaid but my peace I leave with you; and he needed to ſay no more, for where peace is, there muſt needs be grace, becauſe peace is the fruit of grace.

2. Peace.

Luke 24.36. Iohn 14.27.

But that you may the better underſtand what the Apoſtle meaneth, you muſt conſider that there are two kinds of peace.

1. Pax benedicta, a bleſſed peace.
2. Pax maledicta, a curſed peace, if I may give it the name of peace.

That there is a twofold peace.

The firſt is proper to the Saints; the ſecond to the wicked: and therefore let us conſider,

Firſt, of the bleſſed peace, and that is two-fold,

1. Perfect.
2. Imperfect.

} And

1. The bleſſed peace twofold. Thom. 2.2.q.29.

1. The perfect peace is not here to be found on earth, but onely in beatis, among the bleſſed Saints of heaven, ſaith Aquinas: and therefore we ſhould long for that place where there is perfect peace, pax ſuper pacem, & pax quæ exuperat omnem ſenſum, peace upon peace, and peace which paſſeth all underſtanding; peace in mind, peace with our owne fleſh, peace from wicked men, peace with all our neighbours, peace from the very divels, peace with God, and there ſhall be no end of peace, but peace will be the end of all our labours, ſaith S. Bernard.

1. Perfect peace: in heaven.

Bern. ſer. 23 de verbis Pſal.

2. The imperfect peace, which the Saints have here in this life, is threefold, as the ſame S. Bernard noteth.

1. With God.
2. With men.
3. With our ſelves.

} For

2. Imperfect peace. Idem ſer. 5. in feſto omnium ſanct.

Imperfect peace threefold.

1. Our fore fathers ſinning againſt God, made us all enemies unto God, and God ſaith, he will be avenged of his enemies; and therefore we cannot be delivered, unleſſe we be reconciled; for there is no way to flie, no place to hide us, no Atturney to plead for us, as old Elie ſheweth; and therefore O man, why ſtriveſt thou with God? Durum eſt contra ſtimulum calcitrare, it is hard to ſtrive againſt the ſtreame, it is hard to prevaile againſt thy God, for he is a conſuming fire, and never any eſcaped out of his hands.

1. Peace with God. Eſa. 1.24. Pſal. 139.7,8,9. 1 Sam 2.25. Acts 9.5. Heb. 12.29. Eſa. 58.5.

Chriſt therefore became our Mediatour, and undertooke the diſcipline of our peace,

Ephes. 2. 17.

peace, by his most bitter sufferings for our transgressions; and so he became peace to them that were afarre off, and peace to them that were neere; that is, both to the Iewes and to the Gentiles, as Saint Hierome expoundeth it: In respect of this, our Saviour, after his resurrection, when he said, peace be unto you, shewed them his hands and his feet, as if he should have said, behold hereby how deerely I have bought and purchased your peace, by such bitter sufferings for your transgressions.

Iohn 20. 20.

Christ made our peace with God. Rom. 5. 1.

And so Christ hath made our peace with God, if we beleeve in him; for being justified by faith we have peace with God through Iesus Christ our Lord. And this is the first and the chiefest peace, and the fountaine from whence all other peace doth flow: And therefore seeing, as our Saviour saith, Blessed are the peace-makers, that is, they which make peace betwixt man and man, then how much more blessed, how many thousand times more blessed is our sweet Saviour Christ, that hath made our peace with God? ô let us blesse his name and praise him and magnifie him for ever.

Mat. 5. 9.

2. Of peace with men. What it is.

2. The second is peace with men, and this is a fruit and effect of our peace with God, and it is nothing else, but a sweet harmony and consent of mindes to will and to doe the same things, and to helpe and further each other in all godly actions.

Act. 2. 46. & Act. 4. 32. Calvinus in 2 Cor.

And so we read of the Christians of the Primitive Church, that they were ὁμοθυμαδὸν, of one heart and of one mind; and this must prius pertinere ad opinionum consensum first pertaine to consent in judgement and opinion, to teach and to beleeve the same points of doctrine, and then mutua sese charitate & amorum conjunctione complecti, to love each other with mutuall love and charity; for

Alciat. in Emblem

Fœderis hæc species, id habet concordia signum,
Vt quos jungit amor, jungat & ipsa manus.

This is the property of true peace, to have a sweet harmony of consent and concord in all things, to will the same things, to speake the same things, and to doe the same things, and (as the Apostle speaketh) to keepe the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

Ephes. 4. 3.

That there be divers kindes of peace with men.

And here we must understand, that this peace with men is of divers kindes, according to the severall estates and degrees of men; but for methods sake wee may divide it into a

1. Civill peace threefold.

1. Civill peace, and
2. Ecclesiasticall peace.

1. The civill peace is either
1. Domesticall.
2. Politicall.
3. Vniversall.

1. Domesticall.

The 1. is, when man and wife doe lovingly live, and peaceably agree together, in all honestie and godlinesse; and so when parents and children, masters and servants, and all that are in a house doe performe each one his duty, for the continuance of peace and quietnesse within the house, without which the house cannot continue, saith our Saviour.

Mat 12. 25.

2. Politicall.

The 2. is, when Magistrate and Subject, high and low, rich and poore, neighbours, equals, and all that doe remaine and dwell, either in Citie, Countrey, or Common-wealth, doe each one performe his duty, to live in peace and quietnesse, for the preservation either of Citie or Common-wealth, without which the strongest kingdome cannot stand, saith our Saviour.

Mat. 12. 25.

3. Vniversall. Zach 9. 10.

The 3. is when Kings, Countries, and nations are in league, and in peace one with another, for the publique good, the generall commerce of all nations, and the unspeakable benefit of all the world.

Mich. 4. 3.

2. Ecclesiasticall peace.

2. Ecclesiasticall peace is, when the Ministers and Preachers of Gods Word doe

1. Agree

1. Agree in opinions among themſelves.
2. Live in peace and quietneſſe among their neighbours and pariſhioners.

Both which do exceedingly make for the happineſſe of the Church, for the inlargement of the Kingdome of Chriſt, and the propagation of his Goſpell.

And theſe are the chiefeſt kindes and principall ſorts of peace among men, which is the ſecond kinde of peace, that the Apoſtle wiſheth unto the Saints, peace with men.

3. The third is peace with our ſelves, another fruit and effect of the former peace with God; and it is nothing elſe but a quieting of our mindes and conſciences, not onely for that we are at peace with all men, (which is an exceeding great content unto the minde of man) but eſpecially for that we are at peace with God, and therefore need not feare the vengeance, and the wrath of God; becauſe wee are reconciled unto him, our debts are paid, and our ſins are ſatisfied for by Ieſus Chriſt.

3. Of the peace of conſcience. What it is.

That nothing in the world can diſcontent the minds of the Saints.

And therefore, as our Saviour ſaith, let not your hearts be troubled, neither feare; for I have overcome the world, I have vanquiſhed your enemies, I have waſhed away your ſinnes, and I have made your peace with God; ſo the Saints doe follow his advice, they doe ſet their hearts at reſt, and (becauſe they know that there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus) they doe exultingly ſay with the bleſſed Apoſtle. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods choſen? it is God that juſtifieth: who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of God? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh, or famine, or nakedneſſe, or perill, or ſword? No no; not theſe, nor any of theſe, nor all theſe, nor yet principalities, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor life, nor death, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor any thing elſe ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Ieſus; for that in all theſe things we are more then conquerours through him that loved us: and therefore,

Ioh 14.27.

Rom 8.1.

Rom 8.33.

Ibid. v. 35, 36, &c.

Terra tremit, pontus mugit, ruit ortus & orcus,
Si modo firma fides, nulla ruina nocet;

Let the Sea make a noiſe, and let the Earth be moved into the midſt of the Sea; yea let the Heavens vaniſh, and Hell periſh; yet the Saints need not feare to periſh; becauſe as the Poet ſaith,

The godly need not feare any evill.

Conſcia mens recti famæ mendacia ridet. A juſt heart laughes at lies;

For their conſciences being at peace, aſſuring them, they are at peace with God, and knowing they are at peace with men, they need not feare what man can do unto them, nor what the divell can do againſt them: And therefore Saint Gregory ſaith, nulla nocebit adverſitas ſi nulla dominatur iniquitas, no adverſity can hurt thee, if no ſin doth raigne over thee.

And ſo you ſee, the threefold peace, which the holy Apoſtle wiſheth unto the Saints, and which every godly Saint enjoyeth.

But here, before we paſſe any further, we muſt conſider, that as the Saints have this threefold peace, ſo they have a treble warre; for alas, alas, non poteſt eſſe pax firma & ſolida niſi in regione ſua, we may not looke for firme and perfect peace, but in the kingdome of peace, ſaith S. Bernard.

Bern. in parab. Chriſti & Eccleſia

And therefore our life is but a warfare againſt three mortall enemies,

The life of the Saints is a continuall war with three ſorts of enemies.

1. The World, and all vanities.
2. The Fleſh, and all concupiſcence.
3. The Divell, and all temptations.

} For

1. The love of the world is enmitie with God, ſaith the Apoſtle: and therefore we muſt not onely uſe the world as though we uſed it not, but we muſt deſpiſe it, and trample it under our feet, and have no fellowſhip with the workers of iniquity; but ſuper cuſtodiam noſtram ſtare, to ſtand upon our guard, and to profeſſe open hoſtility againſt them; for as Iehu ſaid unto Iehoram, what peace can there be, ſo long as the whoredomes of Ieſabel, and her witchcrafts are ſo many? ſo ſay I to the wicked worldlings; what peace can they expect from the Saints,

1. With the world Iames 4.4. 1 Ioha 2.15. 1 Cor 7.31. Hab 2.1.

2 Reg 9.22.

ſo

so long as their whoredomes, idolatries, drunkennesse, swearing, and other feare full sinnes, and most horrible abominations doe remaine and raigne amongst them? for we must hate the very garment that is spotted with sinne, as the Apostle speaketh.

Iude Ep ver. 23.

2. With the flesh.

Gal. 5 17. Iac 1.15. Aug to. 10. f. 333. c. 2.

2. The flesh lusteth against the spirit, saith Saint Paul; and lust, when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sinne, and sinne when it is finished bringeth death, saith Saint Iames: and therefore cum vitijs bellum semper est habendum, wee must ever strive and fight against our vices, and against the concupiscence and the lusts of our flesh, which alwaies fight against our soules, saith S. Augustine, out of Saint Peter.

1 Pet 2 11.

3. With the divell. 1 Pet. 5. 8.

3. Satan goeth about like a roaring Lyon, seeking whom he may devoure; hee enticeth us to sinne, and when we have sinned he accuseth us to God, and hee bringeth us to hell, and there he plagueth us for ever for our sinnes: And therefore pax nostra bellum contra Satanam, saith Tertullian; Our onely way to have peace with God, is to make warre against the divell; and when he seeketh to tempt us to any vice, to say, vade Satana, non tentabis, avoid Satan, thou false inticer, and the accuser of our brethren, I will not yeeld unto thy wicked suggestions.

Tertullian in lib. ad Martyr.

Mat. 4 10.

And so you see, that although the Saints bee at peace with God, at peace with men, and at peace with their owne selves; yet must they looke for nothing else but warre; warre with the world, and all worldly vanities; warre with sinne, and with all sinnefull men; and warre with Satan, and with all Satans temptations.

In this respect our Saviour saith, hee came not to send peace into the world, but the sword, yea many times to set a man at variance against his Father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter in law against her mother in law; yea and that, which seemes worst of all, to set a man against himselfe; For if any man will come after me, he must denie himselfe, and take up his Crosse and follow me, saith our Saviour, that is, he must not onely resist the divell, and suffer all the miseries, that the world can inflict upon him, but he must mortifie the deeds of his own flesh, and destroy the whole body of sin.

Luk. 12. 51.

Mat. 10. 35.

Mat. 16. 24.

Rom. 6 6.

And in this respect, the whole life of the Saints is called a warfare, and all the Saints are called Souldiers, that must manfully fight this Christian battell; and that three waies, or after a threefold manner.

Iob 7 1. 1 Tim 6 12.

How our warre must be waged three waies.

1. By the word of the Minister.
2. By the sword of the Magistrate.
3. By the lawfull assistance of every man.

For all these must joyne together, not onely to fight each one against his owne sinnes, but also with united forces to fight against all the enemies of the Lord.

The Ministers must be the chiefe Captaines in the war against the wicked. Esay 59 1.

1. We that are the Ministers, like chiefe Captaines, must crie aloud and spare not to tell the people their transgressions, and the house of Iacob their offences; we must refute their errors, reprove their sinnes, and indeavour by all meanes to destroy whatsoever maketh against the glorious Gospell of Christ: To this end it is worth the noting, which the Apostle speaketh, that the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but mighty through God to the pulling downe of strong holds, and imaginations, and every high thing, that exalteth it selfe against the knowledge of God, and to the bringing into captivity, of every thought to the obedience of Christ, and having vengeance in a readinesse against all disobedience: You see how strongly we are armed, and how well we are weaponed to fight against the wicked.

2 Cor. 10 4, 5, 6.

The power of Gods Word. Ephes 6. 17. Heb 4. 12. Iohn 12. 48.

And yet, because we doe all this but with the word of our lips, the wicked feare us not; but let them looke unto it; for that Word is sharper then a two-edged sword, and it is able to divide their soules in sunder, and to condemne them all in the day of condemnation, as our Saviour sheweth; The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge them in the last day.

2. The

2. The Magistrates must be likewise Captaines and Commanders in this war of God, and with the sword of justice they must cut off Idolaters, Heretickes, Schismatickes, and such like enemies of our peace, and roote out all the workers of iniquity from the Church of God, as King Asa, Iehu, Iehosaphat, Iosias and Ezechias, and all good Kings and governours ever did, and as the Lord commandeth all to doe, Cant. 2. 15. For they are the Ministers of God to take vengeance on such as doe evill.

2 The Magistrates must war against the wicked.

Rom. 13. 4.

3. Every private man, after a just and lawfull manner, in his owne place and station, must, to the uttermost of his ability, aide and assist both Magistrate and Minister, to root out sin, & debellare superbos, and to subdue the workers of iniquity; For

3 Every man must joyne helpe to war against the wicked.

In communem hostem quilibet homo miles.

Every man must fight, when every man is interessed in the danger, or else the sparing of our enemies will prove to be a destruction unto our selves; For as the Poet saith;

Iam tua res agitur paries cum proximus ardet,
Vcalegon———

Virgil. Æneid. l. 2.

If thou wilt not helpe us against our enemies, but take thine ease, and leave all the burthen upon thy fellowes, thou maist assure thy selfe, when they have done with us, and undone us perhaps for want of helpe, they will begin with thee: and then shalt thou bee left alone, as a prey unto their teeth, to be devoured; because thou wouldest not joyne helpe with us to extirpate all the workers of iniquity.

And therefore, quia vis unita fortior, because a three-fold cord is hardly broken, both the Minister, and Magistrate, and every man, should joyne together, to resist the divell, to oppose the world, and to subdue the wicked; that so, being at continuall warre with these, we might be at continuall peace with God, which is the blessed peace of the Saints.

All should joyne against the wicked.

Eccles. 4. 12.

CHAP. VII.

Of the accursed peace or confederacie of the wicked; of their threefold war; with God, with the godly and with their owne conscience; of foure kindes of consciences; the excellencie of each kinde of peace; the excellencie and necessity of a good name.

2. THe other kinde of peace, that is, the cursed peace, of wicked sinfull men, is likewise threefold.

2 The accursed peace of the wicked; threefold.

1. With the divell.
2. With the lusts of the flesh. } For
3. With themselves.

1. While they serve the divell, and while hee keepeth them in his palace, they are in peace; for hee hath them safe enough; and therefore hee will not strive against them, but rather lull them, like Endimion, into a senselesse and an endlesse sleepe of sinne and security: O most miserable estate of wretched men!

1 With the divell.

Luk. 11. 21.

2. They loosen the bridle of licentiousnesse, and never strive against the lusts of the flesh, but doe give themselves wholly unto all lasciviousnesse; they bathe themselves in delights, and whatsoever their hearts desire they keepe not from them; they say, come, Let us enjoy the good things that are present, and let us speedily use the creatures like as in youth; let us fill our selves with costly wine and ointments; and let no flower of the spring passe by us; let us crowne our selves with rosebuds, before they be withered; let none of us goe without his part of our voluptuousnesse, and let us leave tokens of our joyfull-

2 With their own lusts.

The loose life of wicked men.

Eccles. 2. 10.

Sap. 2. 6, 7, 8, 9.

neſſe in every place; this is the life of the wicked; and therefore they are at peace with the fleſh, and with all the concupiſcence of the fleſh, the concupiſcence of the eyes, and with the pride of life.

1 Iohn 2 16.

3. They joyne together in all impiety, ſit nobis marſupium unum, they will have but one purſe, and they will have but one minde, nam ut expedit ipſis dæmonibus obaudire ſibi ipſis in ſchiſmate, for as it behoveth the very divells to have unity in their diſtractions; ſo it behoveth the wicked men to have peace among themſelves, that they may, with the more violence, irreſiſtibly perpetrate and bring to paſſe their miſchievous purpoſes: And therefore, though many times Ephraim will bee againſt Manaſſes, and Manaſſes againſt Ephraim, & proditoris proditor, and one lewd traitor will betray another; yet faciunt unitatem contra unitatem, they will, like Sampſons foxes, bee tied together, and they will agree in their diſagreements like Pilate and Herod to crucifie the LORD and all his ſervants.

3. With one another. Pro. 1. 14. Chryſ. hom. 29. in Matth.

The unity or confederacie of the ungodly. Eſay 9 21.

Iudg 15 4.

But as the Saints have war with Satan, war with ſin, and war with ſinfull men, ſo theſe wicked men have a threefold war.

The threefold war of the wicked

For { 1. Warre with God. 2. Warre with the godly. 3 Warre within their own breaſts. }

1. God fighteth againſt them, as the Scripture ſheweth; Ah, I will eaſe me of mine adverſaries, I will avenge me of mine enemies: And therefore he is called a man of war, and the Lord of hoſts; becauſe he doth not onely fight himſelfe againſt them, who can deſtroy them all with the breath of his mouth, but hath alſo many armies of creatures to fight againſt them, eſpecially

1 With God. Eſay 1. 24.

Exod. 15. 3.

How all creatures do fight againſt the wicked.

Gods armie twofold. { 1. A Celeſtiall, and 2. A Terreſtriall } armie. And

1 Celeſtiall, threefold

1. I find a threefold heaven, { 1. Aerie 2. Starrie 3. Glorious } heaven.

1. The aerie.

And the Lord hath his army ready in each of theſe to fight againſt the wicked; for

1. By his Aerie ſouldiers he deſtroyed the old world, hee opened the windowes of heaven, and rained forty daies and forty nights upon them, untill the raine had ſwept them all away; and ſo by this one ſouldier of the Lord were deſtroyed all the enemies of GOD: So hee deſtroyed Sodome and Gomorrah with fire and brimſtone; and he deſtroyed the Amorites with haileſtones; and ſo the winds on the ſeas, and the froſts on the lands deſtroy many men; for if hee ſends forth his ice like morſels, who is able to abide his froſt?

Gen. 7. 19. 21.

Gen. 19. 24, 25. Ioſh. 10. 11.

Pſal 147. 17.

2. The very Starres in their order did fight againſt Siſera, even as the heavens and all the winds did helpe Theodoſius in his victories againſt the wicked, whereof Claudian ſpeaketh.

2 The ſtarrie.

Iudg. 5. 20.

O nimium dilecte Deo, cui militat æther,
Et conjurati veniunt ad claſſica venti:

O wellbeloved of God, thou that haſt the skies, and the windes and all to fight for thee againſt thine enemies; becauſe they were indeed the enemies of the Lord, who hath theſe his armies ready at command to fight againſt them, as he commanded the Sun to ſtand ſtill in Gibeon, and the Moone in the valley of Ajalon, untill Duke Ioſhua was avenged of his enemies.

Ioſh. 10. 12.

3. The Angels of God are not onely inſtruments of Gods mercies towards the godly, but alſo executioners of his juſtice upon the wicked; and therefore an Angell ſlew all the firſt-borne of Egypt, and ſlew an hundred eighty and five thouſand in the hoſt of Senacherib, and at the laſt day, the Angels ſhall gather the wicked and binde them up like faggots for everlaſting fire.

3 The glorious.

Exod. 12. 29. 2 Reg. 19. 35.

Mat. 13. 49. & 50.

And the Saints of God, though they bee milites emeriti, ſouldiers diſcharged and reſting from their labours, where there is neither militia nor malitia; yet yet are they fighting againſt the wicked, though not with their pikes, but with their prayers, ſaying, how long tarieſt thou holy and true, to judge and to avenge our blond on them that dwell in the earth? And this is not out of any evill ſpleene to them, but out of a godly zeale in the cauſe of the higheſt.

The Saints in heaven doe pray againſt the wicked Revel.6.10.

2. God hath his terreſtriall army: the ſea drowned Pharaoh, and would of late have drowned us, had not the Lord fettered the waters of the ſeas, as Xerxes did the waters of Helleſpont, and ſaid, hitherto ſhalt thou goe and no further: And the earth ſwallowed up Dathan, and covered the Congregation of Abiram: and ſo the frogs, flies, and ſenſeleſſe creatures, the ſtone in the wall, the beame, and the timber, will cry and fight againſt the wicked; yea, the very divels themſelves ſhall fight for God againſt them, and thoſe creatures ſhall bee accurſed, that fight not with the Lord againſt the wicked, ſaith Debora: who then but ſenſeleſſe creatures would, with the Pigmies, make warre againſt Hercules, or with the Giants θεομαχειν, to make war againſt God? when Troylus fought with Achilles, the Poet crieth out Infælix puer—

2 Gods terreſtriall army. Exod.14.28. Iob 38.11. Pſal.106.17. Hab.2.11. 1 Sam.16.14. Iudg 5.23.

—Impar congreſſus Achilli

Virgil. Æneid l.1 p.127.

And what then ſhall wee ſay of theſe that dare adventure to fight againſt God? I read of the Pſilli, a people of low ſtature and leſſe wit, that being troubled with the Southerne winde, went out on a day, to make warre againſt the ſame; but the further they went the more it blew, untill at laſt it covered them all with the Sands: The ſame end and worſe will betide them, that will dare venture to ſtand at variance with God; and therefore it were better for them to ſue for conditions of peace, and to ſeeke unto Chriſt Ieſus, to be a bleſſed peace-maker betwixt them poore mortall ſinners and the immortall God.

2. They are at warre with men; nam ut mali ſemper perſecuti ſunt bonos, ita & boni ſemper perſecuti ſunt malos, for as the wicked do alwaies perſecute the good, ſo the good doe alwaies ſtrive againſt the wicked; hi per juſtam diſciplinam, iſti per iniquam ſuperbiam; the juſt doe reprove the wicked by due correction and diſcipline; and the wicked doe perſecute the godly by moſt unjuſt and cruell proceedings: and therefore ſeeing righteouſneſſe and peace have kiſſed each other, qui juſtitiam non amavit, ille pacem non habebit, he ſhall never have peace, which loves not righteouſneſſe; and therefore inter Babilonem & Ieruſalem pax eſſe non poteſt, there can be no peace betwixt the godly and the wicked, ſaith S. Bernard.

2 The wicked are at war with the godly. Pſal.83.10. Pſal.34.13. Bern.ſer.2. de pug. ſpirituali.

3. They have warres, bella & horrida bella, and the moſt grievous warres that may be within themſelves; For cognatum immo innatum eſt omni ſceleri ſceleris ſupplicium, ſin beares its puniſhment alwaies at his owne backe; and ſo S. Auguſtine ſaith, juſſiſti Domine, & ita eſt, ut animus inordinatus ſit ſibi ipſi pœna, thou haſt ordained, ô Lord, and ſo it is, that a wicked minde ſhould ever be a puniſhment unto it ſelfe; for if we doe ill, ſinne lieth at the doore like a wilde beaſt to dogge us whereſoever we goe; and the conſcience of ſinne beareth forth ſuch fruits, as that nothing can be more grievous, or more miſerable to a mortall man; for ſhe is a witneſſe of our debts, a judge of our deeds, and a tormentor of all our actions, ſaith S. Bernard.

3 The wicked have war with themſelves. Lipſius de Conſtantia. l.2.c.13. Ged.47. The fearefull cõſcience of wicked men. Εσοπτης ἁπαντων ἡ συνειδησις Θεου. Conſcientia omnibus Deus eſt. Menand. Ovid. de triſt. l.5. Examples of them that were tortured by their owne conſciences

Strangulat incluſus dolor atq; exæſtuat intus:

Ovid. de triſt. l.5.

And ſo we read of almoſt infinite examples; for Oedipus, that inceſtuous King of Thebes, was led to Athens by his daughter Antigona, and was buried in the temple of Erinnis, that is, of perturbations; and Iocaſta his wife and mother ſtrangled her ſelfe, ſaith Sophocles.

Theodoricus imagined he ſaw (as he was at ſupper) the viſage of Symmacus, whom he had unjuſtly ſlaine, in a fiſhes head, after which he could never be comforted, but pined away moſt miſerably.

Langueſ f 145.

Creſcentius, the Popes Vicegerent, in the Councell of Trent, ſaw the divell in the likeneſſe of a blacke dogge comming unto him, ſaith Sleidan; and Polidor

Sleid.l com 23.in fine.

Pol. Virg. hiſt. l. 25

lidor Virgil doth write the like of Richard the third, of this Kingdome.

Tiberius was ſo vexed with grievous torments, that he deſired all the gods would rather deſtroy him at once, then ſuffer him to pine away through ſuch a tormented conſcience.

Sueton. in vita Neronis. Heu quam difficile eſt crimen non prodere vultu.

Nero that monſter of men, when he had unnaturally murdered his owne naturall mother, was ſo grievouſly vexed in conſcience, that he could not be comforted by any meanes, but in his minde he did alwaies ſee his mothers Ghoſt crying for vengeance againſt him.

And although the godly ſaith in his teſtament, as we reade in old Fathers,

Terram terra tegat, dæmon peccata reſumat,
Mundus res habeat, ſpiritus aſtra petat.

The godly mans teſtament.

Let earth go to the earth, from whence it was taken; let the divel take my ſins, which he hath inticed me unto; let the world have my goods, wherewith I was inriched; and let my ſoule climbe to heaven, where it may be bleſſed: yet I read in the life of Rubertus, of a wicked covetous wretch, that, when the eyes of his conſcience were opened, hee bequeathed omnia bona domino Regi, corpus ſepulturæ, & animam diabolo, his goods to the King, whom hee had deceived, and his ſoule to the divell, whom he had ſerved: and to what end ſhould I reckon more? For

Lan. hiſt. de vitis archiepiſc. Cantuarienſ.

The wicked mans teſtament.

It is apparant, that if the wicket of wicked mens minds were opened, we ſhould ſee mangled ſoules and tormented conſciences, that doe alwaies ſleepe like the Nightingall, which hath ever a pricke before her breaſt; for, as Juvenal ſaith,

Juven. Satyr. 13.

Hi ſunt qui trepidant & ad omnia fulgura pallent,
Cum tonat exanimes primo quoq; murmure cœlum;

These are they that are terrified with the very thunders, and doe flie away when none purſueth them: and no wonder that it ſhould be ſo; becauſe, as Picторius ſaith in his Epigrams;

Picторius in Epigram.

Iſtud habet damni vitium inter cætera, quod mens
Palpitat aſſiduo flagitioſa metu;
Semper enim, vel ſi non deprendatur, in ipſo
Seſe deprendi poſſe putat ſcelere;
Deq; ſuo, alterius quoties de crimine ſermo eſt,
Cogitat, & credit ſe magis eſſe reum;
Inq; dies timor hinc creſcit———

Ob. But it may be ſome will ſay, all ſinners have not ſuch unquiet mindes, neither have all the wicked wounded ſpirits.

Sol. I anſwer, that ſome indeed are of ſuch braſen faces, that they can laugh their ſinnes out of countenance, and ſmile with the foole, when they goe to the gallowes: But I aſſure my ſelfe their heart bleedes when their faces counterfeit ſmiles; and they are like Dives, that ſaw Lazarus a farre off in Abrahams boſome, but was himſelfe in hell tormented; for the ſoule may be ſorrowfull when the countenance ſeemeth cheerefull.

D. Hall in his Treatiſe of heaven upon earth.

And this is moſt likely; for that they can never want furies ſo long as they have themſelves, or if they could finde a way to runne away from themſelves, and to cauſe their ſoules to run away from their bodies; yet their conſciences will not flie away from their ſoules, nor their ſinnes from their conſciences.

Facinoroſa conſcientia eſt inſtar ulceris in corpore, quantumvis relanguit ut animo ſæpe cinantem ingerat ac pervellentem Plutarch de tranq. animi.

And therefore, let a ſinner flie ab agro ad civitatem, à publico ad domum, à domo in cubiculum, from the field into the citie, from the market into his houſe, from his houſe into his bed, and thence, in the bitterneſſe of his ſoule, (like thoſe unpatient fiſhes that leape out of the pan into the flame) let them flie out of the private hell, within their breaſts, into the common hell of damned ſoules; yet ecce hoſtem inveniet à quo confugerat; behold, there he ſhall finde the enemie whom he feared, a tormenting conſcience joyned to that tormenting flame; for their worme dieth not, ſaith our Saviour.

Or if it may be, that Erinnis conſcientiæ, this tormenting conſcience, doth not affright

affright them; then S. Bernard anſwereth, that there be foure kindes of conſciences,

1. A good, but not a quiet. } And both theſe may be in the godlieſt men.
2. Both good and quiet. }
3. A quiet, but not good. } And both theſe are proper to the wicked.
4. Neither good nor quiet. }

And therefore, when the evill conſcience of a ſinfull wretch is ſeared as with a hot yron, ſo that the cuſtome of ſinning hath taken away the ſenſe of ſinne; this cannot be called a peace, but a numneſſe and a dumneſſe of conſcience; for our conſcience at the firſt will moniſh us, and ſay, maſter, looke to thy ſelfe.

But if wee neglect our ſelves, this good Caſſandra will crie no more; thou maieſt be lulled with Endimion to ſleepe in ſinnes, and then it fareth with the maladies of thy ſoule, as it is with the diſeaſes of the bodie the leſſe ſeene the more dangerous, as when they are even at the doore of death, and yet will not be perſwaded that they are ſicke; Ideo dolet charitas mea, quod cùm ſis dolendus, non doles; therefore doe I bewaile thy eſtate, becauſe, being moſt miſerable, thou doſt not bewaile thy ſelfe, ſaith S. Bernard: & hoc plango, ſaith S. Hierome, quod tu non plangis teipſum, this do I lament, that thou doeſt not lament thy ſelfe; quia nihil eſt miſerius miſerò non miſerante ſeipſum, for that nothing in the world is more lamentable, then to ſee a miſerable fellow, not reſpecting his owne miſery, ſaith S. Auguſtine.

Theſe are like the foole Harpaſte, that was as blinde as a Beetle; and yet neſciebat ſe eſſe cæcam, all the world could not perſwade her that ſhe was blinde, ſaith Seneca.

And therefore this quiet conſcience of wicked men is no true peace, but rather mare mortuum, a dead ſleepe; & hæc tranquilitas tempeſtas eſt, and this their calme peace is worſe then the worſt tempeſtuous warre; quia tum maximè impugnantur, cùm ſe impugnari neſciunt, for then they are moſt aſſaulted when they are ignorant of the aſſault, ſaith S. Hierome.

And ſo you ſee, there is no peace to the wicked, that is, no peace with God, no peace with good men, no peace with their owne ſoules and conſciences; and therefore no happineſſe in the world; for

1. Peace with God is ſo excellent a thing, that it paſſeth all underſtanding.

2. Peace with men is ſo profitable a thing, that it is moſt earneſtly deſired of all creatures, ſaith S. Auguſtine: becauſe as the Poet ſaith,

Omnia pace vigent, & pacis tempore florent;

All things doe increaſe and flouriſh in the time of peace, whereas by warres and diſſentions they are waſted, ſpoiled, and ruinated.

3. Peace with our ſelves is ſo ſweet and ſo delectable a thing, that it is better then a continuall feaſt, as Salomon ſpeaketh; it is that manna abſconditum, that exceeding great joy wherewith the Lord doth ſo inebriate the hearts of his Saints, that al the ſorrowes of the world are but as the drop of a bucket in compariſon of this Ocean of joy:

——murus aheneus eſto
Nil conſcire mali, nulla palleſcere culpa.

For a guiltleſſe conſcience is like a braſen wall; and therefore ſay the world what it will, they will not much reſpect it: if they be flattered, they will not be in any pride exalted; or if they be ſlandered, they will not be with too much griefe dejected; for their conſcience is their comfort, & ut malam conſcientiam laudantis præconium non ſanat, ita nec bonam vulnerat convitium, and as no flattery can heale a bad conſcience, ſo no ſlanders, no miſeries, no villanies can wound the good and upright conſcience; but that ſtill mens immota manet, the minde of man doth feed it ſelfe with the ſweet delight of this untainted conſcience; quia nihil eſt quod ita voluptate afficere ſolet, ſicut pura conſcientia, for that there is nothing in the world that can ſo well pleaſe and ſo much delight a godly man, as a pure conſcience, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome.

Bern. in l. de conſcientia, f. 1784.

That there bee foure kinds of conſciences.

The more ſenceleſſe our conſcience, the more dangerous is our ſtate.

Bern. ep 2. Hieron. ad Sabinian. to. 1. f. 231.

Aug. confeſſ. l. 1. c. 30.

Hieron in Epiſt. Heliod.

The excellencie of each kind of peace.
1. Peace.
2. Peace.
Aug. to. 10. f. 712. b. 2. Palingen.

3. Peace.
Pro. 15. 15.

Vir bonus & ſapiens audebit dicere, Pembem rectòr Thebarũ, quid me perferre patiq; indignum coges? adimam bona, nempe pecuniam. Horatius.

Auguſt.

Not to be careleſſe of our good name.

And yet here in ſome deceive themſelves, and grow careleſſe of what the world ſaith of them, and reſpectleſſe of their good name, and of all good report, upon pretence of a good conſcience; for ſo long as I know my ſelfe cleere from ſuch and ſuch imputations (ſaith one) I care not what the world ſaith of me.

That we ſhould ſeeke to joyne a good name to our good conſcience. Pro. 22. 1. Eccleſ. 7. 1. Opera ſalutis ſine fama bona odoris non ſatis refulcent auditoribus, nec fama ſine opere perfecto, ſine quibus forma veri ſacerdotis non commendatur. Hieron. in Matth. 4. Inimici famam, non vitam nata eſt, ferunt. Plautus Perſ. Mat 5 11.

To this I anſwer, that a good name and report among neighbours, is the chiefeſt thing, next to a good conſcience, that we ſhould reſpect: It is better then fine gold, it is dearer then pretious ointment, and it is more to be deſired then all the wealth in the world; for what is a man when he is ill thought of, and ill ſpoken of, and hath loſt the reputation of his credit? he is become as unſavorie to our eares, as the vileſt object is to our eyes: and therefore I would deſire to live no longer, then I ſhould live in credit and good report among my neighbours.

All is not well when good men ſpeake ill of us.

Object. But you will ſay, how ſhall I ſtop the mouthes, and ſtay the malevolencie of the violent, and virulent tongues of wicked men, quorum proprium eſt male dicere, whoſe property is to thinke ill of all, and to ſpeake well of none.

M Greenham in his Sermon of a good name.

Sol. I anſwer in a word, that the tongues of the wicked, are no ſlanders; and indeed I would thinke the worſe of my ſelfe, if I were commended by them, and the better if I were diſpraiſed; for our Saviour ſaith, Bleſſed are ye, when men, that is, the wicked, ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſay all manner of evill againſt you falſly.

But when good and honeſt men doe thinke ill, and ſpeake evill of either man or woman, I doubt not but they have ſome waies, and in ſome reſpects, deſerved the ſame, and are not ſo good as they ſhould be, if they be not ſo bad as men would make them to be (as a grave Divine doth wiſely ſpeake) for as the evill men cannot ſpeake well of the godly upon any cauſe, ſo the good men will not ſpeake ill of any man without juſt cauſe.

That a man may have a good conſcience, and yet loſe his good name.

Ob. But then againe you will ſay, how can any good man ſpeake ill of me, when as no man can prove any ill by me? and therefore how can I loſe a good name, ſo long as I keepe a good conſcience?

Sol. I anſwer, that a man may have a cleere conſcience before God, and yet juſtly deſerve a loſſe of his good name and reputation in the world; becauſe theſe two, Viz. 1. Bona fama, a good name. 2. Bona conſcientia, a good conſcience, are two ſeverall things, and may be ſeverally obtained: For

1. A good conſcience, whence it ariſeth.

1. A good conſcience ariſeth hence, when our hearts condemne us not of ſin, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1 Iohn 3. 20, 21.

2. A good name whence it ſpringeth.

2. A good name and report ariſeth hence, when we give none occaſion unto men to ſuſpect ill of us.

And therefore, as he that committeth ſin (and therefore can have no good conſcience towards God) may notwithſtanding, through the concealing and cloſe cariage of the ſame, retaine a good report with men, and continue in the good opinion of the world; ſo he that committeth not ſin (and therefore hath a good conſcience towards God) may notwithſtanding, by his indiſcretion and want of circumſpection, give many cauſes of juſt ſuſpitions of guiltineſſe, and ſo loſe his reputation and good eſteeme in the world.

He that would have a good name, muſt avoid all appearance of evill.

1 Theſſ. 5. 22.

Pro. 15. 15.

And therefore, that we may have a good conſcience towards God, we muſt abſtaine from all evill, and that we may have a good report in the world, we muſt abſtaine from all appearance of evill, and give no cauſe to any man to ſuſpect ill of us; for as the proverbe is;

He that will avoid an evill name, / Muſt avoid all that cauſe the ſame. } And

He that will no evill doe, / Muſt doe nothing that belongs thereto.

And ſo when our hearts and conſciences tell us, that we neither did the evill, nor gave any cauſe in the world for any man to ſuſpect us of evill, then ſhall wee be happy indeed, our hearts will be at peace, and our conſciences better then a continuall feaſt.

And

And thus you see the kinds of peace, and you see the goodnesse of each kind of peace, that nothing can be more excellent than this blessed peace, nor any thing in the world more miserable than to want the same: And therefore nec vidisse satis est, juvat usq; morari, I am loth to part yet from this point of peace, and I hope we shall not lose our labour, if we stay a little longer to consider, how we may obtaine each kind of peace, that makes the obtainer happy: and therefore I will, by Gods helpe, set downe some of the chiefest meanes, to procure each kind of peace.

CHAP. VIII.

The meanes to procure peace with God threefold; faith how to be obtained; the helps to procure peace betwixt man and wife threefold; how peace may be preserved in a family, by two things; and how preserved in a common-wealth.

1. How to find peace with God.

1. THat wee may finde peace with God, wee must doe three especiall things.

Three things to be done.

1. To believe in Christ.
2. To avoid sinne.
3. To do good.

} And

1. To believe in Christ. Esa. 9 6. Eph. 3. 17.

1. We must believe in Christ; for he is the Prince of peace, and the onely Peace-maker betweene the mortall sinner and the immortall God; but Christ dwelleth in our hearts by faith, saith the Apostle; Et fides est prima quæ subjugat animam Deo; and our faith in Christ is the first thing that subjecteth our soules to God, saith S. Augustine; and so by faith in Christ we live, by faith in him we are reconciled to God, we are justified, sanctified, saved.

Aug de Agon. Christi cap 12. Rom 1. 17. Rom. 3. 25. 28. Act 15. 9. Eph. 2 8.

And therefore without faith it is impossible to please God; it is impossible to be at peace with God; for as he that believeth on him is not condemned, so he that believeth not on him is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the onely begotten Sonne of God; and because, in not believing on him, he maketh God a lyar, and believeth not the record that God gave of his Sonne, which is, that God hath given us eternall life, and that this life is in his Sonne, and that whosoever hath the Sonne, hath life, and whosoever hath not the Sonne, hath not life.

Ioh. 3. 18.

1 Ioh. 5. 10, 11, 12.

And therefore this should teach us to use all care and diligence to get, to preserve, and to increase this precious gift of faith, and that by three speciall meanes.

Faith is obtained and increased by three especiall meanes.

1. By the hearing of the Word.
2. By the receiving of the Sacraments.
3. By the fervency of our prayers.

} For

1. By hearing Gods word. Rom 10. 17.

1. Faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God, saith the Apostle; Et accenditur fidei lampas igne divini verbi, and the lamp of faith is kindled by the fire of the heavenly Word, saith S. Chrysostome: and so the Ephesians are said to have believed in Christ, after they had heard the word of Christ: and therefore we should be ever willing and alwaies ready to heare the preaching of the Word of God; for the more we heare, the more we shall increase our faith, and the lesse we heare, the lesse faith we shall be sure to have.

Chrys. in Mat. 25 Eph. 1. 13.

2. Receiving the Sacraments. Heb. 6. 18.

2. The Sacraments are Sigilla Dei, the great seales of God, that ratifie unto us the Word of God, that by two immutable things (viz. Gods writing and Gods seale) we might have a strong consolation: And they be verba visibilia Evangelij, the visible words of the Gospell, that do set before our eyes the sacrifice of Christ, and shew, in a visible manner, how Christ was crucified for us, and shed his blood for the remission of our sinnes: And therefore we should not neglect the frequent use of these blessed means, that God hath given us to increase our faith.

3. Fervent prayers Iam. 5. 16.

Luke 22 32.

1 Cor. 2 4, 5.

Act. 16 14.

3. The prayer of a faithfull man availeth much, to procure any thing at the hands of God, if it be fervent, saith the Apostle; and therefore as Christ prayed for S. Peter, that his faith should not faile, so should we pray to God, that he would preserve and increase our faith; and because the preaching of the Word is but the demonstration of the Spirit, and faith is in the power of God; therefore we should the rather pray, that when Christ is preached, the Lord would sanctifie our hearts, and open them as he did the heart of Lydia, that we might believe in Christ.

2. To avoid sin.

Iob 13. 26.

Psal. 5. 5.

Sin how it assaulteth us.

2. We must avoid sinne; for sinne is the continuall make-bate betweene the righteous God and the unrighteous man; sinne writeth bitter things against us, sinne layeth us open before the face of God, and sinne moveth his jealousie to burne like fire against us; for he hateth all those that worke wickednesse.

And therefore if we would be at peace with God, we must be at warre with sinne, (as I said before) and we must not onely repent us of the old sinnes that we have committed, but we must also resist all those new sinnes, whereunto we shall be enticed; for sin is like Antæus the gyant, as oft as it is throwne downe, ——vires q; animumq; resumit.

It will presently set afresh upon us, and the more eagerly seek our overthrow; and therefore we must manfully resist all the inticements of sin, or els our sins, like those wild horses,

Virgil.

Qui circum Illiacos raptârunt Hectora muros, that tore Hector, will teare us in pieces, while there is none to help us.

3. To do good.

Chrys. adversus Mond. 1.

Mat. 11. 14.

3. We must do good; for righteousnesse and peace have kissed each other; and therefore nihil fides conferet emolumenti, si vita sincera non fuerit & pura; faith will availe us nothing, if we take liberty thereby, either to commit any evill, or to omit any good; but as that fig-tree was cursed by our Saviour, which had leaves and no fruit, so shall that man be accursed before God, which boasteth of his hope, or presumeth of his faith, and yet is void of goodnesse, and meerely destitute of all godlinesse.

And so you see that if we would have peace with God, we must believe in Christ, we must avoid sin, and we must walk in newnesse of life, and serve God without feare, in holinesse and righteousnesse all the daies of our life.

2. How to preserve peace among men.

1 How peace may be preserved betwixt man and wife.

Three things to be considered.

2. What a happinesse it is for man and wife to live in peace.

2. That we may find peace with men, many things are to be done, according to the severall kinds of peace among men: And therefore

1. That there may be peace in a house, and that

First, betwixt the husband and the wife, I commend these three things to their considerations.

1. The benefit of this peace.
2. The misery of their dissentions.
3. The only meanes to avoid the one, and to retaine the other.

Psal. 133. 1.

1. The Prophet saith, Ecce quam bonum & quam jucundum est fratres habitare in unum! Behold how good and joyfull a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! Here is bonum & jucundum, profit and pleasure; and, as the Poet saith,

Hor. de arte Poet.

Omne tulit punctum qui miscuit utile dulci;

That is all that can be desired, when profit and pleasure do meet together.

Eccles. 25.

Now if peace be so excellent among brethren, then how much more excellent is it betwixt man and wife? The sonne of Sirach saith, that three things do rejoyce him, and are beautifull before God and man; unity of brethren, love of neighbours, and a man and wife agreeing well together: And I say this is a type of heaven, and a paradise upon earth, when man and wife do live in peace, and can say each of other, my beloved is mine, and I am his; and therefore the happinesse and blessed state of peace-able persons, should move all maried couples to labour for this peace.

Cant. 6. 3.

2. What a misery it is for man and wife to live in contention.

2. Salomon saith, that a continuall dropping in the day of raine, and a contentious woman are both alike; and therefore that it were better to dwell among Lions or

or Dragons, than for a quiet man to dwell with a contentious woman, or for a quiet woman to dwell with a troublesome man; for the contentions of married persons are the very types and tasts of hellish sorrowes; for being outwardly yoked, and inwardly discontented, they will but gall the necks, and grieve the hearts each of other; each seeking his owne credit with discredit unto both; and each weary of his owne life, longeth for the death of the other: O wretched estate of miserable persons!

Pro 19.13 & 21.19 & 25. 24.

—— qua vos dementia cepit?

Why will you not seeke for peace among your selves, that you may be freed from these hellish wars and wofull discontentments?

3. That dissentions may be shunned, and that peace may be obtained, the one God that made them both one, must be retained betwixt them both; for it is a pretty observation of a Iewish Rabbi, that in the words Ish and Isha, which signifieth man and woman, or the husband and wife, there is found the word Iah, which is the name of God, and if this be taken away, there remaineth nothing else, but Esh and Esh, which signifieth fire and fire; to note unto us, that if God be not betwixt the husband and the wife, there can be nothing betwixt them but the fire of debate and contention.

3. The only means to preserve this peace. An excellent observation of a Iewish Rabbi.

And therefore if man and wife would live at peace among themselves, they must retaine the God of peace betwixt them: And this they shall do, if they labour to discharge each one his duty according to the will of God.

How man and wife may live at peace.

The duties of the wife.

1. Let the wife see that she doth feare her husband, that is, let her be afraid to do any thing that might offend her husband.

1 Duty. Eph. 5. 33.

2. Let her keepe her mariage bed undefiled.

2 Duty. Heb. 13 4.

3. Let her do her husband good and not evill all the daies of her life; good must be the object and the subject of her labour, not a little good and a great deale of evill, but all good and no evill, and that, not for a day or two, when she is newly married, but all the daies of her life; let her be a helper, and not a hinderer unto her husband; let her looke to the wayes of her household, and let her not eat the bread of idlenesse: and if she doth not these things, she can hardly get either love or peace from her husband.

3 Duty.

Pro. 31. 13.

The duties of the husband.

And for the husband.

1. Let him love his wife even as himselfe; for they two are one flesh.

1 Duty. Eph. 5. 33.

2. Let him not bee bitter unto her; not in blowes, for it is a point of sacriledge, saith Bodinus, for a man to strike his wife: And so Cato Censorius affirmeth, that he, which smiteth his wife, doth all one as if hee should lay violent hands upon the sacred images of the immortall gods; nor yet in words may a man be bitter unto his wife; for a man may speake words like the pricking of a sword, as Salomon saith.

2 Duty. Plin. in vit. Catonis

Pro. 12. 18.

3. Let him beare with the infirmities of his wife, as with the weaker vessell; and if he desire her to amend her faults, let him sapè monere, rarò corrigere, & nunquam percutere; often admonish, seldome reprove, and never smite her, as Marcus Aurelius doth advise.

3 Duty. 1 Cor. 13. Marcus Aurelius.

4. Let him take notice of his wives diligence, and commend her for her faithfullnesse, when he finds her so, saying, many daughters have done vertuously, but thou excellest them all.

4 Duty. Pro. 31. 29.

And so, if man and wife will observe but these few rules and briefe directions, to love one another, and beare one with another, and, above all things, to take heed of causelesse jealousies the one against the other, because suspition is no proofe, and jealousie is no faithfull judge; I do not doubt but they shall live happily, in all content and peace, and the God of peace shall be with them.

Mulieribus innatus morbus est zelotypia. Heliodor. lib.

Secondly, that there may be peace in a house betwixt the parents and the children, and betwixt the children amongst themselves, and so betwixt the master and the servants, and likewise betwixt the servants among themselves, I say, that peace may be among them all, and happinesse to the whole family, I will (for brevity sake) desire you to consider but these two things.

2. How peace may be preserved in a house among the whole family.

1. What

Two things to be considered.

{1. What our Saviour saith concerning this point.
{2. What we should do to procure this peace.

1 What Christ saith. Mat.10.36. Luke 1.17.

1. Our Saviour saith, Woe unto that house, where the people of the same house are divided, and where a mans enemies shall be those of his owne house; for certainly that house cannot stand, it cannot continue; but most blessed is that house, where the hearts of the fathers are turned to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers, and where all brethren and fellow-servants do live in peace, and love one another with brotherly love, as the Apostle speaketh. Rom.12.10.

2 What we should do.

2. That this peace may be procured and continued among them all, all of them and each one of them should study and labour to discharge his duty, and to behave himselfe as he ought to do; and especially the chiefe man, the good man of the house, who is the pillar of the house to uphold it, and the band of the house, to tie and knit the same together in peace and unity, and upon whom the greatest care, and chiefest charge is laid, should above all things have a speciall care, to look unto these two principall points.

The Master of the house should be carefull in two things.
{1. The chooſing of his ſervants.
{2. The teaching of his children. } For

1 In the choice of his servants. Psal.101.4,5,6,7.

1. Touching the first point, the Prophet David saith, a froward heart shall depart from me, I will not know a wicked person, who so privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off, him that hath an high looke and a proud heart will not I suffer, mine eyes shall be upon the faithfull of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me: he that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house, he that telleth lies he shall not tarry in my sight: In these words he sheweth what he will do concerning his servants.

1 To reject the dissolute.

1. To cleanse his house from all wickednesse, and to root out all lewd fellowes from his service.

2 To choose the sober and good.

Maxima quæq; domus ſervis eſt plena ſuperbis.

2. To choose them for his servants that are just, honest and religious: And I would to God all the masters in the world would follow this worthy precedent, which is thus amply set downe, not onely to be read over once a moneth; but also to be followed and practised by all masters every day; for as a garden must be continually weeded, or els the evill weeds will soone over-top all the sweetest flowers; so all ruffians, swaggerers, swearers, and all the rabble rout of such deboist, desperate and dissolute companions must be early destroyed, (as the Prophet speaketh) that is, soone rooted out of thy house, or els they will destroy thy house.

Psal.101.ult.

And therefore, if a man would have peace and happinesse to remaine within his house, he must with David discard all dissolute fellowes, which are the causes of all discords, and the bringers of all plagues and mischiefs upon a house: He must, I say, either root out all their vices from them, or root them from his house: And he must take such for his servants, that will first serve their God, and then himselfe; for such will live in peace among themselves, and do service unto their masters, not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but in singlenesse of heart as unto Christ.

Bonis hominibus malis ſervi obtingere ſolent, malis vero boni. Herodot. l. 8.

Col.3.22.

2 In the teaching of his children. Eph.6.4 Plut. in Apoph.

2. Touching the teaching of our children, S. Paul biddeth us, to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord: for that would make them feare God, glad their parents, and like Scilurus children, live in peace and love one another with brotherly love: And so much for the meanes to procure domesticall peace.

2 The meanes to procure peace in the commonwealth. Psal.122.3.

2. That every common-wealth may have peace, and every city be like Ieruſalem, that was at unity within it selfe, I can prescribe no better meanes, than for all kinds of men, and for all men of every kind, to performe his owne duty, and to discharge his owne conscience for the obtaining of this peace.

And becauſe all ſorts of men are either {1. Superiours. {2. Inferiours. {3. Equals. } Therfore, that peace might remaine among these all, it behoveth all of these to discharge their duties for the preservation of peace. And

1. Superiours

1. Superiours muſt be nurſing fathers unto the people, moſt carefully deſirous to procure their peace, and moſt painfully ſtudious to preſerve them from diſſentions, ever hazarding their owne happineſſe, for the happineſſe of their people, and procuring ſleepe unto their ſubjects by their owne watchfulneſſe, and eaſe unto them, by the induſtry of themſelves, & ſic viventes cum civibus quaſi parentes cum liberis, and ſo living among their people, as the parents do among their children.

1. What ſuperiours muſt do for the procuring of peace. Eſa 49.23.

Seneca de Clem. Plin. de Traiano.

And to the end, that all ſuperiours may the better know what ſhould be done herein, and be the more readily induced to performe the ſame, I will onely deſire them to conſider of thoſe golden ſentences and proteſtations, that Marcus Aurelius found at Thebes, ingraven upon a golden plate in the perſon of Ptolomeus Aracides, and are ſet downe in verſe in the 542 page of Marcus Aurelius his work, and which I found thus in another Authour ſet downe in proſe, viz.

I never exalted the proud rich man, nor hated the poore juſt man; I never denied juſtice to the poore for his poverty, nor pardoned the wealthy for his riches; I never gave reward for affection, nor puniſhment upon paſſion; I never ſuffered evill to ſcape unpuniſhed, nor goodneſſe unrewarded; I never denied juſtice to him that asked it, neither mercy to him that deſerved it; I never puniſhed in anger, nor promiſed in mirth; I never did evill upon malice, nor good for covetouſneſſe; I never opened my gate to the flatterer, nor mine eare to the back-biter; I alwaies ſought to be beloved of the good, and to be feared of the evill; I alwaies favoured the poore, that was able to do little; and therefore God, who was able to do much, did alwaies favour me.

The memorable proteſtations of a good Governour.

O moſt ſweet and pious practice! A practice fit for the procurement of peace; and therefore I would to God that all this were not onely written in the hearts, but alſo practiſed in the lives of all ſuperiours.

2. Inferiours muſt be ſubject to the higher powers, and muſt be ready to obey their Magiſtrates in all humility and meekneſſe, as the Apoſtle ſheweth: they muſt honour them, as S. Peter ſaith; and that becauſe they beare the image of God, ſaith S. Auguſtine; and we muſt aſſiſt them, both by our goods, and by our blouds, if need require; and, above all things, we muſt pray for them, that we may live a peaceable and a quiet life under them, ſaith the Apoſtle.

2. The duties of inferiours for the procuring of peace. Tit. 3.1,2. 1 Pet 2.17. Aug. in Pſal. 82.6 1 Tim. 2.1.

CHAP. IX.

The means to procure peace among equals and neighbours, threefold; the cauſes of diſſentions fourefold; five ſpeciall things to procure this peace; and how peace may be preſerved among all nations; ſome wars lawfull; and civill wars eſpecially to be ſhunned.

3. EQuals, neighbours, and all men that would deſire to live in peace, muſt looke unto theſe two eſpeciall things.

3. What equals and neighbours muſt do to live in peace.

1. To avoid thoſe ſinnes and vices that are the cauſes of diſcords and diſſentions.
2. To imbrace thoſe vertues and graces that do procure peace and quietneſſe: for

1. I ſay there be many ſinnes that are the cauſes of contentions, but eſpecially theſe foure capitall crimes. viz.

1. Pride. 2. Envy. 3. Curioſity. 3. Covetouſneſſe. And

1 To avoid the cauſes of contentions, which are

1. Pride breaketh all peace; for he that is of a proud ſpirit ſtirreth up ſtrife; and therefore S. Paul joyneth pride and contention together, as if they were like Hippocrates twins, both borne at once, both live and die together: And ſo experience ſheweth, how pride hath cauſed much diviſion and contention in the Church of God (as I ſhewed at large in my Treatiſe of the Reſolution of Pilate)

1 Pride. Pro. 28.25. Phil. 2.3.

and

and ſo likewiſe much diſſention and diſtraction in the common-wealth; for proud men can never agree together,

Lucan, l. 1 Pharſal. Nec quemquam jam ferre poteſt, Cæſarve priorem,
Pompeiusve parem ——

Proud men can never agree.

They cannot indure any man to be better than themſelves, for indeed they think none ſo good as themſelves; and

Ovidius. (Rivalem poſſum non ego ferre Iovem.)

As the Poet ſpeaketh in another kind, ſo ſaith every proud man in this kind, he alone muſt be the beſt; and none muſt be his corrivall: And therefore if you would have peace, you muſt not have pride, you muſt not lift up your horne on high, and ſpeake with a ſtiffe neck.

Pſal 75 4.5.

2. Envy ſtirreth up all ſtrife; for the Patriarchs moved with envy, deſpiſed Ioſeph, and ſold him into Egypt; and the Apoſtle ſaith, that where envying is, there is ſtrife and ſedition, and all manner of evill works: And ſo we find that this vitium diabolicum, this divelliſh vice of envy (as S. Auguſtine calleth it) wrought much trouble unto David among the Iewes, brought many dangers unto Daniel among the Medes and Perſians, and made the Plebeian faction continually among the Romans, and doth the ſame many times among our ſelves; for the vulgar cannot indure the dignity of their ſuperiours, nor the felicity of their equals;

3 Envy. Acts 7.9.

Iam 3.14.

Aug. to. 10. in Pſ. 139.

What envy did at all times.

Ovidius. Fertilior ſeges eſt alienis ſemper in agris,
Alterius meſſis grandius uber habet.

Every one envieth his neighbours good, and thinks his harveſt better than his owne: And therefore rather envieth him, than thanketh God for himſelfe.

But for the ſalving of this ſinne, I will only ſet downe that witty parable of Menenius Agrippa, that was ſent by the Nobles of Rome to appeaſe the rage of thoſe envious people, that had made ſo many factious combinations againſt the ſtate; For Titus Livius decad. 1. l. 2.

The parable of Menenius Agrippa.

He told them, that on a time all the members of the body did envy the ſtomach, and ſaid, ſhe did nothing elſe but eat, and devoure with eaſe and pleaſure, what they had purchaſed with great labour and paine: And therefore the feet would walke no more for it, the hands would work no more for it, the tongue would plead no more for it; and ſo ſaid all the reſt of the members of the body: but within a while, the long faſt of the ſtomach, made weake knees, faint hands, dimme eyes, pale viſage, faultering tongue, and a heavy heart; and then they were glad to be reconciled unto the ſtomach againe, and to work inceſſantly for the ſame: And ſo by this meanes Menenius appeaſed the people; and by this wee ſhould all learne, never to envy the good of thoſe men, by whoſe happineſſe we our ſelves are happy, nor yet indeed the good of any man; for we are all members of the ſame body, if one ſuffers, all doe ſuffer, and if one be honoured, all ſhould rejoyce: And therefore if we would have peace among our neighbours, we muſt not envy the good of our neighbours.

3 Curioſity, Pro. 17.27.

3. Curioſity and buſie medling in other mens matters, is another maine breach of peace; for the foole that is peeping in at every window, that is, looking to every other mans work, ſhall never want ſorrow, ſaith the Wiſeman; and they that are curioſi ad cognoſcendam vitam alienam, deſidioſi ad cognoſcendam ſuam, that is, curious to know other mens lives, and careleſſe to amend their owne lives, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh; they do nothing elſe but ſtirre up the coales of ſtrife and diſſention.

1 Theſ. 4.11. Plut. de curioſitate. c. 1. The Lamian witches, what they did. 1 Cor. 11.28. 1 Theſ. 4.11.

And therefore, if we deſire to live in peace, we muſt not be like unto thoſe Lamian Witches, that, when they were at home, did put their eyes in a boxe, but when they went abroad, they ſet them in their heads againe; we muſt not be περιεργαζόμενοι, buſie-bodies, immittentes falcem in alienam meſſem, thruſting our oare into another mans boat, but we muſt looke unto our ſelves, examine our ſelves, and meddle with our owne buſineſſe; alwaies remembring what our Saviour ſaid said unto Saint Peter, when he would needs know what Iohn must doe, What is that to thee? tu sequere me, doe thou follow me; else shalt thou be sure, that if thy hand, like Ismael, be against every man, every mans hand will bee against thee; And if thou prate of every man, every man will prate of thee; and so thou canst never have any peace. Iohn 21.22. Gen.15.12.

4. Covetousnesse is as bad an enemie to this peace, as any other of the former; for covetous men covet fields and take them by violence, they oppresse a man and his house, even a man and his heritage; yea they that are greedy of gaine would even take away the life of the owners thereof, that they might fill their owne house with the spoile, as Salomon speaketh; and so we see that the greedy desire of lands, goods, and worldly wealth, is the cause of many suites and much hatred among neighbours: and therefore if we would live at peace, we must take heed and beware of covetousnesse. 4 Covetousnesse. Mich.2.2. Pro.1.12,19. Luk.12.15.

2. I say we must do many things to procure our peace, but especially, these five things, which I collect out of S. Bernard. 2 To doe those things that procure peace: and they are these five

1. Pie vivere, to live justly and uprightly.
2. Humiliter satisfacere, to submit our selves humbly.
3. Facile remittere, to forgive offences easily.
4. Diligenter quærere, to seeke peace earnestly.
5. Volenter recipere, to imbrace peace willingly.

1. We must deale uprightly with all men; for this is the only thing to procure peace with all men; and therfore Marcus Aurelius upon his death-bed counselled his son Commodus, that if he would live peaceably, and quietly, he should live justly, and uprightly; for righteousnesse and peace have kissed each other; and therfore Plato saith, that publica & privata concordia, publica & privata justitia præservatur; the publique and private peace is preserved chiefly by publique and private equity; When men do observe the ancient rule both of Morality and Divinity, viz. 1 To live uprightly. Herodian in vita M. Aurel. Psal.85.10. Plato de repub. l.4.

Quod tibi fieri velis alijs hoc fieri video,
Quod tibi fieri nolis alijs hoc fieri caveto.

To doe unto others, as they would be done unto; for this is the law and the Prophets, saith our Saviour, and this is the onely way to preserve peace among all men, saith Solon; and Salomon could say no more. Mat.5.9.

2. If we have done wrong unto any man, we should in all humility make him satisfaction, as Saint Bernard saith, and agree with our neighbour, while he is in the way, before he complaineth unto the Iudge, as our Saviour speaketh; For that is most certaine, which S. Augustine saith, Non remittitur peccatum nisi restituatur oblatum, si commodè restitui potest; God never remitteth the wrong, unlesse we satisfie the party wronged, either by restitution or confession, or humble seeking of remission. 2 To submit our selves humbly. Bern. Ser 1. de verb Apost. f.388. Mat 5.25.

3. If we have beene wronged by any man, we should most willingly and readily forgive the offence, that God may forgive us our offences; for if you forgive not one another, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you, saith our Saviour; & 3 To forgive easily. Mat.6.15.

Si quoties peccant homines sua fulmina mittat
Iupiter, &c.

And if God should punish us for every offence, alas what would become of us? but hee is slow to anger, and abundant in goodnesse and truth, forgiving iniquity, and transgression and sin. And doth he forgive thee a thousand talents, and wilt not thou forgive thy neighbour an hundred pence? Doth he write thy sinnes in dust, Exod.34.6.7.

—scribisque in marmore læsus?

and doest thou write thy brothers faults in marble?

And therefore it is a fault amongst us, when we are so ready to goe to law one with another; why do we not rather take wrong, why do we not forgive the offence? as the Apostle speaketh. 1 Cor.6.7.

It was a wittie counsell, which Crates gave unto the Thebanes; If he which hath wronged thee, bee weaker then thy selfe, pardon him; for it is no honour The wittie counsell of Crates.

for a man to strive against a childe; nor for a rich man to go to law with a beggar; if he be more mighty then thou art, pardon thy selfe; for thou shalt never gaine any thing, by going to law with a mighty man, saith Salomon; and if hee be thine equall, pardon both thy selfe and him; for you shall both live by the losse, and shall hardly know who is the gainer. And therefore strive with no man, but if it be possible, as much as in you is, have peace with all men, saith the Apostle.

Heb.12.14.

4. To sue for peace. Psal.34.14.

4. We must not onely remit the offence, but we must also sue for peace, before we sue for our right; we must seeke it, we must follow after it, and enquire for it, 1 *Pet.*3.11.

1 Thes.4.11. Ephes.4.3.

We must study to be quiet, and we must endevour by all meanes to keepe the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

The discourse of Aristippus and Æschines.

And therefore when the two famous Philosophers, Aristippus and Æschines were at variance; Aristippus comes to Æschines and seeks for peace, Æschines imbraceth the motion; well, saith Aristippus, remember that I sought peace first, though I am your elder; I confesse it, saith Æschines, and therefore I will ever acknowledge you the better; because I began the strife, and you began the peace.

And so you see, they are ever the worst men that stirre up strife, and they are the best that seeke for peace: And therefore if we would be deemed good, let us seeke for peace and ensue it.

5 To imbrace peace willingly.

5. If we be so haughty; that we cannot be perswaded to be quærentes pacem, seekers of peace, and suters for our quietnesse; why then at least we should bee recipientes pacem, ready to imbrace peace, and to be peace-makers, when others will be mediators, that look for the blessing of peace-makers, which is to be called the children of God.

Mat.5.9.

Many would bee contented to have peace, but their proud hearts will not give them leave to seeke it.

For God knowing the pride of mens hearts, and the haughtinesse of their spirits, that each one disdaineth, and thinketh it a great disparagement unto him to seeke for peace unto his fellow (although perhaps he could willingly affect peace, if others did effect the same) therefore our Saviour promiseth that great blessing unto all those, that are willing to doe that great good, to make peace betweene those that are at variance.

And therefore when any difference ariseth betwixt neighbours, it were a happy thing, if some children of God would take up the matter, and they take peace unto themselves.

The wittie device of Archidamas to make peace betwixt two neighbours,

I remember a pretty story, that I read of Archidamas, who seeing two Lacedemonians walking in the temple of Minerva, that had beene long at variance, he goes unto them, and asked them why they would not referre the difference to some indifferent umpire; they both said they would referre all matters unto himselfe; and he caused them to sweare that they would stand to his adward; and then he pronounced the adward, which was, that they should never depart out of the temple, untill they had ended all differences betwixt themselves, and become good friends; and so he parted, and they themselves were faine to reconcile themselves.

The adward.

I wish we had many such Archidamas, that either by some such politike device, or else by some Christian advice, would be the meanes to further peace, and to end all differences betwixt men.

And so you see the meanes to effect peace among friends, equals, and neighbours.

Psal.120.6.

Ob. But what if all these will not availe to get my right, or to procure my peace? What if men be such, as when we speake of peace, they make them ready to battell, as the Prophet speaketh, and the more we seek for peace, the more insolent they are?

Answ. I answer, that when thou hast sought for peace, liberasti animam tuam, thou hast done thy duty; and therefore thou maist the better sue for thy right; for the law is just and holy, and many should bee deprived of their right, were it not for law; Yet as Archidamus said to the Æolians, so say I to all neighbours, that peace is good, if possibly it may be had; for the discords of friends are like raging fires, as Iotham sheweth; a fire shall come from Abimelech, which shal devoure the men of Shechem, and a fire shal come from Shechem and the house of Millo, which shall devoure Abimelech; that is, they should devoure and destroy each other by their broiles and dissentions; for so wee see neighbours and friends doe often times begger and undoe one another by their suites and contentions: And therefore it would bee happie for them, if they could be once resolved either to seeke for peace, or to imbrace their peace. And so much for the meanes to procure peace among neighbours.

Plutarch in Apoth

right

Discord what it is like. Iudg. 9. 20.

3. That peace may continue among all nations, wee should heartily pray to GOD, as our Church injoyneth us, and say, Da pacem Domine in diebus nostris, give peace in our time O Lord; for the prayers of the Church for peace are the chiefest meanes to preserve peace in all the world, as the Emperour Constantine did most Christianly confesse; and therefore wee should all pray to God, that hee would speake peace unto the Heathen from sea to sea, as the Prophet speaketh, that so every man may sit under his owne vine, and under his owne fig-tree, and that there may bee none to make us afraid, no decay, no leading into captivity, no complaining in our streets, but that having peace within our walls, and peace in all our borders, wee may have plenteousnesse within our palaces, as the Prophet David speaketh.

3. How peace may be preserved among all nations

Euseb. in vita Constant. l. 1 & 4.

Zach. 9. 10.

2 Sam. 7. 1.

Psal. 144. 13.

And yet, if peace may not be had, I denie not but warres are just and lawfull, when they are undertaken upon just and lawfull causes; for there is a time for warre, and a time for peace, saith the Wiseman: And the Lord is a man of warre, saith Moses; and we read of the warres of the Lord; and therefore I confesse that warres are many times of equity, many times of necessity, and many times approved by divine authority.

Warres justly undertaken are lawfull. Eccl. 3. 8. Exod. 15. 3.

But for me or any other inferiour subject to discusse the cause, or determine the rims of warre, we shall with Shemei goe beyond the river Kydron, and deserve the sentence of just reproofe; for I am to handle points of Divinity, and not of pollicie; and you are to follow and to obey, and not to guide and direct: God hath laid the care & given the charge of kingdomes and Common-wealths, upon Kings and Governours, that doe raigne by him and are guided by him, as Salomon speaketh: and as the spirits of the the Prophets, are subject to the Prophets, so the secrets of a State must be knowne onely to the States-men, and by them (so farre as they see cause) revealed unto others.

1 Reg. 2. 37.

We should take heed of over bold medling with State-businesse. 1 Cor. 14. 32.

And therefore, it is our parts, not to be ever prating and pratling of the warres, of the marriages, or of any other secret matters of Princes; but seeing the hearts of Kings are in the hands of the Lord, who can turne the same as pleaseth him, we should ever pray unto the Lord, and that first of all, that is, before we do it for any other, we should desire of God, that he would guide our Kings, to doe those things, that shall tend most for his glory and our comfort; and then, if peace ensue and continue, we should humbly imbrace it, and most heartily be thankfull, for so happy and so inestimable a blessing; if war begin, we should be ready to follow, and most willing to spend, goods, lives and all: but all to this end, that peace may follow.

Curabit pralia Conon.

Pro. 21. 1.

For though the haughty and disordered spirits, do itch and long for warres, and say with the Poet,

Non pacem petimus superi, date gentibus iras;
Nunc urbes excite feras, conjuret in arma
Mundus;——

Lucan. Pharsal. l. 1

We seeke not for peace, wee wish for warre, we long to see the glittering swords; quia dulce bellum inexpertis, because the warres and rumors of warres, are like a pleasant harmony to them that knowes it not; yet to all humble mindes, and to all well-affected Christians, that doe loath to Desire of war is a signe of a bloudy minde.

Good men love peace.

bathe their swords, and to make them drunken with the bloud of men, to see the tender babes snatcht from the mothers breasts, and either bleeding upon the stones, or sprawling upon the pikes, and to behold the high-waies strawed with breath-lesse carkasses, and doe even tremble to make many widdowes and fatherlesse children, to desolate townes, and ruine countries, and to bring forth such bitter fruits of warre, and therefore desire rather to enjoy that little pittance, which God hath given them through peace, then all the wealth of the world through the furie of warres and outragious violences; to these, I say, peace is a happy, peace is a blessed thing; for these will say with Drances,

Virgil. Æneid.

Nulla salus bello, pacem nos poscimus omnes;

Psal. 122. 6.

We know no good that can be got by war; and therefore we will pray for the peace of Ierusalem, and for peace especially among all Christian Kings and Princes; For as,

Whitney in Emblem.

When the Lyon and the Bore doe fight,
The Ravens hope for gaine by that fight,

Georgius Sabinus.

Sic modo dum faciant discordia prælia Reges,
Turcius Europæ diripit hostis opes:

And therefore it were to be wisht, that all Christian Kings would be Kings of peace, and would ever remember that saying of Sylius Italicus, Sylius. l. 13.

Fœdera mortales ne sævo rumpite ferro,
Sed castam servate fidem, fulgentibus ostro
Hæc potior regnis ——

That sacred peace should not be violated, nor Christian leagues be broken; for that truth and fidelity, is better then the bravest kingdomes, and peace better then all the pearles of the world.

All godly men desire peace.

And therefore I say, that all godly men, that doe feare the furie of warre, and doe know the benefit of contentment, and desire the fruits of peace, will ever pray for peace, and never undertake the warre, if peace and quietnesse may bee gotten by any meanes, as Timotheus said unto the Thebanes, Quia iniquissima pax justissimo bello est anteferenda, because the worst peace is to be preferred before the best warre, saith Cicero; for the warres, how justly soever they be undertaken, yet they will prove at last, to be troublesome and sorrowfull to the best men, saith S. Augustine, and they will make men to bee as meat unto the fire, saith the Prophet Esay, that is, they shall be like stubble devoured and consumed with the fiery heate of war.

Plutarch in Apoth

Aug. de Civit. Dei. c. 19.

Esay 9. 19.

Above all things we should avoid civill warres.

And as we are to pray, that peace may continue among all kingdomes, so are we especially bound to pray, and to use all our furtherance to have peace preserved in every kingdome, that there be no civill wars and dissentions in any Common-wealth; for this is the readiest way to overthrow the greatest kingdomes;

Bella geri placuit, nullos habitura triumphos.
Lucan. l. 1.

Francia flos florum fœx fœcum Francia facta est,

They say France was a glorious kingdome, and the flower of all other nations; but it would bee a tragedy to relate the miseries that civill broyles and dissentions brought upon that countrey; The like may be said of the kingdome of Argiers, and of our selves in former ages, in the times of the Barons warres: and I doubt the Germanes now may say the like.

Treachery what great mischiefes it doth.

Appianus Alexãd. in fine l. de Bel. Roman. cum Mith.

And therefore to maintaine this peace, we should all keepe faith and true allegeance unto those Kings and Governours under whom we live; for that falshood and treachery is the greatest poyson that can be unto any King, and the readiest way to overthrow the greatest state, as that most warlike and learned King Mithridates said, when he was betrayed of his owne friends, and the poyson that he had taken would not dispatch him out of life.

Piety and equity doe continue peace among all nations.

And above all, we should all labour to preserve equity and piety amongst us, if we would have peace to continue amongst us; For Marcus Aurelius saith, that King Boco made an oration to the Senate of Rome, wherein among many other other notable ſentences he left written, the banes and the cauſes of the ruine of every kingdome in theſe words, viz.

Woe to that realme where all are ſuch, that neither the good among the evill, nor the evill among the good are knowne; Woe to that realme, which is the intertainer of fooles, and a deſtroyer of all ſages; woe to that realme, where the good are fearefull, and the evill too bold; woe to that realme, where the patient are deſpiſed, and the ſeditious commended; woe to that realme, which deſtroyeth thoſe which watch for the good, and crowneth thoſe which watch to doe evill; woe to that realme, where the poore are ſuffered to bee proud, and the rich to be tyrants; woe to that realme, where all doe know the evill and no man doth follow the good; woe to that realme, where ſo many evill vices are openly committed, which in another country dare not ſecretly be mentioned; woe to that realme, where all procure that they deſire, where all attaine to that they procure, where all thinke that which is evill, where all ſpeake that which they thinke, and finally where all may doe what they will. In ſuch and ſo unfortunate a realme, where the people are too wicked, let every man beware that he be no inhabitant, for in ſhort time there muſt happen there, either the ire of the Gods, or the furie of men, to the depopulation of the good, or the deſolation of the tyrants.

The deſcription of a wicked kingdome, and the fearefull eſtate thereof. The diall of Princes. pag. 393.

And therefore if we would have peace, we muſt root out vice, and labour every man to doe juſtice, to be true to our King, to be obedient to the Law, and to love one another with brotherly love. And ſo much for the meanes to procure all the kinds of civill peace.

CHAP. X.

Eccleſiaſticall peace how to be preſerved; betwixt the Eccleſiaſticall perſons, and betwixt the Miniſters and their people, and how the peace of conſcience may be attained.

2. THat Eccleſiaſticall peace may be preſerved, and that firſt among the Paſtors themſelves, we ſhould all remember what Euſebius ſaith, viz. that while the Miniſters and Preachers of Gods Word were at peace among themſelves and did hold together, the Goſpell of Chriſt flouriſhed, and their owne happineſſe increaſed; & hæc nulla potuit invidia prohibere, and yet Satan with all his ſubtiltie, Tyrants with all their cruelty, and the world with all his envie could never hinder the proſperous eſtate of the Church.

2 The meanes to preſerve Eccleſiaſticall peace. Euſeb. l. 8. c. 1

1 Among the Paſtors, that ſhould live at peace among themſelves.

But when the bond of peace was once broken, and they began to warre among themſelves, then the Lord darkened the glory of the daughter of Sion, and the miſeries that befell thoſe Miniſters were moſt lamentable, and ſo both themſelves and their people did rue their diſcords; for

Nulla lues ovibus tantum, non ulla venena,
Quantum Paſtorum diſſidia ipſa nocent;

Melanct. in Epigram.

Nothing can be ſo hurtfull, or ſo poyſonous unto the people, as the diſſentions of their Paſtors, ſaith Melanction.

And therefore we ſhould pray to God, that he would keepe us ſecretly within his tabernacle from the ſtrife of tongues, that wee may bee at peace among our ſelves; Nam multi lupi velleribus tecti, ſed in noſtris concordibus animis nullus dabitur illis locus; For there be many Wolves in Sheepes clothing, but againſt unanimous hearts, they can have none advantage: O then beloved brethren, let us imbrace this peace among our ſelves, and let us remember that, as the Poet ſaith,

Pſal. 31. 22.

Iguat. ep. 9 ad Philad.

Formica grata eſt formicæ, cicada cicadæ;
Et doctus doctis gaudet Apollo choris:

Reuſner in Symbol.

The very bruite beaſts do love thoſe beſt that are of their owne kinde, and though it be moſt true, that

All thoſe, whoſe lives and natures diſagree,
Do hardly brooke to joyne in companie;

Yet, on the other ſide, it is as true; that according to the auncient proverbe,

Birds of a feather will flocke together.

Like will to like; thoſe birds confort together
Whoſe wings are like in coulour and in feather;

How the chiefe among the Clergy deale with their inferiours.

And yet alas, I ſee too many of us deſpiſing one another, and conteſting one againſt another; the great ones do contemne the poore, advance the wealthy, ſuppreſſe the painefull, and if any one, making a conſcience to diſcharge his duty, doth ſeeme to exceed the reſt in paines, hee ſhall bee the onely mocke amongſt the reſt; and as the Poet ſaith,

Proud envy ſo his vertues doth deface,
It makes them foes to him they ſhould imbrace;

Cyprian. But for mine owne part, I ſhall be ever of Saint Cyprians minde, Non videndum eſt quid aliqui ante nos fecerunt, ſed quid ille, qui ante omnes eſt, faciendum ſit mandavit, we are not altogether to looke what others have done before us, or what others uſe to doe among us, but we are eſpecially to looke what he, which is before all and above all, hath commanded us to doe.

Anſelmus. And therefore, quum periculoſa res eſt negligentia prælatorum, ſeeing the negligence of the Miniſters is moſt dangerous; dangerous to themſelves, and dangerous to their people, as Anſelmus ſaith; I would adviſe every faithfull ſteward, to goe on with all diligence, like King Therons courſers, that were never weary of running, as Pyndarus ſpeaketh; and though hee doe ſtill continue unregarded, yet if he preach truly, and live uprightly, merces ejus apud Deum, he ſhall not loſe his reward; but our good God will ſurely give it him.

Pyndarus. Yet I ſay, that this neglecting of painefull upright men, and the preferring of kinſmen, allies-men, and rich men, all perhaps ignorant men, hath cauſed many a man to ſtart aſide, and in the height of diſcontent, to diſturbe the peace of the Church, to overthrow themſelves and many others.

What the neglecting of worthy men hath done.

And what ſhall become of the cauſers hereof? Woe to him by whom offences come, ſaith our Saviour; and I feare I may ſay, woe to him that is the cauſe hereof; Woe to him that breaketh peace, and woe to him that cauſeth him to breake the peace; Nam qui præſenti pace malè utuntur, futuram pacem non habebunt; for they that abuſe the preſent peace, ſhall never injoy the future peace, ſaith S. Auguſtine.

Mat. 18.7.

And therefore to conclude this point, let us abandon pride, covetouſneſſe, and contempt one towards another; and let us live in love and peace; for we be brethren; and as Melanction ſaith, Melanction in Epigram.

Sit procul à Chriſti diſcordia ſæva Miniſtris,
Namque Deus poterit non niſi pace coli;

Let cruell diſcords and diſſentions be farre from us, for the God of peace can never be ſerved but by the Miniſters of peace; for if we doe deſpiſe this peace, we may feare that we, qui prius ex non populo populus, & ex non gente gens facti fueramus, Which heretofore of no people were made a people, ſhall yet againe be in that danger, of a great people to become no people, & in veterem illum ſtatum redire, in quo eramus, cum in unum nomen ordinemque non conveniſſemus, and to returne to that ancient ſtate, wherein we were, becauſe we cannot agree together, ſaith that excellent man Gregory Nazianzen.

Nazianz. Orat. 3. in princip. f. 71.

2 Betweene the Miniſters and the people.

Secondly, that peace may bee preſerved betwixt the ſhepheard and his flocke, wee ſhould remember, that no good can be there where they are at variance.

How the people deale with their preachers.

I confeſſe, the cauſe hereof may be ſometimes in our ſelves, when wee are either too criticke and captious in our pulpits, or too litigious in our converſations; but I feare me it is moſt commonly in our people, when they are too contemptuous of our callings, too injurious to our perſons, and eſpecially too envious of our maintenance, deſpiſing us and denying our due, that it were as eaſie to draw

draw sanguinem ex silice, bloud out of a flint-stone, as to get our right out of their hands, if by any meanes they can defraud us of it; for as Iannes and Iambres resisted Moses, Iesabel persecuted Elias, and Alexander the copper-smith did much hurt unto S. Paul, though S. Paul did none to him, so I feare we want not such in these our daies to vexe and molest the poore Ministers of Iesus Christ.

Exod 7.11. 1 Reg 19.2. 2 Tim.4.14.

But for the quenching of this fire, and the abating of all heat betwixt the Pastor and his people,

1. Let us that are Ministers, live uprightly, preach sincerely, reprove friendly, and shew our selves in charity with all, bitter to none, that they which speake evill of us, by seeing our good works, may glorifie our Father which is in heaven.

1 What the Preachers should doe. 2 Tim.4.5.

2. Let all the people know, that it is the meere subtilty and policy of Satan, to set them on against their Preachers, onely to hinder the work of our ministery, and to increase their owne iniquity; for he that despiseth us, despiseth Christ himselfe; and therefore the Apostle saith, that the people should know them that labour amongst them, and account them worthy of double honour, and have them in singular respect, even for their work sake, and indeed for their own sake, that they may reape the more good by them, and be partakers of the fruits of their labours.

2 What the people should do. 2 Thes.2.12. Satan laugheth to see the Preacher and people at variance. Luke 10.16. 2 Thes.5.13.

And thus I have shewed the causes of dissention among brethren in every place, in every house, in every meeting, in every city, in every kingdome, in every Church, in every parish; the causes (I say) that makes poore peace, with Lazarus, to lie without the doores, and with the Angels that came to Sodome, in the streets, and then to wander, like Cain, as a vagabond upon the face of the earth, and to be contemned in every place: And I have likewise shewed the meanes to retaine peace among all sorts of men, and to banish all the seditious enemies of peace from every place; God give us grace to shun discords and dissentions, and to imbrace unity and peace, that the God of peace may be with us: And so much for the meanes to procure peace among men.

Peace, like a pilgrim, received of none. Luke 16.20. Gen.19.

3. That every man may find peace within himselfe, that is, peace of mind, peace of conscience, three things must be performed.

3 The meanes to preserve peace of conscience, three.

For
1. All sin must be banished.
2. All crosses must be sweetned.
3. All vanities must be contemned.

1. Sinne hath a finger against every kind of peace, and especially against this internall peace of mind; sinne is the chiefest captaine, that makes this domesticke and civill war within our breasts: And sin is the only cause, that the flesh rebelleth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, & sic peccatum, quod posuit nos contrarios Deo, facit nos nobis-ipsis graves; and so sinne, that made us afore enemies unto God, doth now make us enemies unto our selves.

1 To banish sin, Gal.5.17. Bern. in festo omn. sanct. ser.3. 297.

And therefore, as an angry swelling sore can never leave aking while the thorn is rotting within it, so our conscience can never be pacified, untill our sinnes be quite banished: for as the Poet saith,

Our conscience will either comfort us or torment us continually. Ovid Past.1.1.

Conscia mens, ut cuiq; sua est, ita concipit intra
Pectora, pro factis spemq; metumq; suis.

A mans conscience will either excuse him, or accuse him for every fact, and will bring him, either an exceeding joy, or most hellish sorrowes in all his actions. Hen quantum, miseto pœna mens conscia donat. Lucan.4.7.

And we must not think that this is onely to be understood of the greater sinnes, or enormous offences, but even of the least sinnes it must also be understood; for, cursed is every one that continueth not in all things, that are written in the book of the Law, for to do them; every sinne brings a curse; and therefore every sinne wounds the conscience: and no marvell; Nam ut sagitta leviter volat, tamen graviter vulnerat, for as an arrow flieth smoothly, and is scarce seene in the ayre as it passeth, yet it wounds deadly when it hitteth, saith S. Bernard; even so sinne that seemes little or nothing, while it is in acting, will wound the conscience deeply, when it is considered and examined.

Gal.3.10. Least sinnes to be avoided. Bernard.

And therefore, Noli despicere peccata tua quia parva, nam & pluviarum guttæ parvæ sunt, &c. Do not thou grow careleſſe of thy ſelfe, becauſe thy ſins are but ſmall, or but veniall ſins, as thou thinkeſt; for thou ſeeſt the drops of raine are but ſmall, and yet they were able to drowne the world, and are continually able to fill the boundleſſe Ocean; and the ſinne of Adam did ſeem but ſmall, to eat but an apple, and yet it was able to condemne the whole race of mankind; even ſo thy ſinnes, that in thy thoughts are ſo ſmall, will be ſufficient, if thou doeſt not baniſh them, to wound thy conſcience here, and to condemne thee for ever hereafter; for our Saviour tels us, that for every idle word, we ſhall give an account at the laſt day: O then beloved, væ peccatis hominum, wo be to thoſe ſinnes, that we cuſtomarily drink like water, and do ſo uſually and ſo commonly commit without remorſe.

Gen.9.23.

Gen.3.6.

Mat.12.36.

Aug. in Enchirid.

But if we would avoid the griping conſcience here, and the worme that never dieth hereafter, let us make a conſcience of committing the leaſt ſinne: Nam haud citò progreditur ad majora peccata, qui parva reformidat; for he will not eaſily commit the greater ſinnes, that doth loath and deteſt the leſſer ſinnes.

2 How we ſhould behave our ſelves in afflictions.

2. Croſſes and afflictions do diſturbe the peace, and diſquiet the minds of many men, and cauſe them to live in perpetuall diſcontent: And therefore we muſt ſeeke to avoid them, or at leaſt, to ſweeten them, if we muſt needs indure them; and for the ſweetning of their bitterneſſe, or the allaying of their violence, I know no better means, than

1 To looke for afflictions.

1. To expect them before they come, that we may be prepared for their comming; for tela præviſa minus nocent, they will die, with the Cockatrice, if we ſee them firſt, but if they come like a ſhower unexpected, they will prove the more violent, and be like an armed man, againſt whom there is no reſiſtance; And therfore we ſhould ever remember, that

1 As we are men.

1. As men, we are to looke for our part of afflictions; for what is the life of man, but interminabilis labor, like the continuall tumbling of Siſiphus ſtone, or like King Danaus daughters, that were injoyned to fill the fatall tun, from which the waters ſtill ran out; and therefore Iob indefinitely ſaith, Man that is borne of a woman hath but a ſhort time to live, and is full of miſeries.

Iob 14.1.

2 As we are Chriſtian men. Mat.10.16.

2. As Chriſtian men, we are to expect more than any other, for our Saviour told us, that we ſhould be ſent as ſheepe into the midſt of wolves, and ſhould be hated of all men for his names ſake; and S. Paul tels us, that we muſt through many tribulations and afflictions enter into the kingdome of heaven; And S. Auguſtine ſaith, cum ceperis in Chriſto piè vivere ingrederis torcular, præparato ad preſſuram, when thou beginneſt to live godly in Chriſt Ieſus, thou entreſt into a wine-preſſe, prepare thy ſelfe to be preſſed, yea and to be oppreſſed too by this wicked world; all this is told us, that we ſhould not thinke it ſtrange, when afflictions come upon us, but ſhould rather, with S. Paul, expect them to wait for us in every place.

Chriſtians more ſubject to afflictions than any other men.

3 To conſider whence afflictions come. Iob 1.21.

2. When they come, to conſider from whence they come, even from the hand of God, as Iob ſheweth; for when he had loſt all that he had, he ſaid, the Lord hath given it, and the Lord hath taken it, bleſſed be the name of the Lord.

3 To conſider for what end they are ſent.

3. To underſtand to what end they are ſent, namely, to make us hate our ſinnes which are the cauſe hereof, as the Prophet ſheweth, ſurely man ſuffereth for his ſinne, to weane us from the world, and to make us long for heaven, and to know, that nullus alius noſter eſt finis niſi pervenire ad regnum, cujus nullus eſt finis, this is our onely end, to attaine unto that kingdome which is without end. Theſe conſiderations and the like will certainly make us to beare all our croſſes patiently, and in all afflictions to reſt our ſelves moſt contentedly, yea and to count it all joy when we fall into diverſe temptations, that is, probationis non ſeductionis, into thoſe temptations, that are from God for our triall, as was that of Abrahams, but not into thoſe, that are from Satan, for our deſtruction, as are all wicked ſuggeſtions.

Iam.1.2.

3. The

3. The vanities of this world do ſo bewitch the minds of many men, that they can have no peace nor quietneſſe in the world, but do riſe up early, and go late to bed, and eat the bread of carefulneſſe, and all to hunt after the wealth, the dignities and the vanities of this world: And ſo man diſquieteth himſelfe in vaine, heaping up riches, and cannot tell who ſhall gather them; that is, vanities and vexations muſt go together, as Salomon by his own experience hath obſerved.

3 Not too eagerly to hunt after worldly vanities. Pſal. 127.3.

Pſal. 39.6.

And therefore if we would avoid vexations, and enjoy peace of mind, we muſt not hunt too greedily after the wealth and vanities of this world, but we muſt rather reſt our ſelves contented with that little portion that God hath given us: And we know that a very little will ſerve our turne, food and raiment, ſaith the Apoſtle, μὴ δίψαν μὴ πεῖναν, not to thirſt, not to ſtarve, ſaith Gregory Nazianzen. Nam cibus & potus ſunt divitiæ Chriſtianorum; for meat and drink ſhould be all the riches that Chriſtians ſhould care for, ſaith S. Hierom; and, having this, we ſhould be content, ſaith the Apoſtle.

What a little thing will content nature.

Hierom. in Epiſt. 1 Tim. 6, 8.

And indeed, we find that many of the very Heathens thought that enough, and ſought no more; For ——contentus honeſto

Fabritius parvo ſpernebat munera regum,
Sudabatq; gravi Conſul Serranus aratro,
Et caſa pugnaces Curios anguſta tenebat.

Claud. lib. 1. in Ruffin.

Fabritius, Serranus, and the moſt valiant Curio's deſpiſed all the wealth and riches of this world, and were very well contented with that little means which they had honeſtly gotten; and the Poet ſaith of this contemning of vanities, and ſatisfying our ſelves with a little,

ô munera nondum
Intellecta Deum——

Idem Claud.

They are ſuch gifts of the gods, as that no man could yet well underſtand the ſweetneſſe and the excellencies thereof; And therefore we ſhould deſpiſe theſe worldly vanities, and never place our felicities therein; and to the end we may be wained from them, we ſhould delight our ſelves in the Lord, and taſte and ſee how ſweet he is, (as the Prophet David ſpeaketh) and then no doubt, but the ſoule would be ſo delighted with that unſpeakable ſweetneſſe, Ut ſupra ſe elata ad ſe-ipſam relabi dedignaretur, that it would never more delight it ſelf in any thing, no nor in it ſelfe, but onely in God himſelfe, where it ſhould have the fulneſſe of all peace and happineſſe. And ſo you ſee the means to attaine unto perfect peace.

Pſal. 34.8.

Aug. in Solliloq.

And thus I have ſhewed thee, O man, quid ſit bonum, the goodneſſe both of grace and peace, the two chiefeſt things that can be named. It reſteth that I ſhould ſpeake of that which is majus & magis bonum, farre more excellently good every way, that is, of the authour and giver both of grace and peace; For Quicquid efficit tale, illud ipſum eſt magis tale, if grace and peace be ſo good, O then how good, and how vnſpeakably excellent is that tree, from whence theſe fruits do grow, and that fountaine of living waters, from whence theſe bleſſings do flow? that is, God our Father, and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

The

The third part.

From God our Father, and our Lord Iesus Christ.

CHAP. I.

To know God and our selves; of our owne insufficiency; and Gods all-sufficiency; he is the Authour of all spirituall and temporall blessings; and the foure-fold lesson that this doctrine teacheth us.

IN these words the blessed Apostle setteth downe two especiall things to be observed.

1. The Authour of these blessings is expressed.
2. The same Authour is more fully described.

1. The ancient learned Heathens did so much urge that elegant apothegme, γνῶθι σεαυτὸν, Know thy selfe, and received the same with so great applause and consent, that Amphictiones caused the same to be ingraven upon the doore-posts of the Temple of Delphos; because it seemed to warne every mortall man both of his good and evill.

Gryneus in praefatione in Irenaeum. All wisdome consisteth in the knowledge of God and of our selves.

But nature is so farre unable to teach us to know our selves, that indeed it teacheth us altogether to forget our selves; for the true knowledge of our selves teacheth us the insufficiency, the meanenesse and the basenesse of our selves, to pull downe all pride, and to teach us all humility: But nature alone can never do this; for when we see the excellency of mans nature above all other creatures, he of all other indued with a reasonable soule, adorned with excellent vertues, and beautified both in body and mind above all other creatures whatsoever, he is so far from humility, that he is puffed up with pride and haughtinesse.

Salust. lib. 1. What nature sheweth us to bee

And therefore we joyne another apothegme, that is of such affinity with the former, that the one cannot be well known of us without the other, to be learned of all Christians, γνῶθι τὸν Θεὸν. Know God; For both must be knowne, or neither can be knowne; and therefore a certaine Indian Gymnosophist, comming to Athens to discourse with Socrates about the study of wisdome, and having asked him how a man might become wise, and Socrates having answered, by considering how a man should rightly live, he somwhat smiling thereat, answered with that elegant sentence, μὴ δῆσο δαί τινα τὰ ἀνθρώπινα καταδεῖν ἀγνοῶντα γε τὰ θεῖα, no man can truly learne to know humane things, that is ignorant of divine things.

Euseb de preparat. Evang. The Indian Gymnosophist.

Divinity teacheth us to know our selves.

For to what tendeth the knowledge of man, and of all the vertues and excellencies of man, if he knoweth not God to be the Authour of all these excellencies? It puffes him up with pride, (as I said before) but when he seeth that although they be in him, yet they are not from himselfe, but from God, then it casteth downe every high thing that exalteth it selfe against the knowledge of God, and bringeth into captivity all imaginations unto the obedience of Christ; and so from the knowledge of God he comes truly to know himselfe, and to understand that he hath all good from God, and nothing from himselfe; and therefore seeing that in these two things, grace and peace, are contained all happinesse, all blessings, and all good things (as I shewed before) and that these do proceed, not from our selves, but from God the Father, and our Lord Iesus Christ, it teacheth us these two especiall things.

2 Cor. 10. 5.

1. Our

We are taught hereby two things.
1 Our insufficiencie.

§1. Our owne insufficiency.
§2. Gods all-sufficiency.

1. Our insufficiency is hereby sufficiently shewed, that from our selves we have neither grace nor peace.

1 No grace from our selves.
2 Cor 3.5.

1. No grace; for we are not sufficient to thinke a good thought; this is the least measure of grace; for there be seven degrees of that which is good, that is,

Seven degrees of good.

1. To thinke a good thought.
2. To know what is good.
3. To will what is good.
4. To speake what is good.
5. To begin to do good.
6. To do what is good.
7. To persevere in what is good.

Of all these, we find not one from our selves; for to proceed backward,

Not the least degree of goodnesse from our selves.
Phil 1.6.
1 Not to continue in good
2 Not to do any good.
Rom.7.18.

1. We cannot continue in good, but God, which began a good worke in us, he must perfect it, or els, though we do stand, yet are we sure to fall.

2. We can doe nothing that is good; for though to will should be present with me, yet bonum perficere non invenio, I find no means to performe it, saith the Apostle: And therefore Homer and other Heathen writers, that relate the stories of the bravest Heroicks of the world, do shew, that although they were indued with most valiant minds, and their minds with heroicke resolutions, yet that they could bring no great good, nor any singular exploit to passe, unlesse the gods gave them power to effect the same: And so our Saviour sheweth, Sine me nil potestis facere, without me you can do nothing: And the Prophet Esay confesseth, that it is the Lord which hath wrought all our workes for us, or in us, as the vulgar Latine hath it.

The learned Heathens confesse this truth.

Ioh.15 5.

Esa 26.12.

3. We cannot begin any thing that is good; for it is God that doth begin a good worke in us, saith the Apostle.

3 Not to begin any good.
Phil.1.6.

4. We cannot speake any thing that is good; for non vos estis qui loquimini, it is not you that speake; and therfore though a man should purpose a good speech in his heart, yet the answer of the tongue commeth from the Lord.

4 Not to speake any good.
Mat 10.20.
Pro.16.1.

5. We cannot will any thing that is good; for it is God that worketh in you both the will and the deed, saith the Apostle.

5 Not to will good.
Phil 2.13.

6. We cannot understand any good thing; for the naturall man understandeth not the things of the Spirit of God.

6 Not to understand good.
1 Cor 2.14.

7. We cannot so much as thinke any thing that is good; for the Lord knoweth the thoughts of men, that they are vaine, and that continually: and therefore S. Augustine doth well observe, that our Saviour doth not say, Sine me nil magnum aut difficile, without me you can do no great matter, but without me you can do nothing, that is, not the least, not the lowest, no not any degree of good.

7 Not to think any good.
Gen.8.5.
Augu in Ioh. 13.

Yea, this is not only to be understood of a meere naturall man, but even of the best regenerate men; for after that the Apostle had asked the question; τὸς πρὸς ταῦτα ἱκανός? Who is sufficient for these things? He answereth of himselfe, and of the rest of the Apostles; Not we; because of our selves we are not able to thinke a good thought; and so our Saviour spake unto his Disciples and followers, that they could do nothing without him; and therefore it must needs follow, that others could do nothing indeed without him: And so you see that the best of us cannot be the authours of the least measure of grace, not so much as a graine of mustard-seed.

The regenerate of themselves can do nothing.
2 Cor.2.16.

2 Cor 3.5.

Ioh.15 5.

2. As man cannot be the authour of any grace, so nor of peace, nor of any kind of peace; for

2 Man can effect no peace.

1. Being fallen away from God, he could never reconcile himselfe to God againe; debuit quidem, sed non potuit; he ought indeed, saith S. Bernard, but he could not do it; all the wit of man could never devise the meanes, nor all his power could ever effect it.

1 No peace with God.

2. Being at war with God, he could never work his peace with man; for the

2 No peace with man.

strongest

Eccles.9.11. strongest doth not alwaies carie away the battell; but it is the Lord that giveth the victory to whom he pleaseth.

3 No peace with himselfe. 3. Being unable to make outward peace with men, he is farre more unable to work any inward peace with his own soule; for the spirit of a man can beare his infirmities, but a wounded spirit who can beare? and therefore Ajax could indure all the brunts of forraigne foes, but his own discontented mind he could not beare, nor reconcile himselfe unto himselfe; but, as the Poet saith,

Pro.18.14.

Ovid. Metam. l.13. Hectora qui solus, qui ferrum ignemq́, Iovemq́,
Sustinuit toties, unam non sustinet iram,
Invictumq́, virum vicit dolor ——
He who alone, Iove, Hector, sword and fire
So oft sustain'd; yeelds to one brunt of ire,
The unconquered sorrow conquers——

And so you see mans insufficiency, in that he can be the authour neither of grace nor peace. And

Rom.3.27. This first point may serve to exclude our boasting, and to teach us true humility, to say with Iacob, I am not worthy of the least of thy blessings; with Iohn Baptist, I am not worthy to untie the lachet of thy shooe; with Paul, I am not worthy to be called an Apostle; with the Centurion, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roofe; and with the Prodigall child, I am not worthy to be called thy sonne; Hoc enim piarum mentium est, nihil sibi tribuere; for it is the part of godly minds, to attribute nothing unto themselves, but to ascribe all unto God, because all is from God, saith S. Augustine; Et non est dignus peccator pane quo vescitur, nec lumine cœli quo illuminatur, and the sinner is not worthy of the bread wherewith he is fed, nor of the light of heaven wherewith he is inlightened.

Gen.32.10. Mat.3.11. 1 Cor.15.9. Mat.8.8. Luke 15.21.

That we should not ascribe any goodnesse to our selves. And therefore it is dangerous to ascribe too little to the goodnesse of God; for that is to rob him of his glory, which he will not give unto another; but there is no danger at all to ascribe too little unto our selves, because we can never ascribe so little unto our selves, as is due unto us; for that nothing which is good is of our selves, but all from the goodnesse of God: And therefore let not the wise man boast of his wisdome, nor the strong man of his strength, nor any man in any thing that he hath; but let every man rejoyce in this, that he understandeth the Lord, and knoweth that himselfe hath nothing, but what he received from the Lord, as the Apostle teacheth.

Isa.42.8. Ier.9.24. 1 Cor.4.7.

2 Gods all-sufficiency. 2. Gods all-sufficiency is hereby seen, in that he is the Authour both of grace and peace. For

1 He is the Authour of grace. Reynerius in tit. gratia. 1. The Schoolemen say, that nothing in the world can be the efficient cause of grace, but only God; for that grace doth change the mind, and the will of the reasonable creature, and prepare the same, that it may will that which is good; but nothing in the world can effectually change the will of man, but he that made the will; and therefore if there be any aptnesse or preparation in man for the receiving of grace, that very aptitude is through the helpe of grace; for no man commeth to me, unlesse my Father draw him, saith our Saviour; that is, no man hath any vertue or ability in himselfe to come to me, but only by the helpe of those graces that my Father gives him; for that every good giving and every perfect gift is from above, and commeth downe from the Father of lights.

Our aptnesse to receive grace is from grace. Ioh.6.44. Iam.1.17.

All the good we have are gifts from God. And therefore though the Heathens, out of their ignorance called their vertues and good qualities, which they had, ἕξεις, of having, as though they had them from themselves; yet we, that are better instructed in Gods truth, do call them δόσεις, and δωρήματα, gifts from God; for we say, that no men are worthy, but such as are made worthy; none good, but such as are made good, none meet, but such as God the Father hath made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light; because, as John Baptist saith, a man can receive nothing, except it be given him from above: and therefore we say that the very thoughts of our hearts, if they tend to good, are from him that infuseth all grace immediately, as saith Aquinas, that is, From God the Father, and our Lord Iesus Christ.

Col.1.12. Ioh.3.27. Thom.1.2æ q.76. art.2.

Hereby

Hereby we ſee that God gives grace and glory, and that he is the fountaine of all grace; and therefore ——— Iuvat integros accedere fontes Lucret. l. 1. p. 24.

Atq; haurire. ———

We ſhould go to the ſpring head to ſeek for grace.

Nam licet allata gratus ſit ſapor in unda
Dulciùs ex ipſo fonte bibuntur aquæ:

For there is the ſureſt drawing, there is the ſweeteſt drinke; and although the grace of God, before the comming of Chriſt, quaſi in vaſe aliquo claudebatur, was like an oyntment kept cloſe in an Alablaſter box, yet now ut unguentum effuſum eſt, it is like an ointment powred out; or though before it was ut fons ſignatus, as a fountaine locked up, yet now Ambroſe. Cant 1.3. & Cap 4.12.

——— ut fluvialibus undis
Extumuit torrens, fluit acrius amne perenni;

Like a violent floud-ſtreame, it floweth more generally over the face of all the earth to renew it, than Noahs floud did to deſtroy it: and therefore vir bonus haurit gratiam, every good man will come unto this ſpringing well to draw grace from this fountaine of grace, Ideo enim lex data eſt, ut gratia quæreretur, & gratia data eſt, ut lex impleretur, for to this end was the Law given, that we ſhould earneſtly ſeeke for grace, and grace is given, that we might keepe and fulfill the Law. Aug. de ſpir't & lit. Why the Law was given.

2. As he is the ſole Authour of all grace, ſo he is the Authour of all peace. 2 God is the Authour of all peace

1. With himſelfe, for he himſelfe hath wrought our peace with himſelfe; and therefore it is called the peace of God, which paſſeth all underſtanding; and we pray for that peace, which the world cannot give us, nor any thing in the world purchaſe unto us; for the Lord will not be pleaſed with a thouſand of rams, nor with ten thouſand rivers of oyle, nor yet with the fruits of our bodies for the ſinnes of our ſoules; it will coſt more to redeem our ſoules than that, it muſt be the precious bloud of Ieſus Chriſt. 1 Of our peace with God. Phil 4.7. Mica 6.7.

2. It is he that worketh our peace with men, & that worketh each kind of peace among all ſorts of men; for he maketh warres to ceaſe, he knappeth the ſpeare in ſunder, he breaketh the ſword, the ſhields and the battell, he maketh men to be of one mind in a houſe, and ſo he maketh peace in our borders, peace in our houſes, peace in all places, and filleth us with the fruits of peace, health, wealth, and proſperity, to teach us that he is not only the Authour of inward and ſpirituall graces, but alſo of all outward peace and temporall bleſſings. 2 Of our Peace with men. Pſal 46.9. Pſal. 147.14.

For as the image of a Prince is ſeene as well in a penny as in a piece of greater price, ſo we may ſee the goodneſſe of God as well in the things of this life, as in the things that concerne eternall life; and therefore our Saviour teacheth us to pray, not only for the ineſtimable things of eternall life, ut adveniat regnum, that his kingdome come, but alſo for the meaneſt things of this mortall life, that he would give us our daily bread. Goodneſſe ſeene in little things.

Yet ſome have doubted, whether theſe outward temporall things be good or not; and ſome Divines have doubted, whether we may pray for temporall things, as Barradius ſheweth upon thoſe words, All theſe things ſhall be caſt unto you; but we are reſolved by our Saviours teſtimony, If you that are evill can give your children good things; for that is not only good, quod facit bonum, which maketh a man good, but that is alſo good, de quo fit bonum, whereby a man may do good, ſaith S. Auguſtine: and therefore, albeit riches and honours do not alwaies make a man good, yet becauſe a man may do alwaies good with them, we ſay they are good, and given only of God. Whether temporall goods be bleſſings. Mat 6.33. Luke 11.13. 1 Ioh 3. That riches are good.

And ſo they, that have no fruits of grace, are compelled to ſubſcribe that the fruits of peace come from God; for when they ſee themſelves deſtitute of them, and by all their wits are unable to procure them, then they cry out, quis oſtendet nobis bona? who can ſhew us any good? As if they ſhould ſay, none can do it, unleſſe God doth the ſame. Pſal 4.6.

3 Of our peace with our ſelves. Ioh.16.33.

3. It is he that worketh our peace with our ſelves; for in me you ſhall have peace, that is, ſuch contentment of mind, and ſuch firme reſolutions, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, ſhall be able to ſeparate you from the love of God; for I will give you that hidden manna, thoſe ſecret joyes and ſweet contentments, that none in the world knowes the excellencies therof, but only they that have them: and ſo we ſee that from God proceedeth all goodneſſe, both grace and peace, both temporall and ſpirituall bleſſings; for application then I ſay, that this ſecond point may ſerve to teach us theſe foure principall leſſons.

The former point teacheth us foure leſſons.

1. To reprove fortune.
2. To condemne abuſers.
3. To teach us to pray.
4. To move us to thankefulneſſe.

} For

1 That nothing in the world commeth by chance. Fortuna dicitur a vortuna, quia vertit omnia, cujus ergo vertigini φερεπτολος τύχη a Pindaro appellatur. Pſal.104.24.

1. Many think, that things come cuſtomarily unto them by chance or fortune; but the Apoſtle ſheweth that they come from a cauſe intelligent, even from God the Father, and from our Lord Ieſus Chriſt; for though God hath ſinum facilem, a heart eaſie to be intreated, to give us what we lack, yet hath he not ſinum perforatum, a careleſſe reſpect to let us take what we like; and though he openeth his hands to fill every living thing, yet he letteth not his bleſſings to drop through his fingers, without caring how, or knowing to whom he beſtoweth them; for as he made all things in wiſdome, ſo he guideth all things with diſcretion, and giveth his bleſſings with deliberate conſideration.

And therefore we ſhould not be like blind Moles, or ſenſleſſe Swine, grovelling upon the earth, to gather the acornes, that do fall from the tree, and never looke up to the tree from whence they fall; but as we have ſurſum capita,

Ovid. Metam. l.1. p.7.

Os homini ſublime dedit, cœlumq; tueri
Iuſſit, ——

Our eyes made to behold the heavens, ſo let us have ſurſum corda, our hearts lifted up to behold the God of heaven, and to know him to be the Authour and Giver both of grace and peace. For it was but a heatheniſh conceit to invent ſuch a goddeſſe called fortune; I may ſay of them as the Pſalmiſt ſaith of idols, they that make them are like unto them, and ſo are all they that put their truſt in them; for they that found her firſt, did paint her blind; and ſurely they are blind, that cannot ſee all goodnes to come from God, and from no place, no cauſe elſe, but from God; for not only the Scriptures teach the ſame, that every good and perfect gift is from above, and commeth downe from the Father of lights, who ruleth the earth, and ſpreadeth the heavens like a curtaine, and cloſeth up Orion, Arcturus, the Pleiades, and all the ſtarres as under a ſignet, and calleth them all by their names, who prepareth raine for the earth, and maketh the graſſe to grow upon the mountaines, and greene hearbs for the uſe of men, who maketh his Sun to ſhine upon the good and upon the bad, and giveth life and breath unto all things, and feedeth the yong Ravens that call upon him; but the wiſeſt among the Heathens, as Orpheus, Homer, Menander, Pythagoras, and above all, the Platoniſts, do moſt divinely teach, that all good things do proceed from God, and are given by him to whom he pleaſeth; as Mirandula hath collected out of their works, and ſet down the ſame at large, in his firſt booke, de providentia Dei.

That the name of fortune is a vaine conceit. Pſal.115.8. Sors incerta vagatur, Fertq; refertq; vices, & habent mortalia caſum. Lucan l.2. Iam 1.17. Iob 9.8,9. Pſal.147.8,9.

Mat.5.45. Acts 17.25. & c.14.17. Vigilat ſemper divinus ille oculus. Iohannes p. Miranд. l.1. de provid. Dei.

2. This ſhould condemne the abuſers of Gods bleſſings; for they be indeed commendata potius quam data, rather commended to us in truſt, than given to our uſe; and in that reſpect, the gifts have a threefold voice and ſalutation when they come unto us.

2 We muſt render an account for all the gifts we have received.

1 Voice. 1. Poſſideto, take us and enjoy us.

2 Voice. 2. Gratias habeto, give thanks to God for us.

3 Voice. Antoninus in ſummi. 3. Rationem reddito, be ſure thou ſhalt render an account to God, how thou haſt uſed and imployed us; for there is λόγος & δόσεος, an account to be made of all the gifts and graces that God hath given us, eſpecially, ſaith Antoninus.

1. De

1. De bonis naturalibus, of all naturall gifts.
2. De donis temporalibus, of all temporall goods.
3. De gratijs ſpiritualibus, of all ſpirituall graces.

An account to be given of our threefold goods.

And that not onely, why thou haſt waſtfully ſpent them, but alſo how or what thou haſt honeſtly gained by them; for

1 Of our naturall gifts.

1. God made thy body, created thy ſoule, and adorned them both with many excellent gifts; thy ſoule with memory, judgement, underſtanding, &c. thy body with beauty and comelineſſe, and ſuch like: All are his gifts, and doe proceed from him; and therefore he will demand an account how thou haſt uſed all theſe, whether thou haſt given thy members ſervants to uncleanneſſe to commit iniquity, or unto righteouſneſſe in holineſſe, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and whether thou haſt uſed thy underſtanding and thy learning in teſtimonium veri, to further the truth, or in adjutorium falſi, to maintaine errours, as Tertullian ſpeaketh; It hath pitied my heart many times, to ſee what good parts have beene given to many men and women, and how they have abuſed the ſame to the diſhonour of God; women that God had made like Angels to be loved, when you behold their faces, and they made themſelves beaſtly ſtrumpets to be loathed, when you conſider their looſe and leaud conditions; and men, to whom God had given a great deale of wit, and their friends very good education, and they have turned the edge of their wit, to make jeſtes at goodneſſe, and to deride all piety, which is but peſſimi ingenij fomes, the unſavoury froth of ſuch an abuſed wit as will one day prove a ſufficient teſtimony for their condemnation, when they ſhall with many fruitleſſe teares wiſh that God had never given them that underſtanding; whereby they were inabled to perpetrate the greater wickedneſſe, to bring themſelves unto the greater torments.

Rom 6.19.

2 Of our temporall goods. Iob 1.21. Pſal 75.7.

2. Whatſoever temporall things we have, Dominus dedit, wee have the ſame from God; for riches, honour, and promotion, come neither from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, but it is the Lord which giveth the ſame as pleaſeth him; and therefore thou muſt give account whether thou haſt riotouſly ſpent them upon thy ſelfe, as the rich glutton did, or niggardly kept them for thy ſelfe, as the covetous cormorants of this world doe, or elſe charitably beſtowed them for the maintenance of the Miniſtery, and releeſe of thy poore diſtreſſed neighbours; Quia non majoris eſt criminis habenti tollere, quam (quum poſſes ſuccurrere) denegare indigentibus; For it is as great a fault to deny helpe (when thou maiſt doe it,) to the afflicted, as to take away thy neighbours goods, which is prohibited; quia eſurientium panis eſt quem tu detines, nudorum indumentum quod tu recludis, & indigentium pecunia, quam tu in arca abſcondis; for it is the bread of the hungry, which mouldeth in thy cupbords; it is the garment of the naked, which is moth-eaten in thy preſſes; and it is the money of the diſtreſſed, which is ruſting in thy coffers, ſaith S. Ambroſe.

Luk. 16.19.

Habetur in decretis.

3 Of all ſpirituall graces. 1 Cor. 12.9. & 11. 2 Cor. 6.1.

3. As theſe naturall and temporall things are given us of God, even ſo are all ſpirituall graces, as the Apoſtle ſheweth: And therefore wee exhort you that ye receive not the grace of God in vaine, but that every man as he hath received the gift, ſhould miniſter the ſame unto another, ὡς καλοὶ οἰκονόμοι ποικίλης χάριτος Θεοῦ, as good diſpoſers of the manifold grace of God; and let no man bragge (ſaith S. Auguſtine) that he hath received the good gifts and graces of God, but let him looke how he ſhall make his account with God, whether he be not found like them, qui ſanctis non ſanctè utuntur, which doe uſe holy things unholily, as wicked Saul, and covetous Balaam, and ſuch like: Wherefore ſeeing all that we have be gifts given of God, and for which we muſt one day render an account to God, we ſhould be carefull to uſe them to the glory of God.

1 Pet 4.10.

3 That we ſhould ſeek for all things from God. For grace. Iames 1.5.

3. Seeing God is the ſole Author and giver of every good gift, it teacheth us to call and ſue to him by prayer for every thing we want.

1. To ſeeke for grace, where it may be found, that is, from God, for if any man lacke wiſedome let him aske of God, ſaith the Apoſtle: If any man want grace and ability to doe the will of God, let him pray to God with Saint Paul when he was buffeted by the meſſenger of Satan) that hee would give him grace and ſtrength to doe it, or elſe he ſhall never be able to do it.

2 Cor. 12. 8.

Zach. 1. 3. Mal 3 7. Lament. 5. 21. Ier. 31. 18. Eſay 1. 16. Pſal. 51. 10.

And therefore, when he biddeth us doe any thing, we ſhould pray to him for grace, to doe it: As, when he ſaith, turne to me, and I will turne to you; then ſhould we preſently ſay, convert thou us, ô Lord, and wee ſhall bee converted; or when he ſaith, waſh you and make you cleane, then ſhould wee pray unto him, that he would purge us with hyſope, and cleanſe us throughly from our ſinnes; and ſo of all other graces and bleſſings, that we do want; we ſhould ſeek all from God; for he is the giver of all.

3 For peace.

2. To ſeeke for peace, and all the fruits of peace from him, which is the God of peace; if we want our health, meanes or maintenance, or any other temporall bleſſing, we ſhould pray to God for the ſame; for he is the ſole giver of the things of this life, as well as the things that concerne eternall life; For the earth is the Lords, and all that therein is; and therefore he diſpoſeth the ſame as pleaſeth him, hee filleth the hungry with good things, and the rich he ſends empty away, hee lifteth up the poore out of the mire, and caſteth downe the high lookes of the proud.

Pſal. 24. 1.

Luk. 1. 53.

The ſmalleſt things given by God.

Neither doth he onely take care to beſtow kingdomes, or the greater matters of this life, as he pleaſeth and upon whom he pleaſeth, and leave the ſmaller matters to others to be diſpoſed of, or to happen as they liſt; but it is he, even he himſelfe and none other, that giveth and diſpoſeth the ſmalleſt things as well as the greateſt, as I have ſufficiently proved before.

Prayer is the only thing to procure grace and peace.

And therefore, if we ſhould want the leaſt thing, even a crum of bread, or a cup of cold water, we muſt have it from God, or goe without it; Now the onely way to obtaine whatſoever we want, whether grace or peace, whether ſpirituall or temporall bleſſing, is prayer; for this is ſitula gratiæ, the bucket, that draweth grace from God, the fountaine of all grace; This will aſcend to heaven, and their mandatum noſtrum peraget, quo caro noſtra pervenire nequit, it will plead for our neceſſities, and never depart untill the moſt higheſt hath granted our requeſts: Therfore our Saviour ſaith, aske and you ſhall have, ſeeke and you ſhall finde, knocke and it ſhall be opened unto you, yea whatſoever yee aske the Father in my name it ſhall be given you: And ſo you ſee, not onely where all good things are to be had, from God, but alſo how they may be obtained, even by prayer.

Laconum precationum ſumma hæc erat, ut diȝ nihil aliud illis adderēt quam honeſta; præterea nihil: Plutarch in Lacon. Mat 7. 27. Iohn 16. 23.

4. That we ſhould be thankefull to God for all his bleſſings.

4. This ſhould moove us to thankefullneſſe for all the benefits that God hath, and doth daily beſtow upon us: aske of the daies of old, if any nation, if the Iewes, or any other choſen and peculiar people of God can paralell us, in the gifts of grace and peace, in pure preaching, and peaceable government, for ſo long a time, and ſo happy a manner as we have had? and I ſay not this to make us proud of Gods graces, but to teach us to crie out with the Pſalmiſt, Quid retribuam, what ſhall we render unto the Lord for all the benefits that he hath done unto us? For they that by receiving grace doe ſeeme to be in moſt favour with God, if they be unthankefull, doe become of leaſt reckoning with God, ſaith Saint Bernard; becauſe ingratitude is like a monſter in nature, the uglieſt and moſt unſhapen ſinne of all ſins; & in ingratitudine nihil mali non ineſt; and there is no evill but it is in this evill, ſaith Cicero. O that men would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and ſhew the bleſſings that he beſtoweth upon the children of men: And ſo you ſee that God is the Author of all goodneſſe, and the ſole giver of all grace and peace, that is, of all good things, both ſpirituall and temporall.

Ingratus eſt vitandus ut diru ſcelus; nil cogitari peſtilentius poteſt; nam tellus ipſa fœdius nihil creat. Petr. Crinitus. Poemat. l. 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

That God is not the Author of ſinne; ſinne how taken. Three things in ſinne; the objections anſwered. God properly not the Author of puniſhment; why we are afflicted.

AND therefore, from this point, we muſt conclude a corollarie moſt neceſſarie to be defended; That God cannot be the Author of any evill, becauſe he is the Author of all good; and this conſequent is very cleere and unanſwerable; For that Saint Iames tells us, the ſame fountaine cannot ſend forth ſweet and bitter waters; and our Saviour tells us, that a good tree cannot bring forth bad fruits; and therefore God, which is ſummum bonum, the chiefeſt good, and the fountaine of all goodneſſe, cannot be the Author of any evill.

A Corollarie from the former doctrine.

That God cannot be the Author of any evill. Iames 3.11. Mat.7.18.

Now to make this more plaine, you muſt underſtand that evill is taken two waies,

1. For the evill of ſin.
2. For the evill of puniſhment.

Evill taken two waies.

And I ſay God, ſimply, and in all reſpects, can be ſaid to be the Author of neither.

1. Not of ſin; For thou art a God that hateſt wickedneſſe, neither ſhall any evill dwell with thee, ſaith David; and Habacucke ſaith, thou art of pure eyes and canſt not ſee evill, thou canſt not behold wickedneſſe.

Pſal.5.4. Hab.1.13.

And reaſon it ſelfe doth confirme the ſame; For

1. That which is ſimply and abſolutely good, cannot be the cauſe of any evill; for how can it be ſimply good, if evill doth any waies proceed from it?

That God is no Author of ſin. Pſal.33.5.

But God is ſimply and abſolutely good, and the earth is full of his goodneſſe, ſaith the Prophet David; therefore hee cannot bee the cauſe of any evill.

But againſt this it is objected.

Object. 1. That in God, wee live and move and have our being, that is, every motion and every action is from God; and therefore every ſin.

Acts 17.28.

Sol. It is anſwered, that ſin may be conſidered either

1. As it is a tranſgreſſion of the Law.
2. As it is a puniſhment of former ſins.
3. As it is the cauſe of future ſins.

Rom 1.16. Sin conſidered three waies.

Now as ſin is and may be the puniſhment of former ſins, we ſay that God may will ſin, as the Apoſtle ſheweth of the Gentiles, that becauſe they regarded not to know God, therefore God delivered them up to ſtrong luſts, and vile affections to doe thoſe things that were not convenient; And therefore the queſtion is not, whether God willeth ſin any way, but whether he willeth ſin, as it is ſinne, as it is evill, and as it is a breach of his law. And

Sol. To this it is briefly anſwered, that in every ſin there are three things to be conſidered.

Three things conſidered in ſin.

1. The act.
2. The obliquity.
3. Obligation to puniſhment.

} And

1. For the act, we ſay, it is from God; for of him, and in him, and for him are all things, that is, as well actions or motions as ſubſtances, as Auguſtine ſaith.

Rom.11.36. Aug.to.9. de grat & lib.arb.c.20.

2. The obliquity, or corruption of the action, which is nothing els, but aberratio a recto ſcopo, a declining from the rule of Gods law, and is properly the ſin, and which in Greeke is therefore called ἁμαρτεμα or ἁμαρτία, a tranſgreſſion of the law; this is onely from man, and no waies from God, as from an efficient cauſe thereof.

The action, and the obliquity of the action two different things.

Neither ſhould this ſeeme ſtrang to any man, that, in the ſelfe ſame ſinnefull action, we conſider the act and the obliquity of the act, and doe affirme the one to be from God, and therefore good, and the other from our ſelves, and therefore evill; for howſoever the obliquity doth alwaies reſide in the act, as privation in a ſubject; yet they be two diſtinct things, and may in our underſtandings admit a ſeparation of the one from the other: And the action muſt needs be good; or elſe the obliquity could not ſubſiſt; for ſinne hath not any being in rerum natura, if we conſider it ſimply in it ſelfe, but as it is ſubſiſtent in ſome ſubject that is good, as the Philoſophers doe moſt truly affirme.

Evill cannot ſubſiſt but in good.

Every being good

And therefore we ſay, that there is no being, nothing that doth ſubſiſt in rerum natura, whether it be a ſubſtance, or an action, that can be ſo evill, but that it is alſo good; but in divers reſpects; as, evill in regard of the privation of good, and good in regard of the ſubject wherein this privation of good doth inhere.

Rom 6 23.

3. For the guilt or obligation to puniſhment, whereof Saint Paul ſaith, the wages of ſinne is death; this is from the juſtice of God; which requireth, that every one ſhould have what he deſerveth; and this guilt is called ſinne, becauſe it is through ſinne; and in this reſpect God is ſaid to forgive ſinne, that is, to pardon the guilt, to cancell the obligation, and to remit the puniſhment thereof; and ſo he may be ſaid to will ſinne, when he will not forgive the puniſhment, but ſtill hold us guilty, as hee doth thoſe that take his name in vaine.

Mat. 6 12.

And ſo you ſee, that although every action is from God, yet the ſin and the obliquity of the action is from man.

Ob. But then againe it is objected, that God knoweth we will commit the ſin, when we do commit the act, and he knew Adam would ſinne, when he created Adam; and therefore he ſhould either hinder us to ſin, or not complaine that wee do ſin.

The knowledge of God, that man will ſinne, is not the cauſe that he doth ſin.

Sol. I anſwer, that knowledge, being a meere conceiving of a thing (which is a thing proper to the underſtanding, and not to the will) cannot worke any thing outwardly; and therefore cannot be the cauſe of any thing; for I know that an old man muſt needs die, and that a rotten houſe will ſoone fall, if it be not re-edified; and yet I am the cauſe of neither; even ſo, Deus nos peccatores noſcit, ſed non facit, God knoweth, that we will ſin, but he doth not cauſe us to ſin, ſaith S. Auguſtine.

Aug l 7. de anima

God ſuffereth nothing againſt his will.

And I confeſſe, that God can as eaſily hinder ſin, as to ſuffer ſin to be committed, and he could as eaſily have hindered Adam to have ſinned, as to forgive him when he had ſinned; for we muſt not thinke that God ſuffereth ſinne againſt his will, becauſe he cannot hinder it, for that doth derogate from the power of God, but upon juſt reaſons and for many excellent cauſes, he made man ſo, that he might either ſtand or fall.

Why God made man mutable. 1 Reaſon.

1. To ſhew a difference betwixt the Creator and the creature, for immutability is proper only unto God; and therefore he made all intelligible creatures, both men and Angels, ſo, that they might either ſtand or fall.

2 Reaſon.

2. That they might be the more praiſe-worthy, if they did ſtand, or moſt juſtly condemned if they did fall; Nam ſi Diabolus ſeductionis poteſtatem non accepiſſet, homo probationis mercedem non recipiſſet; for if the Divell had not received power to tempt us, and man that liberty of will, either to have yeelded or reſiſted, then man could not have had the reward of his reſiſtance, or the reproofe of his deficiencie, ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome: And ſo you ſee the reaſons why God made man ſo, that he might either ſtand or fall: And there be many reaſons why he ſuffered him, and doth ſuffer all others, to fall into ſins: Among which I find theſe three reaſons chiefly alledged.

Chryſ oper. imperfect. ho. 55.

Why God ſuffered Adam and all the ſons of Adam to fall.

1. For the declaration of his juſtice, in the puniſhing of all ſins.

2. For the manifeſtation of his mercies, in the pardoning of many ſins.

3. For the ſuppreſſion of our pride, and the declaration of our weake and miſerable eſtate, that without his eſpeciall grace, we cannot keep and preſerve our ſelves from any ſin.

Ob. But

Ob. But yet further it will be objected, that the Scripture ſeems plainely to attribute the very ſin unto God, as the Lord turned the hearts of the Egyptians, that they ſhould hate his people, and deale untruly with his ſervants, that he hardned the heart of Pharaoh, and the heart of Eglon, and ſuch like.

Pſal. 105.

Sol. I anſwer: that in every ſinfull act there are three concurring agents to be conſidered: and the act is aſcribed ſomtimes to the one, and ſomtimes to the other, but ever in a different reſpect. As Exod. 7 3. Iudg 3.12.

How a ſinfull act is aſcribed to God, to the Divel, and to man.

1. It is aſcribed to God, as the Authour, by whom we receive power to do every action and motion; and as the voluntary ſufferer of the obliquity or pravity of the action, for the reaſons above ſhewed; and thus God is ſaid to harden the heart of the wicked, or to deliver them to vile affections, Non malum efficiendo, ſed gratiam denegando; Not by effecting the evill, but by giving man that power, and ſuffering man by that power to do the evill, and by denying his grace to hinder and prevent that evill.

1 How to God. Pſal 81.13. Rem. 1. Aug. tom. 7. de gratia & lib. arbit. cap. 20.

2. It is aſcribed to Satan, as the inticer and ſuggeſter of man, to the pravity of each action and motion; and ſo Satan is ſaid to have moved David to number Iſrael; to have filled the heart of Ananias; and to have blinded the eyes of the wicked; not by giving any power to do any action or motion (for that is only from God) but by inticing man, à directo ſcopo aberrare, to paſſe the preſcribed bounds, and ſo to pervert and corrupt every action.

2 How to Satan. 1 Chron. 21. 1. 2 Cor. 4.4. Acts 5.3.

Tullius in parad.

3. It is aſcribed to man, as the next authour of the action, and the ſole doer of the ſin, by averting from the right ſcope, and yeelding to the inticement of Satan, to deprave and corrupt the action: and ſo Pharaoh is ſaid to have hardned his owne heart, and all the wicked are ſaid to walke in their owne wayes, and according to the luſts of their owne hearts: And therefore all ſinnes are properly the works of men, not of God, nor of Satan, but of men; becauſe they are the next agents and immediate authours of the ſame.

3 How to man. Exod. 7. 22. & c. 8. 16. Gen. 6.5. Pſal. 81.

Obiect. Laſtly, it is objected, that he commanded Abraham to ſacrifice his ſonne, and bade the Iſraelites to rob the Egyptians, and willed the death of his owne Sonne, &c. But all theſe are ſinnes, therefore ſinnes proceed from him.

Gen. 22.2. Exod. 11.2.

Sol. I anſwer; that whatſoever God commandeth us to do, to do the ſame is no ſin; for ſin is the tranſgreſſing of his commandement.

Whatſoever God would have done is no ſin.

And yet for the fuller underſtanding of this point, viz. the doing of that thing, which God willeth, or commandeth, I ſay, that in ſome it may be a ſin, in others no ſin; For

It is not enough for us to do what he biddeth, but we muſt be ſure to do it in that very manner that he preſcribeth, and to that very end which he intendeth; Quia modus & finis actionis conſtituunt actionem, becauſe the manner and the end of an action, do make the action good or bad.

The manner of doing, and the end of actions, do make them either good or evill.

And therefore I ſay, that if Abraham had killed his ſonne, meerly becauſe he would obey God, and fulfill his will in all particular reſpects, he had not ſinned: Nor yet the Iewes in crucifying the Sonne of God (whereof the other was a type and figure) if they had done the ſame, onely to fulfill the will of God; and in the ſame manner, and to the ſame end, as God had decreed the ſame; but they did not ſo, therefore they ſinned; for God gave him out of the depth of his love, to die for us, that we might be redeemed by him; but they put him to death out of the depth of their malice, and envy againſt him; and therefore the ſame act of crucifying Chriſt, was no ſinne, as it was decreed by God, but a moſt grievous ſinne, as it was committed by them: And ſo you ſee that God, which is the Authour of grace and goodneſſe, cannot be the authour of the evill of ſinne and wickedneſſe.

2. As he cannot be the authour of the evill of ſinne, becauſe he is the Authour of grace; ſo can he not be the authour of the evill of puniſhment, becauſe he is the Authour of peace; for peace is a ſweet harmony and conſent of all things in their due order, without any manner of diſtraction or divulſion; but puniſhments are

2 That God is not properly the authour of any puniſhment. Peace what it is.

Punishment, what it is.

the distracting and disturbing of the quiet dispositions of things contrary to their naturall inclinations: And therefore I say, that God cannot properly be said to be the authour of the evill of punishment.

But for the better understanding of this point, I desire you to consider, that this evill of punishment may be taken two wayes.

Evill of punishment taken two wayes.

1. As it is evill, and a dissolution of the creature.
2. As it tendeth to good, either in respect of { 1. Man. 2. God.

1 As it tendeth to the dissolution of the creature. Ezek 33.11. Wisdome 1.14.

1. In the first sense I say, God cannot be said to be authour of this evill; for he desireth not the death of a sinner, because he made all things, that they might have their being, Et quia omne agens agit sibi simile, and because every agent worketh an effect like unto himselfe; therefore God properly worketh the happinesse, and not the misery, the salvation, and not the destruction of his creatures.

2 As it tendeth to good. 1 To man. The manifold good of afflictions in three things.

2. I say, that the evill of punishment may tend to good, and that

1. In respect of man, and this likewise many wayes, but especially these three wayes.

1. To make him loath his sinnes, and forsake them.
2. To make him weary of the world, and despise it.
3. To make him long for Christ, and desire him.

} For

1 To make him loath his sins. Psal 119.67. Verse 71.

1. As the correction of a child makes him leave his faults, so the afflictions of the godly make them forsake their sinnes; for, Before I was corrected, I went wrong, (saith the Prophet David) but now I have learned to keepe thy commandements: And therefore, It is good for me that I have been in trouble, that I might learne to keep thy commandements; God therefore may and doth send afflictions, that they may hedge in the waies of men, and so keep them in the paths of his commandements: And so the Prophet saith, I will hedge up thy wayes with thornes, that is, afflictions, that they may hinder thee from stepping aside, out of the right way.

Hos. 2.6.

2 To make him weary of all vanities.

2. Our soules are glued upon the vanities of this world; and therefore, as the mother putteth aloes or mustard, or some like bitter things upon her teats, when she would weane her child, that is so fond of her breasts: so doth God annoint the vanities of this world, with the bitter ointment of afflictions, that we might be even weary of the same.

3 To make us long for heaven.

3. He sendeth afflictions not only to make us loath our sinnes, and waxe weary of the world, but also to make us long for grace; and seeke to him for peace, that we may be freed from these miseries; Nam mala quæ nos hic premunt, ad Deum nos ire compellunt; for the miseries of this world make us long for the happinesse of the heavenly kingdome, saith S. Gregory.

Greg. in Moral.

Afflictions like physicall potions. Heb. 12.10.

And so, in this respect, God may be said to be the authour of afflictions and punishments, as they tend to this good, to chasten us for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holinesse, as the Apostle speaketh; for thus they are like unto the bitter potions of physick, good, because necessary for some good end; otherwise bonum necessarium extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum, a necessary good is not good, but for necessities sake; so is physicke to procure the health of our bodies, and so afflictions, to procure the health of our soules.

2 Punishments declare the justice of God.

2. In respect of God, punishments and afflictions tend to good; for they are all inflicted upon man for sin, and are the effects of justice, and therefore must needs be good; for whatsoever is just, is good: But the punishments of the wicked, either in this life, or in the future life, are the just judgements of God for sinne; therefore in this respect they must needs be good, because they shew Gods hatred unto sin, and his justice in punishing all sinners.

Amos 3.6. How God effecteth evill.

And so I confesse, that, in these respects, the Prophet might most truly say, there was no evill in the city, which the Lord had not done; and God himselfe might say, I and none els do form the light, and create darknesse, do make peace, and create evill, that is, as I do properly, & suapte natura, of mine owne nature, effect that which is good, in all respects; so ex quadam sequela, for diverse respects tending tending to good, I do willingly ſuffer all evill, yea both the evill of ſinne and the evill of puniſhment; for though neither of theſe be ſimply good, yet either of them tend to good, and therefore ſo, they are ſuffered of God; for God would never ſuffer any evill, but that he meant of that evill to effect a greater good, ſaith S. Auguſtine; as by the ſuffering of the ſins of the elect, he ſheweth the riches of his grace, and by ſuffering the ſinnes of the reprobates, he makes his power knowne, and by all the puniſhments of the wicked, he ſheweth his wrath againſt ſin, and his juſt judgement upon the veſſels of reprobation.

Why God effecteth evill.

Aug. in Enchirid. ad Laurem.

Idem l. 1 de predeſt.

And ſo you ſee that God, who is properly the Authour of grace and peace, and of all things ſimply good, can no waies be ſaid to be the authour of the evill of puniſhment, but only as it tends to good.

And therefore, whenſoever we commit ſinne, remember that that is not from God, and whereſoever we ſee plagues and puniſhments, remember theſe be the wages of ſinne, and never come properly from God; but either as a meanes to make us leave our ſinnes, or to ſhew the juſt judgements of God upon us for our ſinnes.

How carefull wee ſhould be to avoid ſinne.

O then, beloved brethren, how exceedingly ſhould we be afraid to ſin: for as God doth exceedingly love the things that proceed from himſelf, and are agreeable to his nature, ſo he doth exceedingly hate the things that proceed no way from him, but are contrary to his diſpoſition; and therefore he hateth ſinne with an immortall hatred, and he puniſheth ſin with an everlaſting puniſhment: and therfore O my ſoule, why wilt thou ſinne? why wilt thou flie away from God? but

Quo fugis ah demens? ——

Virg Eglog.

Where wilt thou flie? Or how canſt thou hide thy ſelfe from his all-ſeeing eye? Peccata latere erit impoſſibile, peccatorem apparere erit intolerabile, for to hide thy ſinnes is impoſſible, and for a ſinfull ſoule to appeare is intolerable: and therfore S. Auguſtine tels thee what thou art beſt to do, Returne, returne O Shulamite, returne, returne againe to God; Quia non eſt quo fugias a Deo irato, niſi ad Deum placatum; for the only way to eſcape the fury of God, when he is angry, is to run unto him when he is pleaſed, and to ſay, O my God, O my Father, I have ſinned againſt heaven and before thee, and I am not worthy to be called thy ſonne; but thou art rich in mercy, thou art full of goodneſſe, and thou art the fountaine of all grace; and therefore I beſeech thee forgive me my ſinnes, and give me thy grace through Ieſus Chriſt my Saviour.

Cant. 6. 13.

Luke 15. 21.

Eph 2. 4.

And ſo much for the firſt point, that is, the authour of goodneſſe, and the giver both of grace and peace; it reſteth that I ſhould ſpeake of the ſecond point, that is, the deſcription of this Authour, ſet downe in theſe words.

God our Father, and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

CHAP. III.

Chriſt brings grace and peace; the true God diſtinguiſhed from others two wayes; God deſcribed from his greatneſſe and his goodneſſe; the word, God, whence derived; and what it teacheth.

2. IN theſe words the bleſſed Apoſtle ſheweth, that not only God the Father, but alſo our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, is the authour and the giver of theſe bleſſings of grace and peace, and of all good things.

2 The Authour of all goodnes more fully deſcribed.

For though theſe words, our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, as they are in the originall, Τοῦ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, may be taken, either to ſhew the Sonneſhip of Chriſt, as if the Apoſtle ſhould ſay, that the Authour of theſe bleſſings is God, the Father of us, and the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt; or els to ſhew, that Chriſt is alſo the Authour and the giver of theſe bleſſings as well as the Father;

Father; as if the Apostle should say, that they do proceed, not onely from God the Father, but also from our Lord Iesus Christ; yet I thinke that the meaning of the Apostle is, to shew that grace and peace doe proceed not only from God the Father, but also from our Lord Iesus Christ, as from joynt Authors and co-equall givers of the same; For

That grace and peace proceed as well from the Son as from the Father.

Having shewed, in the fourth verse, that God was the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, in expresse words, de filio suo, concerning his Sonne Iesus Christ our Lord, it had beene frivolous to doe it obscurely, and it had beene superfluous so suddenly, to shew the same againe: and therefore doubtlesse the Apostles meaning is, to shew that grace and peace do not only proceed from God our Father, but also from our Lord Iesus Christ.

1 Reason.

1. Because he and the Father are both one, & opera Trinitatis ad extra sunt indivisa, and all the outward workes of the blessed Trinity are indivisible, that is, unappropriated to one person more then the other, but common to each one as well as the other; quia in operibus ad extra tres Personæ operantur simul, because in all externall actions they all worke together; and therefore whatsoever the Father doth, the Sonne doth, and what gift or grace soever the Father bestoweth, the Sonne bestoweth.

2 Reason.

2. Because our Lord Iesus Christ became our Redeemer to purchase grace, and to be our Advocate to procure peace unto us; For

1 Christ came to bring grace to us, Ioh. 3.34. c. 1. v 16

1. That he might bring grace unto us, he received all fullnesse of Grace in himselfe without measure, and of his fullnesse we all receive and grace for grace; and so the Apostle sheweth that in him, that is, in the man Christ Iesus, dwelleth all the fullnesse of the God-head, σωματικῶς, bodily, that is, personally and substantially, as S. Hilarie expoundeth it.

Col. 2. 9.

Hilar. l. 8. de Trinit.

Ioh. 1. 17. Moses only shewed Gods will, Christ gives a power to doe Gods will.

And therefore Saint Iohn saith, that the Law came by Moses, but grace and truth by Iesus Christ; for Moses shewed to us what was the will of God, and what should be done of us, but he could not purchase us the favour of God, nor give us any power to performe his will; but our Lord Iesus Christ did bring unto us the love and favour of God, and gave us grace and many gifts of grace, whereby in some measure we are inabled to please God, and to keepe his Commandements; because he hath not onely made our yoke easie and our burthen light; because that to beleeve in him (which is the yoake whereby we are yoked unto him) is a great deale easier then to performe the law, (which was the yoke that tied us unto God) but also, worketh faith in our hearts, whereby we may beleeve in him, and charity whereby we may love him, and all other graces whereby we may serve him.

Mat 11. 30.

Ephes. 4. 8.

To what end Christ bestoweth his graces.

And this the Apostle sheweth, when he saith that he, which descended, hath also ascended, ut dona daret hominibus, that he might give gifts unto men, that is, not onely gifts to wash away their sins, but also gifts to indue their soules with inherent vertues and graces; whereby they might proceed from faith to faith, that is, from a weake and a little faith, to a strong and a lively faith, and from grace to grace, that is, to grow better and better, and from one degree of perfection unto another, untill at last they grow to be perfect men in Christ Iesus.

2 Christ came to bring peace to us. Esay 9.6. Iohn 16.33. Chap. 14.27.

2. Touching peace, the Prophet Esay saith, that Christ is the Prince of peace, and Christ himself saith, in me you shall have peace; and therfore he is called our peace, and our peace he calleth his peace, saying, Pacem meam do vobis, My peace I give unto you; And so in many passages of holy writ, he is said to be the sole procurer of our peace; For the discipline of our peace was laid upon him, saith Esayas And S. Paul saith, that we have peace with God through Iesus Christ our Lord: And so it appeares plainly, that he is the Author and the giver both of grace and peace.

Esay 53. 5. Rom. 5. 1.

Deitie of Christ proved. Psal. 84. 12.

And therefore this doth sufficiently prove the deity of our Saviour Christ; Quia Iehova dat gratiam & gloriam, because none but God alone can give either grace or glory; but Iesus Christ gives both grace and glory; and therefore Iesus Christ must be the true Iehova.

And so you see the Apostle, by both these clauses of this one sentence, and by both both these titles, and both persons of this one God, doe shew that both of them is the onely one joynt Author and giver of all goodnesse; because grace and peace doe proceed from God our Father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ.

That there be many which are called gods.

And because there be many that are called Gods, as

1 Angels.

1. Angels, God stood in the assembly of gods, Psal. 82.1.

2 Divels.

2. Divels, as dij gentium Dæmonia, the gods of the Gentiles are Divells.

3 Priests.

3. Priests, as offerte dij, let the Priests offer; And, the gods of the earth are lifted up.

4 Kings.

4. Kings, as dixi dij estis, I said you are gods, Psal. 82.6.

5 Iudges. Exod. 22.8.

5. Iudges, as the cause was brought, ad deos, unto the gods; and so of others; therefore, least we should thinke these blessings proceeded from any of these gods, the Apostle saith, they come from God the Father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ.

How the Apostle distinguisheth the true God from others.

And so he differenceth the true God and Author of these blessings, from all other gods, in these two especiall respects,

{1. Of himselfe, 2. Of us.}

1 In respect of himselfe, two waies.

1. In respect of himselfe, hee likewise differenceth him, from all other gods, two waies,

{1. From the unity of his Essence. 2. From the Trinity of the Persons.} For

1 In respect of the unity of his Essence.

1. The Apostle sheweth, that the Author of these blessings, in respect of his Essence, is but Θεὸς one God; and therefore though the Valentinians had their thirty couples of gods, as Irenæus witnesseth of them, and the heathens thirty thousand gods, as Saint Augustine out of Varro hath collected, yet doe we beleeve in God, and not in gods; or as the Nicene Creede hath it, in one God: and we doe pray to this one God, that he would give us grace and peace; for we know he can doe it; because he is the God of gods, & causa causarum extra quam nulla causa, and the cause of all causes, besides whom there can bee no cause of any goodnesse; and therefore if he will not, we know all other cannot bestow any good thing upon us.

2 In respect of the Trinity of the persons.

2. He sheweth, that in this one God, there are divers persons; for that not onely the Father, but also the Sonne is the Author of these blessings; and if the Father and the Sonne be, the Holy Ghost must needs bee also; for he proceedeth from them both, and he is the ineffable bond of both, as Saint Augustine speaketh, and he also is the worker and conveyer of all blessings from God to man; and therefore whersoever the other two Persons are expressed, this third Person also must of necessity be included, Quia opera Trinitatis ad extra sunt indivisa, because the workes of the Trinity without, or in respect of outward operations, are indivisible.

How these blessings proceed from each person

Iustin Martyr in expos. fidei.

And therefore we say, we have grace and peace from the Father, tanquam a fonte, as from the fountaine; from the Son, as from the procurer thereof; and from the Holy Ghost, as from the convayer and worker of the same in our hearts; and so we see that, μονὰς ἐν τριάδι νοεῖται, καὶ τριὰς ἐν μονάδι γνωρίζεται, the Unity is understood in the Trinity, and the Trinity is acknowledged in the Unity, as Iustin Martyr speaketh.

Ob. But against this it may be objected, that of these two Persons the Father onely is called God, and the Sonne is called our Lord Iesus Christ.

Tertul. Contra Praxeam. f. 389. Why Christ is called Lord, and not God, in many places.

Sol. Tertullian answereth, quia nationes a multitudine Idolorum transirent ad unicum Deum, ut differentia constitueretur inter cultores unius & plurimæ divinitatis, quamvis ex conscientia scimus & Dei nomen & Domini, & Patri & Filio & Spiritui Sancto convenire, tamen ad quamlibet occasionem effugiendam, deos omnino ne dicimus nec dominos, sed Apostolus, & nos Apostolum sequentes, Deum Patrem appellamus & Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum; because the the Gentiles, from the multitude of Idols, which they ſerved, ſhould be drawne to the ſervice of the one onely true God, that there might be a difference ſet betwixt the worſhippers of one God, and the worſhippers of infinite deities; therfore, although we certainely know that the name of God, and the name of Lord, may be fitly and moſt truly attributed both to the Father, to the Sonne, and to the Holy Ghoſt; yet to avoid all occaſions, that might breed any ſuſpition or imagination of many Gods, wee never ſay Gods, nor Lords, but, as the Apoſtle, ſo wee with the Apoſtle, doe call the Father God, and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

Theoph. in 1 Cor. 8. fo. 906.

And Theophilact alſo, doth moſt excellently reſolve this queſtion: Quum audis, unus eſt Deus Pater, & unus Dominus Ieſus Chriſtus; When thou heareſt that there is one God, even the Father, and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, leſt thou ſhouldſt thinke that the name of God is onely to be aſcribed to the Father, and the name of Lord unto the Sonne, thou muſt know that either of theſe names and titles are given to either perſon without diſtinction, as Rom. 9. the Sonne is called God, and Pſal. 109. the Father is called the Lord; as the Lord ſaid to my Lord: But he maketh this diſtinction, becauſe he writ to the Gentiles that worſhipped many gods; that they ſhould not have any cauſe of imagination, that wee have many gods as they had: therefore he doth not call the Sonne God, leaſt they, that were uſed to many gods, ſhould imagine that we had two Gods, neither doth he call the Father Lord, leaſt they ſhould thinke we had two Lords.

Either name give to either perſon.

Why the Holy Ghoſt is not mentioned in many places.

And for this cauſe (ſaith Theophilact) neque Spiritus hic ullam fecit mentionem, auditorum imbecillitati parcens, he makes no mention of the Holy Ghoſt, by reaſon of the imcibellity, and weak capacities of the hearers; even as the Prophets made no direct or plaine mention of the Sonne, by reaſon of the weake apprehenſions and underſtanding of the Iewes; leaſt they ſhould preſently apprehend ſome carnall nativity, obnoxious to humane affects: ad oppoſitionem igitur vanorum deorum non Filij, dixit unum Deum Patrem, atq; ut opponeret ſeſe mentitis dominis non Patri, dixit unum eſſe Dominum Ieſum Chriſtum: The Apoſtle therefore calleth the Father God, not to denie the deity of the Sonne, and he calleth the Sonne, Ieſus Chriſt our Lord; not becauſe the Father is not Lord alſo; but to ſhew the vanity and idle conceit of them that ſerved any other falſe and lying Lords.

Hereby then you ſee, that although when wee doe ſpeake of theſe perſons aſunder, we call either perſon indiſcriminatim indifferently, and without diſtinction both Lord and God; yet when we ſpeake of them both together, leaſt the heathens or any other ſhould thinke we worſhip many gods, if he had called them both Gods, we call the Father God, and the Sonne our Lord Ieſus Chriſt; and this was requiſite then, by reaſon of the imbecillity of the heathens newly converted from Idolatry; but now thoſe queſtions, touching the Vnity of the Godhead, and the Trinity of the perſons, are ſo ſufficiently and learnedly handled, that men are now (we hope) of ripe apprehenſion, to know this truth, without any ſuch feare of danger as was then, in the infancy of the Church, and the firſt publiſhing of this truth.

What was fit in the infancie, is not requiſite in the full age of the Church.

And thus you ſee the true God and author of theſe bleſſings differenced and diſtinguiſhed from all other falſe and imaginarie gods, in reſpect of himſelfe.

2 The Author of theſe bleſſings is diſtinguiſhed, in reſpect of us, two wales.

2. Hee is diſtinguiſhed and deſcribed in reſpect of us; and that two waies.

1. Ab excellentia poteſtatis, quia Deus, from the excellency of his power; becauſe he is God.
2. A perfectione bonitatis, from the perfection of his goodneſſe; becauſe he is our Father and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

1 Gods greatneſſe
2 Gods goodneſſe

The 1. ſheweth Gods greatneſſe.
The 2. ſheweth Gods goodneſſe.

Both which, the very heathens aſcribed to the true God, though they knew him him not; for they said hee was optimus maximus, best and greatest, greatest to shew his ableneſſe, and best to shew his willingneſſe, to give us all good things.

How Gods greatneſſe, and his goodneſſe are most commonly joyned together; and why.

And we finde theſe two titles alwaies joyned together, not onely by the heathens, but alſo by Chriſt himſelfe, and all his Apoſtles; For Chriſt in lege ſupplicandi, when he teacheth us how to pray, ſaith, Our Father which art in heaven; The firſt clauſe, Our Father, ſheweth his goodneſſe, and his willingneſſe to helpe us; and the ſecond clauſe, which art in heaven, ſheweth his greatneſſe, and his ableneſſe to helpe us: And the Apoſtles joyntly, in lege credendi, when they teach us how to beleeve, doe ſet downe the ſame thing; I beleeve in God the Father Almighty; and each one of them ſeverally, in lege docendi, in all their writings, do joyne theſe two points together; that as the firſt teacheth reverence and feare, ſo the other ſhould ſtirre up boldneſſe and love; that wee ſhould not bee too bold, quia Θεὸς, becauſe he is God, nor yet too fearefull, quia Pater, becauſe he is our Father; For that neither feare without confidence, nor confidence without feare, can bee acceptable unto God, or profitable unto man; becauſe the one breeds preſumption, the other deſperation, and ſo each of them a part deſtruction.

Mat. 6. 9.

Confidence and feare to go together.

And therefore God doth ſo order his ſtile, and joyne his titles together, that his greatneſſe ſhould keepe us from preſuming, and his goodneſſe from deſpairing: Whereupon Saint Bernard ſaith, that theſe two are the two feet of the Lord, whereby he walketh in all his waies, and faſteneth both theſe feet upon every ſinner, that truly turneth unto him; For the goodneſſe of God onely would animate the wicked to preſumption, and his greatneſſe onely would terrifie even the godly to deſperation; and therefore David excellently ſaith, that he would not ſing of mercie alone, nor of judgement alone, but his ſong ſhould be of mercy and judgement together, that ſo, in reſpect of Gods juſtice, he might retaine feare, and in reſpect of Gods mercy, he might conceive hope.

Bern. ſer. 52. par. vorum

The two feet of God.

Pſal. 101. 1.

But as the conſideration of Gods goodneſſe doth breed in us fiduciam faith to proceed boldly to the throne of grace, ſo I would to God that the conſideration of his greatnes would breed in us devotion and reverence to work out our ſalvation with feare and trembling; For we are all ready enough to lay hold on his goodnes, but we are farre enough from any true feare of his greatnes; for ſinners lay hold on that only, that ſerves their turne to go on in ſin; and therfore the Prophet ſaith, that ſupra dorſum Dei fabricaverunt peccatores, prolongaverunt iniquitatem, they laid all their ſins upon Gods back, and multiplied their ſins by reaſon of the multitude of his mercies, they make God all of mercies, onely mercifull; and never remember that he is juſtus & verax, juſt and true, as well as good and gratious.

Philip. 2. 12.

Pſal. 129. 3.

Pſal. 103. 4.

And therefore they add ſinne upon ſinne, and deſpiſe the goodneſſe and long ſufferance of God, and never thinke, that his goodneſſe is uſed to lead them to repentance, and not to incourage them in their wickednesſe; and ſo they heape unto themſelves wrath againſt the day of wrath, and declaration of the juſt judgement of God: And thus much of theſe titles joyntly conſidered; it reſteth, that we ſhould ſpeake of them ſeverally expreſſed; and

Rom. 2. 4.

1. Of the title that expreſſeth Gods greatneſſe, and that is

1 The title expreſſing Gods greatneſſe.

Θεὸς, God;

Where, firſt of all, you muſt obſerve, that here is but one word, to expreſſe Gods Majeſty, to induce feare; but heare are five or ſix to ſhew his goodneſſe, to ſtirre up love towards him, and confidence in him; becauſe his mercy is over all his workes, and when his juſtice reacheth but to the third or fourth generations, at the furtheſt, yet his mercy extendeth it ſelfe unto thouſands; and he defires a great deale more to be loved then to be feared; and therefore the very heathens obſerved that in his deſcription and expreſſion to us where he is termed Deus optimus maximus, he is ever termed optimus, the beſt, before maximus the greateſt;

But one title of Gods greatneſſe for five of his goodneſſe.

so great is his goodnesse towards the sonnes of men. But to proceed to explaine this word, Θεὸς, God.

What the word God doth signifie

Θεὸς dicitur,

Damascen saith that there be two principall names of God, ὁ ὤν, the being, or he that is, or I am, as himselfe said to Moses; and ὁ Θεὸς, God: And of this latter, he giveth three speciall Etymologies, and derivations.

1 A currendo. Iob 28.24. Sap. 8.1.

1. ἀπὸ τοῦ θεῖν, of running or compassing about, because by his providence over all things, attingit à fine usque ad finem, & disponit omnia suaviter, hee beholdeth all things under heaven, and disposeth all things orderly; and thus Plato, Proclus, and the rest of the Platonists doe interpret Θεὸς, to signifie the providence of God, or he that careth and preserveth all things.

2 A videndo. Heb. 4.13.

2. ἀπὸ τοῦ θεᾶσθαι τὰ πάντα, of seeing, because hee seeth all things, and all things are patent unto his eyes, and nothing in the world can bee hidden from him, the very thoughts of our hearts are seene of him, a phrase worth the noting, that it is not onely said, Christ knew the thoughts of men, but that hee saw their thoughts, as the vulgar reads it; quia Θεὸς, because of his all-seeing eye.

Mat. 9 4.

3 Ab urendo. Deut 4.24. Two properties of fire.

1 To consume. Deut. 4.24. Heb. 12.29.

2 To cherish. 1 Iohn 1.5. Exod. 3.2. Act. 7. 30.

3. ἀπὸ τοῦ αἴθειν ὃ ἐστι καίειν, of burning and consuming, in respect whereof he is called fire; And that in a double respect.

1. In regard of his wrath, and hatred against sinners; In which sense Moses saith Deus ignis consumens est, your God is a consuming fire: To burne the wicked like stubble, and to consume the ungodly unto ashes.

2. In respect of the brightnesse of his Majesty to cherish and comfort the godly; in this sense Saint Iohn saith, God is light, and in him is no darknesse at all: And therefore God appeared to Moses in a flame of fire, to shew that he would cherish and comfort that poore people, which were so much distressed and tormented of the Egyptians; these be the two properties of fire, to cherish, or consume; for nothing is so comfortable as fire, if it be before us; nothing so violent, if it bee upon us; so nothing is more comfortable then God unto the godly, nothing more terrible unto the wicked. Tu terribilis Deus ex tunc ira tua; who is able to abide his wrath.

Zanch. de nat. Dei.

Statius.

And to these three derivations of Θεὸς, Zanchy addeth a fourth: That it may bee derived of Δεὸς, by changing δ. into θ. which signifieth feare, because of all nations he should be feared; And indeed, Primus in orbe Deos fecit timor, feare makes us know, there is a God, when a mans conscience telleth him that every good shall bee rewarded, and every evill must be punished; And so you have the significations of Θεὸς, God: take it how you will, it serveth.

Th's title sheweth

1 How great our God is.

2 How we ought to feare him. Heb. 10 31.

1. To shew us, qualis est Deus, that God is a great and a terrible God, that seeth all things, disposeth all things, and rewardeth all things, according to their just deserts.

2. To teach us, quid sit nostri officij, what our duties are, to feare and tremble to offend this great and terrible God, and to be affraid of his judgements; because it is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

CHAP. IV.

The titles that expresse Gods goodnesse in respect of the Father; God is a Father in two respects. Foure things imposed on man for sin; Christ was made foure things for us; divers kinds of Fathers; the difference betwixt our heavenly Father and all other Fathers.

2 The titles expressing Gods goodnesse. Exod. 3.2.

2. THough God be a burning fire, yet hee consumeth not presently; for though the bramble bush burned, because God was in it, yet it consumed not, because his goodnesse preserved it; even so, though in the first place we see his Majesty, and his title of feare and reverence; yet in the second place place, if you do but looke a little further, you ſhall ſee his lenity, and his titles of love and boldneſſe, not one but many, like a boundleſſe Ocean, that would extoll it ſelfe in goodneſſe above himſelfe; Our Father and our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: Now theſe titles are to be conſidered two waies.

2 The titles expreſſing Gods goodneſſe are to be conſidered two waies.

1. In reſpect of the Father.
2. In reſpect of the Sonne.

In both which reſpects the love and goodneſſe of God is moſt abundantly ſhewed unto us,

1 As he is called our Father; and theſe two words, Our Father, containe the ſum of the Law and the Goſpell.

1. In that he is called our Father.
2. In that he is called our Lord and Saviour.

And of theſe in order.

Our Father.

1. The titles that do expreſſe the goodneſſe of the firſt Perſon are two.
1. Pater, Father.
2. Noſter, Our Father.

The firſt is verbum fidei, a word of faith and boldneſſe.

The ſecond is verbum ſpei & charitatis, a word of hope and charity: and therefore in theſe two words Πατερ ἡμων, Our Father, are contained both,

Baſil. obſerv.

1. Lex operandi, the law of Workes; 2. Lex credendi, the law of Faith. } that is, both the Law and the Goſpell; For

1. To love God with all our heart, with all our ſoule, and with all our ſtrength, and our neighbour as our ſelves, is the ſumme of the Law and the Prophets, ſaith our Saviour; but the name of Father, ut explicat, ita & excitat charitatem, as it ſheweth the love of God to man, ſo it ſtirreth up and kindleth the love of man towards God; and the word Noſter, Our Father, ſheweth the fraternity and brother-hood of us all, as being the children of the ſame Father; and therefore that we ſhould love one another, even as brethren ought to doe; ſo here is our love to God and our neighbour.

1 The ſum of the Law. Mat. 22. 40.

Elienſis in orat. dominic.

2. The ſumme of the Goſpell is faith, working by charity; but Father is a word of faith, a word of boldneſſe, and Our is a word of community, a word of charity: And therefore, as the whole world is deſcribed in a little mappe, ſaith Syneſius; ſo in theſe two little words, are moſt closely included the ſumme of the Law and the Goſpell: And therefore I will handle them more particularly; And firſt of the word Father, then of Our Father.

2 The ſum of the Goſpell.

1 Of the word Father. And God is a Father in two reſpects,

1. God is ſaid to be a Father in two reſpects.
1. Reſpectu filij, in reſpect of his Sonne Chriſt Ieſus.
2. Reſpectu creaturarum, in reſpect of all his creatures.

1. In reſpect of his Son Chriſt Ieſus, he is alwaies a Father from all eternities; Quia & ille ſemper Pater, & ille ſemper filius; ac proinde Pater nunquam non Pater, & filius nunquam non filius, he is alwaies a Father, and the Son is alwaies a Son and therfore the Father was never no Father, and the Son was never no Son; Sed ſicut ſemper Deus, ita ſemper Pater, habens ſemper filium, quem ſemel genuit ex ſua aqualem ſibi natura; but as he was ever a God, ſo he was ever a Father, having ever a Son, which he once begat of his own nature, co-equall unto himſelfe, ſaith Saint Auguſtine.

1 In reſpect of Chriſt Aug. to. 10. ſer. 33. in apend. de diverſis.

God a Father from all eternity.

2. In reſpect of his creatures, he is ſaid to be a Father.
1. Generally of all his creatures.
2. Particularly of man, the chiefeſt of his creatures. } For

2 In reſpect of his creatures. 1 Generally. God is ſaid to be the Father of all his creatures. Iob 38. 28.

1. Seeing all creatures have their being from him, he may be well called the Father of them all, quia Pater dat eſſe rei; And therfore Iob calleth him Pater pluviæ, the Father of the raine, And S. Iames calleth him, Pater luminum, the Father of the lights: And ſo in reſpect of creation, he is the Father of all things.

Iames 1. 17.

a Particularly of men, two waies.

2. He is the Father of men after a more speciall manner, then he is of all other creatures whatsoever, and that two waies.

{1. In respect of their generation. 2. In respect of their regeneration.} For

1 In respect of generation. Gen.1.3. Psal.33.9. God is more properly the Father of men, then of other creatures. Gen.2.7.

1. Whereas of all other things he did but say, fiat lux, let there be light, and producat terra, let the earth bud forth, and of all other things, hee spake the word, and they were made, he commanded, and they stood fast; yet when man was to be created, he said, Let us make man (as consulting with his wisdome) in our owne image and likenesse, (as more properly to be our Sonne, then any other creature) and so he breathed into the nostrils of man the breath of life, and man became a living soule: And therefore by the very Heathens there is ascribed to the soule of man both maxima vis & maximus honos, the greatest power and the greatest honour; and the Prince of Philosophers telleth us, it is θυραθεν και ἐξωθεν, an infusion celestiall, and no naturall traduction; and therefore it doth alwaies seeke to mount up super altitudines terræ, above all earthly things, & hærere origini suæ, and to bee alwaies contemplating of her chiefest blisse, and to enjoy the fruition of the chiefest good.

The soule a celestiall thing.

How negligent we are for our soules.

This very point, if there were no more, should move all men to be more carefull of this heavenly soule then of their earthly bodies: And yet we see all our care is to pamper the body, and come what will come of the soule: And therefore a merrie fellow, meeting with a friend, that protested he loved him as deerely as his owne soule, answered; I would thou lovest mee as well as thou lovest thy body; For I see thou art fat and well liking, thou feedest thy body daintily, and clothest it gorgeously, but how thou lovest thy soule I know not.

That most men doe care for their bodies more then for their soules.

And so we doe all; we care not what expence we bestow upon our rotten bodies, but we thinke all too much that we do, to adorne and beautifie this divine soule; We are like that fellow, that was wonderfull fat himselfe, and rode upon a leane horse, and being demanded why he himselfe was so fat, and his horse so leane; he answered, hee fed himselfe with his owne hands, but he committed the care of his horse to his man Dicke: So doe we feed our bodies our selves, but we commit the care of our soules to others, let them looke to our soules, or let them perish.

Demosthen. apud Volat.

But indeed, the excellencie of this soule should make us all more diligent for the soule; for this is it, that maketh man more excellent then all other creatures, And more properly the Sonne of God then all other sonnes of God: And therefore the Heathen man could say, Qui animum curat seipsum curat, qui corpus, non se sed sua curat, qui pecuniam, non se nec sua, sed valde aliena curat, that is, in plaine english, hee that careth for his soule careth for himselfe, he that careth for his body, careth indeed for his owne, but not for himselfe, and he that careth for his money and the things of this world, careth neither for himselfe nor for his owne, but for such things, as are with him to day, to morrow with another, and the next day he knowes not with whom, nor whose they be.

a God is our Father in respect of regeneration.

2. God is said to be the Father of man, not onely in regard of generation, because he thus created him in his owne similitude and likenesse, but also in respect of regeneration, because he redeemed and delivered us from our father the divell, and restored us againe to the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God; For when man had sinned, and so from the Sonne of God had made himselfe the sonne of Satan, there were foure things (saith venerable Bede) imposed upon man for his transgression.

Foure things imposed on man for sin. Venerab. Beda.

{1. Ignorance. 2. Impotencie. 3. Concupiscence. 4. Malice.} foure grievous and most deadly wounds.

1. Sin

1. Sinne hath filled us with blindneſſe, as the Apoſtle ſheweth, that it is naturall for every man to be τῇ διανοίᾳ, ſo darkened in their underſtandings, that they neither know God nor yet themſelves. 1 Ignorance. Epheſ.4.18. Tit.3.3.

2. Sin hath made us ſo fraile and ſo miſerable, as that we have no ability in the world, either to do, or ſay, or wiſh, or thinke any thing that is good, as I have ſufficiently ſhewed unto you already. 2 Impatiencie.

3. Sinne maketh us to long and luſt with all greedineſſe for that which is evill; for as the Poet ſaith, 3 Concupiſcence.

Nitimur in vetitum ſemper cupimuſque negata;

Stolne waters are ſweet unto us, ſaith Salomon; And our nature is ſuch, as that we doe not onely id quod vetitur, the thing that is forbidden, but we doe it, quia vetitur, becauſe it is forbidden; ſo farre doth our concupiſcence leade us. Pro.9.17.

4. Sinne maketh us ſo malicious to all goodneſſe, that although our judgement ſhould tell us, that ſuch a thing is good; yet are we ſo averſe to goodneſſe, that we will forſake it to follow evill, as the Poet in Medea ſpeaketh, 4 Malice.

Video proboque meliora, deteriora ſequor: Seneca in Medea.

I ſee what is good and I allow it, yet nature makes me follow that which is evill: And ſo theſe things made man now like unto Satan, that was made before in the likeneſſe of God: Therefore God reſpecting and pittying our moſt lamentable and miſerable eſtate, he ſent his onely Sonne Chriſt Ieſus to be made unto us,

How Chriſt was made unto us a fourefold ſalve to cure our fourefold maladies.

1. Wiſedome.
2. Juſtification.
3. Sanctification.
4. Redemption.

} As the Apoſtle ſheweth, 1 *Cor.*1.30.

Foure ſoveraigne ſalves for our foure dangerous maladies.

1. He was made unto us wiſedome; For that all our knowledge, without the knowledge of Chriſt, is but prudentia carnis, fooliſhneſſe unto God; but in Chriſt are hid all the treaſures of wiſedome and knowledge, *Coloſſ.*2.3. 1 Wiſdome.

2. He was made unto us righteouſneſſe; for that all our righteouſneſſe, in reſpect of nature, is but pollutio panni, like the righteouſneſſe of the Gentiles, ſtaines and filthineſſe, and in reſpect of the law, but ſcoria abducta, like the righteouſneſſe of the Phariſees, ſinne guilded, unprofitable, becauſe unpoſſible to be performed; but my righteous ſervant ſhall juſtifie many, ſaith the Lord, and therefore beleeve in him which juſtifieth the ungodly. 2 Righteouſneſſe. Eſay 53.11. Rom 4.5.

3. He was made our Sanctification; For that in all men there is defection, and in the Angels unfaithfullneſſe hath beene found; and how can we be cleane that were borne in ſin, and conceived in iniquity? but in Chriſt there was no ſin, and in his mouth was found no guile. 3 Sanctification. Iob 4.18. Pſal 51.5. 1 Pet.2.22.

4. He was made unto us Redemption; for that all the former things had beene unavailable for us, niſi etiam ſanguis interpellat pro me, ut ſaluus ſim; unleſſe his bloud doth intercede for me, that I may be ſaved, ſaith Saint Bernard; and therefore Chriſt gave himſelfe to be the price of our redemption (ſo the word ἀπολύτρωσις ſignifies) to ſuffer for us, to ſhed his bloud for us, and to die for us, and for our ſins, to ſave us from hell; and to riſe againe for our juſtification, to bring us unto heaven; in illa inſtituit, in iſta reſtituit, ſaith Saint Bernard; by the former paravit nos manſioni, he made us fit for heaven, and by the latter paravit manſionem nobis he prepared heaven for us; by the firſt we have remiſſion of our ſins, and by the ſecond we have hope of everlaſting life. 4 Redemption. How we are ſaved.

Ob. But if any man will ſay, the righteouſneſſe is Chriſts, and the ſufferings were Chriſts, and what is that to me?

Sol. I anſwer, that the fault was Adams fault, and is that nothing to thee? And therefore, ut peccatum in ſemine, ita juſtitia in ſanguine, as ſinne is juſtly

That Christ did all that he did on earth for me.

mine by propagation, so it is not incongruous that righteousnesse should be mine by imputation; for Christ (saith Saint Ambrose) mihi natus, mihi passus, mihi doluit; quia sibi non habuit quod doleret, did all, whatsoever he did, for me; for that there was no cause why he should doe any thing for himselfe.

Rom.4 25.

And therefore, seeing Christ died for our sinnes, and rose againe for our justification, and now sitteth at the right hand of God to make intercession for us, though our bodies be but semen terræ & esca vermium, dust and ashes, and the foode of vermins, yet our hope is that they shall be changed, and be made like unto the glorious body of Christ.

Phil.3.21.

1 Iohn.3.9. Iohn 3.5. Rom.8.16.

And thus are we made againe the Sonnes of God, by regeneration; because we are borne of God, that is, of water and of the spirit, which Spirit beareth witnesse unto our spirits, that we are the sonnes of God, and have our sinnes pardoned, our diseases cured, and the image of God renewed in us, through Iesus Christ our Lord.

And in this respect is God most properly called our Father, and we his children.

The difference betwixt our heavenly Father and all other Fathers.

Hereby then we may see the difference betweene this Father and all other Fathers of men; whether it be

1. In the state of nature; or
2. In the state of grace.

For in both respects men are said to have divers sorts of Fathers: and

1 In respect of our naturall being; foure kindes of Fathers.

1. In respect of our naturall being, I find foure kinds of Fathers: as

1 God.

1. God, which maketh us and breatheth in our nostrills the breath of life.

2 The earth. Iob 17.14.

2. The Earth, that is, the element or matter whereof we are made; For, I said to rottennesse, thou art my Father, and to the wormes, you are my mother and my sisters, saith Iob; and so the earth is called the mother of us all.

3 Men; and that in five respects. Aug de 12. abus. grad.

3 Men are called our Fathers, and that (as Saint Augustine observeth) five waies.

1 By nature. Heb.12.9.

1. By Nature, as they which beget us of their owne seed, and are the instruments of our being; and therefore are called, Patres σαρκος. the Fathers of our flesh.

2 By nation. Exod.3.6.

2. By Nation, as those that are our ancestors and predecessors of the same countrey and people; so God said unto Moses, I am the God of thy Fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaak, and the God of Iaakob.

3 By age.

3. By Age, as those that are our elders, we use to call them Fathers.

4 By admonition. Aug in Psal. 49. f. 188.

4. By Admonition, whether it be to good or evill; For Saint Augustine tels us, that antiqui iniqui patres sunt præsentium; & qui modo sunt iniqui, patres sunt iniquorum posterorum; those wicked men, that went before us, are the Fathers of those wicked men that are now; and the wicked men, that are now, are the Fathers of them that shall be wicked hereafter; and so (saith he) antiqui justi, patres sunt justorum, qui modo sunt; & qui modo sunt justi, patres sunt eorum qui futuri erunt; the just men, that went before us, are the Fathers of those just men, that are now; and those just men, that are now, are the Fathers of those just men, that shall come hereafter.

Whose counsell or example wee follow, we make our selves their children.

And so you see, that by following the counsell or example of wicked men, we become the children of those wicked men, and by following the counsels and examples of good men, we become the children of those good and godly men; and therefore they that doe the workes of Abraham, are said to be the sonnes of Abraham; and so it was taken among the heathens: and therefore Mitio saith in Terence, Natura tu illi Pater es, consilijs ego, thou art his Father by nature, and I am his Father by advice and counsell; for, whosoever causeth us to follow his counsels or examples, whether in good or evill, we make him our Father, and our selves his children by imitation, Nam ille recte Pater tuus quem tu facris imitatus; For he may rightly be tearmed thy Father, whom thou doest imitate, saith Saint Augustine.

Iohn 8.39. Gal.3.7,9.

Aug ser 14. de verbis Apostoli.

5. By

5. By aid and aſſiſtance, as when a man doth helpe and further us in our wants and neceſſities, we may truly ſay he hath beene a Father unto us.

3 By aſſiſtance.

4. We finde that not onely men, but alſo the Divels are ſaid to be the Fathers of all wicked men; for you are of your Father the divell, ſaith our Saviour unto the rebellious Iewes; but you muſt underſtand this in reſpect of imitation, and not of their creation, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; Quia conſtat in Catholica fide, quod Diabolus nec condidit, nec creavit naturam; for it is certaine (ſaith he) and by our Catholike faith we beleeve, that the divell never made any nature or being; all his drift and deſire was to corrupt every being, but becauſe we doe the workes of the divell, therefore our Saviour ſaith, wee are the children of our Father the divell.

4 The divell.

We are the children of the divell by imitation, Idem ibid.

Iohn 8.44.

And ſo it appeares, that before we have the grace of Chriſt, to doe the will of God, we are all the children of the divell; and ſo the Apoſtle ſheweth that by nature we are all filij iræ, the ſonnes of wrath: this was the miſerable eſtate of us all before Chriſt; and it is ſtill the ſtate and condition of all the wicked men, that are voide of the grace of Chriſt, to be the ſonnes of their Father the divell: And thus you ſee, that God is our Father, Men are our Fathers, and the Divell is our Father alſo: But herein is the difference,

Ephes.2.3.

The difference betwixt the foreſaid Fathers.

The divell makes us his children by imitation, our naturall Fathers by propagation, as being the inſtruments of our making only; and therefore are called the Fathers of our fleſh, that is, of our corrupted and our naturall being; but God is the chiefe agent, and principall maker, not onely of the ſoule, but alſo of our bodies; For he faſhioneth the ſame beneath in the wombe, ſaith the Pſalmiſt: and therefore in reſpect of our naturall being, God is the only chiefe and principall Father both of body and ſoule.

Pſal.139.13.14.

2. In reſpect of our ſpirituall being, I finde divers ſorts of Fathers: As

2 In reſpect of our ſpirituall being, we have divers ſorts of Fathers.

1. And principally God himſelfe; for of his owne will begat hee us with the Word of truth; and therefore, as he alone is the chiefe and principall Father of our generation; ſo he is alone the chiefe and principall Father of our regeneration.

1 God.

Iames 1.18.

2. The Miniſters of the Goſpell are likewiſe called our Fathers; ſo Saint Paul ſheweth, I warne you as my deare children, nam ego vos genui, for I have begotten you with the ſeede of the Word of God; For as the naturall Fathers are the inſtruments of our firſt birth, ſo are the Miniſters the inſtruments that God uſeth for our ſecond birth.

2 The Miniſters.

Aug in Pſal.98. f.351.a.1.

1 Cor.14.14.15.

3. Kings and Queenes are called our Nurcing Fathers and our nurſing Mothers; becauſe they be cuſtodes utriuſque tabulæ, the preſervers both of Law and Goſpell, and they doe by their power and authority, defend and cheriſh all thoſe children, that the Miniſters, by the preaching of the Goſpell, have begotten and brought forth into the Church of God.

3 Kings and Queenes.

And thus you ſee, that in reſpect of ſpirituall being, God is our Father, the Miniſters are our Fathers, and the Magiſtrates are our Fathers alſo.

The difference betwixt our heavenly Father and all theſe other Fathers.

But herein is the difference; theſe are but the inſtruments of our regeneration, or of our preſervation, and God himſelfe is the chiefe and efficient cauſe of both.

And ſo both in reſpect of our naturall being, and in reſpect of our ſpirituall being, all others, that are called Fathers, are but Fathers, κατὰ τὶ, in ſome reſpects, as inſtruments onely, and not as the efficient cauſe of any being; but God in both reſpects is our Father, ἁπλῶς ſimply and abſolutely; becauſe he is the efficient and principall cauſe, both of our firſt and ſecond birth.

God onely is our Father in all reſpects.

And therefore in regard of this our Saviour ſaith, call no man Father upon earth, unus enim Pater veſter Deus; For one is your Father even God; that is, principally and properly, in all reſpects, you can finde none that can be ſaid to be your Father upon earth, either in reſpect of generation, or regeneration; and therefore you ſhould not aſcribe that unto them, which is proper unto God;

Mat.23.9.

For this is not ſpoken to ſhew, that in no reſpect, they be our fathers, which have begotten us, either in our firſt or ſecond birth; but to ſhew, that properly or principally in all reſpects, they are not our fathers of either being.

Titles of honour not to be taken away from men.

And ſo S. Auguſtine ſaith, that our Saviour ſpake not this, Ut hoc vocabulum honoris humani de loquendi conſuetudine tolleretur, ſed ne gratia Dei, qua in hanc vitam generamur, & in æternam vitam regeneramur, naturæ, vel poteſtati, vel ſanctitati cujuſquam hominis tribueretur; that this word of humane honour ſhould be taken away from uſe, but that this grace and goodneſſe of God, whereby we are brought into this life, and begotten againe unto eternall life, ſhould not be aſcribed to nature, or to any power or ſanctity of any man whatſoever, but only unto God, to whom it properly belongeth.

And thus you ſee how God is our Father, and what is the difference betwixt this our heavenly Father, and all other fathers whatſoever.

CHAP. V.

The greatneſſe and the immutability of Gods love: the prerogative of Chriſtians above all creatures; that God, being our Father, teacheth us to hope for a fourefold fruit; and to performe a fourefold duty; and the fraternity of the Saints, what it teacheth us.

What the former doctrine teacheth in two reſpects.

AND this may ſerve to teach us many excellent leſſons, and that two wayes.

1. In reſpect of God.
2. In reſpect of our ſelves.

1 In reſpect of God, it teacheth two things.

1. In reſpect of God, it ſheweth theſe two eſpeciall things:

1. The greatneſſe of Gods love.
2. The immutability of his love.

1 The greatneſſe of Gods love.

1. The greatneſſe of Gods love is hereby ſufficiently ſhewed, in that he expreſſeth the ſame by no leſſe title of love, than the name of a father: Quia nomen patris pleniſſimum eſt amoris, for the name of a father is a word full of love. And ſo S. John ſheweth, Behold what love the Father hath ſhewed on us, that we ſhould be called the ſonnes of God. And therefore it is apparent, Quanta Domini indulgentia, quanta circa nos dignationis ejus & bonitatis ubertas, qui ſic nos docuit ſcire eum Patrem eſſe noſtrum, & nos eſſe filios ejus; what indulgency and plenty of goodneſſe and reſpect the Lord ſheweth unto us, in that he hath taught us to know him to be our Father, and our ſelves his children, ſaith S. Cyprian.

1 Ioh. 3. 1.

Cyprian in lib de Orat. dominica.

2 The immutability of Gods love.

2. The immutability of Gods love is likewiſe ſhewed in the name of father, Nam pater, etiamſi offenſus, eſt tamen pater, & filius, etiamſi nequam, eſt tamen filius; for a father, though he be offended, is ſtill a father, and a ſonne, though he be wicked, is ſtill a ſonne: A maſter indeed can ceaſe to be a maſter, but a father can never ceaſe to be a father; and therefore in the very depth of ſinne, we may be bold to cry to God for pardon, Nam etſi peccator amiſit ingenuitatem filij, creator tamen non amiſit pietatem patris; for though the ſinner may loſe the duty of a ſonne, yet the Creatour cannot loſe the love and piety of a father; and therefore he is alwaies gracious and ready to receive us, if we had any grace, to turne and ſeek unto him.

2 What the former doctrine teacheth in reſpect of our ſelves two wayes.

2. In reſpect of our ſelves, this doctrine, that God is our Father, may teach us many excellent leſſons.

1. By way of compariſon of our ſelves with others.
2. By way of collection of certaine profitable inſtructions both for our ſelves and others.

1 By way of compariſon, it ſheweth the prerogative of Chriſtians above all creatures, yea above the Angels.

1. It ſheweth the excellency of men above all other creatures in the world; for men alone are created in Gods image, and ſo his ſonnes alone, of the ſame image, image, and likeneſſe, and Chriſtians alone are his ſonnes by adoption and grace: and therefore herein the Chriſtians have a preheminence above the Angels; for to which of the Angels ſaid he at any time, thou art my ſonne, and I am thy father, in a double ſenſe, that is, both by creation and regeneration?

The prerogatives of Chriſtians above the Patriarchs and Prophets.

And in this we, that are after Chriſts manifeſtation in the fleſh under the Goſpell, have a prerogative above the Patriarchs, that were before the Law, and the Prophets themſelves, that were under the Law; for before the Law was given, Abraham ſaith unto God, Shall I ſpeake unto the Lord, that am but duſt and aſhes? And in the Law God ſaith, I am the Lord thy God; but now he ſaith, I am your father, and you are my children.

Gen. 18 27.

Exod 20.

And therefore Tertullian, S. Cyprian, S. Athanaſius, S. Auguſtine, and others, upon thoſe words of our Saviour Chriſt, I have declared thy name unto my brethren, do underſtand it of the name Father; becauſe (ſay they) the name of father was not knowne unto the Iewes, Quia veteris Teſtamenti ſtatus erat ſervorum, for that the ſtate of them, which were under the Law, was the ſtate of ſervants, and the believers onely under the Goſpell, are in the ſtate of children.

Athan. Lib. 3. de ſide Chriſti. Aug. tract. 10 5. in Johan fol. 209. b. 2.

Or if it was knowne unto them, for I find that the Prophets called God their Father, as you may ſee in Eſa. 63. 16. Mal. 1. 6. yet I am ſure it was not, and could not be ſo fully knowne, or ſo confidently uſed by them, as it is by us; for, conſidering the Majeſty of God, before whom the hils do tremble, and the Angels of heaven cover their faces, and ſeeing our owne baſeneſſe, being but duſt and aſhes, full of uncleanneſſe, the ſlaves of ſin, and the children of the divell; who durſt * (ſaith S. Cyprian) call God by the name of Father, if Chriſt himſelfe, our Advocate, had not firſt put theſe words in our mouthes, and taught us to ſay, Our Father, which art in heaven? But now, ſeeing he, which beſt knoweth his Fathers love and affection towards us, hath declared God unto us by the name of Father, we do moſt humbly deſire him, agnoſcere ſtilum Advocati noſtri filij ſui, to take notice of that ſtile, which our Saviour and his ſonne hath taught unto us.

Eſa 63.

* That is, with confidence Cyprian in Orat. Dom.

2. From this doctrine, that God is our Father, we may collect,

2 By way of inſtruction, the former doctrine teacheth two things.

1. Quid ſperandum, what we may hope for, from him.
2. Quid preſtandum, what is our duty to performe unto him.

1. From his fatherly love and affection, wee may hope for a foureſold fruit:

1 What we ſhould hope for, that is, a foureſold fruit.

Viz. 1. Of Inſtruction. 2. Of Correction. 3. Of Indulgence. 4. Of Providence.

1. Inſtruction; for parents are bound to inſtruct their children, Eph. 6. 4. And therefore Abraham did teach his ſonnes to feare the Lord, and ſo did Ioſhua, David, and all other good fathers teach and inſtruct their children, to do that which was juſt and honeſt; and the very Heathens did account thoſe parents worthy of juſt reproofe, that were careleſſe in the good education and inſtruction of their children.

1 Inſtruction; for Fathers are bound to inſtruct their children.

Plut in Lacon. Apoth.

And therefore God, being our Father, hath ſuch a care to teach his children, that he ſent wiſe men and Prophets, and came himſelfe, and ſends us his Miniſters in his owne name, and with his owne Booke, to teach all nations, both what they ſhould do, and what they ſhould believe: And no doubt but every wiſe child will receive inſtruction, as Salomon ſpeaketh, and eſpecially when they have ſo good a teacher.

Mat 28. 19.

2. Correction; for a father muſt not be too indulgent unto his children, but he muſt be ſure to give them due correction; for If thou bring up thy ſonne deliciouſly, he ſhall make thee afraid, if thou play with him, he ſhall bring thee to heavineſſe, ſaith the Sonne of Syrach: and therefore Salomon ſaith, Withdraw not correction from thy child; if thou ſmite him with the rod, he ſhall not die.

2 Correction; for Parents are bound to correct their children. Eccleſiaſtic. 30. 8. Pro. 23. 13.

And therefore, God correcteth and chaſteneth every child that he receiveth, ſo that whoſoever is exempted a paſſione flagellorum, exceptus eſt a numero filiorum, from his part of affliction, he is excepted from the number of Gods children; he

Heb. 12 7. Auguſt.

is

Heb.12.8.

is a baſtard and no ſonne, ſaith the Apoſtle: And therefore this ſhould make us all to rejoyce in tribulations, becauſe they are infallible arguments to prove us to be the ſonnes of God.

3 Indulgence; for fathers are very indulgent to their children.

3. Though a father is bound to correct his child, yet he is ſo affected to his ſonne, that pro magno peccato paululum ſupplicium patri ſatis eſt; for a great offence a ſmall puniſhment will be ſufficient for a father to impoſe upon his ſonne, ſaith the Comedian.

2 Sam.18.5 & v.12 & v.33.

And therefore, though Abſolon ſought to deprive his father of his kingdome, yet David was moſt ready to forgive him, if he had ſought for any pardon; and though the prodigall child had caſt off his father, and waſtfully ſpent all his patrimony, yet when he returned, he was joyfully received, and moſt kindly entertained of his loving father; even ſo if we turne unto our heavenly Father, he will be willing to forgive us, and moſt ready to receive us, becauſe he is our Father, and in that reſpect the Father of mercies as the Apoſtle calleth him.

Luke 15.20. & 22.

2 Cor.1.3.

And therefore this facilitas ad veniam, tender-hearted affection, and fatherly love of God towards us, ſhould teach us, virtutem redeundi, at length to ſay with the prodigall ſonne, I will returne and go to my father; for if the love and affection of naturall fathers be ſo great unto their children, as I ſhewed in the fore-ſaid examples, then ſurely the love and compaſſion of our heavenly Father is a great deale more; for though the mother ſhould forget the child of her wombe, yet will not I forget you, ſaith the Lord.

Luke 15.18.

4 Providence; for fathers are bound to provide for their children.

4. A father careth for his ſonnes, and layeth up for his children, ſaith the Apoſtle: and ſo God careth for us; for your heavenly father knoweth you have need of theſe things, ſaith our Saviour: And therefore according to our need, he is willing to ſupply our wants; for if you that are evill can give your children good things, how much more ſhall our heavenly Father give all thoſe things that are neceſſary, to them that want them? Neither is he only carefull for us our ſelves, but alſo for our children; and therefore he is called Pater orphanorum, the Father of the orphans, of the poore, the fatherleſſe and widowes: ſo he is the Father of our ſelves, and of our ſeed after us. Neither is he only carefull to provide for us the things of this life, but he provideth for us the goods of eternall life, not lands, and riches, and ſuch like corruptible things, but an inheritance immortall, and an heavenly kingdome that ſhall never have ending.

2 Cor.12.14. Mat.6.32. Luke 11.13.

Diſtruſtfull care, what it doth. 1 Pet.1.4.

And therefore I would to God, we would leave and caſt of all diſtruſtfull care from us, and, as the Apoſtle wiſheth us, to caſt our care upon God, that careth for all:

——curis tabeſcimus omnes;

For this muſing care, and carking after the things of this life, deprives us of all true comfort, it diſtracts our minds, it wearies our bodies, and it makes us unfit and unable to do any true ſervice unto God: and yet all to no end; for when we have done what we can, we are at our lives end, like the mill-wheele at the yeares end, after all her tumbling and turning, at the ſame place where ſhe was at the beginning; for naked we came into the world, and naked we ſhall returne againe; and then, as Diogenes ſaid unto Cræſus,

That we are like a mill-wheele, ſtill in the ſame place.

Iob 1.21.

Auſon.Epig.55.

——quid tibi divitiæ
Nunc proſunt, regum rex ô ditiſſime, cum ſis
Sicut ego ſolus?——

What good will all the wealth in the world do unto us? and therfore ſeeing God our Father careth for us, let us caſt all our care upon him.

2 What duties we owe to our heavenly Father, which are foure.

2. As this doctrine teacheth us what to hope for, at the hands of God, ſo it teacheth us what we owe to God; for as he dignified us with the name of ſons, ſo he requireth of us the duties of ſonnes:

And eſpecially theſe foure, { 1. Feare. 2. Love. 3. Obedience. 4. Imitation. } For

1. If

1. If you call him Father, then passe the time of your life here in feare; and becauſe we are ſonnes, it muſt be a filiall feare.

1 Feare. 1 Pet. 1. 13.

2. As the name of a Father doth expreſſe his love to us, ſo it ſhould excite our love towards him againe; for Quid charius filijs debet eſſe quam pater? What thing in the world ſhould be ſo deare unto the children as their father? And therefore if I be a Father, where is my honour, ſaith the Lord? whereof the chiefeſt part is love.

2 Love. How dearely children ſhould love their father. Aug. l. 2 c. 8 de ſermone Domini. Mal. 1. 6.

Deſſum fertur portare ciconia patrem,
Hinc illa pietas ſancta notatur ave.

Ælian. l. 10. c. 16.

It is reported of the Storke, that he loves his ſire ſo well, that when he growes old and feeble, the yong one will carry it upon his back: And if the bruit beaſts do ſhew ſuch love unto their ſires, oh what love ſhould we ſhew unto our heavenly Father?

3. Children are bound to honour and to obey their father; for a wiſe ſonne maketh a glad father, ſaith the Wiſe-man: But a ſonne can never glad his father better, than by doing his will, and by obeying his voice: and therefore our Saviour ſaith, Whoſoever doth the will of his Father, the ſame was his brother, his ſiſter, and his mother; and whoſoever did the will of the divell, the ſame was the child of the divell.

3 Obedience; for to obey God is the chiefeſt honour we can ſhew to God. Mar. 3. ult.

4. Children are prone to be imitators of their fathers, though many times they do erre with their fathers; but in imitating our heavenly Father, we ſhall be free from the feare of errors: and therfore we are injoyned to imitate him, and to ſquare all our actions according to the actions of this our Father: To be holy as he is holy, to be mercifull as he is mercifull, and to be, as he is, meeke and lowly in heart. For when we are taught, that God is our father, Quid aliud niſi per vitam innocentem nos cœleſti Patri ſimiles fieri docemur? What are we taught, but through an holy and an innocent life to ſhew our ſelves like unto our heavenly Father, ſaith Gregory Nyſſen?

4 Imitation. That we ſhould imitate our heavenly Father. 1 Pet. 1. 16. Mat. 11. 29.

Nyſſen. de orat. Dom.

And ſo much for the firſt word that ſheweth the goodneſſe of God, Pater.

The ſecond word that expreſſeth his goodneſſe is noſter, our Father; and this doth alſo ſhew the brother-hood of men, as Father ſhewed the Fatherhood of God: And in ſumme,

1. It excludeth all the wicked from all right in this heavenly Father.
2. It includeth all the godly within the paternity of this Father.

2 Of the word, our, that it ſheweth two things.

1. In that he is ſaid to be our Father, here is an appropriation of him unto the godly, and an excluſion of all wicked men from his paternity; for though they be his ſonnes by creation, yet becauſe they do the deſires of their father the divell, they cannot be his children by grace; and ſo S. Cyprian ſaith, Quod peccator non poteſt eſſe filius Dei, ſed quibus remiſſio peccatorum datur, ijs filiorum nomen adſcribitur; That a ſinner cannot be the ſonne of God, but only thoſe whoſe unrighteouſneſſes are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered: And this ſheweth us the miſerable eſtate of wicked men, exempted from grace, excluded from God, and ſeparated from the ſociety of the Saints of God.

1 That wicked ſinners are not the children of God. S. Cyprian in orat. The miſerable ſtate of the wicked.

And therefore the Saints ſhould have nothing to do with wicked men, but ſhould with-draw themſelves from them that walke inordinately, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; Yet becauſe the Saints muſt live alwaies among the wicked, as I ſhewed at large before, and therefore cannot quite abandon the company of them that are evill, unleſſe we get out of the world, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; we muſt remember the counſell of S. Ambroſe, Malorum conſortia fugere debemus, quoad privatam conſuetudinem, non quoad publicam converſationem; we ought to ſhun the ſociety of ſinners in our private friendſhips and communications, but not in our outward acquaintance and converſations.

That the Saints ſhould avoid the ſociety of the wicked. 2 Theſſ. 3. 6. 1 Cor. 5. 10. Amb. de Off. l. 1. c. 20.

2. This word our Father doth include all the godly within his fatherhood, and ſheweth them all to be his ſonnes, not only by nature, but alſo by grace; and therefore all the godly are brethren, becauſe they are all the children of the ſame Father. And this teacheth us,

2 That all the godly are the ſons of God: and that teacheth us

1. To

1 How dearly the Saints should love one another.

1. To love one another with all possible love that can be; for that we be brethren, and the children of the same Father, and that (as I shewed) in a double respect, { 1. Respectu sanguinis. 2. Respectu spiritus. } In respect of nature, and in respect of grace;

Aug tom.10. in Append.de diversis ser.10 f.647.

Et major est fraternitas spiritus quam sanguinis; and grace should tie us a great deale more to love one another than nature, saith S. Augustine; Quia natura similitudinem corporis refert, gratia cordis unanimitatem demonstrat, because nature sheweth only the similitude of the body, but grace uniteth the hearts.

Val.Max l.5.

Aug de Civ Dei. l.2 c.25.

Brothers, how dearly they loved each other.

Idem l.8.c.5.

And yet in former times, the love of naturall brethren was such and so great, that, when a souldier in the army of Pompey had unaware unto himselfe slaine his brother, that was in the host of Sertorius, and knew the same, when he bestript his body, Seipsum ibi perimens fraterno corpori adjunxit, he slew himselfe for very griefe, and left his body upon his brothers carkasse; and the sonnes of Tyndarus, when Castor was slaine by Idas, Pollux besought Jupiter, that he might impart half his own life unto his brother;

Sic fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit.

1 Iohn 3.16.

And so we read of many others: and therefore how much more ready should we be, that are brethren both by nature and by grace, to lay downe our lives for our brethren, as the Apostle speaketh.

2 That we are bound to love the Saints better than sinners.

2. To love the godly better than the wicked; for though they be not to be despised, because they are the works of God, and our brethren by creation, yet are we not to love them so well as those, that are our brethren by adoption and grace; and therefore though the Apostle willeth us, to do good unto all men, yet he wisheth us more especially to do it to the household of faith.

Gal.6.10.

3 That we should not despise one another.

3. To expell our pride; for all the elect of what estate or condition soever they be, are the children of the same Father; and therefore though thou callest God thy Father, yet do not appropriate any thing to thy selfe more than to the rest of thy brethren; for he is Father to none in a speciall manner singularly, but only to Christ; to all the elect alike; for though we have diverse fathers in earth, some noble, and some ignoble, yet we have but one Father in heaven, and he is the Father of the poore as well as of the rich: and therefore seeing we have all one Father, and we all are brethren, we ought to honour, and not to despise one another; Cur enim non pudeat aspernari fratrem, quem Deus non aspernatur filium? For why should we be ashamed to take him for our brother, whom God vouchsafeth to take for his sonne? Remember therefore communem sanctorum & parem esse omnium nostrum conditionem, quoad Deum; that the state and condition of all the Saints are all alike, in respect of God.

Ambl.5.c.4. de Sacr.

Aug.Serm.135.

Brethren proveth not that all men are equall.

And yet I would not have any man from hence to conclude a parity among men; for as every flower cannot be a lilly, and every starre cannot be Phœbus; so every Christian cannot be a Prince or a Priest, and every brother cannot be primogenitus, the first-borne; and therefore the fraternity of Christians teacheth charity, and not equality among them; it teacheth the rich not to despise the poore, but not the poore to equalize themselves with the rich.

4. To exclude malice.

4. To exclude all malice, and to increase our love one towards another, ut singuli pro omnibus, & omnes pro singulis optarent salutem, that every one might pray and wish for the good of all, and all for the good of every one.

And thus much for the titles that do expresse the goodnesse of the Father.

2 The titles that do expresse the goodnesse of God are to be considered, as he is called, our Lord Iesus Christ.

De 2. The titles that do expresse the goodnesse of the Sonne, are these three, 1. Lord, 2. Iesus, 3. Christ: three words that would require three Sermons: but I must be briefe.

CHAP.

Our Lord.

CHAP. VI.

Of this title Lord; how Christ is our Lord, in a threefold right; that he is an absolute Lord, in respect of his power and all the properties of a Lord; of this title or name Iesus; how Christ saveth us; the vaine devices of the Romanists to satisfie for sins; and their fond distinction of a double justification confuted.

The first title expressing the goodnesse of God our Redeemer.

1. FOr the word Κυριός, Lord, it was thought to be a name of that super-excellent soveraignty and veneration that Augustus utterly refused it, & ut maledictum atq; opprobrium semper exhorruit, & ne a liberis quidem aut nepotibus suis vel serio vel joco passus est; and Tacitus saith, Tiberius likewise would not endure this title; and Statius speaking of Domitian saith,

Suet. in vita Augusti. Emperors refusing to be called Lords. Tacit. annal. l. 2.

Statius Sylvar. 1. in kal decemb.

Tollunt innumeras ad astra voces,
Saturnalia principis sanantes,
Et dulci Dominum favore clamant,
Hoc solum vetuit licere Cæsar.

So the Apostate Julian, after his dissembling fashion, forbad his men to call him Lord; and Judas Galilæus was so obstinate in this point, that rather then hee would give this title to the greatest Monarch; he was contented to endure the most exquisite torments: and the reason hereof was the superstitious respect they had to the Tetragrammaton name of the Almighty, which none of them ever durst openly, nor at any time indeed pronounce, save onely by the High-Priest in the feast of reconciliations, and that onely in the Sanctuary at the time of his benediction; and therefore when they met with this name, in reading, they used to pronounce Adonai, that is, Lord, for it, unlesse Adonai went before or followed after it in the Text; and if so, then they read Elohim, that is, God, in the steed thereof; and to that end, when they began to use their points, they pointed that name with the points of Adonai, or Elohim; whereupon the Septuagint renders the words, Κυριὸς ὁ Θεὸς, and the vulgar latine, Dominus Deus, which we translate, the Lord God, and whereof Tertullian saith, Deus quidem, quod erat semper, statim nominat, ut in principio fecit Deus cœlum & terram, ac deinceps, quamdiu faciebat quorum Dominus futurus erat, Deus solummodo posuit, ut dixit Deus, fecit Deus, vidit Deus, & nusquam adhuc Dominus; at ubi universa perfecit, ipsum vel maxime hominem, qui proprie Dominum intellecturus erat, Dominus cognominatur; Moses speaking of God doth presently call him God, which he was from all eternity, as in the beginning God created heaven and earth, and so forth, untill he had made those things whereof hee was to become their Lord, he puts onely God; as, God said, God made, and God saw, and as yet in no place doth he put the word Lord; but when he had finished all things, and especially had made man, which was more peculiarly to understand and acknowledge him for his Lord, he doth presently call him Lord, as we may see in the second Chap. of Gen. where the Lord God doth first meet with us. Yet this scrupulosity of the Iewes, and others that followed them, might easily be taken away with that distinction of Cantacuzen; ἀπροσδιορίστως τὸ κύριος ἄδενος ἐστιν ἢ τῷ Θεῷ, ἀλλ' ἀνθρώπε μετα προσθήκης ὀνόματος; the name Lord is absolutely due to God alone, but respectively it may be ascribed to man with the addition of person or place, in regard whereof he is so intitled; and therfore not onely Iacob, saith, Thus shall you say to my Lord Esau, but also in their usuall salutations and com-

The reason of this superstition. Iehovah. Rabbi Moses in more Nebuch. p. 1. c. 60.

Tertul. adversus Hermog.

When God was first called Lord.

Apolog. 8. advers. Mahomet.

Gen 33. 13.

complements, they used the word Lord, as Obadiah saith unto Eliah, art not thou my Lord Eliah, ; and so Kings, Potentates, and others, of what condition soever they be, Clergy or Laity, may be called Lords ; though absolutely or indefinitely, we are to follow our Saviours counsell, to call no man Lord, as in the same sence we are to call no man good, no man our Father: quia Dominus proprie dicitur, qui domus imperium habet, vel cui populi subsunt, ut Romanos rerum Dominos gentemq; togatam.

1 King. 18.7.

But our Saviour Christ is not here called Lord, in any conditionall respect, but simply and most absolutely in all respects, as immediatly it will appeare unto you; for, in that he is called Lord, that sheweth his authority, and in that he is called our Lord, that sheweth his servants. And

That Christ is our Lord two manner of waies.

1. You may note that he is Lord two manner of waies;

1. As he is God in his owne nature.
2. As he is Christ in our nature.

} For

1 How Christ is our Lord as God. Psal. 24.1.

1. He made all things, and therefore he is Lord of all things; So the Prophet saith ; The earth is the Lords, and all that therein is, the compasse of the world and they that dwell therein ; for he hath prepared it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods ; therefore, he that is the maker of all things, must needs be acknowledged to be the chiefe Lord of all things; but Saint Iohn tells us that Christ made all things; for all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made ; and Saint Paul more largely saith, that by him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principallities or powers ; all things were created by him and for him.

Iohn 1.3.

Col. 1.16.

2 How Christ is our Lord as man.

2. He that made all things, as he is God, was made himselfe to be our Lord, as he is our Redeemer. And so Saint Peter saith, Let all the house of Israell know for a surety, that God hath made him Lord and Christ : And hee was made our Lord after a threefold right.

Act. 2.36. Christ made Lord by a threefold right.

1. By right of inheritance, God made him heire of all things, and gave him the Gentiles for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possessions.

1 Of inheritance. Heb. 1.2. Psal. 2.8.

2. By right of redemption, he redeemed us from our enemies, he overcame the divell, and tooke us out of his hands, and so jure belli, by right of warre hee became our Lord, and because his Fathers justice must be satisfied before wee could be freed, therefore he paid a ransome for us, and bought us with his owne bloud, as the Apostles doe declare ; Yee are bought with a price, not with gold and silver, or such like corruptible things, but with the pretious bloud of Iesus Christ.

2 Of redemption.

1 Cor. 6.20.

1 Pet. 1.18.

3. By right of mariage, for he is the husband of his Church ; and therefore as the husband is the head, and Lord over his wife, so is Christ over his elect. And in these respects Christ is more properly our Lord, then either the Father or the Holy Ghost.

3 Of mariage. Ephes. 5.23.

That Christ is an absolute Lord every way.

And he is an absolute Lord in a double respect,

1. Potestatis, of his power.
2. Qualitatis, of his qualities.

} For

1 In respect of power.

1. As the Father hath jus absolutum, an absolute right in all his creatures, that is, such a right as that he may doe what he will with any thing, and no man can say, why doest thou so ? As our Saviour sheweth, may not I doe what I will with mine owne ? So likewise Christ hath all power given him, both in heaven and earth, as himselfe confesseth.

Mat. 20.15. Mat. 28.18.

2 In respect of all properties that should be in a Lord.

2. He is a most absolute and perfect Lord, in respect of all the parts and properties that should be in a Lord and Master.

Antoninus wittily observeth, that the word Dominus may be derived foure waies, to signifie foure properties that should be in a Lord.

1. Do

Foure properties of a Lord.

1. Do minus, there is parcitie.
2. Do minus, there is severitie.
3. Do manus, there is pietie.
4. Do munus, there is liberalitie.

And in very deed, howsoever the determination and derivation is but Frier-like, yet these properties are very requisite to be in every Lord and Master.

1 Gentleneſſe. Christ is wonderfull gentle. Pro. 20. 28.

1. The first is lenitie, a giving of lesse punishment unto servants then they doe justly deserve, a thing not only commendable, but also most profitable for every Lord, for mercy and truth do preserve the King, and his throne is established through clemencie; for this alluring lenitie will move every man to go and to continue in such a service where it is practised; whereas cruelty is a vice of beasts, and not of men, saith Seneca; but Christ is so gentle that he praid for his greatest adversaries, and he useth his patience towards all men, to lead them to repentance; to the woman, taken in adultery, he said but where be thy accusers? if they do not accuse thee, neither do I accuse thee: and to the sicke man that had his infirmity 38. yeares, he said but sin no more: and to Iudas that betrayed him, he said no more but, Iudas, betraiest thou the Sonne of man with a kisse?

Seneca in lib. de clementia. Luk 23. 34. Ioh. 8. 10, 11. Iohn 5. 14. Luk. 22. 48.

And therfore in respect of this meekenesse and lenity, he is called the Lambe of God: Othen, why should not this lenity and goodnes induee us to serve him? quia mitissimus est Rex hic noster, for he is the meekest and the easiest to be served upon the earth, saith S. Chrysostome.

Chrys hom. 38. in Matth.

2 Severity. Christ very severe to the wicked. Ier. 1. 10.

2. The second is severity, nam qui non vult duci debet trahi; for it is most fit that he, which will not be perswaded by faire meanes, should be compelled through foule meanes: and therefore constitutus est super gentes & regna, he is put over kingdomes and nations, ut evellat & destruat, ut dissipet & disperdat, that he may root them, scatter them, and destroy them, that is, the wicked and all their wickednes, saith S. Augustine; quia ut nulli homini claudenda est misericordia, ita nulli peccato impunitas relaxãda est; for as mercie is to be denied to no man, so the punishment of sin is to be remitted to no man, saith S. Ambrose; for the sparing of one wicked fellow doth incourage all others in their wickednesse: But of Christ it is said, that he shall rule the Heathen with a rod of iron, and breake them in peeces like a potters vessell: And it is no wonder that the meekest man, being provoked, should grow to be the severest man, to them that despise his patience and long sufferance; quia patientia læsa fit furor; for as hot water cooled is coldest of all, so the mildest man moved is angriest of all: and therfore Lactantius saith, That God commeth slowly against a sinner, as it were upon leaden feet, but he will recompence the slownesse of his comming with severity of judgement, when he commeth, and pay them home with iron hands: And therfore this should teach us formidine pœnæ, even for feare of his anger, to do him service; for if his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

Aug. in Psal. Sin not to be let free unpardoned. Ambros in 1. de offic. Psal. 2. 9. Patience provoked is most angry Psal. 2. 12.

3 Pittifullneſſe, Pro. 31. 20.

3. The third is pitty and piety, to helpe the poore and oppressed; for Salomon saith of that good Lady, that manum suam aperuit inopi, & palmas extendit ad pauperes, which I may interpret of our good Lord, he opened his hand to the needy, and stretched out the same to defend the poore; and S. Hierome saith, that Regum proprium est, &c. it is the property of a King, or of a Lord, to do justice and judgement, to deliver the oppressed out of the hand of the oppressor, and to succour the poore, the fatherlesse, the widow, and the stranger; but Christ was sent into the world, evangelizare pauperibus, to preach the Gospell unto the poore, &c. And therefore the Apostle saith of him, that he went about doing good, and healing all manner of sicknesses and diseases: and therefore this piety and goodnesse of this Lord should make us seeke unto him for his service.

Hieronimus. Christ most pittifull to the poore. Luk. 4. 18. Act. 10. 33.

4 Liberality. Iames 5. 4.

4. The fourth is liberality, in not detaining any due, but in giving bountifull rewards unto his servants; For, the detaining of wages is one of those crying sinnes, that crie to the eares of the Lord for present vengeance; and therefore a Lord should not detaine, or take away any thing from his poore servants, as Achab did the vineyard of Naboth, but hee should bee a liberall rewarder of their ſervice.

Of all Maſters and Lords, Chriſt is the moſt bountifull rewarder. Mat.10.42. Rom.11.22.

But our Saviour Chriſt is the moſt bountifull rewarder, of any ſervice done unto him, that can be conceived; for whoſoever giveth any thing for his ſake, hee ſhall receive the ſame a hundred fold, and whoſoever giveth but a cup of cold water in his name, he ſhall not leeſe his reward; and therfore the Apoſtle biddeth us to behold the bountifullneſſe of God.

Wee muſt not looke for our reward untill wee have ended our ſervice.

But here you muſt note that the bounty and liberality of a Lord or Maſter unto his ſervants, is not to be done, during the time of their ſervice; for that would make them to neglect their duties; but it ſhould be ſhewed at the end of their time; for during their time, they ſhould have nothing but neceſſaries, and that, not in the daintieſt manner neither; for the milke of the goates, that is, a ſlender diet, ſhould be a ſuſtenance for the family; and therefore our Saviour Chriſt, though he provideth all things ſufficiently, and ſometimes plentifully too, for his ſervants in this life, yet he keepeth his reward, and his chiefeſt bleſſings onely for the future life; for when they have finiſhed their courſe, then they ſhall enjoy the crowne of righteouſneſſe, ſaith the Apoſtle; they ſhall have himſelfe to be the ſatisfying of their deſires, to ſee him without end, to love him without loathing, and to praiſe him without ceaſing; then ſhall they have the reward of their ſervice, a reward indeed, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, Quod fide non capitur, ſpe non attingitur, charitate non apprehenditur, deſideria & vota tranſgreditur, acquiri poteſt, æſtimari non poteſt, that by faith cannot be conceived, by hope cannot be attained, and by charity cannot be apprehended; becauſe it ſurmounteth all deſires, and it paſſeth all underſtanding; for the joyes of heaven, ſaith Saint Bernard, adeo innumera ſunt, ut nequeunt numerari, adeo diutina ut nequeunt terminari, are ſo innumerable, that they cannot be numbred; ſo pretious, that they cannot be valued; and ſo laſting, that they ſhall never be finiſhed.

Pro.27.27.

2 Tim.4.7.

The heavenly reward how great.

And therefore, ſeeing Chriſt is ſo meeke a Lord to receive us, ſo ſtrong to defend us, and ſo bountifull to reward us, let us be moſt willing to ſerve him, as our onely Lord and Maſter: And ſo much for the word Lord: It followeth that he is our Lord, for it muſt be referred to Lord, as well as to father, expreſſed to the one, underſtood to the other.

That Chriſt is our Lord.

Touching this, we muſt underſtand that the word our Lord, doth not exclude the reprobate from being under his dominion, as our father doth exclude the wicked from being his children, but onely it ſheweth, that after a more eſpeciall manner, he is the Lord of the elect, then he is of all other creatures whatſoever; for he is Lord of all; for of the elect he ſaith, ſerve the Lord in feare, and of the wicked he ſaith, be thou ruler even in the midſt of thine enemies; that is, have thou full dominion over them: And therefore, our Lord, ſheweth the different manner of his rule and dominion over his people, and not the excluding of any from his rule and dominion; for though he be the Lord of all, yet not after the ſame manner, nor to the ſame end; for he is the Lord of the godly, to guide them, to protect them, and to reward them for their good ſervice done unto him; but he is the Lord of the wicked, to puniſh and deſtroy them, for not ſerving him as they ought to doe.

After what manner Chriſt is Lord of the godly and of the wicked.

Pſal.2.11. Pſal.110.2.

Object. But it may be ſome will ſay, how can he be the Lord of the wicked, when as they refuſe his ſervice, follow the world, and obey their maſter the divell?

Sol. I anſwer with the Canoniſt, that inobedientia ſubditorum non tollit jus dominationis; The diſobedience of ſubjects takes not away the right of the Soveraigne: and therefore though the wicked doe ſerve Satan, yet hath he no right in them, but onely by uſurpation, and therefore they muſt looke for nothing for ſerving him, but onely their deſtruction.

Diſobedience takes not away the right of ſoveraignty.

And ſo much for the firſt title that expreſſeth the goodneſſe of God the Son, our Lord: Now followeth the ſecond.

Ieſus.

Iesus.

2. Iesus: Besides infinite observations that doe expresse the superabundant suavitie and goodnesse of Iesus, the very letters of the name and the signification of the word do most excellently shew the same.

2 Title expressing the goodnesse of God our Redeemer.

1. Venerable Bede observeth, that as the name of Antichrist containeth the number of 666. so the name Ιησους doth containe 888. the first is numerus rerum caducarum, the number of the world and worldly vanities, that were made in sixe daies, and shall continue sixe ages; to shew that Antichrist should be worldly and hunt after earthly dignities, and never attaine unto the heavenly felicities: The second is the number of the circumcision of the Iewes, the resurrection of Christ, and the salvation of us all; eight soules were saved in the Arke, and eight is the number of eternity.

The mistery of the letters in the name Iesus. As I have shewed in the resolution of Pilate.

2. Iesus is derived of the verbe Iasa per ain in fine, which signifieth servare, to save, and in Greek it signifieth the very same, as σωτης doth, that is, a Saviour, or more then a Saviour, as Cicero saith the word doth import: And this signification of his name is justified by the testimony of the Angell, who said he should be called Iesus, because he should save his people from their sins; For there were two things required at mans hands, before he could be saved.

Barrad. super evangel. to. 1. Damasc. Hegesipp. l. 1.

Mat 1. 21.

Two things required of man before he could be saved.

1. A satisfying of Gods justice for the sins we had committed.
2. A fulfilling of all righteousnesse, which all of us had omitted.

The first was necessary to deliver us from hell, which for our sins we had most justly deserved; and

1 To satisfie Gods justice.

The second was requisite to bring us unto heaven, for want whereof we were justly excluded: And therefore

2 To fulfill all righteousnesse. How Christ discharged both for us.

1. In respect of the first, Christ was contented to become a curse for us, to bee wounded for our sins, and to be broken for our transgressions, that we might be delivered from the curse of the law, and by his stripes to be healed: For seeing the Sonne of God suffered for sin, what could the justice of God require more for the greatest transgressions?

1 Suffered for us. Esay 53. 5.

2. In respect of the second he did most perfectly fulfill the royall law, that his righteousnesse might be imputed unto us; because it was done for us and in our nature, in the person of Iesus Christ: And therefore S. Paul speaking of this righteousnesse, saith, that it is made manifest by the faith of Iesus Christ unto all and upon all that beleeve.

2 Fulfilled all righteousnesse for us.

Rom. 3. 22.

And so you see how Christ, by washing us from our sins, through his death and Passion, and cloathing us with his righteousnesse, that he hath performed for us, is become our Iesus, our Saviour to deliver us from hell, and to purchase unto us the inheritance of heaven.

And yet for all this we find many so addicted to humane merits, that

1. In respect of satisfaction for our sins, though they yeeld, that originall sinne is wholly and freely in all respects satisfied for by Christ Iesus; yet for sins after baptisme, they have invented other fountaines to wash them away, as specially

1 The vaine devices of men, to satisfie for their sins.

1. The Sacrament of pennance, consisting of { 1. Contrition. 2. Confession. 3. Satisfaction. }
2. The Priests absolution for all former sins.
3. Masses and Mediations of { 1. Saints, and 2. Angels. }
4. Workes satisfactory, by themselves or others.
5. Extreme unction, or annointing of us with oyle.
6. Suffering for a time the paines of purgatory, and the like.

These must be, as six planks, after shipwracke, whereby they seeke to escape the danger of the tempestuous seas of Gods wrath: And 2 The fond distinction of a double justification.

2. In respect of enduing us with righteousnesse, they invent a former and a latter latter justification, whereof they yeeld the first to be had from Christ, but they affirme the second to be inherent, and from our selves: And therefore they teach that God may not impute righteousnesse through faith, unlesse hee bee righteous of himselfe also; and that whosoever will defend that the ungodly are justified by faith onely, and that for the obtaining of Gods mercy, workes are not needfull, let him bee accursed; for that, although the merits of Christ are the most especiall deserts, through which Gods mercies and the way to the kingdome of heaven is granted unto us, yet is it in no wise to be reckoned for the only whole and full satisfaction for sins or the sole meanes of our justification.

Concilium Trident. sess. 6 can. de iustificat.

Sentent. 3 distinct. 20. concil. 5.

The great wrong that Papists doe to Christ.

And so in both respects they make Christ to be a defective Iesus, an imperfect Saviour, neither soly to deliver us from hell, nor yet wholly to indue us with righteousnesse, that we might have the inheritance of heaven.

But in a word we answer to these absurdities, and 1 Absurdity answered.

1. We confesse, that contrition satisfaction, and all such workes of piety, are commended and commanded by God, most earnestly perswaded unto by the preachers, and most comfortable for the doers; yet in no waies as satisfaction for sins past, but onely for prevention of sins to come, and for a testimony of our obedience and thankfullnesse unto God: And

2 Absurdity answered. Iustification but one.

2. Wee say, that as there is but one God, so there is but one justification before God; and therefore that which they call a former and a latter justification, we say (as the Scripture teacheth us) that it is a proceeding and a growing forward from faith to faith, and from grace to grace: And thereby wee doe conclude, that hee which is justified may, in regard of his apprehension thereof, bee said to be more justified, according to the measure of his faith to lay hold on that justification, which is most absolute and fully performed in the sight of God, and that hee, which is holy may bee said to bee more holy, according to the measure of grace that hee receiveth, whereby hee laboureth for uprightnesse more and more, and endeavoureth to live better and better; but hereupon to build two distinct kindes of justification before the tribunall seat of God, were to build without a foundation, and with ambiguity of words, to deceive poore simple Christians: And therefore seeing our Iesus hath trodden the Wine-presse alone, and will not give his glory unto another, wee doe most constantly beleeve, and as constantly teach, that sicut nudos nos prima gratia in fide genuit, ita nudos per fidem eadem justificat, & nudos salvabit; as the first grace found us naked of all goodnesse, so it justifieth us without respect to any goodnesse of our owne, and will likewise save us through faith in the goodnesse of the Sonne of God; and we say that he alone is the way, the truth, and the life, the a and ω, the author and the finisher of our faith, the beginner and the consummator of our salvation, the alone, whole, and perfect satisfaction both for the guilt and punishment of all our sinnes, both originall and actuall, and the onely righteousnesse, that bringeth us to eternall life, and so alone, without any partner agent, the most perfect deliverer of man from hell, and the most absolute giver of everlasting glory, and that neither workes of the law, nor inherent righteousnesse, nor habituall grace, nor any other thing, or name under heaven, can be found, whereby we may be saved, but only this sweet name of Iesus.

Esay 63.3.

That Christ is our sole and perfect Saviour. Iohn 14.6. Revel. 1.8. Heb. 12.2.

Acts 4.12.

The Authors faith

And if this be not all-sufficient, or if he hath not wholly and soly, fully and freely satisfied for all my sinnes, and perfectly gained unto mee eternall life, without any workes or merits of mine, then let my body bee damned, and let my soule never come unto Gods kingdome; for in him is all my hope, and if that faile, I perish: But seeing as God said to Abraham, feare not, I am God all-sufficient; so the Scripture saith to me, feare not, he is a Iesus all-sufficient, whosoever beleeveth in him shall never be confounded, I will never commit these two evills, to forsake the fountaine of living waters, and to digge unto my selfe pits and filthie puddles; but I will trust in him, hope in him, and place all my joy in him, and take no joy where I finde not him: Si scribas, non placet mihi, nisi legam

Gen. 15.1.

1 Pet 2.6.

Ier. 2.13.

legam ibi Iesum; si conferas, non sapit mihi, nisi sonuerit ibi Iesus; Quia Iesus est in ore meo mel, in aure melos, & in corde Iubilum: No writing shall please me, where I see not Iesus; no conference shall content me, where I heare not Iesus; no thing shall delight me, where I finde not Iesus; for he is the honie untò my mouth, musicke unto my eares, and all the joy and delight of my heart: And therefore sweet Iesus forsake mee not, and let not mine enemies triumph over me.

Nothing pleasant where we find not Iesus.

And so much for the second title, that expresseth the goodnesse of God the Son, Iesus: Now followeth the third, Christ.

Κεχρὸς.

CHAP. VII.

That God furnisheth his true servants with sufficient gifts; foure sorts of men in the Ministery; how Christ was annointed; and to what end; how many sorts of men annointed; of the Priest-hood of Christ; and the properties thereof.

3 Title that expresseth the goodnesse of God our Redeemer.

IN the first word Iesus, the Apostle sheweth, that he, whom before he had called our Lord and Master, is our Saviour; and in this word Κεχρὸς, hee sheweth how he was fitted for the executing of that office to save us, viz. that hee was anointed, to be a King, a Priest, and a Prophet, that he might guide us, redeeme us, and instruct us.

An observation: That God furnisheth every man that he sendeth of his businesse, with sufficient gifts to discharge that duty. Exod. 4. 12, 11. Esay 6. 7. Act. 2. 4.

From whence wee may observe, before wee passe any further, that those, whom God intendeth to imploy in any especiall office, he maketh fit, and furnisheth them with gifts sutable to the nature of the businesse, in which he meanes to imploy them; For when he sent Moses unto Pharaoh, I will be with thy mouth, saith God; because Moses said, I have a stuttering tongue; and when he sent Esay to prophesie, he touched his tongue with a burning coale from his Altar.

The very like we find in Ieremy, in Ezekiel, and in all the Prophets and Apostles, he filled them with the Holy Ghost, that they might doe the worke of the Holy Ghost; and so here we reade of his owne Sonne, he annointed him, that is, præ consortibus, above his fellowes, that he might be a Iesus to save his fellowes, as hereafter I shall shew unto you.

And therefore let every one take heed, how he enters into any office in Gods businesse, lest the Lord should say unto him friend, how camest thou in hither, being no waies fitted for my service? surely, thou didst run before I sent thee, thou didst thrust thy selfe before I called thee; and therefore I will thrust thee out, before thou art willing to go; take him, binde him hand and foot, and cast him into utter darknesse, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Mat. 22. 11.

Ier. 23. 21.

Mat. 22. 13.

But because few consider how they are fitted for their places, but onely what gaine and profit they shall reape by their places; therefore I wish that they, who placed them, upon hope of their sufficiency, would likewise displace them upon the sight of their defects, and the proofe of their unworthinesse in their places and calling; for though some thinke the calling of the Ministers to be character indelebilis, and therefore once a Minister and never to bee deprived; yet I say that herein they deceive themselves, because they doe not rightly distinguish betwixt the outward and the inward character; for there bee foure sorts of men imployed in the businesse of the Gospell, as Saint Hierome saith.

How the character of the Minister is indelible.

Hieron. l. 1. c. 1. comment in Galat. Feure sorts of men in the Ministery

1. The first sort were sent immediatly by Christ, as were the Evangelists, the Prophets and the Apostles.

1 Sort.

2. The second sort were sent of God, but by the allowance and approbation of men; and these two sorts are ever furnished with gifts sufficient, for the discharging of their callings from God: and therefore they can no wayes be discharged, or deprived by man.

2 Sort.

3 Sort. 3. The third sort are sent of men, and not of God, and these may be silenced and excluded from the Ministery; for as they had power to ordaine them, when they thought them fit; so they have power to deprive them, when they see them unfit; either in respect of their notorious crimes, or erroneous opinions, or some such other just and lawfull cause.

4 Sort. 4. The fourth are those that are neither sent by God, nor yet by men; and therefore they should be prohibited and restrained by men, or els we should have no order, either in Church or Common-wealth.

That unworthy Ministers should be displaced. And so you see that those, which are not called, nor yet fitted for their callings from God, may be restrained by men; and they should be so, (in mine opinion) because the fitting and furnishing of men with gifts answerable to their callings, are the chiefest signes, that they are called by God; for so we see, the Sonne of God, being appointed to be the Saviour of men, he was annointed of God, and so fitted for the office of a Redeemer.

Now touching this annointing of Iesus (for so the Greek word Χριστὸς signifieth, of Χρίω ungo, or Χρισις unctio) for to fit him to be a Saviour, we must necessarily consider these two points.

Two points to be considered.
1. How he was annointed.
2. To what end he was annointed.

De 1. We must understand that there was a twofold annointing.

A twofold annointing.
1. Inwardly, with the gifts of grace.
2. Outwardly, with the materiall oyle.

1 Inward. Psal.105.15. In the first sense Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, were Christi Dei, the annointed of God; for of them it was spoken, Touch not mine annointed, and do my Prophets no harme; but annointing with materiall oyle, was not yet in rerum natura; and therefore their annointing was with the gifts of Gods Spirit.

2 Outward. In the second sense the Kings, the Priests, and the Prophets were, after the time of Moses, annointed with materiall oyle: and of this outward annointing, some think there were two kinds.

Exod.30.25. 1. Either with the vulgar and common oyle; or
2. With the holy oyle that he commanded Moses to make.

Hoc unguentum conficere Moses iussus est ex illis aromatis generibus quæ Maimonides describit, in halacha cele hammikdasch. Cap primo Cuneus. 1, c.14. p.136. And they say, that the Priests onely were to be annointed with the holy oyle; because the Lord saith, Whosoever shall make the like ointment, or whosoever shall put any of it upon a stranger, or any Israelite, save only the Priests, (saith the glosse) even he shall be cut off from his people, Ver.33.

But against this wee may object, that Sadocke tooke the horne of oyle from the Temple, and annointed Salomon; and David saith of himselfe; I found David my servant, with my holy oyle have I annointed him: And so Euthymius and Genebrard do affirme, that Samuel and the rest of the Prophets did annoint the Kings of Iuda, from whose loynes the true annointed, Iesus Christ, was to spring, with his holy oyle.

That Christ was not annointed with materiall oyle. Aug. in Psal. 140. Now our Saviour was not anoninted with any materiall oyle; for that his kingdome was not of this world, nor his Priest-hood after the order of Aaron; but as the Patriarchs were Uncti ante unctionem, annointed with the inward unction of the Holy Ghost, before there was any annointing with oyle; so was our Saviour Christ, as S. Peter testifieth, annointed with the Holy Ghost, and with power; and so Esa. cap.61. And so S. Cyril, S. Augustine, Nazianzen, and others say, quod unxit eum Deus Spiritu Sancto, non visibili oleo, sed dono gratiæ, that he was annointed not with oyle, but with grace.

Acts 10.38. Cyril. de fide. Aug. de Trin. l.15. c.26. Nazian. Orat.4 de Theolog.

But here you must understand, that Christ was farre otherwise annointed with the Holy Ghost, than were the Patriarchs, or any other whatsoever; for he was annointed with the oyle of gladnesse above his fellowes; and therefore the Apostle saith, that to them were given the graces and gifts of Gods Spirit, juxta mensuram donationis Christi, according to the measure of the gift of Christ, but Psal.45.7. 2 Cor.10.13.

Christ

Chriſt received the ſpirit himſelfe without meaſure; for in him is the fulneſſe of all grace, of all vertue, of all knowledge, and all other gifts of Gods Spirit, moſt fully and moſt perfectly, ſaith Aquinas; and in him dwelleth the fulneſſe of the God-head bodily, ſaith the Apoſtle; and from his fulneſſe have we all received, and grace for grace, ſaith the Evangeliſt. Eph 4.7. Ioh. 3.34.

And thus you ſee how Chriſt is annointed with the ſpirituall oyle of gladneſſe above his fellowes. Thom p. 3. q. 15. Col. 2. 9. Ioh. 1. 16.

De 2. That we may underſtand to what end he was annointed, we muſt ſearch to know, how many ſorts of men were Chriſti, annointed: And I find three ſeverall opinions touching this point. 2 To what end Ieſus was annointed. Three opinions.

1. Some, though they yeeld that Prieſts were uncti, yet do they affirme that none but Kings were Chriſti; and I am to ſpeake but of them that were Chriſti. 1 Opinion. Eluenſis ſuper hæc verba, Nolite tangere Chriſtos meos.

2. Others, though not much contradicting, that there were three ſorts of men annointed, yet do they rather incline to think that there were but two ſorts annointed, that is, Kings and Prieſts. 2 Opinion. Barrad to. 1 de circumciſ Dom.

3. But many of the ancient Writers have thought, that Kings, Prieſts, and Prophets were not only uncti, but Chriſti alſo. Now 3 Opinion. Euſeb. l. 1 Eccleſ. Hiſt.

1. Touching the firſt opinion, I ſee no reaſon why Chriſtus ſhould be appropriated to Kings, and unctus to the Prieſts, unleſſe it be onely this, that where it is to be referred unto Kings, it is left untranſlated, and where it is to be referred to the Prieſts, it is tranſlated unctus; for in the originall both of the Greeke and Hebrew, the ſame word is uſed, as well where it is ſpoken of the Prieſts, as where it is ſpoken of Kings. 1 Opinion. Whether Kings only were Chriſti, and Prieſts Uncti.

But if the not tranſlating of a word retaineth unto it any greater dignity, than it hath being tranſlated; or if the tranſlating of a word derogateth any thing from the excellency it had in the originall, then muſt it needs follow, that it were better not to tranſlate any word at all, leſt we derogate any thing from the excellency of the originall: for that there is a woe and a curſe annexed to the diminiſhers of the authority of the divine Word, whether it be by corrupting, or tranſlating, or any way elſe. The difference betwixt Chriſtus and Unctus.

But it is moſt abſurd to ſay, that the tranſlating of a word doth derogate any thing from the dignity of the originall word; and therefore, ſeeing in the originall, God calleth both Kings and Prieſts, Chriſtos ejus, his annointed, whom he joyned together with the ſame name in the originall, I may not ſever by the tranſlation, nor make any difference betwixt Chriſtos and unctos, but that the firſt is a Greeke word, and the ſecond a Latine word, that do both ſignifie the ſame thing, that is, annointed; for I am ſure the precept de non tangendo Chriſtos, was ſpoken of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob; and they were no more Kings, than they were Prieſts and Prophets; for neither the word pater nor ἀρχὴ doth declare them to be the one rather than the other; for as they were to governe their houſholds like Kings, ſo were they to teach them and to bring them up in religion, like Prieſts and Prophets; and therefore I ſee no reaſon, that this precept of not touching them; ſhould be given, becauſe they were Kings, rather than becauſe they were Prieſts; or if as one rather than as the other, than why not as Prieſts and Prophets, rather than as Kings? For that Kings are better able to defend themſelves than the Prieſts or Prophets: they have the ſword of vengeance; but dolor, & gemitus, & preces noſtræ ſunt arma noſtra; ſighing and ſobbing, teares and prayers are all the weapons that the poore Prieſts have to defend themſelves, ſaith S. Ambroſe. True tranſlation derogates nothing from the dignity of the originall. Pſal. 105. 15. The precept of not touching the Patriarchs, principally given in reſpect that they were Prieſts. 1 Reaſon. Amb. in Orat. in Auxent.

And ſecondly, for that the Lord ſetteth this as a manifeſt reaſon, why Abimelech ſhould not touch Abraham, becauſe he was a Prophet, and ſhould pray for him. Gen. 20. 7.

And therefore ſeeing this precept, de non tangendo Chriſtos, of not touching Gods annointed, was ſpoken of them that were as well Prieſts and Prophets, as Kings; and that they ſhould not be touched as Prieſts, no more than as Kings: 2 Reaſon.

I dare not touch the text so roughly, as to say that the word Χεις῾ was more properly given unto them, as Kings, rather than as Priests or Prophets.

But we see how it is (and it should be so) that no man doth, nor should dare to take the least graine from the excellency of the names or titles of Kings; and yet we see how many, yea Priests themselves, like wicked birds that defile their own nests, that care not how much they speak against, or how little they speake for the excellency of the Priesthood; which maketh Policie so great, Piety so little, and Priests so meane and so contemptible.

I say not this to derogate the least Iota from the dignity or excellency of Kings; God forbid; and I hope none will imagine that I do, (for I know, and no man can deny, but they be Christi Domini, the annointed of the Lord) but I say this to declare also the excellency of the Priesthood; for in the beginning, the same men were Kings, Priests, and Prophets, as Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and especially Melchisedech, King of Salem, and the Priest of the most high God, if we may refer what is said of him to any mortall man; and in respect of either office they were stiled by the same name, Christi Dei, the annointed of God; and in the latter ending both Kings and Priests shall be attoned, and both shall be regale sacerdotium; Kings made Priests, and Priests made Kings: And therefore Kings and Priests should be like Moses and Aaron, two loving brethren; they to protect our dignity with the sword of justice, and we to defend their authority with the word of truth; they never to oppresse us, and we never to speake against them.

How Kings and Priests should defend each other. Aristoteles primos mortalium, aiit fermè habuisse eundem & regem & sacerdotem. Pet. Cunæus de republ. Heb. l. 1. c. 14 p. 134

2 Opinion. That the Prophets were not annointed.

2. Touching the second opinion, Nicholaus de Lyra, Carthusianus, Barradius, and others, do yeeld many probable reasons to shew, that the Prophets were not annointed with any materiall oyle. As

1 Reason.

1. Because we read but of one, even Elizæus, that was ever bid to be annointed.

2 Reason.

2. Because we do not read that Elias did annoint Elizæus, but only threw his cloke over him, which throwing of his mantle, Carthusianus and Lyra do call his annointing; and therefore they do expound the word, Unges Elizæum, to signifie nothing els, but Eliges Elizæum, & creabis eum Prophetam, thou shalt choose Elizæus, and make him Prophet in thy stead.

3 Reason.

3. Because a little before, the phrase of annointing was twice used, for the annointing of the two kings, Hazael, and Iehu, and therefore the same phrase was still used to annoint Elizæus for the appointing of him to be a Prophet.

4 Reason.

4. Because God himselfe seemeth to put a difference betwixt Christos and Prophetas, the annointed and the Prophets, when he saith, touch not mine annointed, and do my Prophets no harme; as if Prophets were not included in the word Christos, mine annointed, but rather were of another kind; and because extraordinary, therefore not to be ordained with this ordinary rite, which belonged properly to the office of Kings and Priests, which though they were most excellent, yet were they successive and ordinarie.

5 Reason. Aug. in Psal. 26.

5. Because S. Augustine saith, that duæ personæ illo tempore ungebantur, two kinds of men were annointed at that time, that is, Kings and Priests, & in duabus personis præfigurabatur futurus unus Rex & Sacerdos, utroq; munere unus Christus, & ideo Christus a chrismate, id est, unctione; and in both these persons was prefigured that one King and Priest which was to come, even that one Christ, that was to enjoy both functions; and therfore was called Christ, of his annointing: and so both Ruffinus and S. Cyprian were of the same mind. And to these we may add, that Petrus Cunæus, speaking of this annointing, saith, hoc Regibus, Pontificibusq; maximis proprium fuisse Talmudici tradunt; the expounders of the Talmud say, this annointing was proper to the Kings and chiefe Priests, Pet. Cunæus de republ. Heb. l. 1. c. 14. p. 134.

Ruffin. in expos. Symb. Cypr. in serm. de unctione Christi.

3 Opinion.

Clem. l. 1. recog. Euseb. l. 1. Eccles. Hist.

And surely, as they do not absolutely deny but the Prophets might be annointed, so do not I absolutely deny but these reasons may be true, to prove that the Prophets were not annointed: yet I am inclined with S. Clemens, Eusebius, and others, others, to thinke that these three sorts of men were annointed with materiall oyle.

1. Priests, as Aaron, *Exod.*29.7.
2. Kings, as Saul, David, &c. 1 *Sam.*10.1.
3. Prophets, as Elizæus, 1 *Reg.*19.16.

And therefore, as these three kinds of callings were outwardly annointed with oyle, so Iesus was annointed with the inward unction of the Spirit of God, to be

1. A Priest.
2. A King.
3. A Prophet.

} And

1. He was annointed to be a Priest; for the Lord sware, and will not repent, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech. And in these words the Prophet setteth down these foure things. Psal.110.4.

That Christ was annointed to be a Priest. Foure points.

1. The certainty of his ordination, the Lord sware that thou art a Priest.
2. The irrevocability of his office, the Lord will not repent it, that thou art made a Priest.
3. The perpetuity of his Priest-hood, thou art a Priest for ever.
4. The excellency of his Priest-hood, for it is after the order of Melchisedech.

1. It is certaine then, that he is a Priest; and so we may see in the 6. of Zach. 13. and almost in all places of the Epistle to the Hebrewes: And therefore Tertullian calleth him (catholicus Patris Sacerdos, per quem munus Deo offerre debemus, the Catholike Priest of his Father, by whom we are to offer our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving unto God: And although S. Chrysostome denieth him to have descended of the Priests linage, yet venerable Bede affirmeth flatly, that our Lord Iesus Christ, which, according to the flesh was to be true King and Priest, did therefore de utraq; stirpe, David scilicet & Aaron, ipsam carnem suscipere, take his flesh both from the stock of David and Aaron; but whether he did or not, it was not much materiall, for that his Priesthood was not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchisedech: and so you see the certainty of his annointing to be a Priest. 1 Point.

Tertull. l.4 cont. Marcion.

Chrys hom.16.in c.5 Matth.
Beda l.1.in c.1. Luc.

2. It is irrevocable, not only because the Lord spake it, which had beene enough, because he is immutable, without any shadow of turning, but also because he sware it, and addeth further, that he will not repent it; and therefore this truth, that he is a Priest, must needs be more irrevocable than the lawes of the Medes and Persians, that cannot be changed. 2 Point. Iam.1.17.

3. It is a perpetuall Priesthood, that is, an eternall Priesthood; because it is not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchisedech; for the Priesthood of Aaron was to be abolished, when the Priesthood of Christ was to come in esse; but the Priesthood of Melchisedech hath all the notes of eternity; for Melchisedech hath neither beginning of daies, nor end of life; but is likened unto the Sonne of God, and continueth a Priest for ever. 3 Point. The order of Melchisedech, more excellent than the order of Aaron, in diverse respects. Of whom I shall speake more at large in my treatise of Christ his incarnation.

For when we read of Melchisedech, we never read of his father, of his mother, of his beginning, or of his ending; and such a one is Christ; as he is a God, without mother, wonderfully begotten; as he is a man, without father, wonderfully conceived; as he is God, without beginning of daies, and as God and man, without end of time: and therefore a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech. And

4. It is a most excellent Priesthood; because the order of Aaron was farre inferiour to this order of Melchisedech; for Levi himselfe, in the loynes of Abraham, paid tithes unto Melchisedech; to shew, that there was no perfection in the Priesthood of the Levites; for the tenth is a signe of perfection, (saith Aquinas) in quantum est quodam-modo terminus omnium numerorum, qui procedunt usq; ad decem; in as much as the tenth is the last of all number, which proceed to ten, and then begin againe; and therefore he that giveth the tenth unto another, protesteth himselfe to be imperfect, and ascribeth perfection unto him, to whom he payeth 4 Point.

The tenth a signe of perfection. Thom part.3. q.31. art.8.

payeth his tenth; and therefore Levi, paying tithes unto Melchisedech, did acknowledge himselfe imperfect, but our Saviour paying tithe to none, sheweth himselfe most perfect.

Object. But then it may be objected, that as Levi, so Christ himselfe was then in the loynes of Abraham, when Abraham paid tithes unto Melchisedech; and therefore Christ himselfe was tithed.

How Christ was in the loynes of Abraham.

Sol. I answer briefly, that Christ was not in the loynes of Abraham as all others were; for he was to be derived from Abraham, non secundum rationem seminalem, sed secundum corpulentam substantiam, not according to our naturall begetting with mans seed, but only in respect of his corporall substance; and therefore he was in Abraham potius ut medicina vulneris, quam ut indigens curatione, rather as the physick that heales the sick, or the salve that cures the wound, than as one that wanted to be cured, saith Aquinas.

Thom. ibid ex Aug. l. 10. c. 20. sup. Gen. ad liter.

CHAP. VIII.

Foure wayes of redemption; foure things to be considered; the ransome that Christ paid for us; Christ onely is our intercessour; that we ought to pray to none but to God; that Christ was also annointed to be a King and Prophet; and what wee learne thereby.

AND thus you see that Christ was annointed to be a Priest, an eternall Priest, and a most excellent Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedech; and that (as we do collect) for two especiall ends.

That Christ was made a Priest for two speciall ends.

1. To make satisfaction for the sinnes of his people.
2. To make intercession for them, to gaine the love of God againe. For these be the two essentiall parts of the priestly office.

1. Those that were slaves in bondage, had foure manner of wayes to be redeemed.

1 To redeeme us, Foure speciall wayes of Redemption.

1 Way. 1. By Manumission, when they had served out their time.

2 Way. 2. By Exchange, when another was put in their place to indure and serve for them.

3 Way. 3. By force of armes, when through strength they were taken away.

4 Way. 4. By satisfaction, when with a price and ransome they were redeemed.

But we being the slaves of Satan, had no way to be delivered, but onely by the last; for

No way to redeem us but only by satisfaction.

1. Our time to suffer, was infinite, even for ever and ever.
2. No creature could be found that would exchange and take our places upon them.
3. It was against Gods justice to take us away by force: and therefore
4. Gods justice must be satisfied, and sufficient ransome must be offered, or we cannot be saved.

And therefore Christ was contented to make satisfaction for our sinnes, and to pay the ransome of our transgressions; touching which, S. Augustine saith, we should consider these foure especiall things.

Aug. l. 4. c. 13. de Trin.

Foure things to be considered touching the ransome that Christ paid for us.

For
1. To whom this ransome must be offered
2. By whom it must be tendered.
3. What ransome must be payd.
4. For whom it must be given.

1 To whom.

1. God was offended; and therefore to God this offering must be offered, that Gods anger may be appeased.

2 By whom. Heb. 7. 27.

2. God is of pure eyes, and cannot indure the sight of sinners; and therefore such an high Priest it became us to have, which should be holy, harmlesse, undefiled, and separate from sinners; Et quia sacrificium Deo offerri non potest, nisi per Sacerdotem sanctum & justum, and because no sacrifice can be offered unto God, but but by a just and a holy Priest, saith Saint Augustine; therefore Christ, the onely Sonne of God, that just and holy man, in whose mouth was found no guile, became our Priest, that he might offer this ransome for our sinnes unto his Father.

1 Pet. 2. 22.

3. What should be offered was prefigured in the law, an offering immaculate & undefiled; for thou shalt choose a kid or a lambe that hath no blemish; and it must be slaine too; for without bloud there is no remission: And therfore this our High-Priest was contented to yeeld himselfe to be slaine for the sins of his people, to bee made himselfe a sacrifice for us, and to offer himselfe an oblation unto his Father, as S. Chrysostome speaketh.

3 What it was. The greatnesse of the price that was paid for us. Exod 12.5. Heb 9.22. Chrys to. 2. hom. 13. in c. 1. Ioh.

For seeing the thing offered must be cleane, Quid tam mundum pro immundandis vitijs mortalium, quàm sine ulla contagione carnalis concupiscentiæ, caro nata in utero & ex utero virginali? What can be so cleane to purifie the uncleanesse of men, as that undefiled flesh, that without any touch of carnall concupiscence, was conceived and borne out of a pure Virgins wombe? And seeing our sacrifice must be slaine, Quid tam aptum huic immolationi quàm caro mortalis, what is fitter to bee slaine then mortall flesh? And therefore what could be better offered of us, or better accepted of God for a Sacrifice, then to have the body of our Priest to be made the flesh of our sacrifice?

The flesh of Christ the chiefest sacrifice in the world.

4. It is apparent that this ransome was to be paid for all sinners, and for all nations, saith Tertullian: and so I have shewed in the beginning of this Treatise; Chap. 3. & in concione 2. Gods love to the world.

4 For whom. Tertul. 1 contra Iud.

And so you see that he was one, to whom this sacrifice was offered; that he was one, who did offer it; and that it was but one thing, which was offered; and all to make us one with God, and one among our selves, for whom it was offered: And you see also the greatnesse of the ransome, that was paid, even the flesh of our Priest, and the bloud of our Saviour, yea of such a Priest that was not onely a most righteous man, but also the Son of the most omnipotent and incomprehensible God: And so God, that gave our selves unto our selves in our creation, gave himselfe unto us in our redemption, & quod homo est esse voluit Christus, ut & homo possit esse quod Christus est, and he was contented to be made, what we are, the Son of Man subject to all infirmities, that we might be made, what he is, the sons of God to be filled with all felicities.

Cyprianus de idol. vanitate.

And therefore, seeing we are redeemed from our vaine conversations, not with gold or silver, or such like corruptible things, but with the pretious bloud of Iesus Christ, as the Apostle speaketh, it behoveth us to shew all obedience and thankefullnesse unto God for the same; & cum nihil dignum Christo habeamus, and seeing we have nothing to give, that is any way worthy to be offered unto Christ, hoc unum demus quod habemus, nosmetipsos, let us give our selves unto him that gave himselfe for us, and offer up our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto him, that offered up his bodie an unspotted Sacrifice for us.

1 Pet. 1. 18.

How thankfull we should bee to Christ for the great ransome he paid for us, Rom. 12. 1.

2. The other part of the Priestly office of Christ is intercession, that is, a continuall craving and requesting of God, that for that sacrifice and ransome, which Christ paid, and offered for man, the grace and favour of God might be restored to man againe.

2 End, why Christ was made a Priest, to be our intercessor.

Now touching satisfaction (before spoken of) Bellarmine, wiser then the rest, yeeldeth that it belongeth to Christ alone; because he alone is the ransome for sinne, and hath reconciled us to God with his own bloud.

1 Tim. 2. 6.

But touching intercession, they joyne others with Christ in this action; and therfore they have recourse both to the Saints and Angels, and do pray unto them, that they would pray for them unto God; and indeed if they could prove the one, they might be the better excused for doing the other.

Whether Christ alone be our intercessor.

But Saint Augustine tels us plainely, that although all Christians doe commend one another in their prayers to God, pro altero tamen nullus interpellat, sed ipse pro omnibus unus verusque mediator Iesus Christus; yet none doth

Christ onely our intercessour.

Aug. l. 2. c. 8. contra Parmen. 1 Ioh. 2. 1. Rom. 8 34.

intercede or mediate for the other, but he that intercedeth for all, that one and true Mediator Iesus Christ: And S. Iohn likewise saith, If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins: And so S. Paul saith, that Christ sitteth at the right hand of God, and maketh request for us.

Ob. But to all these places Bellarmine answereth, that he is not herein called the onely and sole advocate for men; and therefore, though he be the chiefe advocate, yet it proveth not but others may intercede with him.

Sol. I answer, that it needs not, when we read not of any others that are said to be our advocates but onely he.

Ob. But it is objected, that the Fathers taught and maintained this doctrine, that the Saints do intercede and pray for us: as Nazianz. orat de laude Basilij. Aug. ser. 17. de verbis Apostoli.

1. Gregory Nazianzene saith, that S. Basil was in the heavens offering Sacrifices for us, and prayers for the people.

2. Saint Augustine saith, it is an injurie to pray for a Martyr, by whose praiers we on the other side ought to be remembred; and so many others; and therefore they do pray and intercede for us.

Sol. I answer first, that whosoever will looke into that place of Nazianzene, shall there finde that Nazianzene doth but think so.

And secondly, he shall finde that he spake this Orator-like, who many times speakes to the absent as though they were present, as Pliny saith unto Cicero, salve primus omnium parens patriæ; all haile to thee that art the first and chiefest Father of thy countrey.

We yeeld that the Saints do after a sort pray for the whole Church.

And thirdly, I say that this place of Nazianzene, and likewise that of S. Augustine do prove nothing, but that in a generall manner, they pray for us, as they doe for the whole Church; which we do not denie; for that cannot be called an intercession, but rather an approbation of the intercession of Christ, and as it were clarks unto this High-Priest, to say Amen, to approve his will in heaven as we doe or should do in earth.

And so you see how Christ was annointed to be a Priest, which I thinke should be sufficient to take away all contempt from the name of Priests.

And you see to what end he was annointed Priest, first to make satisfaction for our sinnes; and secondly to make intercession for us, that we might regaine his Fathers favour: And therefore this should teach us,

What the former doctrine teacheth

1 That we merit nothing at the hands of God.

1. To cast away that deceitfull doctrine of works satisfactory, or meritorious, or call them what you will; For this our Priest hath paid for all, when we could pay for nothing; and he merited all happinesse for us, when we merited nothing but destruction unto our selves: and therefore I say with S. Bernard, that sufficit ad meritum scire, quod non sufficiunt merita, herein we merit best, when we know that we merit nothing but hell, and when we crie with the Psalmist, Enter not into judgement with thy servants, O Lord, for in thy sight can no flesh living be justified.

Psal. 143. 2.

2 That we should pray to none but to God alone. Esay 63. 16.

2. Seeing Christ is our only mediator that praieth for us, wee should onely pray to him; for Abraham hath forgotten us, and Israel is ignorant of us, but this our Priest will never forget us, he doth at all times heare us, and can at any time helpe us, if we do call unto him for helpe.

Saints not to bee prayed unto. Origen. l. 5. contra Celsum.

And therefore though we love the Angels, and reverence the Saints, their names are sweet unto us, and their memoriall is blessed; yet we will pray to none of them; for we have neither precept from God, nor practise in Gods Church to doe the same: But we find the same flatly forbidden in many places; For Origen saith, ne quis audeat preces offerre nisi soli Domino Deo; Let no man dare to offer praiers unto any but onely to the Lord God: And the councell of Laodicea doth anathematise all those, that leave the Lord Iesus, to pray unto any Saint or Angell.

Concil. Laod. c. 35.

Basil in orat de 40 Martyr. Ambros. in l. de viduis.

Ob. But against this it may be objected, that Saint Basil exhorteth us to have recourse unto them in our necessities, and to pray unto them; And so Saint Ambrose likewise likewise exhorteth the widowes to pray unto the Saints, and to the Angels when they were in their necessities.

Sol. I answer, that S. Basil doth not say confugiat & oret, but confugit & orat, that is, he telleth us what they did, and not what they should do.

That we are faine to suffer many things that we do not approve.

And it is no marvell, that people newly converted from Gentilisme to Christianity, should retaine some things of their old idolatry, and that the godly Fathers should be constrained, for a while, to tolerate those tares to be among the wheat, lest the good seed, scarce rooted, should be indangered; For Saint Augustine saith, that he knew many that adored sepulchers, and pictures, and such like, and many that drunke most excessively over the dead; but he saith, aliud est quod docemus, aliud est quod sustinemus, & hoc tolerare compellimur donec emendemus; It is one thing that we teach, another thing that is suffered untill it be amended; And for the booke of Saint Ambrose concerning widowes, I say with Molineus, that it is one of his first workes, that he made after his conversion, and therefore savoureth of infirmity, and faileth of sound Divinity in many points.

Aug. l. 1 de de moribus Eccl. & Lo c. 21. contra Faust. Manich.

Molineus contra Coefetan.

For in the same book he saith that the Martyrs, if any sin remained in them, did purge the same with their owne bloud; and this is both a doubting of the truth, and an error plaine contrarie unto all truth.

Errors of Saint Ambrose.

For first, who knowes not, that no man is void of sin?

And secondly, who knoweth not, that no man can wash away his own sins with his own bloud? For the Scripture saith plainely, that it is the bloud of Iesus Christ, that washeth and cleanseth us from all sin.

1 Ioh. 1. 7.

And therefore S. Ambrose recalleth this errour,[a] and saith, it is a miserable excuse to say we goe to God by the mediation of Saints, as wee goe to the King by his officers; for therefore (saith he) doe we go to the King, because he is a man, and knoweth not to whom to commit himself, or his affaires; but God knoweth all things, and is ready to receive all men; Ideo ad Deum promerendum suffragatore non opus est, sed mente devota; and therefore we need not any other suffragan to goe to God, but a devout and pious heart: And in his oration upon the death of Theodosius, hee saith plainely, Tu solus Deus es invocandus, tu rogandus: Thou only O God art to be praid unto, thou onely O God art to be intreated. And so much for the annointing of Iesus to be a Priest.

a Ambros. in c. 1. Ep. ad Roman.

2. He was annointed to be a King: For thy throne O Lord is for ever and ever, the scepter of thy kingdome is a scepter of righteousnesse, &c. And this we may see in Ps. 2. 6. Ier. 23. 5. 1 Chro. 17. 12. 14. and in many other places of the Scripture: And this point, viz. that Iesus is a King, and how he differeth from all other Kings, and what lessons we might learne from this doctrine, I have handled at large in my Treatise of The resolution of Pilate: and therefore now I will but onely desire all men to consider, that seeing Christ was a King, and yet refused all pompe of worldly vanities, yea Rex fieri noluit, this King would not be made a King in this world, because his kingdome was spirituall, and so not of this world, but he was a King of righteousnesse; then why should not we that professe our selves to bee his subiects, imitate this our King herein?

2 That Christ was annointed to be a King.

It is reported of King Alexander, that his souldiers would imitate him even in his stoopings; And if they imitated him in his vices, why should not wee imitate our King Christ Iesus in his vertues? His kingdome is spirituall, and he is a spirituall King; and therefore, if we would be his subjects, we must be spirituall men, and we must utterly despise these worldly vanities; For it is not possible we should do both, we cannot serve God and Mammon, we cannot be filled with temporall and spirituall things at once; For if thy hand be full of counters, thou must throw away the same, before thou canst fill it with gold, saith S. Chrysostome; even so, if thy heart be full of the riches of this worldly kingdome, there can be no roome for spirituall riches.

That we should not too eagerly seeke for the things of this world.

Mat. 6. 24.

Why then do we not seeke to be rich in Christ? nam affatim dives est qui cum Christo pauper est, for he is truly rich, that is poore in spirit and poore with Christ,

Hieron. de vita solit. in ep. ad Heliodor.

Who is truly rich.

saith Saint Hierome: and therefore seeing our kingdome is not of this world, cibus & potus sunt divitiæ nostræ, meat and drinke, food and raiment is all the riches, that we should desire, and all other things we should willingly leave unto the subjects of this world; apud quos solummodo splendor tectorum attenditur, labes animorum non attenditur; For they onely respect the gaines se of their houses, and the greatnesse of their lands, but they never looke to the foulenesse of their soules.

The care of worldlings.

And further I must desire you to note this one thing, that Christ is an eternall King, and his kingdome an everlasting kingdome; glorioſum imperium ſine fine dabit, and so shall all his subjects have an everlasting kingdome; for that good is no good that wanteth perpetuity; but our life in this world is very short, it is but a span long, it is even as nothing, orimur, morimur; as soone as we are borne we draw to our end; & cùm vir crescit vita decrescit, and while a man growes more and more in yeares, his yeares grow fewer and fewer unto him; & sic brevis vita, & ipsa brevitas semper incerta, so our life is but a very little little while, and that little while is alwaies uncertaine, for Irus erit subitò qui modò Crœsus erat; he that is rich to day may be to morrow as poore as Iob.

How short is the life of man.

Aug. l. confess.

There are twenty waies for the vanities of this world to vanish away; and therefore Saint Augustine saith, Si quid arrisisset prosperum, tædebat apprehendere, quia penè priusquam teneretur avolabat; If any worldly wealth or prosperity did offer themselves unto me, I was even loth to accept them, for I saw they were ready to flie from me before I could lay hold upon them; But the kingdome of Christ is a kingdome unshaken, οὐκ ἐχει τελος, οὐκ οἶδε περαν, it knoweth no end, it hath no bounds, and the riches of this kingdome are ἀμεταμέλητα, graces given without repentance, never to be taken away. I will therefore conclude this point with that sweet demand of Saint Augustine, Quæ major est insania, quàm pro momentanea delectatione perdere æterna gaudia, & nosmetipsos obligare ad æterna supplicia! O what great madnesse is it, or what greater madnesse can there be, then for a little momentarie delight to deprive our selves of an everlasting kingdome, and to cast our selves headlong to everlasting destruction? And so much for the Kingly office of Christ and his kingdome.

Chryſoſt. in 5. Rom. That the kingdome of Christ is without ending.

2. He was annointed to be a Prophet, for I will raise them a Prophet from the midst of their brethren like unto thee, him shall they heare: And therefore he is called pacis annunciator, & Dei fidelissimus testis, the proclaimer of our peace, and Gods most faithfull witnesse: And therefore the Lord saith, that whosoever would not heare that Prophet, that soule should bee cut off from his people.

3 That Christ was annointed to bee a Prophet. Deut. 18. 15.

Ver. 19.

Act. 3. 23.

Now the parts of his Propheticall office are these three,

1. The true exposition of the law.
2. The joyfull declaration of the Gospell. } And
3. The infallible prediction of future things.

All these hee did himselfe, while he was on earth; and now likewise by his spirit inwardly, and by the preachers outwardly, he informeth his Church of all truth and will doe the same unto the end of the world; for whosoever heareth you, heareth me, saith this great Prophet, qui omnes Prophetarum prophetias signavit & adimplevit primo adventu, which sealed and fulfilled all the prophesies of the precedent Prophets by his first comming saith Tertullian, and now left none but his owne to be accomplished.

Luk. 10. 16.

Tertul. l. contra Judæos.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

That all Christians are annointed; the dignity of Kings, Priests, and Prophets; how every one should be as a King, a Priest and a Prophet; of Christian sacrifices; of five properties of a good prayer; that we should be expert in the knowledge of God; and of the excellencie of divine knowledge.

What the former doctrine teacheth

AND from this doctrine, which I have shewed, you may observe and learne many excellent lessons; as

That all Christians are annointed with the graces of Gods Spirit. Cant. 1. 2.

1. How Iesus was annointed with the oyle of gladnesse above his fellowes: In respect of the sweetnesse of which oyle, the Church saith meliora sunt ubera tua vino, fragrantia unguentis optimis, thy love is better then wine, it is sweeter then the sweetest ointment.

And with this ointment he annointeth all his members; and from this Kings they are likewise called Christians; quia excellenter unctus corpus suum perungit, because he, being most excellently annointed, did annoint all his body, saith Saint Augustine: and so Saint John saith, wee have an ointment from that holy one, that is, from Christ the annointed; and this ointment is, the sweet gifts and graces of Gods holy Spirit, as Theodoret doth expound it, and as the Prophet David did meane, when he saith, that the pretious ointment was powred upon the head, and ran downe upon the beard, even unto Aarons beard, and ran downe to the skirts of his clothing; for this cannot bee interpreted literally, of any materiall oyle.

Aug. in Ps. 103. 1 Iohn 2. 20. Theodor. in Cant. Psal. 133. 2.

1. Because we never read that Aaron was so annointed, that the oyle ran downe to the borders of his garments.

Anton p. 1. to. 6. c. 2 §. 5.

2. Because the words immediatly following, like the dew of Hermon that fell upon the hill of Sion, must necessarily be spiritually understood; for the dew of Hermon cannot possibly descend upon the hill of Sion,

Ver 3. Dew of Hermon could not fall on the hill of Sion.

1. Because they are farre distant the one from the other.

1 Reason.

2. Because mount Sion is farre higher then mount Hermon, as Hugo Cardinalis doth observe.

2 Reason.

And therefore this must be understood of that spirituall oyle of gladnesse, the most excellent graces of Gods spirit, that were powred upon the head Christ Iesus without measure, and thence ran downe upon the beard, that is, the Apostles and Preachers, and so to the skirts of his clothing, that is, to all faithfull Christians, be they never so meane.

Who are the beard. Who are the skirts.

And therefore if we be Christians, that is, annointed with the graces of Gods Spirit, odor bonus sumus Deo, we smell sweetly in the sight of God; wee are like the smell of a pleasant field, which the Lord hath blessed, and he will finde in us a savour of rest. But if we live in loathsome sin, we shall smel most odious in the nostrils of God. And 2 Cor. 2. 15. Gen. 27. 27.

2. You see how Christ was annointed to be King, Priest, and Prophet: which should teach us two especiall lessons.

2 Lesson.

1. The dignity, the superiority, and the excellency of Kings, Priests, and Prophets above all others; and that in many respects: For Dignity of Kings, Priests, and Prophets. 1 Resp.

1. They onely were annointed: a sufficient argument of soveraignty; for if you powre Water, Wine, Vineger, and Oyle together, they say Oyle will needs bee uppermost.

2. They were not onely annointed with oyle, sed oleo sancto, but with holy oyle; for he took it not from the Apothecaries shop, or the Merchants warehouse; but from the Sanctuarie; to teach us, that sacred is their office, whereunto they are designed, sacred the power wherewith they are indued, and sacred the persons whereunto it was applied: and therefore this should teach all men to render unto theſe their due reſpects, and to beware of the contradiction of Corah, leſt we fall into the ſame deſtruction.

2 Resp.

Queſt. But it may be ſome will ſay, what if theſe annointed prove wicked? if Kings prove Tyrants, Prieſts Hereticks, and Prophets lewd and lying Prophets, are we ſtil injoyned to do the ſame reverence, and to ſhew the like obedience unto them?

I anſwer, that ſome indeed are of the mind, that if this annointing prove defective, then this oyle may be wiped off, and as the Iewes gave their bill of divorcement, ſo we ſhould have our writ, de juſta abdicatione, of juſt renunciation.

Sol. That inferiours muſt never ſtand againſt their ſuperiours. But if this were allowed, all Kings would ſoon be made Tyrants, and all Prieſts Hereticks, in the judgement of the diſobedient; and therefore we ſay, Prove they what they will, yet ſtill thou art bound to obey in all civill and outward actions, and never to rebell in any action; for the annointing of theſe men did not give them grace to execute their offices, but only a juſt title to enjoy their offices; neither doth it include any thing but a juſt title of adminiſtration, nor exclude any thing but uſurpation; for we read that Cyrus was Chriſtus, annointed, though no Chriſtian, and Iulian was unctus, though worſe than a Pagan, and ſo Saul was the annointed of God when he was forſaken of the Spirit of God; and yet David would not touch Saul, though he was a tyrant, and the Chriſtians would not lift up their hands againſt Iulian, though he was an Apoſtata; becauſe they were annointed, that is, appointed of the Lord, though they were none of the true ſervants of the Lord; for the Lord many times will place wicked men over us for our correction, as well as godly men for our conſolation: and therefore when God placeth any, we muſt not ſeek to diſplace him, though he were never ſo wicked, unleſſe it be by our private prayers, and publike patience.

In caſes of extremity we may flie to ſave our lives. Yet I deny not, but in caſes of great extremities, where loſſe of life, or danger of ſoule is imminent, we may, with Lot, flie and haſte away to ſave our ſelves, as David did from Saul; but to take armes againſt the Lords annointed, or any waies to prove injurious unto them, to their perſons, places, or dignities, we may no waies do it, though we had power to do it: as that moſt excellent example of David towards Saul doth moſt excellently declare. 1 Sam 26.9.&c.

Amb. Orat in Auxent. We muſt not rebell againſt the moſt wicked Kings. And therefore S. Ambroſe ſaith, that in ſuch a caſe we may refuſe the doing of the fact, if it be contrary to the Word of God, but we may not refuſe to ſubmit our ſelves to the penalty; we may ſigh and mourne, but we may not ſtirre up rebellion; we may humbly intreat and beſeech, but we may not ſtubbornly fight; for we are bound to yeeld our true allegiance, though we be forbidden to yeeld to any wicked performance: And what is ſaid of Kings, I ſay the ſame of Prieſts, that their people ſhould have no hand in their depoſition; nam ſapientis eſt ſapientes judicare, for they cannot judge of us, and they ever hate us, becauſe we hate their vices.

And ſo much for the dignity and ſoveraignty of Kings, Prieſts and Prophets.

Chriſt was annointed King, Prieſt, and Prophet, to make every Chriſtian a King, a Prieſt, and a Prophet. Apoc. 1.6. Acts 2.24. 3. You ſee that from Chriſtus we are all called Chriſtians; it muſt needs therfore follow, that we are all annointed to be Kings, Prieſts, and Prophets, and that as he hath appointed Kings, Prieſts, and Prophets to be ſuch over many, ſo he hath annointed every man to be ſuch over himſelfe; for ſo the Scripture ſheweth, he made us Kings and Prieſts unto God his Father; and againe, I will powre out my Spirit upon all fleſh, and your ſonnes and your daughters ſhall propheſie, ſaith the Lord: And therefore this ſhould teach every man,

Which ſheweth that every one ſhould 1 Rule as a King over his own affections. 1. As a King to rule and raigne over his owne affections, and as the Poet ſaith of Æolus,

Luctantes ventos tempeſtateſq; ſonoras,
Imperio premit, ac vinclis & carcere frænat.
Virgil. Æneid. l. 1.

To bridle all our vntamed luſts, and to ſuppreſſe all the unruly motions of our fleſh; for this is moſt certain, that againſt all the temptations of ſin, there is no better remedy than the mortification of our fleſh, and the ſuppreſſion of our affections; but if we be tam graviter tentati, ſo violently aſſaulted, and ſo ſtrongly beſet againſt, that we cannot utterly expell them, nor perfectly ſubdue them, then let us ever look to this, ut minimè ſeparati, that they may never ſubdue us and deprive us of our kingdome: Aug. de civit Dei. l. 1. c. 10.

For

For, if they once get the upper hand over us, we ſhall be no longer Kings, but the bond-ſlaves of ſin and Satan.

And therefore, ut barbara gens, optima ſtens, peſſima ridens; as barbarous men are beſt ſubdued, but the worſt of all when they have their liberty; ſo theſe barbarous luſts of our fleſh muſt be ſubdued, if ever we would bee happy Kings, and the Babyloniſh children muſt be taken, and daſhed againſt the wals. (as S. Auguſtine expoundeth thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt) if ever we would be happy. Idem in Pſal 137.

2. As Prieſts, we ſhould all offer up thoſe (chriſtian ſacrifices that are holy and acceptable unto God: and moſt eſpecially theſe five. 2 To offer ſacrifices as Prieſts. Perkins in expoſ. Symb.

1. A moſt pure and an upright life, as the Prophet David ſheweth, offer the ſacrifice of righteouſneſſe, that is, reddite unicuique quod ſuum eſt, deale juſtly and honeſtly with every man, as holy Iob did, that was a juſt and an upright man, for this is a wonderfull pleaſing ſacrifice in the ſight of God, and whoſoever will uſe the ſame, ſhall, with Noah, find grace and favour with God. Five Chriſtian ſacrifices. 1 A pure life. Pſal. 4 6. An upright life is an acceptable ſacrifice to God. Gen 6.8.

Iuſtitia in ſeſe virtutes continet omnes.

2. We ſhould offer up all manner of prayers and ſupplications, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; for this is likewiſe a moſt acceptable ſacrifice unto God, as the Prophet David ſheweth, Let my prayer be directed in thy ſight as the incenſe, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening ſacrifice. 2 Prayers and ſupplications. 1 Tim 2.1. Pſal. 141.2. Prayer is a ſweet ſacrifice. Two things obſervable.

Now becauſe prayer is ſo acceptable a ſacrifice unto God, and ſo profitable an action unto man, I will in few words ſhew thee how it muſt be done.

1. Thou muſt prepare thy ſelfe before thou commeſt to pray, for as it is the note of wicked men, that they have not called upon God, ſo it is the puniſhment of a reprobate man, when his prayer ſhall be turned into ſin; but if the fountaine be foule, or the conduit defiled, or the cup polluted, how can the liquour chooſe but be corrupted? even ſo if our hearts be full of malice, if our mouthes be full of bitterneſſe, and our hands be full of bloud, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, how can it be but thoſe prayers, that proceed from thence, ſhould be turned into ſinne? and therefore if we would be heard in what we ask, we muſt heare him in what he commands; that is, waſh you; and make you cleane, and then pray and he will heare you, offer up this ſacrifice, and he will accept it; or els, as the precious ſtone Diacletes leeſeth all her vertues, being once put in a dead mans mouth, ſo doth that prayer which proceeds from a Sinners mouth. 1 How we muſt prepare our ſelves before we pray. Pſal 53.4. Pſal 109.7. Eſa.1.16.

2. When thou haſt prepared thy ſelfe for prayer, ſet the patterne of prayer, (that is, Chriſt himſelfe) before thy face, and look how he prayed, and ſo do thou. 2 How our prayers ſhould be made.

For,
1. He kneeled downe, in all humility.
2. He ſaid, Father, in the aſſurance of faith.
3. He ſaid, O my Father, to ſhew his zeale.
4. He prayed three times, to ſhew his conſtancy. And
5. Vpon the croſſe he ſaid, Father forgive them, to ſhew his charity.

1. Humility then muſt be the firſt ſtone in this building; for the prayer of the lowly pierceth the skies, ſaith Syracides; and this muſt be, not onely inwardly in our hearts, but alſo outwardly upon our knees, we ſhould worſhip, and fall downe, and kneele before the Lord our maker. Eccl. 5.15. 1 The humble prayer is ſooneſt heard. Pſal. 95.6.

2. As Humility caſteth us downe, and ſheweth, ubi non ſit remedium, that in us there is no health, ſo faith muſt raiſe us up and ſhew us ubi ſit remedium, where we may have help. 2 We muſt pray in faith.

And S. Cyprian ſaith, that juxta menſuram fidei, erit menſura impetrandi, according to the meaſure of thy faith, ſhall be the meaſure of thy obtaining; for as a little veſſell cannot carry much water, ſo a little faith cannot obtaine great matters: and therefore when you aske, aske in faith, and waver not, ſaith the Apoſtle. Cypr. ad Donat. Iam. 1.6

3. To faith we muſt joyne zeale; for God heareth the deſire of the poore, & vocem in ſilentio, and the ſecret ſilent voice of the affection; quia ad cordis potius vocem, quam ad corporis aures ejus aperta ſunt, becauſe he looketh rather to the deſire of the heart, than to the voice of the tongue, ſaith S. Bernard: and therefore a vehement deſire is a loud cry, as the Lord ſheweth of Moſes, Why crieſt thou unto me? and yet he ſaid never a word. 3 We muſt ever pray with zeale. Pſal. 10.19. Exod. 14.15.

How idle thoughts do many times disturbe us when we pray.

Hieron. in dialog. ad Lucifer.

But alas, such is our weakenesse, that as the furies are described to have snakes and serpents upon their heads, instead of haires; so, by Satans subtilty and our own infirmity, our heads are distracted with idle thoughts, when we should be most intentive about heavenly meditations: And so S. Hierom complained, that his mind would be now and then walking in the galleries of Rome, when his tongue would be talking with God.

And I read a pretty story alledged ex vitis patrum, that one offered his horse unto his fellow, if he would say his Lords Prayer, and thinke on nothing but God; and he began, Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, but I must have the bridle too, said he; no nor horse neither, said the other; for thou hast lost both already. This only sheweth, that many times when we pray to God, the divell is most busie to make our minds wander about other worldly things.

And therefore we should watch in prayer, that our hearts and tongues may go together; for verbum forense, the outward work only is but like the loathsome smoake of Sodom, whereas the devotion of the heart is like the pleasant perfume of the sweetest frankincense.

4 We must persevere in prayer. Lev 6.12. Plut. in Num. Polibii l. 6. 12.

4. We must continue and persevere in prayer, and our zeale herein must be like the fire that the Vestall virgins kept in Rome, or rather like the sacrificing fire upon the altar, that ever burnt, and never went out, and as the stone Asbestos in Arcadia, (mentioned by Solinus) which being once set on fire, cannot be quenched againe; so our hearts being once kindled with zeale, by the fire of Gods Spirit, should alwaies remaine fervent in our prayers to God.

Iam 5.10.

5 We must be in love with all men when we pray. Mat. 6.14.

5. Lastly, our prayers should be in charity; for prayer indeed is διανεσμα τ ἀγάπης, the ingaging of our love and charity; for we desire forgivenesse of God no otherwise than as we forgive our brethren.

Now such a prayer made in humility, in faith, in zeale, with continuance, and in charity, is such a sacrifice, so acceptable unto God, that he will heare us, that he will help us, that he will give us all good, and that he will deliver us from all evill.

——Nondum mihi defuit hostis.

I have had my part in afflictions, I never wanted enemies; yet prayer delivered me out of all their malice.

Euseb. in vita Constant. A most excellent example of a godly man.

I read of many that alwaies used to pray, as that most Christian Constantine, Gorgonia, Trasilla, and divers others; but above all, I admire Paul the Eremite, that (as S. Hierom saith) was found dead, kneeling upon his knees, holding up his hands, and looking with his eyes to heaven; & sic cadaver mortui officioso gestu precabatur, and so the dead corpse, by this officious gesture, did seem to pray: O how happy was the soule of that man without the body, when as the body without the soule seemed so devout!

Luke 12.43.

O that it might be so with me, that I might even weary and weare out my selfe in prayer, that whensoever my master commeth, he should find me so doing.

3 Thankfulnesse is the only thing God requireth at our hands.

3. Praises and thanksgiving are very acceptable sacrifices unto God; for who so offereth me thanks and praise, he honoureth me, saith the Lord: and therefore the Apostle saith, Let us by him offer the sacrifice of praise alwaies to God, that is, the fruit of the lips which confesse his name; where I desire you to observe, that the Apostle would have us alwaies to offer this sacrifice unto God; in other sacrifices we may have a cessation, but this must be done without intermission; and no marvell; nam cum Deus nunquam cessat benefacere, ideo semper debet homo gratias agere, for seeing God ever bestowes blessings and graces upon man, therefore man should never cease to render thanks unto God, saith S Gregory. And therefore holy David would even at midnight praise the Lord for his righteous judgements; for it becommeth well the just to be thankfull: and therefore væ tacentibus de te Domine, wo to them that are mute in rendring thanks and praises unto God; for this is all that we render unto God, for all the benefits that he hath done unto us; even to take the cup of salvation, and to call upon the name of the Lord.

Psal 50.23. Heb. 13.15.

Gregor.

Psal 119.62.

Aug. in Confess. Psal. 136.

4 Relieving the poore is most pleasing unto God. Phil. 4.18.

4. Relieving the poore is another sacrifice, that we are to offer, as the Apostle sheweth; for I was even filled (saith he) after that I had received of Epaphroditus, that that which came from you, an odour that ſmelleth ſweet, and a ſacrifice pleaſant and acceptable to God: and therefore we ſhould never forget to beſtow almes upon the poore, quia manus pauperis eſt gazaphylacium Chriſti; for the hand of the poore is the ſtore-houſe of Chriſt: and S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non memini me legiſſe mala morte mortuum, qui opera charitatis libenter exercuit; I could never remember any one that died an ill death, which did willingly and bountifully beſtow his almes and charity upon the poore; for he hath many interceſſours, and whatſoever we beſtow upon them, we lend unto the Lord, and lay it up in ſtore for our ſelves againſt the time of need: And this our Saviour ſheweth, when he ſaith unto the godly, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, &c. For I was hungry, and you gave me meat, I was thirſty, and you gave me drinke, &c.

Chryſoſtome.

Mat. 25. 35.

5. True repentance is not of leaſt account with God, for the ſacrifice of God is a contrite ſpirit, a broken and a contrite heart, O God, wilt thou not deſpiſe.

5 True repentance.

Pſal 51. 17.

But here you muſt underſtand that true repentance conſiſteth not only in a bare confeſſion, I have done ſuch a fault, and I am ſorrie for it, but it muſt have alſo true contrition, a broken and a contrite heart, ſaith the Prophet; for it is moſt certaine that ubi dolor ſinitur, ibi deficit pœnitentia; where there is no true griefe and ſorrow for ſinne, there can be no true repentance in the heart, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh.

Aug. de verb pœnitent c. 13.

And therefore I wiſh that my head were full of water, and mine eyes a fountaine of teares, that I might weepe day and night for my manifold ſinnes and tranſgreſſions; quia oratio Deum lenit, lachryma cogunt, that as my prayers ſhould move him, ſo my teares might compell him to have mercy upon me.

Ier. 9 1:

Hierom. in Eſaiam

Theſe and ſuch like are the ſacrifices that every true Chriſtian man, as a true Prieſt, is bound to offer unto God.

2 To be expert in the knowledge of God and of his will, as Prophets.

3. As a Prophet, every Chriſtian man ſhould diſpell from himſelfe the miſt of ignorance, and increaſe in all manner of knowledge and underſtanding, that he may know what the good and acceptable will of God is; for there is nothing more unbeſeeming a Chriſtian, than ignorance of thoſe things that concerne Gods will, and his own ſalvation.

The Philoſophers indeed could pierce the ſecrets of nature, and the Iewes had wit enough, to make a large ſhekle, and a ſmall Epha; and ſo have we all to know the things of this life; yet all this can but (with Adam) teach us a way to run away from God, to make us cry with the Babylonians, as the Prophet ſpeaketh of them, thy wiſdome O Babel hath cauſed thee to fall, and in the end to overthrow us, as the Poet ſaith of himſelfe,

Gen. 3. 8.

Ingenio perij qui miſer ipſe meo.

And therefore Chriſt, which is the way, the truth, and the life, that he might bring us to eternall life, hath given us his word, and annointed us with his grace, and powred on us of his Spirit, that we might in ſome meaſure, underſtand his word and know his will, and edifie our ſelves in our moſt holy faith, and that we might know that this is eternall life, even to know God, and whom he hath ſent, Ieſus Chriſt. For

Ioh. 17. 3.

The excellency of divine knowledge

This is nobiliſſima ſcientiarum, & ſcientia nobiliſſimorum, the moſt excellent knowledge in the world, and the fitteſt knowledge for the nobleſt men of the world; Scientia Prophetarum Dei, a knowledge, that the Magitians of Egypt, the Philoſophers of Athens, the Rabbins of the Iewes, and all the worldly wiſe men are ignorant of it; but the true Prophets of Chriſt, and the true Chriſtians do onely know it.

Now the only way to get this knowledge is, to ſearch the Scriptures; for they teſtifie of me, ſaith our Saviour; and by them, ſaith S. Hierom, plenam potes Dei intelligere voluntatem, thou maiſt underſtand the whole will of God; At ignorantia Scripturarum eſt ignorantia Chriſti; but the ignorance of the Scriptures, is to be ignorant of Chriſt, and to be folded and ſwadled in all errours, as our Saviour ſheweth, Mat. 21. 29.

Hieron. ad Demet. Idem in prooem. in Iſaiam.

And therefore if we would be true Chriſtian Prophets, let us ever be converſant

Aug. Epist. 3. ad Volus.

Psal. 119. 18.

sant in the Word of God; and because the Scriptures, licet omnibus accessibiles, paucissimis tamen penetrabiles, though they be accessible unto all, because all may have them, and all may heare them; yet are they understood but of very few; therefore we should pray to God, that he would open the eyes of our understanding, that we may see the wondrous things of his law, and that we may throughly know the whole will of God; and then we should pray for grace to do the will of God, while we are in this mortall life, that we may live in peace with God in everlasting life, through Iesus Christ our Lord, who is blessed for evermore; and to whom be all glory and dominion, both now and for ever and ever. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

Christ saith, God delights not in much babling, and therefore I made these prayers short, fitting all the chiefest occasions: they will neither burthen thy memory, nor hinder thy affaires.

Grace before meat.

SAnctifie, good Lord, these thy creatures for us; and us for thy service: give us grace, we pray thee, to receive them thankfully, and to use them soberly, to thy praise, and our comfort, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Grace after meat.

BLessed be the name of our most blessed God, for these and for all other blessings that we have received from him, through Iesus Christ our Lord.

O Lord save thy Church, preserve our King, give us thy grace, and send us peace for Christ his sake. Amen.

A Prayer as we go to bed.

OLord Iesus Christ, forgive me, I pray thee, all the sinnes that I have committed this day against thee, and preserve me this night from all dangers; I go naked into my bed, but I beseech thee cloath me with thy righteousnesse, that I may not go hence naked into my grave. Amen.

A Prayer when thou risest from bed.

OSweet Iesus Christ, I most humbly thank thee for the comfortable rest, that thou hast given this night unto my wearied body, I thank thee for this light that shineth upon me, and I beseech thee grant that the light of thy heavenly truth may shine in my heart; preserve me this day from all evill, and guide me in thy way, by thy holy Spirit. Amen.

A Prayer when thou goest to heare a Sermon.

OMost sweet and blessed Saviour, I do acknowledge and confesse mine ignorance, and I come unto thee to be instructed, Lord open mine eares, that I may diligently hearken unto the voice of thy Preacher: and open mine heart, as thou didst the heart of Lidia, that the words which I heare with mine eares, may be ingrafted in my heart, and imbraced in my soule, to thy glory, and to mine own endlesse comfort. Amen.

A prayer when thou goest to the communion.

OEternall God, I see thy justice, and thy hatred against sin, and I see the greatnesse of thy love to mankind, that for the washing of our sins and the saving of our soules, thou gavest thy only Sonne, thus to be broken, and to shed his precious bloud. I pray thee good Lord make me partaker of all the benefits of his passion, and let his death satisfie thy justice for all my sins and transgressions. Amen.

A

A thanksgiving after the Communion.

OMoſt gracious God and loving Father, as thou haſt given thine only Sonne Ieſus Chriſt to die for our ſinnes, and to be the bleſſed food of our ſoules, ſo we moſt humbly beſeech thee to give us grace that we may die unto ſin, and ſhew our ſelves truly thankfull unto thee for theſe unſpeakable bleſſings, through the ſame Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer to be ſaid in afflictions.

OMoſt juſt and righteous God, thou alwaies puniſheſt man for ſin, and I confeſſe O Lord that my ſinnes deſerve a great deale more puniſhment than thou haſt laid upon me; for I have ſinned againſt heaven and againſt thee, and I am no more worthy to be called thy ſonne: but thou deſireſt not the death of a ſinner, and therefore I moſt humbly beſeech thee to forgive me all my ſins, and to turne away thine anger from me, to give me grace that I may make good uſe of this thy fatherly chaſtiſement, and to deliver me from the ſame when it pleaſeth thee, for Ieſus Chriſt his ſake. Amen.

A Prayer to be ſaid in our ſickneſſe.

OEternall and ever-living God, I thy poore and wretched ſervant, do acknowledge mine iniquity, I do ſee mine infirmity, I am not able to help my ſelfe, and I do confeſſe that thou art juſt and righteous, thou knoweſt beſt what thou haſt to do, and it is beſt for me to ſubmit my ſelfe to thy will. And therefore I do moſt earneſtly intreat thee to reſtore me my health, if it be thy will, or els to give me patience to indure this ſickneſſe, to ſtrengthen my faith againſt all temptations, to make me moſt willing to forſake this world, and moſt ready to come unto thee whenſoever thou calleſt me; Grant this, O gracious God, for Ieſus Chriſt his ſake. Amen.

A Prayer to be ſaid at the very houre of death.

OSaviour of the world, ſave me, forgive me all my ſins, and receive my ſoule into thy hands, O ſweet Ieſus come, even ſo come quickly. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

VII. GOLDEN CANDLESTICKS;

HOLDING THE SEVEN GREATEST Lights of Christian Religion.

Shewing unto all men what they should beleeve, and how they ought to walke in this life, that they may attaine unto eternall life.

By GR. WILLIAMS Doctor in Divinity.

LONDON,
Printed by George Miller, for Philemon Stephens and Christopher Meridith, at the golden Lyon in Pauls Church-yard.
MDCXXXV.

The Contents of the whole Booke.

The summe whereof was preached,
1 The Misery of Man. Rom. 6. 23.	At Pauls Crosse.
2 The Knowledge of God. Exod. 34. 6, 7.	Before the King at Greene-wich.
3 The Incarnation of the Word. Ioh. 1, 14.	At S. Maries in Cambridge.
4 The Passion of the Messias. Luke 24. 46.
5 The Resurrection of Christ. Matth. 28. 5, 6.	Within the Cathedrall Church of S. Paul.
6 The Ascention of our Saviour, and the Donation of the Holy Ghost. Ephes. 4. 5	At S. Maries in Cambridge.
7 The duty of Christians. 1 Thess. 5. 28.	Before the King at Theobalds.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE AND truly Religious, PHILIP HERBERT, Earle of Montgomery, Baron of Sherland, and Knight of the most Honourable Order of the Garter; and to the most Vertuous and Zealously Religious Lady, the Lady SVSAN, his most deere and loving Wife; and to those five blessed branches, their most sweet, gracious and hopefull children, the Lord CHARLES HERBERT, the Lady Anna-Sophia Herbert, M. Philip Herbert, M. William Herbert, and M. James Herbert; all grace and happinesse in this life, and eternall blessednesse in the life to come.

Right Honourable:

TO you seaven, I dedicate these seaven Golden Candlestickes; and to whom should I dedicate the same, but to you? for in your house, and by your light I have composed them; and God hath blessed you, not onely in making you great, through the favour of Mutable men, but especially in making you good through the immutable grace and favour of himselfe which changeth not, and which hath planted his feare in your hearts, and diffused those graces into your soules, that doe infallibly accompany salvation, and make you to shine as you doe, for the sincerity of your profession in the truth of the Gospell, and the uprightnesse of your hearts, which have beene ever seene void of all double courtly dealing, amongst a crooked and perverse generation, whereof I had almost said, the greatest part is either basely filled with hypocriticall flattery, or most pittifully blinded with idololatricall impiety; and as a sure pledge of his pure love unto your Honours, he hath given unto you such an inestimable gift, so many, so sweet, and so gracefull children, which for all good parts and endowments of nature, and for infallible signes of grace, I dare boldly say it, (and I may the rather say it, because, rather then any other, I doe more experimentally know it) God hath annointed above their fellowes*, that neither you nor all yours can be sufficiently thankefull unto God for them; so great a blessing it is, to have so many, so many such Olive branches round about your Table. And therefore as God hath blessed your Honours, and made you great lights to shine for godly zeale in this wicked declininig world, and to be patternes of true piety unto others round about you; So I doe assure my selfe, you will not disdaine to accept and peruse these my labours, which as a small expression of my unfained thankfullnesse for those manifold testimonies of your love and favours unto me, farre I confesse beyond my deserts, I doe most sincerely dedicate unto your Honours, for whose compleate happinesse my witnesse is in Heaven, that since first I belonged unto you, I have daily prayed upon my bended knees; and I doe unfainedly acknowledge that you deserve more from me, then I can performe me, and have performed more unto me then I can any waies deserve from you: And therfore I presumed to dedicate these Treatises unto your Honours, not to shelter them from any stormes of malevolent tongues, but to publish that thankefullnesse unto the world, which my heart ever acknowledgeth to be due unto you: For I know it is fit that whosoever publisheth any thing unfit, should beare the whole burthen of his own fault, and whosoever ventureth to appeare in print, must expect the common lot of all Writers, to be variously censured of various dispositions; Some as Nebuzaradan burnt the Temple, but kept the gold, will be content to take the matter, and yet blame the Author; others will reade it, οὐχ ἵνα κρίνωσιν ἀλλ' ἵνα κακίκωσιν, not to better themselves, but to censure others; In all these I would never desire Patrone to defend me, nor feare enemy to deprave me; for what is good will defend it selfe, and to flatter those whose pennes are silent, and their tongues alwaies babling, to condemne others in what they cannot mend themselves, were impiety, and to feare them imbecillity; for to please all is unpossible, and to indeavour it is folly: And therefore I hope you will receive them as I tender them. They be not unbeseeming to

* Especially that worthily beloved child, my Lord CHARLES HERBERT; of whom for his admired towardnes, I could truly say, more then any, that know him not, would easily believe.

Greg. Cur. past. 3. p. c. 20. Nazian. in pacif. 2.

to be knowne by the greatest Monarches, for they containe not the ſmoaking fume of humane reaſonings, nor the meandrian windings of Controverſiall ſubtilties, but the pureſt lights of all Chriſtian Religion; for I ſaw that as the Athenians were ever deſirous of novelties, ſo to ſatisfie this Criticke age, affecting nothing ſo well as quiddities, too many men have addreſt their mindes to diſputable Controverſies; & I found, though with griefe, that the Adverſaries on either ſide, and eſpecially the Pontificials, as if there were not Controverſies enough in Religion, doe often forge tenents out of their owne braines, and impute them each one againſt the other; and ſo each Adverſary ſtrives to make the other ſay what indeed he abhorres to thinke; whereby it happeneth that a great part of diſputations, being about imaginary Controverſies, is but like a skirmiſhing in the ayre, which ſeemeth furious, but ſtriketh no man; and is vainely ſpent to no purpoſe, but to increaſe Schiſme, and to involve themſelves within the thickets of inextricable labyrinths; becauſe jarring and jangling about errours, they let paſſe the maine grounds of truth, and ſtriving to find out new waies, they doe quite forget the old way, which is the good way, and are become almoſt ignorant of the firſt and chiefeſt Principles of Religion. Such is the pollicie of Satan, to buſie their heads about the leſſe needfull Controverſies, thereby to make them the leſſe diligent to inquire after the moſt neceſſary counſels of their ſalvation. And therefore conſidering with my ſelfe what the Apoſtle ſaith, that he deſired to know nothing but Ieſus Chriſt, and him crucified; I have applyed my ſelfe to treate of theſe enſuing Theames: I confeſſe my manner of handling them is like my ſelfe, plaine and homely, without any gorgeous garments of Rhetoricall ornaments; becauſe I ever deſired to ſpeake rather for the edification of my hearers, then for the oſtentation of my ſelfe; but I aſſure you the matter is like them from whom I received it, ſound and good; fit to feede all thoſe Chriſtians that deſire rather to have their hungry ſoules fed with the ſincere milke of Gods Word, then their itching eares tickled with the inticing ſpeech of mans wiſedome: for they doe containe the knowledge of our ſelves, how poore and miſerable we are become by ſinne, the knowledge of the true and eternall God, and the knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt, God and Man, then whom there is no greater, no better; which few leſſons are alone able to make us happy. I need ſpeake no more of the worke, let it ſpeake for me: I referre all to God, who eſteemeth of our indea- vours, not by their event, but by our intent; but remembring that presenting your Honours with a Booke, I must not make a Booke of an Epistle, I onely desire you to accept these notes of a Schollers observation, who desires not so much to make himselfe knowne, as to acknowledge his duty to God, and his desire to do him service, to extoll his name in Heaven, and not to gaine himselfe a name on Earth, and to have all his thoughts and workes to honour Christ, or to be dishonoured himselfe for no Christian. So with my daily prayers for you and all yours, I humbly take my leave and rest;

Your Honours true servant and most humble Chaplaine, in all Christian service, ever to be commanded,

GR. WILLIAMS.

TO
THE RIGHT REVEREND FATHER
in GOD, IOHN, Lord Biſhop of Saint Aſaph, and to the Right Worſhipfull, the truly Honoured Sir IOHN WYNNE Knight and Baronet; all grace and happineſſe in this life, and eternall happineſſe in the life to come.

Right Reverend Father,

I Write not this unto your Lordſhip by baſe flattery, to beg any thing of you; for I doe endeavour alwaies to ſupport my meane eſtate by meditating on the Apoſtles leſſon, in any ſtate to be contented; and I know, that as wee came naked into this world, ſo we ſhall all returne naked hence againe: but I preſume to affixe theſe few lines unto theſe my poore labours, to aſſure the world of mine unfained joy to ſee your Lordſhip placed in that ſeate of government wherein you are; in a certaine hope, that (as Saint Paul ſaid of Timothy) according to the propheſies that went afore of you, that is, the Propheticall expectation that all men conceived of you; and the faire promiſes that your Religious and alwaies upright carriage hath made unto us; your Lordſhip will be a great comfort, and a Divine bleſſing unto that whole Dioceſſe wherein you live. I know it is the practiſe of many, I dare not ſay of any Biſhop, either baſely to ſell their ſpirituall promotions, or ſiniſterly to beſtow them on their friends, their kinſmen and alliances; and yet I ſay not the Church of England doth imitate that painted Harlot of Babylon, nor that Ieruſalem juſtifieth Samaria; but as Demodocus ſaid of the Mileſians, they were no fooles, and yet they did the ſame things that fooles did; ſo I feare that we may ſay of many in the Church of England; we are no Pagans, no Popes, no Papiſts; piſts, no worldlings, no carnall men; and yet though I ſay not that any man doth ill, yet I doubt we doe not all well, not much better then they uſe to doe herein. I confeſſe the Apoſtle noteth it as a vice of the latter times, to be without naturall affection; but if gifts blinde the eyes of the wiſe, that they pervert judgement, I doubt not but this carnall love of fleſh and bloud will ſometimes with Mydas, preferre Pan before Apollo: and this naturall affection to kinred, being unworthieſt, will not onely deject the mindes of painefull men, and cauſe ſome rather to ſeeke to be allied to others, then to attaine unto any worth in themſelves; but it muſt alſo turne to the hurt and detriment of the whole Church of God, and doth apparantly ſhew ſuch ſpirituall Patrons to be indeed carnally minded; for doe not the Publicans and Sinners even the ſame? and therefore though I wiſh all men to abound in love and affection unto their Kinſ-folkes; yet in this caſe, I would to God that all of us, would imitate Levi, who ſaid unto his Father, and to his mother, I have not ſeene him, neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his owne children, but obſerved Gods Word, and kept his covenant; that we would ſet God alwaies before our eyes; and laying aſide all ſiniſter reſpects, would doe only what ſhould be moſt for Gods glory, for the encouragement of painefull Preachers, and for the beſt benefit unto the people of God: for if Chriſt, being loſt by Mary and Ioſeph, could not be found among his owne friends and kinſ-folkes, theſe men ſhould take heed they find him not among theirs. I could ſay more of this point, and yet not ſo much as Saint Bernard ſaith unto Eugenius, of many other points like to this: but this will ſerve to be a witneſſe againſt ſome at the dreadfull day, and perhaps to ſtirre up as much rage againſt my ſelfe, as the Iewes had againſt Saint Stephen, for ſpeaking this truth againſt them that uſe ſuch dealing againſt God: If it doth, I ſay as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaid of the rage of that cruell Empreſſe: If they keepe me poore, I know that Chriſt had not an houſe to put his head in; if they ſilence me and thruſt me out of their Sinagogue; ſo was that poore man that confeſſed Chriſt, and the Apoſtles injoyned not to ſpeake in the Name of Chriſt; if they caſt me into priſon, ſo was Ieremy, Saint Peter, Saint Paul, and many more; If I be forced to flie my Countrey, I have that beloved Iohn, and that Atlas-like Athanaſius for preſidents of the like uſage; or whatſoever elſe ſhould be done unto me, I have the holy Martyrs for my fellow-ſufferers, and I will never count my life deere unto me, ſo I may finiſh my courſe with joy; but I will by Gods helpe, be ever ready, with all my heart, to ſuffer any thing for the Name of Ieſus Chriſt, and for the leaſt jot of his truth. But I doe much rejoyce in that aſſured cofidence which I have, that your Lordſhip will herein, as well as in all other points of true piety, be an heavenly ſhining light and preſident unto all other circumſtant and ſucceeding Biſhops, and other Patrons whatſoever; and to that end my prayers ſhall ever continue for your Lordſhip.

And for you my moſt worthy friend, and never to be forgotten Benefactor, Sir Iohn Wynne, I muſt, becauſe I may truely ſay of you with the Poet, Ego te intus & in cute novi, I am ſo intimately and inwardly ac-

Deut. 33. 9.

Neither doe I ſay this to deny that men ſhould doe for their kinſfolke being worthy men, but that they ſhould not doe this, neglecting others farre more worthy.

acquainted with your very heart and affections, moſt earneſtly pray to God for your long continuance amongſt us: not onely becauſe of your continuall love and favours unto me and mine, but eſpecially to be, as you have beene hitherto, the chiefeſt pillar of civill governement, the beſt reliever of our poore and needy, and the moſt apparant patterne of all good works of piety and charity in all theſe parts wherin you live: and you have not loſt your reward; for God hath bleſſed you and your Lady with many bleſſed children, all fearing God; I ſaid enough, though I could truly ſay much more hereof; ſuch a comfort, that not many men have the like; and God renueth your yeares as the Eagles, and I hope yet will add unto your daies, as he did unto the daies of Ezechias: and yet this is nothing; Quia merces tuã apud Deum; in reſpect of that great reward which you ſhall have of God; becauſe that by continuance in well doing, you ſhall be ſure to have glory, and honour, and immortality; and therefore moſt worthy Knight, as I beare witneſſe of this truth which I have ſeene and know of your Religious heart, fearing God, full of good, ſo I ſay unto you, as Chriſt ſaith unto the Church of Smyrna, Goe on in your courſe of godlineſſe, and be faithfull unto the death, and you ſhall have the Crowne of life, when the Lord ſhall ſay unto you, Euge ſerve bone, Well done thou good and faithfull ſervant, enter thou into thy Maſters joy. Amen.

Your Lordſhips, and your Worſhips

in all Chriſtian ſervice,

to be commanded,

GR. WILLIAMS.

To the Christian READER.

Deare and Christian Reader:

THe more grace any man receiveth from God, the more thankefullnesse and service he oweth to God: And I confesse God hath shewed me farre more then usuall favours, which I assure my selfe he denyed to many farre more worthy of love, then I poore worme could any waies thinke my selfe to be; for he hath three times at least bestowed my life upon me: first, in making me as he did all other men; secondly, in redeeming me, as he doth all righteous men; and thirdly, in preserving me from the hands of wicked men, who though they gave not any life unto me, yet induced by the malice of Hell, and assisted by the subtilty of Satan, did combine with a craftier cruelty, then ever (that I could finde) the Arrian Bishops did against that innocent constant Athanasius, to take away my feeble life; for when the proud were risen up against me; and the congregation of naughty men had sought after my soule, and compassed me on every side, so that there was no man to helpe me; yet when I prayed unto my God, that he would not leave me in the daies of my trouble, and in the time of the proud, when I had none other helpe, then did he awake as a Giant out of sleepe, and preserved my body from destruction, he saved me from the mouth of the King of Lyons, and according to the multitude of his mercies, he delivered me from the teeth of them that were ready to devoure me, and out of the hands of them that sought after my life; yea, hee was so gracious unto me, that he left me not untill mine eyes did see their desire upon mine enemies, not their destruction, which my soule desired they might never taste of, and I pray God that they desired the same themselves, but their suppression, so as they might never triumph in the miseries of Gods servants, nor trample the bloud of innocents under feet: And therefore seeing God hath beene so gracious unto me, I have most constantly resolved by the assistance of his Spirit, not onely to praise his Name for his goodnesse, and to tell what he hath done for my soule, but also to dedicate my whole life wholly to his service, to despise the vanities of this life, to abandon all the pleasures of this world, to be careleſse of all earthly things, * but what may make in ordine ad Deum, to helpe me the better to serve my God, and with Iohn Baptist to consume my life in the preaching and penning of Gods Word, and maugre all the malice of the prondest Prelates in the world, to speake the truth, as my conscience tels me, though my wife and children should all begge, and my body be burned for the same: I will never count my life deare unto me, to spend it in his service that so often gave it me: And because I desired to do that which I thought best for the edifying of Gods Church, I have applyed my selfe to treate of these ensuing theames, which doe containe the chiefest points and the most necessary grounds of all Christian Religion: for, besides my naturall inclination, ever tending rather to pacification then contention, I thinke we have more need of fundamentall instructions, which are necessary for all men, then of any controversiall positions, which may satisfie some men, that perhaps desire rather to informe their judgement, then to reforme their manners: And in the handling of them I have intermingled the positive declaration of the truth, in a scholasticke forme, with a forcible application of the same unto our soules, for

Psal. 86. 14.

Eccles 51. Vers. 2.

Vers. 3.

Ver. 7.

* Quæ possessa onerant, amata inquinant, & amissa cruciant.

for the framing of our lives, to make use of what we learne: for I approve not so well the handling of Gods Word with too slender inforcement of the same unto our consciences, as the Schoolemen did, and their too much addicted followers use to do; nor yet meerely to stand upon exhortations with too slight expounding the most principle grounds of Religion, which I feare to be the fault of too many amongst us: And therefore the one being but as a foundation without roofe, and the other as a building on the sand, or in the ayre upon reeden pillars, I have ever adjudged it the best course to knit both together, to make both a perfect building. If I have done well, it is that which I desired, but if I have done slenderly, it is that I could attaine unto; And therefore I will be ever of that Fathers mind, which in all his workes and writings, desired not onely pium Lectorem, a courteous Reader of his labours, but also liberum Correctorem, a free reprover of his faults; but so that they do it friendly, to blame in their judgement where it is equity, but not to blaze my faults unto the world, which is a breach of charity; and that they do as well accept of what is good, as except against what is ill herein; for I know there be many, Momus-like, Qui vel non intelligendo reprehendunt, vel reprehendendo non intelligunt; that do shew their folly in reproving others, when out of envy or ignorance they blame that good of others which they have not, or know not themselves: And for these there is none other helpe, but to be careleſſe of their censures, and to pray against their wickednesse. There be faults escaped in the Printing, the most of them be literall, as the mistaking of e for æ, & e contra, and such like faults of no great moment, especially to him that knowes how hard it is to make things perfect; and therefore I hope they shall bee either mended with thy pen, or pardoned without thy censure: for other things I onely desire thy prayers for me, and thou shalt ever finde his paines and prayers for thee, which loveth thee and all men in Iesus Christ, with all unfainednesse.

Aug proem. l. 3. de Trinit.

Idem contra Faust. l. 22. c. 34.

GR. WILLIAMS.

An

An Introduction to the whole Booke.

WHen Almighty God had decreed from all eternity, to make certaine creatures partakers of his felicity, he did, in that very period of the decreed time by his eternall Counsell, create of nothing, all the things that are subsistent, and thereby he shewed himselfe to be, as all Gentiles confest it, optimus maximus, the very best of all that is good, and the very greatest of all that is great: and, as Pliny saith well, especially having but the light of nature to enlighten him, he did herein shew himselfe to be prius optimus quam maximus; because he, which was so eminently good, that he could not be bettered, did all this for them that were just nothing: but alas, behold a relapsed creature, from his most indulgent Creator, and see how this goodnesse of God, abused by the creature, became through the just judgement of God, an inevitable cause of al miseries upon all transgressors; for we, not contented with that blessed state wherein we were established, did spurne against our God by a most ambitious usurpation of his very Deity, and so aspiring unto a blessed life, as we thought, we brought upon our selves a most accursed death, as we all find: yet God still desiring to shew himselfe a God of mercy, he promised to send a Saviour to redeeme us, by taking our nature upon him, and suffering in our flesh, whatsoever we deserved for our sins; and to this end, when the fullnesse of time came, God sent his Sonne, made of a woman, made under the Law, subject to the curse of the Law, which was death of body, buriall in the grave, and discention into hell, that he might free us from eternall death, and then to rise againe the third day, to ascend into heaven, and to send his holy Spirit into our hearts, to work in us faith to apply all this unto our selves, and all other graces whatsoever, that might fit us and bring us unto everlasting life.

Plutarch, in Panegyrico Traian. dict.

Gal. 4. 4.

And this is the summe of all that is contained in this booke, to know our selves, to know God, to know Iesus Christ, borne, dead, raised, ascended, and now raigning in eternall glory, to guide his Church, and to confound his foes for evermore.

Perhaps this worke may seeme as the water boughs of a fruitlesse tree, a superfluous branch unto the Church of God; I willingly submit it to the judgement of Gods children; they must all confesse it is the last houre of the worlds age, wherein iniquity is increased, impiety is inlarged, and all charity is almost abandoned; all things growing worse and worse by continuance; Et Satanas tanto ferventior ad sævitiam, quanto se sentit viciniorem ad pœnam; and Satan having the greater rage to drive us to transgression, by how much the neerer he perceives himselfe to destruction; And therefore let men say what they will, yet seeing we may truly demand of them, Quid audiam verba, cum videam contraria facta? What booteth all our knowledge, seeing we do nothing that we know, nor know nothing indeed as we ought to know? I say that it cannot be amisse to doe what we can, to expresse those things that may best make for our happinesse; and I know these points are necessary to be knowne, and most profitable to be practised by all Christians: Reade them then, and I will pray to God that he will give thee grace, Feliciter currere & felicius in Christi pietate cursum tuum consummare; to understand what thou readest, to beleeve what thou understandest, and to practise what thou beleevest, that so thou mayest attaine unto everlasting life, through Iesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

Ætas parentum pejor avis tulit, nos nequiores, mox daturos progeniem vitiosiorem. Horat. car. 3. 6. Greg. Moral. l. 34. c. 1.

This Treatise containeth

1. The worke done, that is, sin, and that is either
   - 1. Originall sin, where is considered,
     - 1. What evill it bringeth.
     - 2. How it is derived.
   - 2. Actuall sinne, where is shewed
     - 1. How it is defined.
     - 2. How it is increased.
       - 1. Inwardly,
         - 1. By the suggestion of Satan.
         - 2. By the delights of the flesh.
         - 3. By the consent of the spirit.
       - 2. Outwardly,
         - 1. Secretly committed.
         - 2. Publiquely adventured.
         - 3. Usually practised.
         - 4. Exceedingly inlarged.
     - 3. How it is committed. viz. of
       - 1. Ignorance.
       - 2. Knowledge.
       - 3. Infirmity.
       - 4. Malice, which is
         - 1. Wilfull.
         - 2. Spitefull.

   * And from hence is seene
   - 1. The diversity of sinners.
   - 2. The inequality of sins; & yet, that
     - 1. Every sin brings death.
     - 2. The sin of any one brings death.
     - 3. The least sinne of any one brings death.

2. The wages to be paid for sinne, that is, death, which signifieth the curse of God, extending it selfe,
   - 1. Upon all creatures,
     - 1. Heavenly.
     - 2. Earthly.
   - 2. Upon every man, to whom it bringeth a treble death
     - 1. Of the soule, whereof it killeth,
       - 1. Will.
       - 2. Understanding.
       - 3. Memory.
     - 2. Of the body where is considered,
       - 1. What is meant by death, that is, all miseries:
         - 1. In all Ages.
         - 2. In all States.
         - 3. By all Creatures.
       - 2. How farre it extendeth, over all men.
       - 3. How variably it worketh in respect of the
         - 1. Manner.
         - 2. Time.
         - 3. Place.
         - 4. Effects which are different; the cause whereof is
           - 1. The practise of a good life.
           - 2. The meditation of our death
           - 3. The applic. of Christs death.
     - 3. Of body and soule in Hell.

3. The equity of this wages is seene, if we consider,
   - 1. That it is just to punish sinne.
   - 2. That God is the justest Iudge that can be found to punish sin.
     - 1. Because he loveth righteousnesse.
     - 2. Because he judgeth without respect of persons.
     - 3. Because he punisheth every man according to his desert.

     Where the inequality of hell punishment is shewed
   - 3. That all the punishment aforesaid inflicted for sin is most just:
     - 1. Not in respect of a sinners will eternally to sin, if he did eternally live: but,
     - 2. In a just proportion of the punishment to the haynousnesse of the sinne committed: which is seen in respect,
       - 1. Of the levity and easinesse to do what God commandeth.
       - 2. Of the transcendent deformity of sin, which is seene if wee consider,
         - 1. The Nature of him that is offended.
         - 2. The quality of him that doth offend
         - 3. The Nature of the sin that is committed.

The

The first golden Candlesticke,
HOLDING
The first greatest light of Christian RELIGION.

Of the misery of MAN.

ROMANES 6.23.

The reward of sinne is death.

EVery man (saith holy Iob) is borne to labour, Καὶ μοχθεῖν βροτῖσιν ἀνάγκη; yea, necessity enjoyneth all mortall men to labour (saith Euripides) and every labourer is induced (saith Hugo Cardinalis) to performe his worke with alacrity upon the assured hope of just reward: and therefore the law required that no man should detaine the hyre of the Labourer untill the morning, but as soone as ever he had done his worke, to pay him his wages: because (as our Saviour saith) the Labourer is worthy of his hire; and we find, that according as the paiment is, good or bad, so are the Labourers willing, or unwilling, to doe their worke: for good and present payment makes a painefull and a cheerefull agent. Levit.19.13. Luk.10.7.

Now here the Apostle setteth downe a worke performed, and the wages thereof not onely justly deserved, but also presently discharged; the reward of sinne is death, and in what day thou sinnest, in that day thou shalt die the death, saith the Lord; few words but full of matter; Sinne and Death: the two most common things upon the face of the earth; for all men sinned, except Christ himselfe, and all men died, except Enoch and Elias; and yet two of the most lamentable, and most fearefull things in the world: for what is more lamentable then sin, or what is more terrible then death? and yet as Sampsons Foxes were tyed together by the tayles, and carried firebrands betwixt them to destroy all the Corne of the Philistines, so here sinne and death are indissolubly linked together, with unquenchable firebrands betwixt them, to devoure all the whole race of mankinde: for the reward of sinne is death. But I must sever them for a time, to examine these murtherers of men, that all we may hate them, if we cannot shunne them: and therefore according to the number of the words of this Text, stipendium peccati mors, I desire you to observe the parts of this tragedy; three words, three parts. Gen.2.17. Iudges 15.4,5. The division of the Text.

1. The worke performed, Sinne.
2. The paiment rendred, death.
3. The equity shewed, the wages of sin is death.

All which well considered, will shew unto us all, the most wofull state, and the manifold miseries of poore distressed miserable man, and that, both in his life, and at his death, and after death.

The first Part.

CHAP. I.

Of originall sinne, and how the same is derived from the parents unto the children; and of the soule of man, whether it be ex traduce, or not.

Gen. 1. 26.

Man created by God in the image of Christ. Ioh. 1. 1.

Love the first cause of mans creation.

The first honour of man. Gen. 1. 27.

The second honour of man. Gen 2. 8.

Gen. 2. 19. The third honour of man. Gen. 1. 28. & c. 2. 20.

The fourth honour of man.

A good wife, what an excellent comfort.

All creatures obey man.

WHen the almighty God had created all things of nothing, and out of a secret instinct of love would have an image made like unto himselfe; then the omnipotency of the godhead began a work of great wisdome, and of singular majesty; and in the second person of himself, he shewed the perfection of that form which he pourtrayed; which second person of that eternall Deity, was the beginning before all beginnings, that, being the eternall Word, without any beginning in himself, began all beginnings by it self; and willing to be pleased and glorified in his works, began this first image unto himselfe; who, having all things before his face to look upon; tooke the slime of the earth, and brought it to that forme which himselfe liked best; and which then he first named, man: so that in this beginning of all beginnings, love was the first beginner of this worke, and herein was the greatest honour of this creature, and the onely best part of his honour, that it was created and made in the image of his Creatour: I speake not so much of that outward forme wherein we behold him, as of that inward perfection, whereof he consisted; and to this great honour of this creature, he added another honour of no small consideration, that he placed him in paradise, a place of all pleasure, where he made him his house-keeper, and the sole master of his so faire a garden, whose fruits he should have all in possession, and at his owne disposall, save one onely tree excepted; and, as if this were not enough, he joyneth a third honour unto the former, he gave him power and commandement over all his earthly creatures, to name them at his pleasure, and to rule them as he listed; and that nothing might be wanting to make him perfectly happy, he crowneth these honours with a fourth honour; he makes him a companion, a wife, the best of all companions, fit for himselfe, which he tooke out of his owne side, that he might be matched, but with himselfe, nor with any meaner creature than himselfe.

So here is honor cumulatus, honour upon honour, and honour beyond all measure, when he sits in the likenesse of God, above all the creatures of the earth; the eagles soaring never so high, must come down to man, the lions roaring never so fierce, must submit themselves to man, the whale swimming never so deep, must do service unto man, and all other creatures must be obedient unto his commands, which are sufficient proofes of mans honour, inough to make him joy in himselfe, content with his estate, and thankefull to such a Lord, as, out of his love alone, without without any other cauſe, would firſt make him like himſelfe, and then heape ſo many bleſſings upon him.

How pleaſing was man to God in the ſtate of his innocency.

Thus man was at firſt created ſo pure within, and ſo perfect without, that there was no creature, which ſo much pleaſed God, who made all other creatures to pleaſe man, and man alone to pleaſe himſelfe, as this man was; but O how ſoon began the infection of corruption to enter into this excellent matter! When the ſubtilty of the ſerpent began, ſo cloſely to ſpit his poyſon, that the venome was not felt, untill it came to the heart, and ſo ran to the very ſoule; and his owne wit, ſo proud of his underſtanding, and ſo unthankefull for that knowledge he had received, by ſeeking more than was due, than was needfull, he loſt all that was good, that was neceſſary; for God ſaid, thou ſhalt not eat of the tree of knowledge; but he would know what meat it was, and he muſt needs eat thereof: and what more indignity to the nature of man, than to be ſo unthankefull to his Maker? To make no more regard of his command, than having but one thing forbidden him, and with a penalty of his offence, would notwithſtanding preſume to adventure upon that ill, to the loſſe of all his good.

Man ſoon betrayed.

Gen 2 17.

O moſt unwiſe unthankefulneſſe, the firſt ground of his unhappineſſe, and the firſt note of his unworthineſſe, that he, who was made of love, ſhould be ſo ſoone made a ſubject of hate, and moſt unworthy of all creatures, to be honoured, that was ſo ingratefull to his moſt honourable Creatour; therefore God laid his curſe upon him, pronounced his judgement againſt him, and for this one ſin he loſt all his honours, he loſt the perfection that he lived in, he loſt that love, which before did let him to lacke nothing; and the Angell drave him out of paradiſe, and curſed the earth, which before was bleſſed; and he, that was onely framed by the love of God, muſt now feare and flie from the voice of God; and his wife, which through love ſhould have been his comfort, for want of love, through the poyſon of pride, doth breed his woe, and work his ruine; and he muſt labour, with the beaſt, to get him bread; and at laſt, he muſt die and returne unto the duſt, from whence he was derived, which is the reward of his wickedneſſe, and too plaine a proofe of his unworthy unthankefulneſſe.

Adams unthankfulneſſe the firſt ground of his unhappineſſe.

He loſeth all his honour.

And he muſt d'e the death.

So here you ſee, how ſinne is the root of death, and death is the fruit of ſinne: Sowre muſt be the root, when the fruit doth prove ſo bitter, and ſinne makes me quake to thinke of it, and death ſhould make you tremble to conſider of it, becauſe death is the wages of ſin.

Sin is twofold.

And ſin is either { 1. Originall, or 2. Actuall. } The firſt is traduced unto us from Adam, and the ſecond is daily committed by our ſelves.

The names of originall ſin. Ioh 3 6.

For the firſt, It is called in the Scriptures by diverſe names; as ſomtimes, the fleſh; for that which is borne of the fleſh is fleſh; ſomtimes, the body of ſinne; for we are buried with Chriſt, that the body of ſinne might be deſtroyed; ſomtimes, the body of death; for, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? ſometimes, the ſinne that dwelleth in us; becauſe it comes not, as ſome other ſinnes do, like ſtrangers, for a time; but this came from our conception, and will abide with us to our deaths; ſomtimes it is called concupiſcence; ſometimes, the root of bitterneſſe; and ſince S. Auguſtine his concertation with Pelagius, it is commonly called originall ſinne; not only becauſe it is the fountaine and well-head from whence all other ſinnes do flow, as Origen ſheweth, but alſo becauſe it is ab origine mundi, from the beginning of the world, and from Adam the firſt originall of all mankind: for the Lord ſaid unto him, as I ſaid before, In what day thou eateſt of the tree of knowledge of good and evill, thou ſhalt die the death: but you may eat, and you ſhall not die at all, (ſaith the divell unto Evah:) ſhe believed the divell, and the man obeyed his wife; and ſo both would needs eat; and therefore God cannot be true, or els man muſt needs die; and he muſt juſtly die, becauſe he did unjuſtly eat: Here was the ſin committed by one; and from him it was derived unto all; for by one man, ſinne entred into the world, and ſinne went over all, and ſpread it ſelfe like that farre-ſpreading tree, which Olympias

Rom 7.18. Rom. 6 6. Rom 7 24.

Rom 7.17.

Heb. 5 12.

S. Auguſtine firſt gave it the terme of originall ſin.

Gen. 2.17.

1 Of originall ſin. Rom. 5.12.

dream'd she bare, or like a vile gangrene, over all the face of the whole earth, and corrupted all the race of mankind; for it is a schoole-point most infallible, that Adam now stood, not as a private person, or as one particular man, but as the root of all the branches, and as bearing in his person the nature of all mankind.

Heb. 7. 9. And therefore if he had stood, we had all stood, but as Abraham paying tythes, Levi paid tythes in Abraham, so Adam sinning, we have all sinned in Adam, Et omnes peccavimus in isto uno homine, quia omnes eramus iste unus homo; and we have all sinned in that one man, because we all were that one man, saith S. Augustine: And so both himselfe and we all, do by this fact of Adam, receive a double dammage.

The dammage that we receive by Adams fall, is twofold.

1 A deprivation of all goodnesse. Rom 7. 18. 1. A deprivation of all our originall goodnesse, the image of God in us, and the love of God towards us, that is, an inability and aversnes to all goodnes, as S. Paul sheweth, In me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; and therefore, if at the losse of earthly treasures we shew our selves so much grieved, O then how should our soules, for the amission of such heavenly graces, be continually perplexed, untill we see the same once againe restored?

2 A proneneſſe to all wickedneſſe. Gal 5. 17. 2. An habituall naturall proneneſſe to all kind of wickedneſſe, and to commit sin even with greedinesse: for the flesh lusteth against the Spirit in all the things that we take in hand.

In respect of the first, we are altogether unable to do any good; for who can bring a clean thing out of that which is unclean? Or how can we, being void of grace, bring forth any fruits of goodnesse? and Seneca in Medea. In respect of the second, we are naturally inclined to all kind of evill, like a stone tumbling downe a hill, that can never stay it selfe untill it come to the bottome; so Medea saith, Video meliora proboq;, deteriora sequor; though I see the good, yet am I naturally driven to do that which is evill; for our whole nature being defiled, we are wholly inclined to fall from one wickednesse unto another, as the Psalmist speaketh. Psal. 51. 5.

Rom. 7. 18. Ioh. 3. 6. Eph. 2. 3. And in respect of both these we are said to be conceived in sinne, borne in iniquity, destitute of grace, void of goodnesse, nothing but flesh, full of corruption, children of darknesse, sonnes of wrath, heires of damnation, slaves of death; for the reward of sin is death.

But though this truth be very cleare, yet Satan will not suffer all truths to be uncontrolled; and therefore

Whether originall sin be only a privation of grace. He stirreth up some to defend, that this originall sin is nothing els but a bare privation of original righteousnes, & the wanting of the grace of God; so the transfusion of this sinne is made to be, non malitiam aliquam ingenerando sed propagando naturam; not by the begetting of any evill, but only by the propagation of our nature; that is, not effectively, but meritoriously; because God infuseth such a soule into us, as the sin of Adam hath deserved to be infused.

Ob. But against this it may be well objected, that the sin of Adam could not merit to punish a soule that was not in him; if the soule, as most deny, be not derived from the parents.

What manner of soule they say God infuseth into men. Vide Vossium in historia sua Pelag. Sol. It is answered, that although the generative power doth not extend it selfe any further than to the begetting of the flesh, per modum efficientis, by way of an efficient agent; yet the intention and desire of nature is to be referred to the whole compositum, to beget a creature like it selfe: and therefore though Adam could not deserve to have such a punishment imposed upon the soule, as separated; yet he might merit the same unto any soule united; therefore God createth such a soule, as Adam himselfe would have produced, if with the sole generall aid and power that he hath of begetting, he should beget, not only totum hominem, the whole man, but also totum hominis, all that is in man, body and soule; that is, God infuseth such a soule, as is wholly destitute and void of all spirituall grace.

Originall sin, whether a positive quality. And for the further manifestation of this point, they say, this originall sin can be no habituall quality, because it is neither an infused habit, such as are from God,

God, nor any acquiſite and obtained habit, ſuch as cannot fall upon children and infants, nor any naturall habit; becauſe every nature and all entities are from God; whereupon it muſt follow, that it can be no poſitive quality, nor any other poſitive accident, but only a meere privation; which, that it may be the fuller underſtood, they diſtinguiſh of the twofold facultie of the ſoule.

χατ' μετωφοραν, batitus dicti ſoles.

Of the twofold facultie of the ſoule.

1. The ſuperiour, λογικὴ, the reaſon.
2. The inferiour, ἀλογω, the concupiſcence.

Whereof the firſt ought to guide the ſecond; but our reaſon being deprived of originall righteouſneſſe and grace, ſuffering the concupiſcence to fall into evill, it allures our reaſon to aſſent unto it, and ſo both do fall into the ditch; for they do confeſſe this unbridled concupiſcence to be vicious, and all vicious acts to ſpring from this concupiſcence; but they diſtinguiſh, and ſay, that theſe vicious acts do otherwiſe proceed from the will, and otherwiſe from the concupiſcence, and otherwiſe from the want of originall righteouſneſſe. As

The concupiſcence vicious.

Vicious acts, how they proceed.

1. From the will properly, per modum principij activi.
1 From the will.
2. From the concupiſcence, inclinatively, per modum principij objectum intus proponentis.
2 From the concupiſcence.
3. From the want of originall righteouſneſſe, per modum removentis obſtaculum.
3 From the want of originall righteouſneſſe.

And further they ſay, that this concupiſcence is otherwiſe from the nature of the ſoule, and otherwiſe from the want of originall righteouſneſſe: and laſtly they ſay that this want of originall righteouſneſſe is otherwiſe from Adam, and otherwiſe from God; from Adam, as the meritorious cauſe; from God, as from a Iudge moſt juſt, and a moſt free diſpoſer of his owne gifts and graces; For ſeeing man is ens naturale, a naturall being, God could, as he doth in the bruit beaſts, make him for a naturall end, to which end, there had been no need of originall righteouſneſſe; but then that defect could not have been vicious, neither could God in equity require thoſe things from man, which did exceed his nature; when no man can be obliged to that thing, or to God himſelfe, to the performance whereof he received no power and ſtrength to do it, neither in himſelfe, nor yet in his firſt parents; but this pertaineth to the judgement of God, that when as he could do this abſolutely, he now doth it relatively, for the ſinne of our firſt parents; in which reſpect that is want of originall righteouſneſſe is not ſimply called the want of righteouſneſſe, ſed carentia juſtitiæ ineſſe debitæ, but the want of that righteouſneſſe, which ought to be in us, as being given by God to Adam, but loſt by Adam from himſelfe, and all his poſterity.

What God may juſtly do.

Now what doth all theſe diſtinctions and all theſe ſubtilties, to deny any poſitive quality to be in this ſinne, and to ſay, that a ſoule is iuſtuſed deſtitute of all grace, and void of all originall righteouſneſſe, but to lay imputations and aſperſions upon God himſelfe, for creating a creature, yea a ſoule wanting grace, and void of goodneſſe; I dare not ſay this by any meanes. And therefore I affirme formale originalis peccati eſſe reale ac poſitivum quiddam; that there is in originall ſin a reall and a poſitive vitioſity.

That there is a poſitive vitioſity in originall ſin.

But for the clearer manifeſtation hereof, it muſt be queſtioned, and it is not eaſily to be reſolved, how this originall corruption is traduced from the parents into the children: the queſtion is not of the verity of the matter; for it is plaine, that our fathers have eaten ſowre grapes, and the childrens teeth are ſet on edge, and every one may truly ſay with the Prophet, in ſinne my mother hath conceived me; but it is of the myſtery of the manner, as Nicodemus ſaid to Chriſt, how can theſe things be? For

How originall ſin is traduced from the parents into the children.

Ezek. 18 2. Pſal. 51. 5.

Ioh 3. 9.

1 What may be objected againſt the ſoules prodution ex traduce.

1. On the one ſide, they ſay the child receiveth from his parents, not his ſoule, but only his body; for if the ſoule were ex traduce, begotten by naturall generation, then it muſt needs be traduced, either from the body, or from the ſoule of the parents.

If from the ſoul, then is the ſoule ſubject to diviſion, to corruption, and then we might as well ſay, an Angell may beget an Angell, as to ſay, one ſoule may beget another;

Whether the ſoule is begotten by the parents.

another; but to ſay that the body being an elementary ſubſtance, ſubject to corruption, ſhould beget a ſpirituall ſoule that is incorruptible, is more abſurd, as Ariſtotle doth moſt truly declare.

The common opinion.

And therefore they ſay, that the ſoule creando infunditur, & infundendo creatur, is infuſed as it is created, and created as it is infuſed; and then, as cleane water powred into a fowle ciſterne, muſt needs be preſently corrupted, ſo the pure ſoule infuſed into a polluted fleſh, muſt needs be inſtantly defiled; for he that toucheth pitch, ſhall be defiled with pitch.

Heb.12.9.

And to confirme this ſuppoſition, they alledge that teſtimony of Scripture, where the Apoſtle calleth our naturall fathers, πατέρας σαρκὸς, the fathers of our fleſh, and God πατέρα πνευμάτων, the Father of Spirits.

3 What may be ſaid for the ſoules production ex tradure.

2. On the other ſide they ſay, if the ſoule ſhould not proceed from the parents, then not only God might ſeem to deale unjuſtly:

1 Reaſon. Ezek.18.20.

(1. In not performing his law, when he ſaith, the ſoule that ſinneth, the ſame ſhall die, and not the ſoule which never ſinned.

2 Reaſon.

2. In the compoſing and joyning together of two ſubſtances, ſo unequall to be united, a pure ſoul that never offended, infuſed into a moſt impure ſubſtance, wholly corrupted:) but alſo, the fleſh muſt needs be yeelded to be, the primary ſeat of ſin; and though it be a corporall groſſe compoſition wanting life, yet muſt it needs prove to be, not only the tainter and defiler, but alſo to predominate, and to be the guider and ruler of that ſpirituall ſubſtance, which gives us life, which is every way moſt abſurd.

Aug. de moribus Eccleſia c.12.

And ſo you ſee, that (as S. Auguſtine ſaith of this traducta culpa, the traduction of this ſinne,) nihil ad prædicandum notius, nihil ad intelligendum ſecretius, nothing is better knowne to be publiſhed; (for experience, wofull experience ſhewes it) that in Adam and through Adam, all the race of mankind is corrupted; but how this corruption is traduced in the propagation of the poſterity, nothing is harder to be expreſſed; for (as the Prophet David ſaith) we are fearefully and wonderfully made, and the knowledge thereof is ſo excellent, that we may well wonder at it, but no wayes well attaine unto it.

Pſal.139.13. & ver.5.

And therefore as a fellow fallen into a dungeon, and crying unto his companion for helpe, that his life might be preſerved; his friend, wondring how he came there into ſo deep a pit, began to queſtion with him, which way he had fallen, and how long he had continued there; but he replied, Tu cogita, quomodo hinc me liberes, non quomodo huc ceciderim quæras; I pray thee rather think thou how I may be delivered, than ſtand queſtioning how I came indangered; ſo ſhould we rather earneſtly ſeeke the means how this originall corruption may be removed from us, than too curiouſly to ſearch how it is traduced unto us.

Aug. de moribus Eccleſia c.26.

Acts 25.27.

But becauſe, as it ſeemed unto Feſtus, to be a very ſtrange and unreaſonable thing to ſend a priſoner, and not withall to ſignifie the crimes laid againſt him; ſo this ſeems to me very unfit, to propoſe the doubts, and not to do our beſt to expreſſe the truth: therefore, with ſubmiſſion to the judgement of the Church, I will ſet downe mine opinion touching this queſtion, that is ſo full of contradiction.

De nihilo fieri aliquid, conſummatis operibus quibus creavit omnia, ſimul violentum eſt velle monſtrare, & utrum perſpicuis documentis obtineri poſſit, ignoro. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. l.10. c.4.

That God created all ſoules at once, as he did the Angels, in the beginning, and then infuſeth them into the bodies, as they are ſtill begotten of their parents, though it was an opinion much patronized by the Origeniſts, yet hath it been long ſince exploded, and truly confuted by the learned; and that God ſtill ex nihilo, of nothing, createth the ſoules, as he infuſeth them into the bodies, I ſee as little ſhew of reaſon, as nothing, yet alledged, whereby the ſaid theſis may be confirmed; for the Apoſtle in the place above cited, doth not meane that God is more properly, a Father unto our ſpirits, that is, our ſoules (as if they were more immediately proceeding from God) than of our bodies; or that our naturall parents are more properly the fathers of our fleſh than of our ſpirits; for though the ſoule in regard of its ſpirituall being, is nearer and more agreeable to the nature of God, than the body; yet in regard of its being, God is the Authour, the Framer,

In what ſenſe God is called the Father of ſpirits. Heb.12.9.

and

and the principall Father, as well of the body as of the ſoule, for my reines are thine, and thou haſt covered me in my mothers wombe, ſaith the Pſalmiſt. Pſal.139.13.

And our naturall parents may be truly ſaid, to be the inſtrumentall authours and begetters of the ſoule, as well as of the body; for when it is ſaid that Adam begat a childin his image, we muſt not referre this image only to the ſimilitude of the body, but alſo to the like qualities and properties of the ſoule, and ſo wholly like him, both in body and ſoule; and the Apoſtle, by the fathers of our fleſh, doth underſtand fathers of our naturall and corruptible being, ſuch as make us meere men and no more; and by Father of ſpirits, he underſtandeth the Father of our ſpirituall birth, which makes us ſpirituall and regenerate men; and ſo the meaning of the Apoſtle is no more but this, viz. Gen.5.3.

If we do ſo reverently and ſo contentedly ſuffer the correction of thoſe Fathers which give us our naturall being, qua naſcimur ad laborem, & naſcimur ad mortem, whereby we are borne to miſeries, and borne to die; then how much more contentedly ſhould we receive the chaſtiſements of that Father, which gives us our ſpirituall being, qua naſcimur ad ſalutem, & naſcimur ad vitam, whereby we are borne unto ſanctification, and brought unto eternall ſalvation? For all men may eaſily ſee from the context of the place it ſelfe, that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh this, not of the naturall and carnall men, that are born onely of fleſh and bloud, but of thoſe ſpirituall and regenerate men, which are alſo borne of water and of the Spirit. That every godly man hath a double being. That the Apoſtle ſpeaketh theſe words to the regenerate. Ioh.3.5.

And therefore ſeeing the Apoſtle here by Spirit, underſtandeth the fruits of the Spirit, that is, the ſpirituall graces of regeneration, whereby we live, (ſaith the Apoſtle) that is, eternally; as the coherence of the place, and the maine ſcope of the Apoſtle makes it plaine; and not the ſoules or ſpirits of our naturall generation; I ſay that the parents begetting a child, do beget both body and ſoule; not that the ſoule begetteth a ſoule, or the body begetteth a ſpirit, but that, as all other creatures received power from God, to produce creatures like unto themſelves, as the ſeed of the vegetative to bring forth vegetative creatures, and the ſenſible, ſenſible creatures; ſo man, conſiſting both of Body and ſoule, ſhould beget a creature like unto himſelfe, conſiſting of the ſame parts; for otherwiſe ſinne muſt needs be in the body, before the ſoule can be infuſed; for if the ſchoole of the Naturaliſts be to be believed, the ſoule is not infuſed into the body, untill the thirtieth day, as ſome think, or fortieth day, as others affirme; and yet the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that he was conceived in ſinne; therfore, both body and ſoule were both conceived at once, or els, corruption was in the body, before the infuſion of the ſoule, and this living ſoule, by this dead fleſh, muſt needs be defiled, which is moſt abſurd; for (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith of Adam) it was not his corruptible fleſh, which made his ſoule to become ſinfull, but his ſinfull ſoule made his fleſh ſubject to corruption; ſo it muſt needs be in the ſonnes of Adam, that not our fleſh corrupts our ſoules, but both body and ſoule are conceived in ſinne, both produced of ſinfull ſeed; and ſo ſinne principally reſides in the ſoule, and not in the body, becauſe the ſoule gives life and motion unto the fleſh: hence it is, that Adam having defiled both his body and ſoule, is ſaid to have begot a child in his owne image; that is, ſinfull and polluted like himſelfe, both in regard of his body and ſoule; Nam Adam ut perſona publica ſibi ac ſuis aut ſapiebat, aut delirabat, for now Adam, ſtanding in paradiſe as a publique perſon, was to make or to marre himſelfe and all his poſterity: And therefore, if this root had continued holy, the branches had beene likewiſe holy, but the tree prooving to be evill, the fruit could not poſſibly be good; for a bad tree cannot bring forth good fruit, ſaith our Saviour: and therefore Adam ſinning, all his ſeed are become ſinfull, and all his off-ſpring, tanquam ſerie continuata, as in a continued line, do, like the corrupted branches of a bad tree, bring forth ſtill corrupted fruits, and ſo make all their generation, ſo ſoone as they are begotten, liable to the curſe of God for that firſt tranſgreſſion; for the reward of ſin is death; and the Prophet David ſaith, he was ſhapen in wickedneſſe, and conceived in ſinne; and

That man and all other creatures received power to produce creatures like unto themſelves. Totum generat totum, hoc eſt, corpus generat corpus aſſiſtente animâ, & anima generat animam, mediante corpore. Pſal.51.5. Gen.5.3. Boſquierus de ſimilibus bonorum, lib.1. con.6.p.27. Rom.11. Mat.7.18. Pſal.51.2.

Ioh. 3. 16.

That Gods graces are not traduced from the best parents.

and our Saviour saith, that which is borne of the flesh is flesh, that is, he that is borne of a sinnefull man, can be nothing else but a sinnefull man: (not that a godly man begets a godly man; for the graces of Gods Spirit are not begotten in our carnall generation, but they are given from above in our spirituall regeneration; and a man begets his child, not as he is a spirituall man, but as he is a naturall creature, consisting of body and soule) and therefore whosoever is borne of flesh and blond, must needs be tainted and corrupted with sin and wickednesse; for flesh here is not taken pro natura carnis, sed pro vitiosa qualitate totius hominis, for the single nature of flesh, but for the corrupted quality of the whole man, as Saint Paul excellently sheweth, when he saith, in my flesh dwelleth no goodnesse, that is, in the corrupted nature of a naturall man there is no grace, there is no goodnesse.

Rom. 7. 8.

Vide D. Goodman of the fall of man, versus finem.

And for the further confirmation of this point, I will here insert a very pithy discourse of D. Goodman L. Bishop of Gloceſter, where he saith in the latter end of his Booke,

I may safely say, that it is no inconvenience, that there should be a generation among the soules of men, notwithstanding their spirituall condition; for God the Father did beget his Sonne from all eternity, and the holy Spirit proceedeth from the Father and the Sonne; and therefore why might not the image of this Trinity appeare very lively in the creation of man? For God made the body of Adam out of the earth; and for his soule, He breathed into him the breath of life.

Gen. 2. 7.

Gen. 1. 20. & 24. God is not said to breath a soule into Eve.

So here was an immediate creation of both his parts severally; because his naturall temper could not yeeld him any true forme, as it did unto all other creatures, when God said, Producant aquæ reptile animæ viventis; and againe, producat terra animam viventem in genere suo, & reptilia, & bestias: And Adam thus created, and then cast into a deepe sleepe, a part of his body, (and why not likewise with that flesh, part of his soule) was taken for the creation of Eve; For it is not said, God breathed into her the breath of life; for that was before in the rib; and God might do this the rather, to stirre up the greater love and conformity betwixt them both, when they considered, that as they were made one flesh, so they were made one soule and one mind.

Gen. 2. 22.

Omnium rerum species stabilivit Creator creaturarum. Autor 6. princip. apud Bed. axiom p. 148.

And here God ceased from his labours and made an end of all creation of any creature either of any new kinde, or of the same kinde; and therefore Abel, being borne, partakes not onely of their flesh but also of their soules; or otherwise, the sonnes of men should not be so properly sonnes, neither could they be so farre tyed to those naturall duties towards their parents as the dumbe creatures are obliged unto their sires; because they received both body and soule from their sires, and we receive but our body alone from our parents.

Mark this well.

And this makes for the absolute perfection that is in the diversity of the world; because God is a spirit generating his owne Sonne, and creating all creatures whatsoever; the Angels are spirits neither generating nor creating; but being once created, they subsist alone, and having a state of continuance in themselves, they leave no posterity behind them; and man, consisting of body and soule, was created, and being subject to change and alteration in his state, was indued with a faculty and power to beget men like himselfe; consisting both of bodies and soules, according to the nature and condition of man; which is, to be generative in his kind, as all other corporeall creatures are in their kind.

The state of the creatures.

Christ the Sonne of man in respect of body and soule

And thus Christ, not onely in regard of his flesh, which he borrowed from the first elements, and had his matter common with all the rest of the creatures, but also more especially and principally in regard of his soule is the Sonne of man, descended and derived from man: and to this soule the Deity was first linked and united, and in this soule the hypostaticall union still continued, notwithstanding his naturall death and the separation of his soule from his flesh: and this soule did truly and locally descend to hell, that the seed of the woman might breake the Serpents head; and this soule, (as it is the nature of all other separated soules) had

Gen. 3. 15.

in

in it ſelfe a moſt naturall deſire and vehement inclination to returne unto his body; becauſe the ſoules after the times of their ſeparation, are ſtill tyed to their naturall duties and affections; as we ſee Dives after his death was ſtill mindefull of his brethren; which indeed were not his brethren, no more then any other men, if they did not partake of the ſoules of their parents; for otherwiſe all naturall conſanguinity and affinity ſhould ceaſe in a naturall death.

Separated ſoules doe ſtill retaine their naturall affections to their bodies.

And it ſeemes very neceſſary, that the ſoule ſhould be conveyed and diffuſed together with the ſeed, rather then that the body, being already ſquared out, and the greateſt part of the workemanſhip paſt, the ſoule ſhould arrive (like an unexpected gueſt) to this harbour: becauſe it would greatly diſparage man to be, firſt a plant, then a beaſt, and then a man, which indeed would ſavour much of Pythagoras his tranſmigration; but God hath appointed the ſeverall kindes of creatures, and I cannot conceive how there ſhould be ſuch degrees in the kindes: becauſe the eſſence and forme of a thing cannot be divided within it ſelfe, & facultates animæ non diſtinguuntur ab eſſentia animæ, and I cannot poſſibly imagine how vegetation and ſence ſhould be in the embryo before the acceſſe of the reaſonable ſoule; for either they are the faculties of the ſucceeding ſoule, (and ſo you make, a diviſion of that which indeed is inſeparable) or els you muſt joyne thoſe things which are of a different nature; (and if ever they were ſeparated, then to compound them were to confound them) or, being firſt ſeparated, they muſt ſtill continue divided; and ſo in the unity of one and the ſame perſon, you will cauſe a multiplicity of ſubjects, and of formes.

How the ſoule ſhould worke with the ſeed.

The eſſentiall forme not diviſible in it ſelfe.

But, as the Starres and celeſtiall bodies, though pure, ſimple and incorrupted, yet all of them have not in themſelves their inbred and naturall light, but doe receive the ſame from the Sunne, (which is the fountaine of light,) as it appeares by the Eclipſes, and by the conjunction and oppoſition of Starres, and alſo by the order of the univerſe, that all ſhould be reduced to one, a number to an unity; ſo, why ſhould it not be thus in ſpirituall ſoules? for the reaſon is the ſame, and the inconveniencies ſhould be the like in both: onely herein conſiſteth the difference betwixt things ſpirituall and corporeall, that the one imparts it ſelfe, without his owne loſſe, as the ſunne ſends forth infinite beames, and inlightens the whole world, and yet looſeth not the leaſt part of his owne light; but the bodily ſubſtances, the more they ingender and impart to others the more they detract from themſelves.

The production of the ſoule expreſſed by a ſimilie.

The difference betwixt the production of ſpirituall things and corporeall things.

Beſides all this, me thinks, the Scripture is very plaine to confirme this point, when it ſaith that ſo many ſoules came from the loynes of Iacob; but to this they anſwer, that theſe words are an hebraiſme, and an uſuall forme of ſpeech by a Synecdoche, to put a part for the whole, as the ſoule that ſinneth, the ſame ſhall die; that is, the man that ſinneth; and where the Poet ſaith,

Gen. 46. 26. & Exod. 1. 5.

Ah laceras etiam puppes fui ioſa refeci,
Vt qua deſererer firma carina foret;

Ovid. ep. 2. Carina id eſt, puppis. Linua: id eſt naves.

And againe in the ſame Epiſtle, he ſaith,

Et quæcunq; procul venientia lintea vidi,
Protinus illa meos auguror eſſe Deos.

Where the ſterne, the keele, and the ſayles, are put for the whole ſhip, and ſo in many other places both of the Scriptures and of all authors.

But againſt this I demand, where in any author do you find ſuch a Synechdoche, as that a part ſhould ſignifie the whole, when that part, that ſhould expreſſe the whole, is not included, but doth exclude it ſelfe, or is exeluded from the whole; for in every ſuch Synechdochicall ſpeeches, the part ſet downe for the whole muſt be alwaies a part of the whole; as when Saint Paul ſaid, you ſhall ſee my face no more; for, you ſhall ſee me no more; his face was a part of him; and ſo it muſt be underſtood of all other Synechdoches whatſoever; the part ſignifying the whole, muſt needs be included and contained in the whole: and therefore if the ſoules be put for the men, a part for the whole, then certainely it muſt needs follow, that the ſoules were included, as parts, and not excluded from the whole

The nature of Synechdoche how uſed in all authors

Act. 20. 25.

The part expreſſing the whole no where excluded.

whole, that came from the loynes of Iacob; which is a reaſon that I know not how it can be truly anſwered.

But againſt this doctrine of the traduction of the ſoule by a naturall generation from our parents; it is objected,

Ob. 1. That, omne generabile eſt corruptibile, therefore if the ſoule be propagated with the ſeed, it muſt needs bee corrupted and reduced to nothing with the fleſh, which is contrarie to the tenent of the Philoſophers, and farre more odious to the doctrine of all Chriſtians.

To this uſuall objection, againſt the traduction of ſoules I anſwer.

Mat. 22. 32.

Sol. 1. That not onely the divine truth, which ſilenceth all the adverſaries hereof, but alſo humane reaſon doth ſufficiently prove and confirme the perpetuity and immortality of the ſoule; for Thales Mileſius, a moſt ancient Philoſopher, defined the ſoule to be φύσιν ἀεικίνητον, ἡ αὐτοκίνητον, a nature alwaies permanent and by it ſelfe moveable; and Pherecydes the Syrian, as Cicero ſaith, affirmed our ſoules to be eternall; and Nancelius ſaith, he found it thus written in a little worke of Zoroaſter, which is inſcribed μαγικὰ λόγια;

Heathens beleeved the ſoule to be immortall.

Nancel de immortalit. anima. p. 95.

Ὅτι ψυχὴ, πυρ δυνάμει παρὸς αὐτὰ φαεινὸν, ἀθάνατος τε μένει, καὶ ζωῆς δέσποινα ἐστιν.

Immortality of the ſoule confeſſed by the divell.

Becauſe the ſoule, ſeeing it is a bright fire of the Father, doth both remaine immortall, and is the lady of life; and the very divell himſelfe is compelled to confeſſe the immortality of the ſoule, when the Oracle gave this anſwer to Terinaus, that did ſo exceedingly bewaile the death of his ſonne, ſaying,

Idem p. 148.

Ignaris homines in vita mentibus errant,
Euthynous potitur fatorum munere læto,
Sic fuit utilius finire ipſi, tibi.

Men doe erre in their life, through their ignorant mindes; for thy ſonne Euthynous doth injoy the glad and joyfull reward of the deſtinies; and therefore it is better both for him and thee that he is dead, ſeeing his ſoule doth now live ſo happy.

And I might here add teſtimonies beyond number; but that would be a tiring of my reader to no purpoſe; Cicero makes a good interpretation of Plato's argument to prove the immortality of the ſoule, ab ejus motu proprio & inſito; you may ſee it in his 6. booke de rep. and it is repeated in l. 1. Tuſcul. and he that would ſee more arguments to prove a point ſo cleere, may finde enough in Nancelius, and in Iacobus Colerus, that have moſt fully and faithfully handled this truth of the immortality of the ſoule, which I thinke no man will denie, but he that is as readie to denie that there is a God; ſeeing as Aratus ſaith, αὐτοῦ καὶ γένος ἐσμὲν, we are his off-ſpring, and as Lucretius, though an Epicure, yet is compelled to confeſſe;

Coleru in lib. de animarum immortalitate liber amplus & doctus Act. 17.

Denique cœleſti ſumus omnes ſemine oriundi,
Omnibus ille idem pater eſt.

The generall opinion of Schollers.

2. I confeſſe it is a generall opinion among moſt Schollers in theſe daies, that the ſoule is not ex traduce, but, as the common ſaying is, creando infunditur, & infundendo creatur; and this makes the error the more dangerous, when we have ſuch guides as we preſume, we may ſafely truſt; (quia nec alius pronior fidei lapſus, quam ubi rei falſæ gravis autor extitit, as Plinie ſaith:) becauſe commonly, as Vadianus ſaith, magnos errores magnorum virorum autoritate perſuaſi tranſmittimus; we are tranſported rather with the names of our maſters and the reverent reſpect that we beare unto their perſons then the ſoundneſſe of thoſe things, that they doe teach; and what better maſters then the common conſent of the moſt learned men.

Vadian in Epiſt. parad.

A fourefold cauſe of generall errors

But the cauſe of the generality of this, and the like errors, doth principally ſeeme to me to be fourefold.

Vide D. Hackwell de providen. Dei. in proœ.

1 Cauſe.

1. Becauſe that while we are young, our judgement is too greene to venture upon the determination and confutation of any commonly received tenent: and therefore, like young lambes, we will follow the ſteps of the flocke whatſoever ever they goe; and we will hold things as our predeceſſors did, whatſoever that be; and when we are old, we are foreſtalled by a prejudicate opinion of what we alwaies held; and cuſtome, which is oftentimes more prevalent then truth, hath rooted the ſame ſo deepe in us, that we will rather follow the former and generally received error, then now begin, with great paines, to diſcuſſe to finde out what is truth; and ſo, inter juvenile judicium & ſenile prejudicium veritas amittitur; truth ſlippeth away betwixt youthfull timidity and aged ſtupiditie.

2 Cauſe.

2. Becauſe that many great Schollers, intending ſome other matters, might happily in this or the like other points unqueſtioned, or not much contradicted, in thoſe times wherein they lived, be carried away with the common ſtreame of other mens tenents.

3 Cauſe.

3. Becauſe the queſtion it ſelfe is out of all queſtion very difficult, and ſeemes to carrie with it a great deale of abſurditie, or at leaſt, improbabilitie on either ſide.

4 Cauſe.

4. Becauſe the negative part, that the ſoule is not ex traduce, is ſupported and underpropped, as it ſeemes, with the ſtrength and authority of Philoſophers, and the beſt truth of humane learning; and to make yet the full meaſure of truth on their ſide, they have the ſuffrages of moſt of the Schoole Doctors, to confirme the ſame tenent that they maintaine; Now;

1 Cauſe anſwered

For the firſt of theſe, it is apparent to be a cauſe either of negligence, baſhfullneſſe and feare in the younger ſort; or of ſlothfullneſſe and obſtinacie in the older men; and neither of theſe will excuſe any of us to ſhelter our ſelves under their examples, but in all ages we muſt ſearch out the truth, and finde reaſons for what we hold, rather then to rely upon the authority of what others hold.

2 Cauſe anſwered

For the ſecond, they may be better excuſed themſelves then be any colour of excuſe for us; when thoſe cauſes that inforced them to other ſtudies, doe give leave to us to ſearch out other truths.

3 Cauſe anſwered

For the third, I finde indeed, that this queſtion hath beene long doubtfull, and as long undetermined in the Church of God; for Iſidorus ſet out a worke de adnata anima; and Saint Auguſtine ſent Oroſius unto Saint Hierome, to aske his opinion, what he thought of the originall of the ſoule, when himſelfe had ſuſpended his owne judgement, as in a matter of great moment, as he profeſſeth in the end of his booke unto Oroſius, againſt Priſcillianus; Vide Ep. 102. & Epiſt. 28. the cauſe of this doubting was, that Origen ſaid all ſoules were created at once, & had ſinned in heaven, as the Angels did, and therfore were ſent into our bodies, as into priſons, to undergoe their puniſhments for their former tranſgreſſions: And Baronius ſaith, that this queſtion of the originall of the ſoules, did not onely ſeeme very hard and difficult unto Saint Auguſtine and Saint Hierome, but that alſo, before them, Gregory the divine affirmed this queſtion to be ſo difficult, as that all our humane ſtrength is not ſufficient to attaine unto the depth thereof, atq; igitur, quid de eadem quæſtione definiret totus ambiguus rem integram Deo comittendam tradit, and therefore being altogether uncertaine what he ſhould determine herein, he leaves all the matter wholly to Gods determination: And that which is more to be wondered at, we find, that, although this queſtion had beene often handled and diſcuſſed throughout many ages by the moſt learned Fathers; yet ſtill in the time of Gregory the Great, which was about 600. yeeres after Chriſt, it remained undecided; and Saint Gregory confeſſeth, that he durſt not ſet downe quid de ea eſſet definiendum, what ſhould be concluded concerning the ſame, where he ſaith, de origine animæ inter Sanctos Patres requiſitio non parva verſata eſt, ſed utrum ipſa ab Adam per traducem ſcilicet deſcenderit, an certis ſingulis detur, incertum remanſit; touching the originall of the ſoule, the diſquiſition hath not beene ſmall among the Fathers; but whether it deſcendeth from Adam by traduction, or is given by God to every one, it remaineth uncertaine; and to let paſſe many others that I might alleadge, our owne learned Divine D. Hakewell ſaith, not a few of the moſt antient Chriſtian Divines held, that the Baron. annal. 120. § 16. Evarſki. 9. Idem anno Chriſti. 414. § 15. Innoc. Pap. 13. to 5. Idem to. 5. anno. 415. § 35. Idem eod. to & eod. an § 39. Nazian. in carm. de anima.

Aut utrum & vitiatum ex homine trahitur, aut alicrit. ex altero tanquam in vaſe vitiato corrumpitur, ubi occulta juſtitia divina lagis includitur; quid autem horum ſit verum, libentius diſco quam dico, ne audeam dicere quod neſcio Aug. ad verſ Iulian. l 5. c. 3

Vide Gregor Ly. epiſt. 53.

Vide etiam Aug. retract. l 2. c. 56 & de origine animarum.

D. Hakewell in apolog. pro potent. & providen. Dei, l.3 c.9 §.2. p.364.

reasonable soule of man was derived from his parents: not a word but his own. 1 not a few, therefore many: 2 not a few Divines, therefore learned men and not laicks; 3 not a few Christian Divines, therefore good men and not Atheists or Heathens; 4 not a few, not onely of the ancient, but of the most ancient Christian Divines; therefore no novelty, no new invented doctrine, but a tenent of great antiquity in the Church of God; a point much stood upon in the Church of Rome: & therfore this question so long discussed, & so variously maintained must needs befull of doubts and difficulties, which way soever it be determined.

4 Cause answered touching the Philosophers. Non desunt qui plures Philosophos paganos quàm Mosen & Christum faciunt. Casmanus in prologom. Cosmop. in initio.

For the fourth, I say with learned Casman, that touching physicall things, we have no reason to wrest the testimonies of the holy Scripture for to confirme and justifie the rules of Aristotles Physicke: Indeed many are of that mind, as scarce to receive any divine truth, unlesse they do perceive it may be confirmed by the Philosophicall rules of Aristotle and Plato: and therefore nothing seemeth toothsome to their palate, nothing learned in their minds, but what is consonant to the Pagan learning: but we, that have learned Christ, must rather give faith and credit to the pure fountaine of Gods word, even when it treats of naturall things, than to all the troubled channels and corrupted puddles of the best Heathen Authours; Quia sermo tuus veritas, & omnis homo mendax, because Gods Word is truth, and every man a lyar, and the wisest men of this world are become vaine in their ratiocinations; and the errours of Aristotle, even in Physicall things, some of his owne followers have both plainely confessed, and most fully confuted them; and no wonder, quia ab homine nihil humani alienum, because any man may erre and be deceived, and neither Philosophers nor Poets, nor any other man under heaven, whose mind is not illuminated by the bright beames of Gods holy Spirit, can have any exemption and freedome from sliding and falling into errours: and therefore, though I would not be of their minds, that are so farre against Philosophie and good literature, as to affirme them to profit nothing to the studie of divine letters, but rather to hinder and to be hurtfull unto the same; yet, on the other side, I would not be so mad a lover, and such a stupid follower of the ancient Poets & Philosophers, as to esteem all their sayings oracles, and to draw the truth of the Scriptures to become answerable to their tenents; for which thing Eugubinus is not approved of all Divines, in his books de perenni Philosophia; because the wresting or the alleadging of the divine Scripture to confirme or explaine, the inventions of the Philosophers or the fables of the Poets, which they say were but borrowed out of the antient Scriptures, and then vailed over by them, (as the Egyptians shadowed out, and covered over, many truths by their Hierogliphicks) from the common understanding of the vulgar sort, that wisedome might still remaine among the wiser men, doth too much prophane the sanctity and defile the purity of the sacred Word, which should not be so debased, as to be brought to attend upon any humane saying, that ought alwaies like a faithfull handmaid, to sit and wait, readie to give all attendance, at the gates of divinity: and therefore I will ever draw the sayings and sentences of the Heathens to serve the Scriptures, and to yeeld their suffrage and strength unto the divine truth; or where I cannot doe this, I will quite cast them off and cashiere them; condemning them as rebels, and adjudging them as guilty to be banished out of all Christian Schooles; for as Irenæus, speaking of the creation of the world, saith, cui magis credemus, ijs philosophis, qui prædicti sunt, sic fatua & inconstantia garrientibus, aut discipulis Domini & Prophetis? or as S. Basil saith, complura de rerũ natura sapientes Græcorũ disseruerunt, & nulla prorsus apud illos ratio, nulla sententia fixa permansit, posteriore semper antecedentem eijciente, ita ut absq; ullo negotio opiniones illorum evertere possimus; the wise men of Greece have spoken many things of the nature of things; and there is no sure reason with them, nor any sentence that remaineth firme, and stable; but the latter doth alwaies reject and confute the former; so that we may easily overthrow them and their opinions without labour; when, by their mutuall dissentions, they are sufficient to confound one another: and Saint Cyrill saith, quomodo erunt fide digni, ut aliquibus persuadeant,

The best Philosophers have often erred.

The Authors opinion of humane learning.

τὸν γὰρ μόνον ἀληθεύειν ἐπιστάμενον, καὶ θεῖον εἶναι μόνον. Meretur solum extrinsecus accedere, solumq; esse divinum, asserit Arist: de generat. animal. l.2.c.2.

De qua sententia, vide Zabarell: de mente humana c.9 prope finem. p.956.

Vis plenissimè ostendi communem errorem exponentiis Aristotelem de hac una sententia.

Irenæus l.2.c.2.

Basil in hexam. homil.1.

Philosophers many times easie to be confuted.

Cyrillus adversus Julian. l.2.

UMI

deant, qui tantum a veritate aberrant, ita ut non ſolum ab alijs ſed & inter ſe & ſecum diſſideant? how ſhall they be worthy of credit to perſwade any man to beleeve them, which doe wander ſo farre from the truth, that they diſſent, not onely from others, but alſo among themſelves and with themſelves; and Saint Auguſtine ſaith, ſi ratio contra divinarum Scripturarum autoritatem redditur, quamlibet acuta ſit, fallitur veriſimilitudine; if any reaſon be rendered contrary to the authority of the holy Scripture; how ſharpe and quicke ſoever it ſeemes to be, it is deceived, and doth labour to deceive us, under the cloake and colour of truth; and againe in his 1 booke de Gen. ad lit. he ſaith; hoc indubitanter tenendum eſt, ut quicquid ſapientes hujus mundi de natura rerum veraciter demonſtrare potuerint, oſtendamus noſtris literis non eſſe contrarium; quicquid autem illi in ſuis voluminibus contrarium ſacris literis docent, ſine ulla dubitatione credamus id falſiſſimum eſſe, & quoquo modo poſſumus etiam oſtendamus; atq; ita teneamus fidem Domini noſtri; ut neq; falſæ philoſophiæ loquacitate ſeducamur, neq; ſimulatæ religionis ſuperſtitione terreamur; this is undoubtedly to be held, that whatſoever the wiſemen of this world, have truly written, or could truly ſhew, concerning the nature of things, we can ſhew and prove the ſame to be no waies contrarie to our learning; but whatſoever they teach in all their volumes, that is contrary to the holy Scriptures, we ought and muſt beleeve, without any doubting, that the ſame is moſt falſe, and as well as we can, let us ſhew and prove the ſame ſo to be; and ſo we ſhould hold the faith of our Lord, that we be neither ſeduced with the loquacity and vaine talking of falſe Philoſophie, nor yet terrified with the colourable ſuperſtition of fained Religion.

Aug. ad Marcel. lib. epiſt. 7.
Idem de gen. ad liter. l. 1. c. 21.

That we ought to reject whatſoever is contrary to the Scriptures.

And therefore, whatſoever is alleadged in this point, or in any other the like point, out of the writings of Poets and Philoſophers, that is, contrary to the divine Scripture, or cannot be made good by Scripture, it ſhall no way trouble me; but I will fully anſwer it; or if I cannot give them ſatisfaction, I had rather bee ignorant in their ſubtilties, then to be ſeduced by their abſurdities, and ſo by leaving Iacobs well, to drinke of Ariſtotles puddle, to bring my ſelfe in danger, for neglecting the divine verities.

To be ignorant better then to be ſeduced.

But for the Schoolemen; I doe very much reſpect them, and acknowledge they have done exceeding well with their great paines and acute apprehention of many things; but yet they are not canonicall; and therefore in all things they are not infallibly to be beleeved, without a perfect diſcuſſion of their tenents, eſpecially in thoſe, wherein either Pope, Father, Church or Philoſopher had a finger; for I finde that Aquinas, and ſo moſt of the reſt, did ſo much reverence each of theſe, that whereſoever any objection was made, either out of the decrees of the Popes, or the Canons of the Church, or the writings of the Fathers or of the rules of Ariſtotle, they were ſo loth to denie the ſame, and to confeſſe it falſe, that they would diſtinguiſh the point of a needle, and uſe all the wit and learning they had, to ſave the credit of thoſe Authors, and with their owne diſtinctions to make thoſe things ſeeme true, which in very deed had no jot of truth therein; and therfore, becauſe they found ſome Popes and Philoſophers, and I denie not, ſome of the Fathers too, that denied the ſoule to be ex traduce, they affirmed our fleſh to be infected by our generation, and being joyned and united unto the ſoule, to cauſe by its infection, that the ſoule ſhould be immoderately inflamed with carnall deſires; and ſo they do confeſſe the ſoule to be the ſeate of concupiſcence, but as it is united unto the fleſh.

Touching the Schoolemen.

Foure things that drave the Schoolemen many times from truth.

How the Schoolemen thought originall ſinne to ſpread it ſelfe.

Object. But, if the ſoule be not ex traduce, it may be demanded, how the Prophet could ſay, that hee was conceived in ſinne, before his ſoule was infuſed.

Sol. Therefore ſome doe add, that the ſoule is not then at length infected by the fleſh, when the fleſh perfected is now determined to make up the perſon to be animated; but that this vice and corruption now before the fleſh is perfected, doth ſpring forth, and proceed from the inſtruments of generation, which is an act of nature, serving to the begetting of it; that so, the corruption of nature should not be formally, but causally, in the seed, to whom is communicated, such a vicious quality or infection, as that, by the strength and vertue thereof, the soules of all them, which by a carnall propagation do proceed from Adam, are defiled and corrupted.

Veſſius in ſua hiſt. Pelag.

That a corporeall substance cannot transfuse a positive quality into a spirituall substance.

Object. But against this it is objected, that it cannot be, that any corporeall substance should transfuse a reall and a positive quality into a spirituall incorporeall substance; neither is that any thing, that the dispositions and manners of men are diverse, according to the diverse temperature of their bodies, and that the nature or conditions of men are changed by reason of wounds, or any other naturall or accidentall disease; because the actions of the soule may varie according to the temperature and disposition of the organicall body; but this makes it not to follow by any meanes, that therefore the soule can be infected with a reall and positive quality from any corporeall substance, whether you call the same the seed, or perfect flesh.

Ex vulnere oritur corporu dolor, ex dolore, animi tristitia. Vossius quo supra.

Sol. To this they answer, that it is no absurdity to say, that a reall positive quality may be transfused and imprinted unto the soule from a corporeall substance; as when the griefe and paine of the body is gotten by a wound, and from that paine is sprung sadnesse of mind, and heavinesse of soule; therefore they say that, vitis quidem est πάθης; sed ἡ ψυχὴ videtur esse παθητικὴ, and so to partake of certaine qualities from the contagion of the body.

The simile doth not hold good.

Repl. But by their favour, the case is not alike, that the soule should sympathize and suffer together with the body, in those things, wherein the soule gives sense and feeling unto the body, and are qualities free from sinne; and that the soule should be tainted by the body in those things that are sinfull, and are no wayes stirred in the body by the soule; (because they say, these vitious qualities are causally in the flesh, before the infusion of the soule:) these things are altogether unlike: and therefore all that these men say must needs prove to little purpose, to denie the traduction of the soule: for though they may give some colour unto the simple by the subtilty of their similies, yet certainly this is nothing to them, which know that similies do prove nothing.

How that may be true de toto composito, which cannot be true de partibus separatis.

3. I answer, that this objection may be yeelded to be true de toto composito, of any creature; so the whole man being generated, the whole man is corrupted, and there followeth a dissolution of the whole; but for the parts, as the corruption of the body is not the annihilation thereof, but a cessation to be ens tale, what it was before, when the same is turned to be a carkasse, or by putrefaction, reduced to become earth and ashes; so the soule by death is not annihilated, but desisteth to be ens tale, the essentiall forme of the body, which (in some sense) may be rightly termed the corruption of the soule; because now the soule, after death, though she hath her being, yet doth she not informe the body, to give life and motion unto the same, which is the chiefest office and duty of the soule, in regard of the man whose soule it was.

A thing may be generated, and yet not be corrupted.

4. I might easily prove that all generation doth not necessarily inforce a corruption; because God the Father did beget his Sonne, and this Sonne is of equall perfection with his Father; and God created all things of nothing; yet all things shall not returne to nothing; for, they being once produced, the same power shall uphold and continue them, which did first create and produce them; and every thing containeth in it selfe a power not to returne, or rather an impotency to returne to nothing; because no creature of it selfe, or in it selfe, is independent, but doth still depend upon his first producer, which is still his continuall preserver; for seeing it hath stood with Gods mercy to produce them, it cannot but stand with his goodnesse, still to sustaine and preserve his owne most excellent workemanship: and therefore seeing that now all things depending, not on the weakenesse of their owne foundation, but on the invincible strength of Gods power, the infallible assurance, and the inevitable effects of his providence; howsoever the production of our soules be by creation, generation, alteration, or what

The same power can preserve things which did produce things.

The continuance of the creatures, upon what pillars it standeth.

other

other way ſoever it can be, we ſhall not need to feare or doubt the corruption of them.

Object. 2. It is objected that the creation of the ſoule would make more for the dignity of the ſoule, than the generation of the ſame from the ſeed of our parents.

Sol. To this I anſwer, it is ſufficient, that the ſoule was at firſt created after a moſt excellent and extraordinary manner, when God breathed into man the breath of life; where you ſee it had a different beginning from the body, and was not brought forth by vertue of any mixture, as the formes of all other creatures were; ſo that ſtill creation in ſome reſpects may not improperly be aſcribed to the reaſonable ſoule, in regard of its firſt birth and nativity, which gives unto it ſufficient dignity, how ſoever it be afterwards produced.

The firſt creation of the ſoule doth ſufficient y ſhew the dignity of the ſoule.

And if all this will not ſatisfie the opponent Chriſtian, that will have no nay, but the ſoul muſt be ſtill created, my Lord of Gloceſter likes well of that opinion, which, to reconcile both parties, teacheth the ſoule to be both created and traduced; for ſeeing there is an action both of God and man, which are both alike ingaged in the generation of man; man in regard of a naturall birth, begetting a ſonne according to nature, and God concurring, not only as to a creature, but as to ſuch a creature as might be his ſonne by adoption and grace: and therefore, in reſpect of Gods action, it may be ſaid to be a creation, which includes a beginning different from the ordinary courſe of nature, and likewiſe excludes all ſubject matter, whereof it might conſiſt; becauſe the ſoule is a ſpirituall ſubſtance, which without ſeed, and without loſſe of her parts is propagated by ſome extraordinary power of God; and to this creation man may concurre, as Eve, though created by God, yet was ſhe created out of a part of mans body, ſo the ſoule, though created, yet may it be ſaid to be created ex traduce; and ſo in reſpect of both agents, God and man, there may be two different actions; and in reſpect of God, anima creatur ex traduce, and in reſpect of man, whoſe condition is generative, anima generatur ex traduce.

How the ſoule may be ſaid to be both created and begotten.

But howſoever this diſtinction may ſeem to give ſatisfaction to ſome men; becauſe it yeelds a kind of creation unto the ſame; yet to me it ſhowes no better than a ſhadow; for though man may be ſaid to be created, in regard that the Lord breathed into him the breath of life, yet if we do properly reſpect what creation is, and that is, productio a non eſſe ad eſſe, abſq; ulla materia præ-exiſtente, then certainely we cannot ſay that man was created, in reſpect of his body, quia Dominus efformavit eum ex luto terræ, and the Scripture doth not ſay, that God created the woman, but ædificavit eam, reared and builded her up of the rib of Adam; becauſe ſhe was made out of a pre-exiſtent matter.

The Biſhop of Gloceſters opinion not ſatisfying the Author.

And therefore, though I deny not but potentia productiva, the power of producing every ſoule is from God; yet to ſay that this production of it ex traduce, may be termed a creation of the ſoule, I cannot find how it may ſtand either with reaſon or divinity.

The ſoule of man and not the body properly created.

I conclude therefore, that God having formed the body of man out of the duſt of the earth, and then creating his ſoule after an extraordinary and moſt ineffable excellent manner, he gave this faculty and power unto man, to be able, when it ſhould ſeeme good in his eyes, to beget children like himſelfe, conſiſting both of body and ſoule. And I am induced the rather to incline to this opinion,

The reaſons of the Authours opinion.

1. For the authority of S. Auguſtine, whom I do ſo much reverence, and whom in many places I do find to be of the ſame judgement, as where he writes unto Optatus, ſaying, that he could not find it, either by reading, or by praying, or by reaſoning and diſcuſſing the point, how originall ſinne can be defended, or the doctrine thereof maintained, with the creation of ſoules; and ſo likewiſe in Ep. 28. ad Hieron. & l. 10. in Gen. ad literam, c. 4. & 23, & retract. l. 1. c. 1. and ſo likewiſe for the authority of S. Hierom, Ruffinus, and before them, of Tertullian, Aug. de hæreſ. c. 84. & Apollinarius, Tripartit. hiſt. l. 5. c. 44. & maxima

1 Reaſon Aug Ep. 157 aſſerit ſe neq; legendo, neq; orando, neq; ratiocinando invenire potuiſſe, quomodo cum animarum creatione peccatum originis defendatur Hieron. ad Marcellinum Epiſt. & Anapſichis, Idem l. 11 Apolog. adverſ. Ruffin.

Molinæus de pecc. origin. cont. Armin. Sohnius To. 11. loc. de peccat origin. Gocl de anima. Horſt in phyſic. &c.

pars Orientalium, and the greateſt part of all the Eaſterne Churches, as Molinæus teſtifieth; and among our latter Divines, of Sohnius, Philippus Marmixius Sanct-Aldegondius, a noble and an excellent man; Alſtedius, Goclenius, & Horſtius, who have collected all the arguments of any moment, that are made againſt the traduction of the ſoule, and have fully anſwered the ſame in every point; and many others, whoſe names and reaſons you may find in Horſtius, and in many other authours that have writ hereof; and of our owne Church, beſides my Lord Biſhop of Gloceſter, M. Hieron, a very skil'full man in Scriptures, whoſe labours are no wayes to be contemned, in his Sermon upon, that which is borne of fleſh is fleſh; and in other Treatiſes, ſet forth in the beginning of Queene Elizabeth, I find others of the ſame mind.

2 Reaſon. The abſurdities of the other tenent many.

2. Becauſe I find no inconvenience in any thing that can be ſaid contrary to this tenent, but that it may be eaſily anſwered; and he that deſires to learne without contention, may be ſufficiently ſatisfied in this point.

Molin. de peccat. origin. cont. Armin.

But the abſurdities and inconſequences of the other doctrine are ſo many, and of ſuch moment, that it paſſeth mine underſtanding to reconcile them. For Molinæus, denying the traduction of the ſoule, is, by force of arguments, ſo far induced, as to confeſſe that the ſoules of irrationall creatures, mules, horſes, and the like, are likewiſe infuſed by God, and not traduced by generation; which I think is a new point of Philoſophie, I am ſure of leſſe antiquity, and I believe, of leſſe verity than the other.

3 Reaſon.

3. That with ſtronger chaines and ties I might knit and unite the godhead unto our nature, in the perſon of Chriſt; when he did not onely and barely clothe himſelfe with our fleſh, which is common to other creatures, and had his ſoule created of nothing; but was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, and borne of the bleſſed Virgin, both in reſpect of body and ſoule.

4 Reaſon.

4. That we might receive the greater comfort, from Gods promiſes; which ſaith, he will be our God, and the God of our ſeed after us.

5 Reaſon.

5. That it might evince and attract a greater love of parents unto their children, and produce a greater duty and reverence of children unto their parents; when they do conſider that they owe unto them, not only their bare fleſh (for ſo if a man ſhould give me my food, and my nouriſhment, he might be ſaid to give me my fleſh) but alſo their very being, both in reſpect of body and ſoule.

6 Reaſon. To trace out originall ſin, which, without this, can not be well maintained; and therefore makes many that deny this, in a manner, to deny the ſame.

6. And laſtly, that I might the more eaſily trace out the paths of this cockatrice, the traduction of this originall ſinne, how it is leneally, in reſpect of man, and ſafely, without any imputation of any injuſtice in God, conveighed from the parents unto the children, in whom it is firſt laid up in the ſoule, and from thence it is derived, together with the life, into the fleſh, the bones and the inward marrow of every man; becauſe the ſeed partakes not onely of the ſtrength and vertue, but alſo of the faults and infirmities of the whole man; and therefore many times, we ſee many naturall and hereditary diſeaſes to be, as it were, intailed to one ſtock; and, if the mercy of God doth not prevent it, many vices proper and peculiar to one kindred: ſinne being like an infectious diſeaſe, that tainteth any, but eſpecially thoſe of the ſame bloud: ſo Adam ſinning, infected and poyſoned all his poſterity.

Sin like an infectious diſeaſe.

And therefore hoc virus paternum, this hereditary poyſon (as Paulinus calleth it) this our originall ſinne, that is inbred in every man, ſince the fall of the firſt man, may ſufficiently ſerve to teach us,

What we learne from this doctrine

First, to juſtifie God.

Firſt, to juſtifie God for inflicting death upon every man, though man ſhould do nothing els to procure his death, quia damnati antequam nati, becauſe every one is guilty of this ſinne, and therefore of death, before he commeth to this preſent life; for the reward of ſinne is death: and therefore the death of children and infants, that have done no actuall ſinne, doth prove them tainted with this ſinne; becauſe death cannot be juſtly inflicted upon thoſe that are no wayes infected with ſin; for the reward of ſin is death; but you ſee they are ſubject unto death, and therfore you may know they are tainted with ſin.

Secondly,

Secondly, this may ſerve to teach all thoſe that ſtand ſo much upon the honour and dignity of their naturall birth, to conſider what they are and what they have thereby, a ſinnefull, corrupted, and contagious being; to be made children of wrath, ſubject to death, ſlaves of damnation: be they Kings, Princes, Nobles, what you will, this is all they have or can have by their naturall birth; for whatſoever is borne of fleſh is fleſh, that is, all things that parents can convey unto their children is but a corrupted naturall being; yea, though the parties ſhould be ſanctified themſelves, and thereby procure their children to be received and reputed members of the viſible Church before men; yet can they not infuſe Grace, nor produce ſanctified children in the ſight of God; For though we reade of ſome, that were ſanctified in their Mothers wombes, as Ieremie, Iohn Baptiſt, and the like; yet this ſanctifying grace was infuſed by God, and not traduced from their parents: and therfore this ſhould make all men to be of an humble ſpirit, and to rejoyce more in their ſecond birth, in the Baptiſme that they have received, it may be by the hands of ſome meane Miniſter, and their begetting unto the faith of Chriſt, by the preaching of the Word of God, then in all that glory and excellencie that they have gotten from their naturall parents; for they did but make us Men, theſe muſt make us Chriſtian men.

Secondly, to bee humbled.

Iob 3.6.

Perkins in lud 1.

Ier. 1.5.

Luk. 1.44.

3. This may ſerve to confute thoſe Pelagians, Anabaptiſts and the Church of Rome, that denie this originall corruption to be a ſin, that doth alwaies remaine and continually deſerve death at the hands of God; for Velatius and his Sectaries, in the time of Theodoſius the younger, Anno 382, and Iohn Leiden, about the yeere 1535. and Albertus Pighius, Ambroſius Catharinus, Andradius, and many others of the Romiſh Church, doe denie this naturall contagion to be properly any ſin, quia reſultat ex compoſitione & temperatura partium corporis humani, becauſe it ſpringeth from the temperature and compoſition of the parts of mans body; and therefore Cynglius ſaith, it may be better called a naturall diſeaſe then a tranſgreſſing ſinne, unleſſe you meane metonimically, becauſe it is effected through the ſinne of Adam. And they reaſon thus.

2 To confute Pelagius, &c. Aug. de hæreſ. 88 Sleidan comment. l. 10. Cochlæus 3. art. confer.

Ob. That which is forbidden by no law is no ſin; but this originall corruption is forbidden by no law, Ergo no ſin.

Sol. I anſwer that it is forbidden in every law, for where I am commanded to love God with all my heart, and to love my neighbour as my ſelfe; if I faile in any point, that defect, which is a branch of originall corruption, is an abſolute breach of Gods Commandement.

But here it may be demanded whether this originall corruption, granted to be a ſinne in it ſelfe, doth yet remaine a ſinne in thoſe that are regenerated; for the Councell of Trent ſpeaking of this point ſaith, The holy Synod doth declare, that the concupiſcence, which the Apoſtle ſometime calleth ſinne, was never underſtood by the Catholique Church, to be properly called ſinne in the regenerate, but becauſe it is of ſinne and doth incline unto ſinne; and according to this tenent, Alexander Hales was wont to ſay of Bonaventure, if we looked onely unto him, we could not finde that Adam ſinned, and of S. Francis it is written, (they ſay upon the Church doores at Bloys) quæretur peccatum ejus & non invenietur; his ſins ſhall be ſought for but not found.

Whether originall ſin doth remaine in the regenerate.

In ſtare Bonaventura non videtur Adam peccaſſe. Trithem de ſcriptor. Eccleſiaſt.

And this tenent is principally confirmed by theſe arguments.

Ob. 1. Sinne is taken away in Baptiſme; Ergo, there is no originall ſin in the regenerate.

Acts 2.38.

Sol. I anſwer, ſin may be ſaid to be taken away two waies,

1. By the not imputation of it;
2. By the abolition of it.

} And

In the firſt ſence, ſin is taken away by Baptiſme; becauſe it ſhall never be laid unto our charge. But Originall ſin never extinguiſhed.

In the ſecond ſence, it is aboliſhed by degrees and never extinguiſhed untill death.

1 Cor.7.14.

Ob. 2. Saint Paul speaking of the children of the Corinthians, saith, they were holy; Ergo, without sin.

Sol. I answer, that by this Epithite, the Apostle meaneth they were within the covenant of grace, separated from the world, but not freed from sinne; But

1 Cor.6.11. Ioh.13.10.

Ob. 3. The Apostle saith, we are sanctified and washed, and as our Saviour saith we are cleane.

Sanctification twofold.

Sol. I answer, that Sanctification is either { 1. Inchoated. 2. Perfected. }

By the first, we obtaine all graces in respect of their number, but not in respect of their full measure.

By the second, we receive them in respect of number and measure; the former admits the remainder of originall corruption, but the latter doth not; Yet

Ephes. 5.26,27.

Ob. 4. The same Apostle saith, that Christ gave himselfe for his Church, that he might sanctifie it and make it glorious without spot or wrinkle; Ergo, the regenerate are perfectly holy.

Sol. I answer, Christ did so; to make it without spot or wrinkle; but when shall it be so? not in this life but in the life to come, as S. Augustine sheweth at large against Pelagius.

Therefore I say, that this originall corruption dwelleth and remaineth in every man, regenerate or unregenerate, untill his death; and this may bee proved.

Originall sin in us till death, proved. Rom.7.24.

1. By the speech of the Apostle, saying, ô wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? which are the rebellions of his flesh, and are the same with originall sin.

Iames 1.15.

2. From the effects of this sinne, which are actuall transgressions, as the Apostle sheweth, lust when it is conceived bringeth forth sinne; and the most regenerate are not free from these, as the Scripture teacheth.

Ephes 4.22. Colos 3.5.

3. From the exhortations that are made unto the best Saints, to put off the old man with the deceaveable lusts thereof, &c.

Difference betwixt originall sin in the regenerate and the unregenerate, twofold.

But, though I account this sin to be in all men, yet I say, that there is a twofold difference betwixt the manner of its being in the regenerate & the unregenerate; as { 1. In respect of imputation. 2. In respect of dominion. } For

1 Difference.

1. It is not laid to the charge of the regenerate, but it is remitted them through Christ; whereas the unregenerate are still liable to condemnation for the same.

2 Difference.

2. It is suppressed in the regenerate and mortified every day more and more; but it is exercised in the unregenerate and is still increased to their further and their greater condemnation.

And thus you see, that by the guilt of Adams sin, every child of Adam deserves eternall death, before he comes to this present life.

Ezek.18.2.

But becaus we would be sure enough of death, we will hasten it, and draw it on, as it were with cart-ropes throughout all our life, and we will not have it said, our Fathers have eaten sower grapes, and the childrens teeth are set on edge, or, that Adam sinned and we are punished; nam erravimus cum patribus, for we have sinned, and will sin with our fathers, and more then our fathers, we will drinke iniquity like water, and add unto our originall corruption those daily heapes of our actuall transgressions.

And therefore you must give me leave to insist a little upon this point, and to take a further view of this our immortall enemie, this actuall sinne, that bringeth death: I confesse it is an Hydrian beast, that hath many heads, it is like a continued quantity that admits of infinite sections: I cannot touch them all, yet for methods sake and the furtherance of our memory, I desire you to consider these foure points.

1. The

1. The nature of it, how it is defined.
2. The variety of it, how it is multiplied.
3. The degrees whereby it is increased.
4. The manner how it is committed.

} By which foure things, well

Foure things considered in the handling of actu. all sinne.

considered, we shall, in some measure, see the ongly shape and deformity of this monster, sin.

Chap. II.

Of the names and nature of actuall sinne, what it is: and by what degrees it is inwardly increased.

1 The names and nature of sin.

SIn as it is observed by the Learned, is called by many names, as

The many names of sin.

1. ἀνομία, that is, a want of conformity to the law of God. 1 Name. Heb. 2 9.

2. ἁμαρτία; a willfull erring and an obstinate doing of that thing, which the law forbiddeth us to doe. 2 Name. 1 Ioh. 5. 17.

3. παράβασις, a transgressing or transcending beyond the bounds and limits prescribed unto us by the law. 3 Name. Rom. 4. 15.

4. παρήκοον, a refusing to hearken and to be obedient unto the rules and precepts of the law. 4 Name. Rom. 5 9.

5. ἀσέβεια, a want of godlinesse and goodnesse in the heart of man. 5 Name. 1 Tim 1. 9.

6. πλημμέλεια, an odious and abominable act in the sight of God. 6 Name. Gen. 26. 10.

7. παράπτωμα. a falling downe, as a man falleth in the streets. 7 Name. Gal. 6 1.

8. ἀπόστασις, a standing off or rebelling against our Soveraigne, and associating our selves unto his enemies. 8 Name. Heb. 13. 12.

All which names, and the like, that are frequently given to sinne in the holy Scriptures, doe sufficiently shew what an odious, loathsome, hatefull, and abominable thing it is. It is said, that as God is infinite and incomprehensible, propter formositatem, for his goodnesse and beauty, so sin hath a kinde of infinitude in it, propter deformitatem, for the odiousnesse and ouglinesse thereof; and therfore it is a hard thing to determine what it is. Godefrid. Heidel. Field. Aug contra Faustum. l 22. c. 27.

Yet Saint Augustine defineth sin to be factum, aut dictum, aut concupitum contra legem Dei, any fact, or word, or thought, that is contrary to the Law of God; and S. Ambrose briefer, saith, that sin is the breach of Gods Law: but Zanchius fuller, and to my content, plainer, saith, that an actuall sin is an anomie * whereby those humane acts, that doe proceed from the corruption of our flesh, are contrary to the Will of God, ingraffed in the mindes of men, and especially revealed in the Word of truth; for herein is expressed both the matter and the forme of sinne. As What actuall sin is. Zanch de peccato actuali lib. 1 thes 3 pag. 161. * A want of rule.

First, Materiale peccati, the matter of sin is said to be a humane act, whether thought, word, or deed; for otherwise it cannot be said to be an actuall sin, where there is no act: and therefore not onely in sinnes of commission, as adultery, murther, theft, and such like; but also in those sins, which are called sins of omission, as not to pray, not to doe that service unto God, which we owe unto him, there is not onely a meere privation, but there must be also, aliquid positivum, some act that makes the sinne; as when thou omittest thy duty, either because thou wilt not doe it, and there is an act of thy will; or because thou canst not remember and hast forgotten to doe it; and there is an act of thy memorie; or else thy unwillingnesse, thy unableness, and thy forgetfullnesse, doe proceed from some act and occasion either present or precedent, which makes thee to omit the things commanded, and so to sinne; as when thy feare blindes thy judgement, that thou canst not discerne the truth, or thy drunkennesse causeth thee to sleepe, when thou shouldest be hearing the Word of God. The matter of sin must be a humane act. Furor iraque mentem precipitant.

But you must not think every humane act to be a sin, but only those that do proceed from the corruption of our flesh, and are contrary to the Will of God; For

Secondly,

The very being of sinne, is an erring from the will of God.

Secondly, Formale peccati, (as the Schoolemen call it) the very being of sin, is a deviation from the Will of God; For the Will of God is to be alwaies set before our eyes, as the onely rule, whereby we are to square all our actions; and therefore every man should say with the Psalmist; In the volume of thy booke it is written of me, that I should fulfill thy will, O my God, I am content to doe it; and every man should doe as he saith, Thy will bee done in earth as it is in Heaven; for whosoever erreth from his Will, sinneth against his owne Soule; but whosoever doth the will of my Father, the same is my brother, and my sister, and my mother, saith our Saviour Christ.

Psal.40.10.

Mat.6.10.

Mar.3.35.

The will of God is revealed in our consciences, and in the Scriptures.

But because the will of God is not alwaies knowne to us, neither can wee search into that which he concealeth from us, therefore you must understand that the revealed will of God is lydius-lapis, that touch-stone which trieth every action, and makes it either just or sinnefull: Now this will of God is revealed in the booke of every mans conscience, and in the booke of holy Scriptures; For of the first, the Apostle saith, that the Gentiles, though they had not the written Law of Moses, yet had they the Law of God written in their hearts, because their consciences bare them witnesse what was to bee performed, and what was to be eschewed, and did accuse them when they did ill, and excuse them when they did well: and therefore whatsoever they did against their owne conscience, they did the same against the will of God, revealed and ingraven in their hearts: and therefore the Apostle saith, that as many as have sinned without the law, that is, without the written law of Moses shall also perish without the Law: because they having not the law, were a law unto themselves. And,

Rom.2.15.

Rom.2.14.

The Word of God is divided into two parts, that is, 1 The Law, and 2 The Gospell.

For the second, we must not onely understand the Law of decalogue, or tenne Commandements (although that be the chiefest rule to expresse all sin,) but we must also consider the Gospell, as a part of that booke, wherein the revealed will of God is expressed; for there are many things forbidden, and many things commanded in the Gospell, which are not plainely expressed or mentioned in the Law, as to beleeve Iesus the sonne of Mary to be the Messias, whereby all sins are taken away, and without whom all sins doe remaine; for so Christ himselfe testifieth, that the Holy Ghost should reprove the world of sinne, because they did not beleeve in him; and therefore whatsoever act is done against the will of God, revealed either in the Law or the Gospell, the same is sinne.

Iohn 6.9.

2 The variety of sins.

2. For the variety of sin, how manifold it is, and how many kindes there be of sins, we find it like a full growne tree, like a mighty oke, full of boughes, and full of branches; yet for methods sake we may distinguish them

1. In respect of their subject.
2. In respect of their object.

1 In respect of their subject,

1 The subject, wherein sin resideth, and by whom it is committed, is man: for I speak not here of the sins of the Angels; and this man, consisting both of body and soule, his sins are to be considered,

2 Of the soule, three waies.

1. In respect of his soule,
2. In respect of his body.

} And in the soule, wee finde three things most considerable.

1. Understanding. 2. Will. 3. Affections. So

1 Of the understanding.

1. In respect of the understanding, sin is either of ignorance, or of knowledge; whereof I shall speake hereafter.

2 Of the will, three waies.

2. In respect of the will, sins are committed either

1. With a full consent.
2. Against the will.
3. With a mixed minde.

} Whereof

Iude 12.

Rom.7.19.

The 1 is intollerable; the 2 is more excusable, and the 3 is likewise pardonable; for he that willfully doth, what he knoweth to be evill, without any reluctation of minde, is like a tree twice dead and plucked up by the rootes: but they that can say with the Apostle, I finde no meanes to doe the good I would, and what what I would not, that do I; do shew, that they have an earnest desire, both to do what is good, and to abstaine from what is evill, so farre as their ability will give them leave; and this is a great signe of a good mind, and a hopefull testimony of a regenerate soule; and those sins, that proceed from a mixed mind, are those evill motions which, with some delight, do arise in our thoughts, but are never consented to be perpetrated.

Quest. But here it may be demaunded, whether all motions unconsented to, be sinfull.

Resp. It is answered, that all evill motions do proceed either
1. From the corruption of our nature; or
2. From the suggestion of the divell.

Evill motions, whence they spring.

The first are ours, the second not.

And these twofold motions are said to be discerned and distinguished by these foure speciall differences.

Vide Mayer in his fourefold resolut. p. 134.

1. The diabolicall motions are sudden and violent, weakening the memory, dulling the senses, and wearying the braines; but the naturall motions are more leisurely and lesse violent.

Differences betwixt diabolicall and carnall motions.

2. The diabolicall motions are to do things irkesome and grievous, contrary to the light of nature, as to extinguish nature, and the like; but the other, to do the things that seem most pleasing unto flesh and bloud.

3. The divels motions are more subtill and cunning, ours m ore grosse and plaine.

4. The divels motions are most commonly strange and uncouth, possessing us with feare, and swallowing us with faintnesse; but our carnall motions proceed from some objects that have been presented unto our senses.

3. In respect of the affections, every sin is either
1. Of infirmity; or
2. Of presumption.
And

3 Of the affections.

The first is committed either through a sudden passion of the mind, as anger, love, feare, griefe, and the like; or through such a violent temptation, as his weak faith is not able to make resistance; and these sins are compared unto fals, Gal. 6. 1. Prov. 24. 16. and that in a fourefold respect.

1 Of infirmity.

1. Because the traveller falleth against his will, so these men have no purpose to sin.

Sinnes of infirmity compared to the fall of a traveller in foure respects.

2. The traveller is sorry for his fall, by reason of the dammage that he receiveth thereby; so these men are exceeding sorrie for their sins; because they have offended God, wounded their owne consciences, scandalized their neighbours, and made themselves liable to many punishments.

3. The traveller that falleth will rise againe assoone as ever he can; so these men, after they have sinned, will, as speedily as ever they can, rise againe by repentance, as you may see in David, S. Peter, and the like.

2 Sam. 12. Mat. 26. 75.

4. The traveller, after his fall, will looke the more warily unto his feet; and so these men, after they have been wounded by sin, will very carefully look unto their wayes, and, as the Poet saith of his boat.

Illum quo læsa est horret adire locum.

So the soule of a good man is loth to fall into that pit, wherein he was once implunged. But

Secondly, the presumptuous sinne is that, which is wilfully and obstinately committed against the Law of God, to the prejudice either of our soules or bodies: Of which sins I shall have occasion to speake more copiously hereafter.

2 Of presumption

2. The sins of man in respect of his body are said by the Apostle to be either

2 Sinnes in respect of the body. 1 Cor. 6. 18.

1. Without the body, that is, whose matter is supplied from without the body; though they do abuse the body withall; as drunkennesse, surfeiting, selfe-murder, and the like.

2. Against the body, whose matter springeth from the body it selfe, and which bring more hurt unto the body, than any other, as are adultery, fornication, Sodomie, and the like.

2. The

2 How sinnes are distinguished in respect of their object.

2. The object of sin is the Law of God; for sin is the transgression of the law, and where there is no law, there is no sin; and thus sins may be distinguished to be, either

1. Against God, or against man.
2. Of omission or commission.
3. Greater or lesser.

} For

1 Sinnes against God and against man.
1 Sam.2.25.

1. Eli aggravating the sin of his sons, saith, If one man sinne against another, the Iudge shall judge it; but if a man sinne against the Lord, who shall plead for him? And those are primarily said to be sins against God, which do immediately redound to his dishonour; as are the transgressions of the commandements of the first table, atheisme, idolatry, vaine swearing, blasphemy, perjury, prophaning the Sabbath, and the like; and those are said to be sinnes against man, which are the transgressions of the precepts of the second table; and they are called sins against man, not that they are not also sinnes against God, but because that with the offence to God, there is in these a dammage and a trespasse committed also against man.

2 Sinnes of omission and commission.
Iam.4.17.
Mat.3.10.

2. Sinnes of omission are the neglect of those duties that are commanded; whereof the Apostle saith, to him that knoweth to do well, and doth it not, to him it is sinne; and Iohn Baptist saith, every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewen downe, and cast into the fire; to teach us, that the omission of good duties is a sufficient cause, to condemne any man to hell. And therefore our Saviour, in the last judgement, will pronounce the sentence of condemnation against the wicked, not for the evill things that they have done, but for the good things they left undone; not for oppressing the poore, but for not relieving the distressed, not clothing the naked, not feeding the hungry, and the like; but if these defaults be so great, then what shall we think of the sins of commission, which either directly, or by consequent, do most apparently breake the commandements of God?

Mat.25.41,42.

3 Sinnes greater or lesser.

3. Sinnes are either greater or lesser; as the sins that are against God, infidelity, idolatry, blasphemie, and the like, are greater and more hainous than fornication, lying, theft, or the like; so the perpetrating of a sin indeed is a great deale more, and farre worse, than the thought and intention to do it; though the thought of murder is a breach of Gods precept, and the looking upon a woman to lust after her, is no lesse than adultery in the heart, as our Saviour testifieth.

Mat.5.28.

So you see the many many kinds and sorts of sins.

Which may serve to teach us, how lamentable is the state of wretched man, that hath so many thousands of sins to fight against him; For seeing there are so many wayes to sin, O Lord who knoweth how oft he offendeth? And therefore, seeing there are so many multitudes of sins conspiring our destruction, I pray thee, O Lord, enter not into judgement with thy servants, and call us not to account for our sins, because we are not able to answer thee one of a thousand.

Iob 9.3.

3 The degrees whereby sinne is increased.
Bern.de grad. humilitatis.

Thirdly, For the degrees whereby sin is increased, we must note, that nemo repentinè fit pessimus, sed paulatim descendit, no man is suddenly desperately evill, but he descendeth to hell as it were insensibly; for the divell is like a serpent, creeping, and sliding by little and little, when we cannot perceive his paths: and therfore we should be very wary to mark his foot-steps.

1 Inwardly.
2 Outwardly.
Isider.de summo bono.

Now as every sin is committed either inwardly or outwardly, so every sin is increased either inwardly in our minds, or outwardly in our actions.

1. Sinne is inwardly increased by three degrees.

1. Inwardly it increaseth and groweth by three degrees.

1. By the suggestion of Satan.
2. By the delight of the Flesh.
3. By the consent of the Spirit.

} For

Suggestion begins the sin, delight continueth the sin, and consent doth quite finish the same.

1 By suggestion, Satan suggesteth sin diverse wayes.

The first we cannot well avoid, because Satan is ever busie to suggest sin into us, somtimes horribly to prodigious villanies, somtimes secretly he insinuates himselfe himselfe under the shape of an Angell of light, and suggesteth sin under the shew of vertue: and thus in every member of our bodies, and in every corner of our soules, he lurketh and lieth upon a bed of fornication, suggesting falshood into our hearts, lightnesse into our heads, adulteries into our eyes, oathes into our mouthes, and intemperancies into our whole bodies. 2 Cor. 11. 14.

And although this suggestion is from Satan, yet is it a transgression in us; Inest enim peccatum cum suggeritur, regnat cum delectaris, primum peccatum cogitasse quæ mala sunt; for sin entreth when it is suggested, and it raigneth when thou consentest and art delighted with it; because the first sin is to have any thoughts of sin, saith S. Hierom: and therefore we should labour and strive, what lieth in us, to prevent the comming in of the divell, to suggest any sin unto us; and this we may do, if we looke upon him before he comes unto us, and if we shut him out when he cometh towards us. And The first suggestions of Satan are sinnes. Hieron. l. 1 in Amos.

He that would see the divell comming, must behold him before he comes too neare; for as in the Opticks, if a man would perfectly see the perfection of any picture, he must stand a pretty distance from it; so in the aspects of Satan, if a man would throughly perceive the deceitfulnesse, and the uglinesse of his shadows, and the filthines of his form, he must look upon him before he comes too near him; and this is the reason why many do not detest him, because they never looked on him, before he imbraced them; for as our eyes being too neare any object, the beames of our sight will be confounded, so Satan having closed with us, he darkeneth the eyes of our understanding, that we cannot see him as he is. How we may avoid the suggestions of Satan.

And therefore it would be well for us, if we could be induced to behold his pride, his drunkennesse, his oathes, his avarice, and all his foule deformities in other men, that this might make us to detest him, and shun him before he comes into our selves; for the old rule is very true, 1 By beholding his uglinesse in others.

Fœlix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum;

Every schoole-boy learn'd it; let us all learne to practise it; behold the uglinesse of Satan in other men that are his sinners, before he comes into our soules. And

Secondly, when we have beheld him in others, let us not stand still while he comes unto us; but let us quickly run unto the works of our vocations, before he can fasten on us any of his suggestions; for as a bird sitting still upon the pearch, when she seeth the fowler, may be easily catched; but if she soone flies away, she is safe enough from all danger; so a man giving himselfe to idlenesse is soone tempted to wickednesse, but if he gives himselfe to reading, praying, or any other work of his vocation, he shall be the freer from the divels suggestion; and therfore S. Hierom exhorteth his friend Rusticus, to be never idle, but alwaies busied about some good worke or other, ut quando diabolus veniret, inveniret occupatum, that whensoever the divell should come, he should find him working in Gods vineyard. 2 By the continuall following of our vocation. Idlenesse is a great furtherance to wickednesse. Quæritur Ægistus quare sit factus adulter: In promptu causa est, desidiosus erat.

3. When the divell profereth his inticing suggestions, let us say with our Saviour, vade Satana, non tentabis; Avoid Satan, thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God; Nam qui hominem Dei tentat, Deum tentat, for he that tempteth a man of God, tempteth God also; and if we thus resist him, we shall be sure to foyle him, sure to vanquish him; because the divell is like a shadow, 3 By a stout resisting of the divell. Christ in opera imperfect. hom. 5.

Si fugio, sequitur; sed me fugit illa sequentem.

Or as Theodore Beza doth most wittily expresse it in his Emblemes, saying, Theoder Beza in Emblem.

Niliacus qualis serpens fugientibus instat,
Instantes fugiens, quamlibet ante ferox:
Sic vetus ille Draco, sævus mortalibus hostis,
Te reprimente fugit, te fugiente premit.

Satan, that red Dragon, is like the snakes of Nilus, if I be afraid and flie from him, he will pursue me, but if I resist him and insist upon him, he will flie from me, as the Apostle sheweth: Or he is like that tree, which groweth in Pudifera, whereof Scaliger maketh mention, to which, if a man comes, it will presently constringere ramos, shrink up his boughs, as angry and displeased; but if I am. 4. 7. Iul. Scaliger de subtil. adverf. Cardan. exercitat. 182. § 28.

Diana's image, what it did.

you depart, it will ramos pandere, spread his boughs, as being content and pleased againe; not much unlike the image of Diana, at Chios, who looketh sowre at your entrance into the Temple, but smileth at your departure: So the divell, if he seeth us afraid, will ramos pandere, spread his nets, and use all his subtilties to insnare us; but if we will confront him, and withstand him to his face, then he will constringere ramos, withdraw himselfe, and vanish quite away: and therefore when he came to Christ, our Saviour did withstand him, like a feareless heroicke; but how? not with the power of his deity, which he could have done, but then we could not have imitated him, but with the Word of God; to teach us, that we can have no better weapons to overcome the divell, than the holy Scriptures, which is the sword of the spirit, or the shield of faith, whereby we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of Satan, and the sharpe sword of fervent prayer, which is only able to overcome all our enemies.

Eph. 6. 16, 17.

2 How apt our flesh is to commit sin.

Secondly, when Satan by his wicked suggestions, hath emised the seed of sinne into our hearts, like a father, then our corrupted flesh, by wicked thoughts and imaginations, receiveth and conceiveth sin as a mother; and it is as fruitfull of all manner of sins, as Diodorus Siculus reporteth the Ægyptian Ilands to be of vermines: and therefore, (as the wise man saith) cum omni diligentia observa cor tuum, look not only to thy hands, and to thy feet, to thy words, and to thy workes, (though these also should be carefully looked unto) but especially above all things, look to the thoughts and inward affections of thy heart; for as the wood is, so the fire will be; unsavoury wood will make unwholsome fire, but sweet frankincense, or drie juniper, will yeeld a pleasant perfume; so wicked thoughts and affections will bring forth lewd words, and wicked actions; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

Pro 4. 23.

How wicked thoughts will bring forth wicked works.

Mat. 12. 34.

And therefore S. Augustine saith, that our hearts should be very wary, never to be delighted with any sin suggested by Satan; Nam cum sola cogitatione mens delectatur illicitis, for when the mind, in the thoughts and cogitations onely, is delighted with unlawfull things, though it purposeth not to do them, but doth as it were thinke of them, and is tickled with them, that little delight, which it conceives of those thoughts, Non negandum esse peccatum, etsi longe minus quam si & opere statuatur implendum; It cannot be denied but it is a sinne, though not neare so great, as when we purpose to bring the said cogitations into actions; and therefore (saith he) Statim ut attingent animum, respui debent, assoone as ever such thoughts of evill do invade or touch our minds, we should presently smother them and cast them off; and then, De talibus quoque cogitationibus venia petenda est, pectusq; percutiendum atq; dicendum, Dimitte nobis debita nostra; We should crave pardon of God for such wandering thoughts, and striking our breasts, say, O Lord forgive us our sinnes; for who can tell how oft he offendeth?

Aug de Trin. l. 12.

That the least titillation of the mind with sin is sin.

Mat 6 12.

Wherefore, my deare brethren, when the divell peepes in at our windowes, and, like a cunning impostor, doth seeke slily to conveigh his delusions into our hearts, and to tickle our flesh with the delights of sinne, let us presently shut the windowes of our soules, and stop the eares of our flesh, like the deafe adder, that will not heare the voice of the charmer, charme he never so wisely; and let reason tell our sensuality, that our carnall senses are deluded, and will hatch but a viper, that, in the end, shall gnaw asunder the very bowels, where she was conceived, and will prove a Scorpion to sting thee, and not a bird to delight thee; and this bread, which the divell presents thee, will be found to be no bread to feed thee, but a stone to smite thee, or a poyson to destroy thee; and therefore that thou oughtest presently to flie away from sinne, as from the face of a serpent, Eccles. 21. For as a serpent hath a head, a body, and a taile; so hath sinne; the head is suggestion, the body is delectation, and the taile is consummation; and if the serpent can thrust in his head into any place, his body is so slippery, that he will easily pull in all the rest: So if Satan can have leave but to suggest his evill motions into our hearts, then, as when Eve admitted his conference, he did

Sin is like a serpent.

soone

ſoone perſwade her that the tree was good for meate, and a tree to be deſired to get knowledge, ſo he will quickly perſwade us to conſent unto the action; and therfore, as Procopius ſaith, we muſt keepe out the head of the Serpent, if we would keepe out her body, and we muſt ſhun the ſuggeſtions of Satan if we would avoid the ſinne.

Procop. in Exod.

Thirdly, when Satan, like the Serpent, hath perſwaded, and the concupiſcence of our fleſh, like Eva, is delighted, when ſhee ſees the fruit faire unto the eye, and the ſin pleaſant unto the taſte, then they draw in Reaſon, like Adam, to give conſent, and ſo to finiſh all, and to perpetrate the ſin; and this aggravates the ſin, and makes us voide of any excuſe; for whereas before, when the fleſh was onely delighted, but the ſpirit was not conſenting, a man might ſay, It is not I that doe it, but the fleſh that is joyned with me; and ſo if reaſon had refuſed, when the fleſh was delighted, a man might in ſome ſort be excuſed; quia peccata non nocent ſi non placent, becauſe ſins ſhall not hurt our ſoules, if our ſoules doe not delight in ſins; and that man, haud eſt nocens, quicunq; non ſponte eſt nocens, is ſcarcely guilty, that is not willing to offend, ſaith Seneca: and therefore, recipe jam ſenſus hera; quid te ipſa lacerans omnium aſpectum fugis? mens impudicam facere non caſus ſolet; thoſe that are violently haled to ſin, like Lucretia, that was raviſhed againſt her will, need not ſo much vexe themſelves with griefe, and ſhunne for ſhame the ſight of men; becauſe the minde, yeelding or denying conſent unto the deſires of the fleſh, doth either aggravate or extenuate the fact.

Gen. 3.
3. How the fleſh laboureth to draw our mindes to yeeld conſent to ſin.
Rom. 7. 17.
Greg mor. 16. expoſ. in Iob.

Seneca in Her. Oet.

Idem in Hippol., actu 3.

But when the ſpirit yeelds conſent unto the deſires and delights of the fleſh, as Adam tooke of the tree likewiſe and hee did eate, then (as Seneca ſaith) conſummata eſt infœlicitas, ubi non ſolum turpia delectant ſed & placent; The miſery and the iniquity of man is perfected, when the ſinne doth not onely delight the fleſh and ſenſuall part of man, but is alſo pleaſing and acceptable unto the ſpirit and reaſonable ſoule of man; and therefore (as Boetius ſaith) voluntario facinori nulla eſt excuſatio, to ſuch witting ſins delighting the fleſh, and conſented unto by the ſpirit, there is not, nor can be, any excuſe; Nam ut nequius eſt odiſſe juſtitiam quam non feciſſe, ita nonnunquam gravius eſt peccatum diligere quam perpetrare; For, as it is a viler thing to hate righteouſneſſe, then not to doe righteouſneſſe; ſo many times, it is a greater offence to delight in ſin, or to love evill, then to commit evill, as S. Hierom ſaith.

Idem epi. 58.
We are fully miſerable when wee yeeld full conſent and delight in ſin.

Boetius rhet. tenuor. lib. 2.

Hieron. in quæd. epiſt.

And the reaſon hereof is plaine; becauſe it is the conſent of the will, and the approbation of the fleſhly deſires, that makes the ſin, without which, ſome waies, or in ſome reſpects, it cannot be ſaid to be a ſin; Nam quemadmodum, qui videt meretricem & ſcit eſſe meretricem, non eſt ſcortator propter hanc cognitionem; For as he, which ſeeth a harlot, and knowes her to be a harlot, is not thereby a tranſgreſſor, becauſe of his knowledge of her; but if he conſenteth, purpoſeth, or affecteth to be joyned unto her, Tum eſt ſcortator, aut actione aut affectione; Then is he a fornicator and offender, either in action or in affection; Sic & bonorum & malorum hominum cognitio non eſt in cauſa, ut boni ſint aut mali; ſed propoſitum, quod eligit id quod ei viſum eſt; So the knowledge of good or wicked men, is not that which cauſeth them to be either good or bad, but it is their will and purpoſe to chooſe that which pleaſeth the ſame, which maketh them to doe well or ill, ſaith Iuſtin Martyr.

The approbation of our fleſhly deſires maketh ſin the more exceedingly ſinfull.

Iuſtin Mart. in reſp. ad Orthodox. ad q. 8. f. 273.

And as this conſent of will maketh the ſinne, ſo without this conſent of will, there can be no ſin; Nam ſi defectus iſte, qui peccatum dicitur, tanquam febris invitum occuparet, recte injuſta pœna videretur, quæ peccantem conſequitur & quæ damnatio nuncupatur; For if ſin, like a Fever, did violently invade us, and take hold upon us againſt our wils, then the puniſhment, which is damnation, and is impoſed for the ſinne upon the ſinner, would appeare to be unjuſtly inflicted; And therefore, Vſque adeò peccatum voluntarium malum eſt, ut nullo modo ſit peccatum niſi aliquo modo ſit voluntarium; Sin is ſo voluntary an evill, that by no meanes it can be ſin, unleſſe by ſome meanes it be voluntary; Et hoc quidem, ita manifeſtum eſt, ut nulla huic doctorum paucitas, nulla indoctorum turba diſſentiat;

If ſin did forcibly invade the mind, the puniſhment of ſinne might ſeeme unjuſt.

Aug. de vera relig.

And this is so manifest, and so agreed upon by all men, that neither learned nor unlearned, doe deny the same, saith S. Augustine.

Sinne shall not much hurt us, if our reason doe not consent to it.

And therefore though the divell, like a father, be alwaies ready to beget sin, and the lust and concupiscence of the flesh, which is appetitus sensitivus, be alwaies like a mother, apt to conceive sin, yet if appetitus rationalis, If our reason be not intreated, as a Mid-wife, to bring forth sin into action, it will proove an abortive, like the untimely fruit of a woman, which perisheth before it seeth the Sun; that is, though the least concupiscence (as I said before) be a sin, yet this sin will never proove so odious in the sight of God, nor yet so dangerous unto man, as when the sin is fully finished.

Psal. 58. 8.

Tickling theughts how sins.

Ob. But how then is that true (may some man say) which you said a little before, When the mind is any waies delighted with the least tickling thoughts and cogitations of evill, non negandum esse peccatum, we cannot denie the same to be sin; therefore the sensitive appetite of any evill makes it sin, though the rationall appetite doth not consent unto the same.

Sol. I answer, that the Objection answereth it selfe; for it saith when the minde is any waies delighted; but the minde cannot bee any waies delighted, without some consent of the reasonable appetite; therefore this proveth not any sensitive desire to be a sin without the consent of the reasonable appetite: And therefore, when the divell suggesteth sin, and laboureth to infect our flesh with delight, and thereby to carrie us headlong into the snare, as he carried the swine into the sea; let us take heed, that we consent not to sin, and suffer our reason, which is the superiour appetite, to yeeld unto the flesh and inferiour sensitive appetite of our soules; quia licet ineat peccatum, cum delecteris, non tamen regnat usq; dum consenseris, because consent to sin makes sin to reigne in our mortall bodies; and sin never reignes till we give our full consent; and therefore S. Bernard saith, vitiosos dico, qui ex voluntate consentiunt, nec resistunt quantum possunt. I call those evill and vitious men that willingly doe consent to sin, and will not resist it as much as they are able.

Mat. 8. 32.

Ansel. in Rom. 6. 12.

Bernard parv. ser.

The sensitive faultie doth soone defile the reasonable soule.

But we must note, that here is aliquod malũ propter vicinum malum; for the will and affection of the reasonable soule, by reason of his contiguity and vicinity with the sensitive lust and concupiscense of the flesh, is so dammaged, that, as no man toucheth pitch, but he is presently defiled with pitch; and the fire can never touch the tinder, but the same is presently kindled; so the thoughts and the apprehensions of the sensitive faculties, as soone as ever they touch the discussive faculty of reason, do instantly taint and corrupt the same.

How we should beware of sin before sinne comes neere unto us.

And therefore seeing our reason is depraved, and is thereby easily deceived with supposed apparent good, in steed of reall; and our sensitive appetite, tainting the rationall, makes our will oftentimes to finish that, which Satan hath suggested and the flesh hath lusted after; we ought to be very carefull, that our reasonable will and affection doe not yeeld to the perfecting of sin; and our reason should have her eyes alwaies open, with an Eagles sight, to behold sin a farre off, and to subdue the vile thoughts and desires of the flesh, before ever they enter upon any faculty of the soule: And so you see how sin is inwardly increased, Satan suggesteth it, Lust conceiveth it, and the Will finisheth it: and hereby also you may understand, that although there is a great dispute betwixt the body and soule, about the perpetrating of sin, each of them endeavouring to put off the enormitie of sinning unto the other; the body pleading for it selfe, that it is but inanimis truncus, a dead and a senceleſse piece of flesh, or a liveleſse trunke, void of all action, and uncapable of any motion from it selfe, and therefore could not sin, except the soule did actuate and enforce it to all and every naturall operation; and the soule pleading for it selfe, that it is purus & simplex spiritus, a pure and a simple spirit, destitute of all organs, and wanting those parts that commit the sin, as having neither eyes to behold vanity, nor hands to cõmit cruelty, nor feet to follow after iniquity, but being alwaies ready to mount aloft into the resedencie of spirits, if it were not detained as a prisoner within the limits of the body; and therefore the fault of sinning

The controversie betwixt soule and body, which of them is the cause of sinne.

sinning must needs rest upon the body; yet in very deed we find that neither the body sins without the soule, nor the soule without the body, but like Simeon and Levi, they are brothers and partners in every mischiefe, and like Hypocrates twins they have idem velle & idem nolle, they doe commonly will and nill the same thing: and so Peter Martyr doth illustrate the same by this simile; that there was a Master of a family, which committed the custody of his Orchard unto two of his servants, whereof the one was blinde and the other lame; and the lame servant, being taken in love with the beauty of the fruit, hee presently told his blind fellow, that if he enjoyed the use of his limbes, and had his feet to walke as well as he, it should not be long ere he would be master of those apples; the blind man answered he had as good a mind to enjoy them as himselfe, and if his eyes had not beene blind they had not rested all this while upon the tree; whereupon they both agreed, to unite their strength, and to joyne their force together, the whole-lim'd-blind man tooke the well-sighted lame-man upon his shoulders, and so they reached the apples and conveyed their masters fruit away, and being impeached for the fault, and examined by their Master, each one framed his own excuse; the blind man said he could not see so much as the tree whereon they grew, and therefore it was plaine he could have none of them; and the lame man said, he could not be suspected, because he had no limbes to climbe, or to stand to reach them; but the wise Master perceiving the subtle craft of those false servants, put them, as they were, one upon the shoulders of the other, and so punished them both together; and so sin is neither of the body without the soule, nor of the soule without the body; but corporis animiq; communis est actus, it is a common act both of body and soule, as S. Ambrose saith; and therefore God will punish both body and soule, if they bee not repaired and redeemed by Christ.

Peter Martyr in 4. reg. c. 4. p. 215.

The determination of the controversie concluded by a similie.

Heidelfeld de peccato p 362.

Ambros de fide & resurrect. c. 19.

Chap. III.

By what degrees actuall sinne is outwardly increased.

Secondly, sin is outwardly increased and augmented (saith Isidorus) three speciall waies.

1. It is secretly committed, when as yet they have not lost all shame.
2. It is publikely adventured, when they begin to grow impudent.
3. It is usually practised, when they are delighted with it; and to these waies I may add, that then
4. It is exceedingly, and most fearefully inlarged.

Isidorus de summo bono.

Jacobus de valentia, in Psal. 91.

Actuall sin is outwardly increased foure waies.

First, we will commit the sin, credamus tamen astu doloque tegere nos posse tantũ nefas; yet then we will seeke by all craft and subtilty, and by all other meanes, to conceale the same from the eyes of the world; for at the first wee are like Adam, ashamed, that God should see our nakednesse, or that the world should know those things that are done of us in darkenesse: and therefore we will use all our skill to cover it, and conceale it under the shadow of the fig-leaves, that if it be possible, neither God nor the world may espie the same; For sin of it selfe is so ougly, and so deformed a thing, that the sinner himselfe, if he could but truly see the same, would surely lothe it.

1 When we first practice sin, wee seeke by all meanes to conceale and to hide our sins. Gen 3. 8. Ephes. 5. 12.

And therefore Satan laboureth by all meanes to put out either verbum pradicatum, the preaching of Gods Word, which is the true light and candle that shineth unto every man, and sheweth him the right waies of godlinesse, or else verbum applicatum, the applying of this Word unto our soules, which is as the eyes whereby we doe perceive this light, without which we are like blinde men that can see nothing in the cleerest day: the first of these he put out in the daies of superstition, when men walked in darkenesse, and knew not where they went, they knew not what was sin: And the second he puts out now in the Sun-shine

How Satan seekes by all meanes to conceale the light of Gods Word.

Iohn 1.5.

Wee care not what great sins we do, so we may conceale them.

of the Gospell, when the light shineth in darkenesse, and the darkenesse comprehendeth it not: that is, when the truth is preached to wicked men, and their wickednesse will not suffer them to imbrace it; and therefore he causeth more sins, and more horrible sins, to be committed now in the light of the Gospell, then ever were done heretofore in the night of ignorance; for now, having our owne eyes, of the application of Gods light, put out by that myst of malice, which blindeth us, we care not how much, nor how great sins we doe commit; so we could put out the eyes of perspection, that the world might not see the same; and as the Hypocrites care was altogether that their good workes might bee seene of men; so all our care is, that our evill works may not be seene of men.

How insensibly sin creepeth into us.
Pro.30.20.
Mat.27.24.

Sin creepes into us as the Serpent crept into Paradise, we know not how; we may well demand the question, quomodo intrasti? how camest thou in hither? but we shall find the resolution, that it was most secretly and insensibly; and therefore we will conceale it as cunningly; either like Apolonius the Iugler, who as soone as he was before the Iudge, was presently vanished out of his sight; We will hide our sins that none may see them, and we will stand in sin, that we have not sinned; and as Salomons harlot would wipe her mouth, and it was not she, or, as Pilate would wash his hands, when he had condemned the Innocent blood; So now the drunkard, when he cannot stand, will stand to it, that hee is not drunke, and the swearer sweares and out-sweares all; and if you tell him of it, he presently sweares he swore not at all: And thus, as Rachel hid her fathers Teraphim, under a smooth pretence, that it was with her after the manner of women, or as Achan hid his wedge; so doth every sinner seeke to hide his sins: or else if we cannot hide them, but that sin it selfe, like Abels blood, will cry out so loud that it must be heard, then presently we will either lessen our sinnes with Saul, and say we did it indeed, but it was with no ill intent; I saved the fattest, but it was for a sacrifice for the Lord; or else with Adam, we will transferre our sins from our selves to others, light where they will, though it were on God himselfe: For, the woman that thou gavest me, gave it me, and I did eate. So cunning is every man to conceale his sin.

Gen 31.35.

Iosh.7.21.

1 Sam.15.15.

Gen.3.12.

Quid ille qui mundum quatit, vibrãs corusc at fulmen Æthereum manu, stator deorum? credis hoc posse effici inter videntes omnia ut lateas aves? Senec. in Hipol. Act. 1.

But alas: Quid ille rebus lumen infundens suum matris parens? What if thou couldest escape the eyes of men, is it possible for thee to blinde the all-seeing eyes of God? for hee is the true light that shineth and giveth light to every thing, and he beholdeth the ends of the world, and seeth all things that are under Heaven, saith holy Iob; He is about our beds, and about our pathes, and espieth out all our waies, saith the Prophet David; and his name is Θεὸς, ἀπὸ τῦ παντὰ θεᾶσθαι; Because he seeth and beholdeth all things; when as all things are naked in his eyes: and therefore what advantageth it thee to conceale thy sinnes from the knowledge of men, when thou canst no waies hide them from the eyes of God? For though no man saw God at any time, yet God seeth man at all times; He saw Nathaniel under the figg-tree, when Nathaniel saw not him; and he seeth thee committing sin, when thou seest no man but thy selfe.

Iohn 1.18.
That we cannot possibly hide our sins from the eyes of God.
Psal.139.
Iohn 1.18.
Iohn 1.48.

And therefore beware of sin, though no man seeth thee; Nam quemadmodum ignis, si tunica tegatur, For as the fire that is hid under thy coat, or in the straw, may be concealed for a time, but at last it will burst out to thy cost; so thy sin, which thou doest in secret, may be kept secret for a while, but at last, like an unwedded Virgins pregnancy, it will appeare to thy shame;

Melissa par. 1. fer. 16.

Claudian de 4. consul. Honorij.

——Nam lux altissima fati
Occultum nil esse sinit; latebrasq; per omnes
Intrat, & abstrusos explorat fama recessus:

Sap 1.7.10.

For there is no thought so secret that it shall goe for nought, because the Spirit of the Lord filleth the world, and hath knowledge of the voice, and the eare of jealousie heareth all things, and the voice of murmurings is not hid; and therefore our Saviour saith, That whatsoever is done in secret, shall bee preached openly; It may be, in this life, as the adultery of David, and almost all other horrible facts, as Treasons, Adulteries, Murthers, and such like, whereof we see almost none, but

Mat.10.26.

God,

God, ſtrangely, and by unknowne wayes doth bring them to light; or aſſuredly in the next life, when God ſhall ſhew the nations our ſhame, and diſcover all our moſt ſecret ſins in the ſight of men and Angels. Nah. 3. 5.

Secondly, after that the ſinner hath accuſtomed himſelfe to private and ſecret ſins, then he begins to grow bolder and bolder, and as further and further from all goodneſſe, ſo worſe and worſe in all wickedneſſe; for as Seneca ſaith, a The longer we practice ſin, the more impudent we grow in ſin.

Obſtare primum eſt, velle nec labi via;
Pudor eſt ſecundus, noſſe peccandi modum. Senec. in Hip.

To withſtand the ſin is the beſt, and not to fall; but if we have fallen, to be aſhamed that we have learned the way to ſin, is the beſt plank after ſhipwrack, to ſave a man; but when a man hath caſt off all ſhame of his ill-doing, then is he almoſt paſt all hope of well-doing: for, not only the Apoſtle ſaith, it is a ſhame to ſpeake of thoſe things which are done of them in ſecret; but the very Heathen Poet could ſay: When we have caſt of all ſhame of ſin, we are paſt all hope of goodneſſe. Eph. 5. 12.

Quis furor eſt, quæ nocte latent, in luce fateri,
Et quæ clam facias facta referre palam? Ovid. l. 3. amor.

What a madneſſe is it to ſpeake openly, what abominable ſins thou haſt committed ſecretly? And if it be a ſhame and a frenzy to ſpeake of thine abominations openly; O then how lamentable is thy caſe, to commit them publikely in the ſight of the Sun? Quia major eſt culpa manifeſtè quam occultè peccare, becauſe it is a farre greater ſin to commit any wicked fault openly, than it is to commit the ſame fact privately and ſecretly: for he is doubly guilty that ſinneth publikely; Et quia agit, & quia docet; Firſt, becauſe he doth that evill himſelfe; and ſecondly, becauſe he teacheth others, by his example, to do the like; and you know what our Saviour ſaith: He that breaketh the leaſt of theſe commandements, and teacheth others ſo to do, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdome of heaven: that is, none at all: he ſhall have no place at all in heaven. Iſidor. de ſummo bono l. 2. What a hainous thing it is to ſinne publikely, and ſo to teach others by our ill examples. Mat. 5. 19.

And yet as the Prophet Ieremie ſaid of the Iewes, That they carried their ſinnes in their foreheads, and had whores faces, which would not be aſhamed; ſo may we now ſay of our ſelves, we are as an impudent ſtrumpet, that will play the harlot in the ſight of her husband, and are more abaſhed at our baſe apparell, than we are at our wicked lives. Ier. 3. 3.

Thirdly, when we are come to that paſſe, to commit ſin without feare, and to do it openly without ſhame, to have our conſcience ſeared, and our hearts hardned in ſinne, then (as the old ſaying is) conſuetudo peccandi tollit ſenſum peccati; cuſtome of ſinning doth take away all the ſenſe and feeling of ſinne, & in familiaritatem graviſſima adducit, and makes the heavieſt ſinnes, like Miloe's Oxe, ſeeme light and ſmall unto them; for now the ſinner is in his owne element, and no element is heavy in his owne ſphere: Ideo & peccata, quamvis magna & horrenda, cum in conſuetudinem venerint, aut parva, aut nulla eſſe credunt peccatores: And therefore the ſinners, which are accuſtomed to ſin, do eſteeme their ſinnes, though they be never ſo horrid and horrible, to be either no ſinnes, or but very little ſinnes; and therefore though every ſin in it ſelfe is like a talent of lead, able to ſink down the ſtrongeſt ſoule to hell, or like the poyſonous juyce of Aconite, (which they ſay is the mortalleſt poyſon in the world; becauſe, as the Poets faigne, this herbe grew from that froth, that fell out of the jawes of Cerberus, when Hercules dragg'd him out of hell) yet do theſe men carry all their ſinnes away, as nimbly as Samſon did the gates of Azza, and drink up the ſame as ſmoothly as the drunkards uſe to ſip up their pleaſant Wine. 3 The cuſtome of ſinning makes the greateſt ſinnes ſeem but very ſmall. Seneca de trang. Lurida terribiles miſcens Aconita novercæ. Iudg. 16. 3.

And when we have accuſtomed our ſelves to ſin, then are we bound in ſin as with a chaine, more ſtrong than thoſe ſeven green withs, or thoſe ſeven new ropes wherewith Dalilah bound Samſon; for he brake the ſame as a thread, but we ſhall hardly eſcape out of theſe miſerable bonds of ſinne: Nam uſitata culpa ita mentem retinet, ut nequaquam ad rectitudinem ſurgere poſſit; for an uſuall cuſtome of ſinning doth ſo retaine the ſoule in ſin, that it cannot riſe to vertue; yea, though Iudg. 16. 12. The longer we continue in ſinne, the harder it is for us to forſake our ſinnes.

though she should somtimes endeavour to rise, yet should she alwaies faile to stand; Quia ubi sponte diu persistit, ibi & cum noluerit cadit; Because that where the sinner willingly long persisted, there, of necessity, he shall often unwillingly fall, saith S. Gregory.

Greg in quadam Homilia.

And so S. Chrysostome saith, that the soule of man, which once tasted of the sweetnesse of sin, and is not moved with sorrow or repentance for the same, causeth, by her own negligence, the strength of sin alwaies to increase; for as a spark of fire falling among the stubble, doth instantly kindle it, and is more and more augmented, if it be not presently extinguished, and then it never leaveth burning, till all be consumed: Even so is the nature of sin, when it hath once seized upon the thoughts of man, if it be not presently subdued, crusht in the shell, or, as S. Augustine speaketh of the children of the Babylonians, dasht against the wals, while they are yet tender and young, it will grow further and further, and ever prove worse and worse, and more and more wild and untamed: and so the latter sins do alwaies prove the greater sinnes, and the end of such sinners farre worse than their beginnings, as our Saviour speaketh; for seeing they would not quench the first flames of sin, they are soon fallen into all kind of sins.

Chrys. adversus gentiles: ad Babylam Martyrem.

How sin will increase, if it be not at the first resisted.

Mat. 12. 45.

And then, Quemadmodum qui sub mille pædagogis vitam degunt, even as those men, which are kept under a thousand Schoole-masters, dare not looke aside for feare of being espied of them; nay more; then as the daughter of Inacus durst not turne any where for feare of Argos eyes; so they that are filled with sinnes, cannot, nay dare not speake of vertue, no more than a servant dares to speake against his Master; for he that doth sinne is the servant of sinne, saith our Saviour; Et duram servit servitutem; and surely such a one hath but a hard service of it, as hereafter I shall shew unto you.

Chrys. Hom. 59. in Mat.

What a slavery it is to serve sinne.

John 8. 34. 2 Pet. 2. 19.

But what shall I say of this custome? S. Augustine tels us, that the people of Cæsarea had an ancient custome to meet once a yeare for certaine daies together, and, dividing themselves into two parts, to throw stones one at another, the father not sparing the sonne, nor the sonne his father, when the Lot had separated the one from the other; and this custome, though it was most barbarous, and the occasion of the slaughter of many men, and the effusion of much blood every yeare, yet S. Augustine found it an exceeding hard matter to dissuade them from this senselesse custome; Egi quidem graviter quantum valui, he was faine to deale with them with all his might, and to use all his wit, to perswade them to desist it; and the reason of this great difficulty is rendred by the same S. Augustine in another place, Quia consuetudinem vincere est dura pugna, because it is a hard matter to overthrow a custome, which makes the face impudent, that we blush not to sinne, the heart senselesse, that we feele not our sin, and our sin tyrannous, that we must obey the lusts of it; for, if it be customes pleasure, that it must be so; it shall be so; law must not controll it, truth shall not alter it, sufferance hath made it above all right; we see this too much both in Church and Commonwealth, what abundance of evill this evill custome bringeth.

Aug. de doct. Christiana. lib. 3. c. 24.

Idem in Psal. 36. & in Johan. tract. 49. c. 11.

And therefore seeing, that as, τὰ μὴ καθαρὰ τῶν σωμάτων ὁ κόπος αὐξάνει μᾶλλον βλάπτει; the infected parts of the body, the more they are cherished, the more they are indammaged; so the soule, daily accustomed to sin, is the more infinitely endangered by sin; and in that respect, it were well for us Christians, if we would often remember the Heathen mans saying, Δὶς ἁμαρτεῖν ταὐτὸν οὐκ ἀνδρὸς σοφοῦ; No wise man will twice commit the same sin; and it would be better for us, that we should follow the other mans counsell, which saith:

Hypocrat. l. 2. Apher 9.

Est axioma inter milites est: Nō licet bis peccare. Plutarch in Apoth. Reg. Græc.

Obsta principijs, sero medicina paratur,
Cum mala per longas convaluere moras:

Ovid. de arte amandi:

Give the water no passage, no not a little, (saith the Sonne of Syrach) and suffer not sin to have footing in thee, but withstand the very first motions, and the least beginnings of the same; so maist thou the easier keep all these mad Greekes out of Troy, these deadly sins out of thy heart, if every Protesilaus, every first sin that seeks entrance into thy soul, shall, upon the first footing, be there laid for dead.

Ecclesiast. 25. 25.

How we ought to be very carefull to resist the beginnings of sin.

Otherwise,

Otherwiſe, as Nature, though it can eaſily exclude ſome kinds of diſeaſes, which caſually come unto us; yet is it preſſed and wearied with thoſe that are habituall: Even ſo (ſaith Thriverus) the ſoule of man, that is but once wounded, may the eaſier be cured, and the ſin by repentance may be the ſooner excluded: but the ſame wounds, being ſtill wounded, and the ſame ſins, being uſually practiſed, they will never, or hardly be ſubdued; for if an Ethiopian can change his blacke ſkin, or a Leopard his ſpots that are upon his backe, then can you do well, having learned and practiſed all the daies of your life to do evill, ſaith the Lord; and therefore, as our Saviour ſaith of rich men, I may as truly ſay of theſe men, that they can hardly enter into the kingdome of heaven.

Thriverius Apoth. 169.

Ier. 13. 23.

Mat. 19 23.

O then beloved brethren, let us not continue in ſin; for the further we go with the Prodigall Child, the harder it is for us to returne, and the more ſteps we go from any City, the more paines it will be for us to returne to that City againe; ſo the more ſinnes we commit, the more muſt be our ſorrowes for our ſinnes, and the harder it will be for us to forſake our ſinnes; for as μεγάλων ἁδικημάτων μεγάλας ἐκπωείας, great ſins and great offences deſerve great puniſhments, ſo they muſt be greatly ſorrowed for, before they be pardoned; for whoſoever ſinneth wickedly with S. Peter, he muſt go out with S. Peter, out of wicked company, out of his wicked ſins, and weepe bitterly.

Luke 13. 13.

Great ſinnes muſt have great repentance.

Grandia ſupplicijs gravibus peccata luuntur.

Mat. 27. ult.

And he that is uſed to ſinne, and to loſe grace, will hardly be induced to leave his ſinnes, and to ſeek for grace; or if he ſhould ſeek it, yet will it be very hard for ſuch a one to find it; for when Mary loſt Chriſt but one dayes journey; ſhe was three dayes ſeeking and ſearching after him, ſorrowing, before ſhe found him: and therefore queſtionleſſe if we loſe him thirty, forty, or fifty yeares, (as many men uſe to do) it will be very hard for us to find him in an houre, yea in the laſt houre, when we have no more houres left unto us; and therefore, to day if ye will heare his voice, harden not your hearts, but returne, returne O Shunamite, returne, returne; and ſeek him diligently whom thy ſoule loveth, but ſeek him quickly, and ſeek him now, while he may be found.

Luke 2. 46.

That we ought ſuddenly to return unto the Lord, and not to defer our converſion.

Pſal. 95. 8.

Qui non eſt hodie, cras minus aptus eris.

Fourthly, when the cuſtome of ſinning hath taken away the ſenſe of the ſin, and that the conſciences of the ſinners are cauterized, and, as it were, ſeared with a hot iron, then they do aggravate each ſin, and make every ſin exceedingly ſinfull; for now, peccator non timet ſuam famam, ſin is growne to his talleſt growth, and the ſinner hath eaten ſhame, and drunk after it; and therefore he can well digeſt it, he can feareleſſly commit it, in all places, at all times, and before all perſons.

4 How impudently ſin inlargeth his bounds.

The common ſwearer makes it a matter of nothing to thunder out multitudes of feareſull oaths like haile-ſtones, and (as S. Auguſtine ſaith of the companions of his youth) tanto gloriantes magis, quanto ſunt turpes magis, glorying in that moſt, whereof they ſhould be moſt aſhamed; and if you tell them of their ſwearing, they will ſweare they ſwore not at all; the drunkard, that thinks there is no kindneſſe, where there is no drunkenneſſe, and makes one drunkenneſſe the medicine to cure the diſtemper of another, doth riſe up early to powre in ſtrong drinke; and doth ſo ſwallow down his liquour, that himſelfe is wholly ſwallowed up of his drunkenneſſe, and is become ſo impudent, that he refuſeth to be aſhamed.

Aug. to. 1. l. 2. c. 3.

Eſa. 5. 11. Ier. 3. 3.

So Pope Iulius the third, being accuſtomed to eat porke, and forbidden by his Phyſitian to eat it, for his healths ſake, ſaid he would do it in deſpite of God; and ſo all cuſtomary ſinners do what this blaſphemous Pope hath ſaid; becauſe the cuſtome of ſinning, like the river Iordan, doth carie them, as the fiſhes that follow that ſtreame, in mare mortuum, into the dead ſea of deſtruction.

Nay now, he will not only ſin without feare, and go on without ſhame, but he will alſo

Jacobus de Valen. in Pſal. 91.

1 To excuſe it ſelf.

Firſt, Excuſe it, and ſay, it is no ſin; or if it be, it is but a ſin of infirmity, iſſuing from the temperature of his body; a trick of youth, or his heat and choller; or els, it is but a ſin of conformity, he doth but as the moſt men do, becauſe he would not be ſingular.

Secondly,

Secondly, they will lessen it, and, pretending some excuses, they will say with Saul, that they presumed and forced themselves to do such things; but they hope they are but trifles, small veniall sins; tush say they, will God be angry for such small sinnes? why; if he will; then

1 Sam.13.12. 2 To lessen it self. What wicked men will do to justifie themselves.

Thirdly, they will cleare themselves, and say with the same Saul, We have performed all the commandements of the Lord; we have kept them from our youth up, as the young man in the Gospell said; and if, as the bleating of the sheep, and the lowing of the oxen told Saul that he lied, so their sinnes do testifie unto their faces, that they have offended; then, as Saul layed all the burden upon the people, saying, the people spared the best of the sheepe and of the Oxen, and not I, and as Adam laid all the fault upon his wife, saying, the woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat; and therefore she is in all the fault, and not I: even so do they lay all their sins on others, even on God himselfe, rather than they will confesse themselves guilty of sin: then

3 To cleare it selfe

Mat.19,20.

1 Sam.15.15.

Gen,3.12.

Fourthly, they will not only cleare themselves from sin, and blasphemously say, that God is in the fault, that they do sin, because he did not make them so, that they could not sin; but they will also approve these sinnes in others, and knowing the judgement of God, (that they which commit such things are worthy of death) not onely do the same, but also have pleasure in them that do them: a most fearfull behaviour of most impudent men; and yet not all; for then

4 To lay the fault on God himselfe.

Rom.1.32.

Fiftly, they will not only consent with them that do such things, but they will also teach them how to do them, as our Saviour sheweth; they will set up a schoole of wickednesse; these shall be the least in the kingdome of heaven, that is, none at all, saith the blessed Verity: And yet for all this, we are not come to the height of our times iniquity, for we will be sure to have a note above Ela, to go a little further than either Scriptures or times can give us presidents: and therefore

5 To teach others to be wicked.

Mat.5.19.

Sixtly, if these mens schollers be not able enough to learn to sin, they will cause them and compell them to do it, there is no resistance: see how the drunkards do it in every place, and many more, who take delight to drive men into hell.

6 To compell others to wickednesse.

And therfore now, this πνεῦμα κατανύξεως this spirit of slumber, or this sleep in sin, which we may rightly call ἀδελφὸν θανάτου, the brother of death, or a deadly sleep, makes these wofull sinners to sit in the seat of the scornfull, that is, securè & pertinaciter perseverare in delictis, & omnem pietatem habere pro ludibrio; most securely to continue, most obstinately to go on in all iniquity, and most basely to esteem of all piety; making but a mock of God and of all godlinesse: And therefore the Prophet saith of such sinners, that they have made a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell it selfe, that is, never to forsake that sinfull course of life, till death doth send them quicke to hell.

Psal 8.1. Mollerus in Psal.1

Esa.28.15.

That we should break the covenant, which we have made with hell, if ever wee would go to heaven.

But I could wish that they would be false herein, and as they have broken the covenant of their God, which they have made with him in baptisme, so they would break this agreement with hell, and cast off these cords from them; for the reward of sinne is death, and therefore much more of such fearefull sins as these be. And so you see the degrees by which sin is increased.

CHAP. IV.

Of the manner how every sin is committed.

4 The manner how every sin is committed is fourefold.

FOurthly, having seen how sin is augmented, and groweth more and more hainous by degrees, like the cockatrice egge, that in a short time proves to be a destroying fiery serpent, you must now understand the manner, how every sin is committed, and that we find to be foure wayes.

1. Of ignorance.
2. Of infirmity.
3. Of knowledge.
4. Of malice.

1 Of ignorance.

First, the Heathen man saith, ὁ μηδὲν εἰδὼς οὐδὲν ἐξαμαρτάνει; whosoever knoweth nothing, nothing, ſinneth nothing; and Divines ſay, hee that knoweth leaſt ſinneth leaſt in any thing.

But here you muſt underſtand Ignorance to be twofold.

That ignorance is twofold.

First, Simple, when a man therefore knowes not, becauſe hee cannot learne.

1 Simple.

Secondly, Affected, when a man therefore knowes not, becauſe he will not learne, as thoſe in Iob, who ſaid unto God, Diſcede à nobis quia ſcientiam viarum tuarum nolumus; Depart from us, for we will not have the knowledge of thy waies: and therefore the Prophet complaineth of ſuch ignorant men, quod noluerunt intelligere ut bene agerent, that they refuſed to learne that they might do well, & quod caci licet, ducem tamen non modo non quarunt, ſed & oblatum reſpuunt; and that although they were ſtarke blind and could ſee nothing, yet not onely ſought no guide, but refuſed and contemned them that were offered, as S. Bernard ſpeaketh.

2 Affected.

Iob 21.14.

Pſal 53.2.& Pſal.92.6.

Bern. in ep. ad magiſt. Vincent.

The firſt may excuſe us à tanto, licet non à toto, from the greater puniſhment, though not from blame, as Saint Paul ſheweth of the Gentiles, ſaying, The times of this ignorance, God regarded not; and of himſelfe, That God had mercy on him, becauſe, in perſecuting the Church, Hee did it ignorantly; For this circumſtance doth much extenuate a ſin, when a man can pleade for himſelfe with Abimelech, Lord wilt thou ſlay the righteous Nation? As if he ſhould have ſaid, O Lord, lay not this ſin to my charge, for if I had knowne her to be his wife, I would never have intended to make her mine.

1 That ſimple ignorance doth extenuate the ſin.

Acts 17.30.

1 Tim.1.13.

Ita Act.3.17.

Gen.20.4

And therefore this moved our Saviour, at the time of his paſſion, to ſay, Father forgive them, for they know not what they doe; Which is as much as if hee ſhould have ſaid, if they knew that I were the Meſſias, the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world, and would notwithſtanding crucifie me, then would I not deſire thee to pardon them; but now theſe things are concealed from them, and therefore I deſire thee that this ſin may not be imputed unto them, that it may not be laid to their charge.

Luke 23.43.

Luke 24.43.

And ſo Saint Peter, after he had declared their ſin, how They had denied the Holy and Iuſt, and had preferred before him, a moſt unjuſt and wicked murtherer, he delivered their comfort, that if they would repent, and beleeve in him, they ſhould obtaine remiſſion, and have their ſins done away at the time of refreſhing, Becauſe they had done all this through ignorance.

Acts 3.17.

And ſo the Lord himſelfe ſheweth this to be the reaſon, why he ſpared Niniveh, after the denouncement of her judgement, becauſe There were ſixeſcore thouſand perſons therein, which could not judge betwixt good and bad, which could not diſcerne betwixt their right hand, and their left; For a ſimple ignorance, in a devoted and well-meaning man, ſuch as S. Auguſtine calls, fidelis ignorantia, a faithfull ignorance, or the ignorance of a good and faithfull man, whoſe heart, like Iehoſaphat, is upright towards God, though he faile in many particular duties, is either paſſed over in mercy, as was the ſuperſtition of our forefathers, or elſe is illuminated with knowledge, in Gods appointed time, as we reade of Cornelius, and as the Apoſtle ſheweth, and the Pſalmiſt promiſeth, To him that ordereth his converſation right, will I ſhew the ſalvation of God.

Ionah 4.11.

2 Chron.30.32.33

Act.17.30.

Acts 10.

Pſal.50.ult.

But the ſecond, that is, affected ignorance, Scelus adcuſat gravius non excuſat, augetq; non minuit ſupplicium, it doth inlarge the ſin, and increaſe the puniſhment, and it ſhould treble the ſame, ſaith Boſquierus; Firſt, For committing the ſin; Secondly, For neglecting to learne; and Thirdly, For affecting ignorance; for when things are not knowne, becauſe men will not learne, ſuch ignorance is without excuſe; Quia aliud eſt neſcire, aliud eſt nolle ſcire; neſcire ignorantia eſt, ſcire noluiſſe ſuperbia eſt; Becauſe this refuſing to know, is rather Arrogancie, then Ignorancie, as S. Bernard ſaith.

2 Affected ignorance increaſeth the ſin.

Boſq de finibus bonorum l.2. conc.12. p.123.

Bernard in ep ad Valent.

And therefore of ſuch ignorant men, quibus fuit inveniendi facultas, ſi fuiſſet quærendi voluntas, which had the meanes to know, if they had had the deſire to learne, the Apoſtle ſaith, ſi quis ignorat, ignorabitur, if any man know not God, the

Greg. in Moral.

How dangerous a thing it is to bee wilfully ignorant of the will of God.

the ſame ſhall not be knowne of God; for as the blind and the lame, were not to enter into the Temple, ſo the judge biddeth us, educere foras populum cæcum oculos habentes, to bring forth, and ſhut out of his kingdome, thoſe men which have eyes and cannot ſee, and which have eares, and doe not heare; that is, which are borne to know, but will not learne, and which are capable of diſcipline, and yet will remaine untaught.

Eokus de iure regis eccleſiaſtico.

And ſo in humane lawes, we find the ſame truth; Nam tantum abeſt ut ignorantia excuſet, &c. For it is ſo farre from reaſon, that ignorance ſhould any waies excuſe the fault of him, which might know the truth, that he ought neceſſarily to have knowne, but through his negligence, or willfullneſſe, would not learne the ſame, as that there is very great reaſon that he ſhould be the more ſeverely puniſhed; becauſe that to be ignorant of thoſe things, which a man ought to know, but will not learne, non pro ignorantia, ſed pro contemptu haberi debet, is rather to bee judged a contempt of knowledge, then an ignorance of the truth.

And therefore, if for our ſins we pleade ignorance, when we might eaſily have knowne the will of God, if we had had any deſire or diligence, to ſearch out the ſame, we ſhall but deceive our ſelves, and be found guilty of greater condemnation.

2 Of knowledge. Iohn 9.39.

Secondly, For the ſins of knowledge, Our Saviour ſaith of the Phariſees, that if they were blind they ſhould have no ſinne, but becauſe they ſaid they did ſee, therefore their ſinne remained, and the Apoſtle ſeemeth to lay an exceeding great fault upon the Gentiles, becauſe that knowing the law, they not onely did the contrary, but alſo favoured them that brake the law, Rom. 1.32. For as Adams great perfection, both in power and knowledge, made his ſin ſo unexcuſable, and the like tranſcendent excellency of Lucifer, made his fall ſo unrecoverable; ſo the more noble, the more powerfull, or the more excellent in knowledge we be, the more hainous and intollerable are our ſins.

What a fearefull thing it is to commit thoſe ſins which we know to be ſins.

Chryſ hom. 5. in Rom.

And therefore Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith, ὁ γὰρ πλείονος ἀπολαύσας τῆς διδασκαλίας μείζονα ἂν καὶ τιμωρίαν ἄξιος ὑπομεῖναι παρανομῶν; Hee that hath enjoyed more inſtruction, deſerves to undergoe the more puniſhment, if he tranſgreſſe; and our Saviour ſaith, that the ſervant, which knoweth his Maſters will, and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes; For to him that knoweth to doe good, and doth it not, to him it is ſin: that is, Sin κατ' ἐξοχήν, Sin in the higheſt degree, ſaith the Apoſtle.

Luke 12.47.

Iames 4.17.

Plutarch in Lacon.

And yet, as an old man ſaid of the Athenians, at the games of Olympus, Athenienſes norunt quid ſit honeſtum, ſed eo ſoli utuntur Lacedæmonij; They knew what was honeſt, but they did it not, they were excellent gnoſticks, but bad practitioners, like the Phariſees, that ſate in Moſes Chaire, and taught what was good, but did none of thoſe things themſelves: So might I ſay of many millions of men amongſt us; they know that ſwearing and drunkenneſſe, lewdneſſe and prophaneſſe, and ſuch like horrible ſins, are moſt odious and damnable in the ſight of God: They know the Sabbaths ſhould be ſanctified, our poore brethren ſhould be releeved, and our good God ſhould be worſhipped; they know that they, which commit ſuch ſinnes, are worthy of death; and that they which doe ſuch workes of piety ſhall be ſure of life; and yet you ſee how we doe continually commit the one, and omit the other.

That we do thoſe ſins which wee know to be grievous ſins.

Rom. 1. vlt.

1 Tim. 1.13.

Alas, beloved, we cannot ſay with Saint Paul, we doe it ignorantly: We cannot ſay we know not theſe things to be ſins; for we know them, we do know them; and yet we daily doe them.

Rom. 2.1.

Ber. in Cantic. Ser. 36.

The excellency of our knowledge makes us the more horrible ſinners in the ſight of God.

And therefore, thou art inexcuſable, O man, whoſoever thou art that knoweſt theſe things, or the like, to be ſins; and yet wilt feareleſly and careleſly commit them; then of all other men, thou ſhalt find thy ſelfe, at laſt, to be moſt wofull and lamentable; for ut cibus ſumptus & non decoctus perniciosus eſt; As meate received, and not digeſted, proves moſt dangerous; or as phyſicke taken inwardly, and not working outwardly, proves poyſonous; ſo the knowledge of the the truth, which is the meate and phyſicke of our ſoules, being received in our underſtanding, and not practiſed in our converſation, will prove to be a moſt dangerous deadly diſeaſe unto every Chriſtian ſoule.

3 Of infirmity. What the ſins of infirmity are.

Thirdly, we ſay thoſe are the ſins of infirmity, when in our hearts we have an earneſt deſire to ſerve our God, and to refraine from ſin; but through the violence of Satans temptations, and the untamed luſts of our owne fleſh, (which is ever prone to evill, and unapt to good) we either neglect that duty, which we heartily deſire to do, or perpetrate thoſe deeds, which by no meanes we would willingly doe; for ſo our Saviour ſaith of his Diſciples, that the ſpirit was willing, but the fleſh was weake; So S. Peter in heart was willing to die with his Maſter, but for feare of death, he was driven to deny him, and to ſweare that he knew him not; and ſo all other Saints of God doe finde, that how deſirous ſoever they be to doe their duties, and to ſerve their God, yet their fleſh is oftentimes exceedingly weake, and unwilling to performe thoſe good things which they love; and moſt violently ſtrong to draw their unwilling ſoules to thoſe ſins which they hate.

Mat. 26. 41.

Chap. 26. 14.

And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith, that in reſpect of this infirmity of the fleſh, Nullus Sanctus & juſtus vacuus eſt peccato, nec tamen deſinit eſſe juſtus, quia affectu ſemper tenet Sanctitatem; There is not any Saint that is void of ſin, neither yet may he be ſaid for that to be no Saint; becauſe in heart and affection he alwaies deſireth, and to the uttermoſt of his ability, followeth after Sanctity: and ſo Saint John ſheweth, quod non eſt homo qui non peccat; That no man liveth, but he ſinneth: for, in ſome things we ſinne all, that is, through the infirmity of our fleſh; and yet he that is borne of God, ſinneth not, that is, with his full conſent, but doth even then ſigh and grieve in ſpirit, when his fleſh drawes him on to ſinne.

Aug. de eccleſ. dogmat. That no man is free from the ſins of infirmity.

1 Iohn 1. 8.

Iames 3. 2.

1 Iohn 3. 9.

But, that we may the better know thoſe ſins, which though they be enormities in themſelves, yet may be truely ſaid to be infirmities in the Saints, and may ſtand with grace, as they are committed by them, it is obſerved by Divines, that they are;

How wee may know ſinnes of infirmity, by foure ſpeciall differences. Gal. 6. 1.

First, Such ſins as are committed of incogitancie, and beſides the purpoſe generall or particular of the offender, that is, ſins of precipitation, and not of deliberation, as S. Gregory tearmes them; for ſo S. Auguſtine, ſpeaking of theſe ſins, ſaith, Tentatio fallit & præoccupat neſcientes, they doe ſuddenly aſſault us, and attache us unawares; and we are as it were overtaken with the ſin, before we can ſee the ſin; So the adultery of David, was not thought of, before it was ſuggeſted; and the deniall of S. Peter, was never purpoſed, untill it was acted; and ſo all the ſins of infirmity are committed upon a ſudden, by a preſent and an unexpected temptation, even as the Prophet ſheweth by his owne example, when he ſaid in his haſt, all men are liers; but a ſin of preſumption is committed with advice and premeditation, as the ſame Prophet ſheweth, when he ſaith, the wicked imagineth miſchiefe upon his bed, and hath ſet himſelfe in no good way.

1 Of incogitancie

Aug. de peccat. merit. & remiſſ. l. 2 cap. 2.

Pſal. 116. 11.

Pſal. 36. 4.

Secondly, Such ſins as are ever reſiſted, to the uttermoſt of our abilities, before they be committed, and yet at laſt are perpetrated and committed; quia tentatio premit & urget infirmos; becauſe the violence of the temptation ſubdueth the infirmity of our fleſh: and ſo theſe ſins are done very unwillingly, with much ſtrugling and ſtriving againſt the fleſh, and with great hatred againſt the ſins, even then, when they are committed, as S. Paul ſheweth; that, which I doe, I allow not; for what I would that doe I not, but what I hate that doe I; but a preſumptuous ſin is committed willingly, greedily and with great delight, even as the ſame Apoſtle ſheweth, that the wicked being paſt feeling, have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſſe, to worke all uncleanneſſe, even with greedineſſe:

2 Reſiſted to our uttermoſt abilitie. Aug. qu. ſupra.

Rom. 7. 15.

Ephes. 4. 19.

Thirdly, Such ſins as have for their cauſes, ſome prevalent paſſions in nature; as the feare of death in Saint Peter, which is the moſt terrible of all evill, ſaith the Philoſopher; and the feare of ſhame in David, which many men doe more feare then death.

3 Proceeding of paſſions.

4 Many times subdued.

Fourthly, Such sins as in the reluctation are many times subdued, and after they be committed, they be not often iterated; (I speake not of the inevitable lustings of the flesh against the spirit, which no strength of grace, in the best men, was ever able in this life to suppresse; but I speake of outward enormities, that are sometimes committed, through the infirmities of the Saints,) for so Saint Augustine, speaking of Noahs sin, saith, Aliquando fuit ebrius, sed non ebriosus; that he was once drunke indeed, but he was no drunkard; quia ut actus virtutis, &c. because as one act of vertue makes not a vertuous man, so one act of sin in a Saint, makes him not wholly vicious, saith the Philosopher.

Idem de peccat. merit. & remiss. l. 2 c. 10.

5 Done ignorantly Marke 9.6.

Fiftly, Such sins as are commonly don through ignorance, when, as S. Peter, desiring to build three Tabernacles, one for Christ, and one for Moses, and one for Elias, knew not what he said; so men doe oftentimes they know not what, and offend God they understand not how; and therfore they desire God, to clense them from their secret sins; that is, not onely those sins, which they have done in secret, but also those sins, which they rashly did, and doe scarcely know them to be sins; but the wicked and presumptuous sinners, saith the Apostle, when they know the judgement of God, (that they which doe such things are worthy of death) not onely doe the same, but also have pleasure in them that doe them.

Psal. 19.12.

Rom. 1.32.

6 Done in things of the lowest nature.

Sixtly, such sins as are commonly committed in things of the lower nature, as to be assailed with evill thoughts, sometimes with idle words, and unawares with humane passions, and perhaps often misse in the performance of holy duties, and so faile in other actions; but to fall grossely into hainous sins, as David and Saint Peter did, they that sin of infirmity seldome doe; but the presumptuous sinners usually trade not by retaile, but in grosse; the highest faults the foulest sins; for their throat is an open sepulcher, that sends forth all unsavoury and loathsome talke, with their tongues they have used deceit, you shall seldome finde any truth amongst them, the poyson of aspes is under their lips, and with their tongues they kill more in their good names and reputations, and so in their states and fortunes, then the sword of an enemie could possibly doe; their mouth is full of curfing and bitternesse, and their feet are swift to shed blood.

Psal. 5.9.

Rom. 3.13.

7 When knowne, then presently repented.

Seventhly, Such sins as when they are knowne are presently repented of, and more carefully shunned for the time to come, then they were before; for so Iob, perceiving that he had beene over-bold with God, and spoken unadvisedly with his lips, doth presently breake forth into these termes of repentance, saying, behold I am vile, what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth, once have I spoken, but I will not answer againe; whereas the ungodly boasteth of his owne hearts desire, and, as the Israelites provoked God 40. yeeres, so doe the presumptuous sinners go on in their wickednesse, defend their sins, and boast of their vilest beastlinesse.

Iob 40.4,5.

Psal 59.10.

But those that plot for iniquity, and imagine mischiefe upon their beds; those that never seeke to resist, but ever to kindle the finders of sin; that follow after drunkennesse, and hunt for opportunities, and like Salomons strumpet, will come forth to meet sin, and rejoyce when they find it, and commit it with greedinesse; I dare not say they sin of infirmity but I rather feare, that they are in the gall of bitternesse, and in the bond of iniquity.

Psal. 36.4.

Pro. 7.10.

Acts 8.23.

And therefore, though they that are mighty to drinke Wine, the common swearers, and blasphemers of Gods sacred name, the lascivious talkers, and all leaude livers, doe pretend infirmities, to excuse their sins; yet may they truely feare, that these spirits of infirmities, are no humane but hellish spirits, wherewith they are like the woman in the Gospell, most lamentably possessed.

Esay 5.12.

Luke 13.11.

4 Of malice. Malicious sinnes have two violent properties.

Fourthly, For sins committed of malice, it is observed, that they have two violent and bitter properties.

1. Wilfull.
2. Spitefull.

For

1 Willfull.

First, They be wilfull sinners, and they doe commit their sins with resolute wilfullnesse, fullneſſe, that is, with an abſolute will, and with a full conſent; for otherwiſe every ſin is voluntary, or elſe it cannot be iniquitie; for thoſe actions, quæ moventur a principio extrinſeco, which are outwardly compelled by violence, and are meerely violent, without any conſent of the will; as if a man were dragged by force, into the idols temple, or a woman forced to adultery, and ſhe no waies yeelding conſent of will, either before the deed, or in the doing thereof; wee ſay theſe things cannot be ſins; becauſe they are outwardly compelled by force, and not inwardly moved by the will; & voluntati vis inferri non poteſt, and no outward force can worke upon the inward will; but all thoſe actions, quæ moventur a principio intrinſeco, which proceed from within, and are done with any manner of conſent of will, muſt needs be ſins, (if they be ſuch acts as are contrary to Gods will;) becauſe they are voluntary, though not wholly, yet in part; in reſpect of the fleſh, though not in reſpect of the ſpirit.

Zanch. de peccat. actualib. 1 Theſ. 2. pag. 101. Acts meerely violent are no ſins.

Idem ibid.

But this ſin, that I am to ſpeake of, which is done of malice, is not onely voluntarie in ſome reſpects, but wholly in all reſpects, with all greedineſſe committed, and without any manner of unwillingneſſe effected; ſo as Satan doth no ſooner tempt them to ſin, but they doe as readily attempt to commit the ſin; for as the godly are deſirous to ſerve God, μὲ ἀναγκάσως ἀλλ' ἑκουσίως, not by conſtraint but willingly, ſo doe malicious ſinners perpetrate their ſins, not through any great conſtraint, but with all willingneſſe.

Ephe. 4. 19.

1 Per. 5. 2.

Examples of moſt wilfull ſinners.

And we have almoſt infinite examples of this kind; as the Sodomites would not be diſſwaded by any meanes, from ſeeking to offer violence unto the Angels of God; but ſtill obſtinately, and maliciouſly perſiſted, untill they were wearied; and the Prophet David reporteth of the courtiers of Saul, that they ſaid, our tongues are our owne, and we will ſpeake, who is Lord over us? So the Iſraelites, in the daies of Ieremie, being moſt earneſtly intreated, by Gods ſervants, to walke in the good way, which is the commandements of God, did moſt wilfully anſwer, We will not walke therein; and ſo are all thoſe amongſt us, that notwithſtanding all the earneſt admonitions of the preachers, and the ſweet motions of Gods Spirit, that doe often times knocke, and call at the doore of their hearts for amendment, and the infallible teſtimony of their owne ſoules and conſciences, that do aſſure them they ſhould not doe as they doe; yet will they commit all uncleanneſſe, all prophaneſſe, ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ, even with all greedineſſe.

Gen. 19. 8, 9.

Pſal. 12. 4.

Ier. 6. 16.

Ephe. 4. 19.

But they may aſſure themſelves, that their ſtate is very dangerous; for hee that heareth the curſe of the Law, and yet bleſſeth himſelfe in his ſins, and will ſtill confidently and wilfully goe on in his wickedneſſe, the Lord will not be mercifull unto that man, (ſaith Moſes) neither ſhall the iniquity of ſuch a ſinner be pardoned, (ſaith Eſayas;) quia in his nulla eſt excuſatio infirmitatis, ſed culpa voluntatis; becauſe ſuch ſinners can pleade no excuſe, either of ignorance, or impotencie, ſaith Anſelmus: and therefore the Lord is mightily provoked, and moſt highly offended with all ſuch willfull reſolute ſinners.

How feareſull is the ſtate of willfull ſinners. Deut. 29. 19.

Eſay 22.

Anſelmus in Heb. c. 6.

Secondly, The malicious ſinners, are likewiſe ſpightfull ſinners, that is, ſuch as doe deſpight the ſpirit of Grace, and doe make but a mocke of Chriſt, and of all Chriſtian Religion.

2 Spitefull. Heb. 10 29.

Examples of ſpitefull ſinners. 1 Chron. 36. 16.

And ſuch ſinners were thoſe Iewes, that mocked the meſſengers of God, and deſpiſed his words, and miſuſed his Prophets, untill the wrath of the Lord aroſe againſt his people, ſo as there was no remedy: and ſuch ſinners were thoſe ſtiffenecked Iewes, who though they were not able to reſiſt the ſpirit, to ſpeake in Saint Stephen, yet with their ſtones they ſtopped his mouth; and (as he ſaith) did alwaies reſiſt that ſpirit, to worke in themſelves.

Acts 7. 51.

2 Tim. 4. 15.

Such a ſinner was Alexander the Copper-ſmith, who did not onely diſtaſte, but alſo withſtand, yea vehemently withſtand, the Preaching of the Word of God: Such were Iulian the Apoſtata, Libanius the Sophiſter, Pope Iulius the third, and the like; who ſcorned Chriſt, and ſcoffed at all Chriſtians; and ſuch are thoſe in our daies, whoſoever they be, and whereſoever they are, which not only wilfully ſin, but alſo moſt lewdly, and prophanely, make a mocke of Religion, and with Such amongſt us.

Serapion, scoffe at all Preachers, and either wickedly hinder the free passage of the Gospell, or els secretly trample it under their feet.

Psal.1.1. The fearfull state of spightfull sinners.

And therefore, being thus growne to the height of sin, to sit in the seat of the scornfull; and, with Ahab, to set and to sell themselves to commit wickednesse, presumptuously, and with an high hand to sin against the God of heaven, they are not only deprived of the prayers of the faithfull for them; because we are forbidden to pray for such sinners, (as Ieremie was forbidden to pray for the Iewes, when the Lord himselfe said unto him, Thou shalt not pray for this people, nor lift up thy voice for them;) but they are also continually assaulted, with the prayers of the Saints, (like so many two-edged swords) against them; for so David saith, that he would pray yet against their wickednesse; and it is a very heavy prayer that he useth, that God would not be mercifull unto them, that offend of malicious wickednesse; so S. Paul accurseth every one that loveth not the Lord Iesus; so did Simon Peter pray against Simon Magus, and all the Christians against Iulian; and so do we pray against those malicious sinners, that despise Gods Words and scoffe at us, and crucifie againe unto themselves the Sonne of God.

1 Ioh 5.16.

Ier.7.11.

Psal.59.5.

1 Cor.16.22.

Theodoret. l.3.c.9.

Heb.6.

And then God, hearing the prayers of his Saints, he gives these sinners over unto a reprobate mind, to do those things that are not convenient; and to fall from one iniquity unto another, untill they bring upon themselves swift damnation; Nam cum a Deo deseruntur, tum Diabolo traduntur; for when God hath once forsaken them, then doth the divell wholly enjoy them, and filleth their hearts with all wickednesse, and with the very gall of bitternesse; and leaveth no place for repentance; quia (παραπέσοντες) prorsus lapsi; because they are altogether fallen (as Anselmus expounds the word, used by the Apostle) or, totaliter lapsi, totally fallen, and wholly ecclipsed, and deprived of all the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit; and (as a stone, tumbling downe the hill, when it comes to the bottome, can go no further; so these men, cum in profundum venerint peccatorum, being thus fallen into the depth of all sinnes, they can fall no lower, till, with Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, they do fall down to hell.

Rom.1.28.

Chrysost. hom. 67. in Ioh.

Anselm. in Heb 6. Aquinas in loc. παραπεσόντες.

And thus you see, what sin is, how it groweth, and how it is committed.

CHAP. V.

Of the diversity of sinners, and the inequality of sinnes.

Two things observable.

FRom this that I have spoken concerning sinne, there is no meane capacity, but may observe these two especiall points.

1. The diversity of sinners.
2. The inequality of sinnes.

1 Of the great difference betweene the sins of the godly and of the wicked, seene in three things.
1 Resolution
2 Reluctation.
3 Repentance.

First, the diversity of sinners; for though all men do sinne, yet all men are not alike sinners; for the Saints do sin, and it may be the same sinnes, as the wicked do; but they do not sin in the same manner, with the wicked; for the godly do either commit sinnes of ignorance, that is, such sinnes as they know not to be sinnes, or if they know them to be sins, then are they certainly committed of infirmitie, and the doers have ever with them these three properties.

1 Resolution.

First, before they sin, they are firmly resolved, not to sin.

2 Reluctation.

Secondly, when they do sin, there is such a reluctation, and such a conflict betwixt the flesh and the spirit, that the soule sigheth even then when the flesh rejoyceth; and so they never sin with a full consent: and therefore they may truly say, It is not we that do these sinfull acts, but it is sin that dwelleth in us, as the Apostle speaketh in his owne person, of all regenerate men.

Rom 7.17.

3 Repentance.

3. After they have sinned, the spirit will presently draw the flesh to joyn with it in repentance, which a little before had drawne the spirit to give it motion to commit the sin: and then (as Seneca saith) Quum pœnitet peccasse pene est innocens, when a man is sorry that he hath sinned, he is almost as innocent, as if he had not offended;

Seneca in Agamemnone.

offended; or as S. Paul saith, he is washed, he is sanctified, and he is restored unto his former integrity.

1 Cor. 6. 11. How the sinnes of the wicked differ in three things from the sinnes of the godly.

But the sins of the wicked are not of ignorance, nor of infirmity; but of an obstinate will, and of a contemptuous spightfull malice; for 1 Greedinesse to do it.

First, before they sin, they are as greedy to do it, as Lelius was ready to obey Cæsars commands; who saith and sweares,

Pectore si fratris gladium, jugulóq; parentis
Condere me jubeas, plenæq; in viscera partu
Conjugis, invita peragam tamen omnia dextra:
Si spoliare deos, ignemq; immittere templis,
Numina miscebit castrensis flamma Monetæ.

Lucan. l. 1. p. 36.

If thou command me spill my brothers life,
Kill my old father, or my pregnant wife,
Ile do't, though with a most unwilling hand,
Fire temples, rob the gods at thy command;
Great Iuno's temple in our flames shall sink.

The base assentation of Lælius.

So all these wicked and malicious sinners do swell with desire, and burne with lust to have their sins done;

Et si non aliqua nocuisset mortuus esset;

And, as the Poet saith of Menalcas, if they may not do it, they cannot live without it; for they are as sicke for sin, as Ahab was for Naboths vineyard.

1 Reg 21. 4.

Secondly, when they do sin, they have their jubilee, they are in their own element, as Iudas is said to have gone, in locum suum, into his owne proper place; and they have their full content; and therefore they are said to drinke iniquity like water, which goeth down smoothly without any stop.

2 Delight in the doing.

Acts 1. 25.

Thirdly, After they have sinned, they are so far from sorrowing for it, as that they do even rejoyce for the committing of it; & in suis complacent sibi delictis, and they do delight themselves with their sins, as S. Hierom saith; Olim hæc meminisse juvabit, they do laugh when they do relate them: and therfore the Scripture saith, that, as their feet are swift to shed bloud, so their hearts do rejoyce in the works of their own hands.

3 Content when it is done. Hieron. l. 1. in Amos.

Rom. 3. 13.

And so you see, how differently sin may be committed; the godly are most unwilling to commit any sin; the wicked are most greedy to commit every sin; the godly are hardly drawne to sin, the wicked draw sin as it were with cart-ropes; and in the godly, sin is like a fire, which they endeavour to quench; but in the wicked, it is like a fire which they labour to kindle.

2 Of the inequality of sinnes.

Secondly, we may see from what I have spoken, that stoicall paradoxe, of the equality of all sins, sufficiently confuted; for sins publikely committed, are more hainous than those that are done in private; for that he doth not only sin, sed & peccat & docet, but he doth also teach others how to sin, and likewise scandalize those that do detest these sins: and therefore qui publicè peccat publicè corrigendus est, he that openly sinneth, should be openly punished, for his greater shame, by reason of his greater sinne; and he that sinneth wittingly through knowledge, is worthy of many more stripes, than he that sinneth through ignorance, saith our Saviour: And therefore, Quemadmodum (autore Apostolo, saith Iustin Martyr) fidelis, qui rei suæ non perspicit, Deum negavit, &c. Even as he, which believeth in Christ, (as saith the Apostle) and provideth not for his family, hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidell; and as he, which professeth Christian Religion, and with his knowledge, and Faith, and Baptisme, hath no good manners, no holinesse of life and conversation, which may expresse the livelihood of this doctrine, but hath onely a certaine shew of Religion, having denied the power thereof, is farre worse than an infidell; so is he, which sinneth wittingly, through knowledge, by so much worse, than he is, which sinneth through ignorance, as an inexcusable sinne is worse than that, which hath a just excuse.

How some sinnes are a great deale more hainous than other sinnes.

Luke 12. 47.

Iustin. Mart in resp. ad orthodox. q. 10. 291.

And, as the Poet saith, so it is most certainly true, that

Omne animi vitium tanto conspectius in se
Crimen habet, quanto major qui peccat habetur.

Isidor. de summo bono l. 2.

And so Isidore saith, that tanto majus peccatum esse cognoscitur, quanto major qui peccat habetur, according to the quality of the offender, so is the quality of the offence; as for example, the greater the man is which sinneth, the greater is the sin which he committeth: for as Plato saith, that ignorantia potentum robustorumq; hominum, hostilis atq; teterrima res est; the ignorance of great and mighty men, is a most vile and hatefull thing; because it may be very hurtfull unto many; so may we say, that the sins of great men, and of those that are in place and authority, are exceedingly sinfull, and do deserve the greater condemnation; not only, because their sins are exemplary sins, as the old verse saith, Criminosior culpa est, ubi honestior status.

Why the sins of great men, of eminent place, are the greatest sins.

Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis;

Mat. 5. 15.

And as the proverbe is, like Priest like People; but also because in them is required the more eminent vertue; we that are the Preachers should be the light of the world;

Mat. 6. 23.

and the great men should be the defenders of the distressed, and the helpers of the needy: and therefore, Si lumen quod in te est tenebræ sunt, ipsæ tenebræ quantæ erunt? If thou, which shouldest be a patterne of all vertue, committest sin; how great is thy sin? And if they, which should be Patrons of the poore Preachers, become robbers of the Church; and they, which should be Relievers of the needy, become oppressours of their neighbours, how intolerable is that cruelty? Surely though these things should be but small sins in others, yet in us they are horrible transgressions;

Chrys. hom. 24. in 6. 7. Matth.

Quia impossibile omnino nobis est ad ignorantiæ præsidium aliquando confugere; Because it is impossible for us to find any excuse for our selves.

And therefore, though Gentlemen and Courtiers, Citizens and worldlings should lead their lives in lewdnes, and turn the graces of God into wantonnes, and think it no great sin, but either the infirmities of their youth, or but the custome of their times; yet in us that are the Preachers of Gods Word, or in those that are the Governours of the people, the least sinne, or miscariage of our selves, which perhaps, alijs ignoscitur, nobis imputatur; is but a veniall sin in others, and shall be pardoned, will be found a hainous sin in us, for which we shall be surely punished; for so S. Bernard saith, Inter seculares nugæ, nugæ sunt, in ore sacerdotis sunt blasphemiæ; trifles are but trifles among secular men, but in the mouth of the Priests, trifles prove to be blasphemies: and therefore the wise man saith, that the meane and the simple man shall obtaine mercy, when the wise and the mighty men shall be mightily punished.

Bern. l. 2. de consid. ad Eugen.

Wis. 6. 6.

CHAP. VI.

How every sin, and the least sin of every one, bringeth death.

YOu have heard the diversity of sinners and the inequality of sins: and therefore I might now proceed unto the second part, which is the reward of sinne, but that I may not forget to observe that the Apostle saith, indefinitely, without respect to one sin more than another, the reward of sin is death, to teach us these three speciall lessons:

Three things to be observed.

1. That every one sinne brings death.
2. That the sinne of every one brings death.
3. That the least sin of any one brings death.

} For

1 That any one sin is sufficient to bring death unto the sinner.
1 Sam 17. 49.
2 Sam 20. 9.
Sueton in vit. Cæsar.

First, he saith, the reward of sin is death, not of sins, because one sin is enough, if there were no more; for as one leake in a ship, is sufficient to sink it, and one veines bleeding is enough to let out all the vitall spirits, and one wound may kill Goliah, and Amasa, as well as 23 did kill Cæsar: So one proud disdainfull thought may cast Lucifer out of heaven, one apple may cast Adam out of paradise, and one sin may bring death, upon any one of the sons of Adam.

Gen. 3. 24.

And therefore, seeing the purity of God can abide no sin, and his justice will so severely punish every sin, we should not give way to any sin; for though we keep the royall Law, yet if we faile but in any one point, we are guilty of all; (not that he which committeth any one ſin, committeth all ſins; but that he is as guilty of death, by that one ſin, as if he had committed all ſins;) and God can as eaſily ſpie out one ſin in man, though he had no more, as well as he could ſpie out that one man amongſt his guests, which had not on his wedding garment. Iames 2.10. Mat.22.12.

the

Beſides, we doe many times ſee many vertues reſident in one heart, like many jewels contained in one caſcet; and yet all of them tainted and ſpoiled with one vice; as ſometimes an excellent wit, accompanied with honeſt and faire conditions, and attended on both with comelineſſe and beauty; and yet being led away with ill company, we ſee all his good parts overwhelmed with a deluge of drunkenneſſe; and ſometimes the brave courage and reſolution of ſome valiant heroicke, that is ready, to ſhed his blood and hazard his life, and to attempt all other things that may tend to the honour of his Prince and the ſervice of his countrey, is yet inraged and ſet on fire with the fury of his owne luſt; and ſo all his good qualities are burnt up and conſumed with this unbridled fire; and thus, as one dead flie ſerves to infect a whole pot of ſweet ointment, ſo one vice is ſufficient to foyle and caſt downe many excellent vertues; and therefore we ſhould pray to God for grace to abſtaine from all ſin, from every ſin, and as the Prophet ſaith, to have reſpect unto all the commandements of God. Many vertues ſpoyled with one vice. Pſal.119.

Secondly, as One ſin, ſo the ſin of any one brings death; for curſed is every one (whoſoever he be) that continueth not in all things, that are written in the Booke of the Law, for to doe them, ſaith the Lord; and the ſoule which ſinneth, that ſoule ſhall die, ſaith the Prophet; and Coniah if he offend, though he were as the Signet on Gods right hand, yet will God cut him off, ſaith the Prophet Ieremie. 2 That the ſin of any one man bee he great or ſmall brings death. Gal 3.10. Ezech 18 20. Ier.22,24.

But what? have not Kings and Princes, Lords and Ladies, great men, Knights, and rich men; have not they any priviledge to have their pleaſures, nor any prerogative to commit any ſin? muſt they have no more liberty, then the pooreſt peaſant? Yes, that they have; for when the meane men cannot offend, but preſently they ſhall be reproved, and it may be puniſhed; whereby many times they are brought to repentance, and are themſelves cleanſed, and have their ſins pardoned; the great men, becauſe many of us dare not reprove them for feare to offend them, and ſo to be offended by them, may goe on in their ſins without controulement; they may doe it without feare of reproofe, though with the more danger of Gods vengeance; for though it be true of a poore fearefull Preacher, dat veniam corvis, vexat cenſura columbas; that hee dares not reproove theſe mighty men; yet with God there is no reſpect of perſons; but as the Poet ſaith, The dangerous eſtate of Great men.

——Veniam læſo numine nullus habet; hee ſpareth none that offendeth; If Moſes the Prince of Gods people doth ſin, he ſhall not enter into the land of Canaan; If Aaron the Prieſt doth offend, the wrath of God will be ſoone incenſed; If the man of God, which was a Prophet, doth offend, and tranſgreſſe the commandements of God; he ſhall be ſlaine by the Lyon; and if David, that was both Prince and Prophet, ſin; he ſhall not goe unpuniſhed; and if Nebuchadnezzar, which was the great Monarch, doth exalt himſelfe in pride againſt God; he ſhall graze with the beaſts of the field, untill he confeſſe, that the moſt high God ruleth over all the Kingdomes of the Earth. Num 20.12. Exod.32.21. 2 Reg 13.14. Dan.4.35.

Be wiſe now therefore, O ye Kings, be learned all ye Nobles, and all yee Iudges of the Earth; and as you keepe us in feare to offend you, ſo let us keepe you in feare to offend your God; or elſe you may heare that dreadfull ſentence, I lictor liga manus, Goe executioner, bind thoſe Kings in fetters, and thoſe Nobles with links of yron, and then caſt them into utter darkeneſſe, where ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; for your greatneſſe ſhall be turned into nothing. Pſal.2.10. Pſal.149.8.

Thirdly, wee muſt note, that, as any one ſinne, and the ſin of any one; ſo the leaſt ſin, as well as the greateſt ſin, of any one brings death; for, not onely thoſe ſeaven ſins, which the Romaniſts call the ſeaven deadly ſinnes, 3 That the leaſt ſin brings death.

and which they briefly comprehend in the word Saligia; according to that verse;

Vt mortem vites, semper Saligia vites,

The seven deadly sins,

Where, S a l i g i a signifieth
1. Superbiam, Pride.
2. Avaritiam, Covetousnesse.
3. Luxuriam, Luxurie.
4. Invidiam, Envie.
5. Gulam, Gluttony,
6. Iram, Wrath.
7. Acidiam, Sloth.

Nor yet those foure great sins, which the Scripture calleth crying sinnes, expressed in that distiche, which I have formerly set downe in another place.

Gen.4.10. c.19.13 Exod.22.23. Iam 5.4.

Clamitat ad Cœlum vox sanguinis & Sodomorum,
Vox oppressorum, merces retenta laborum;

The foure crying sins.

1. Murder.
2. Sodomie.
3. Oppression of Widdowes and Orphans.
4. Detaining of the Labourers wages.

Idolatry how great a sin.

Nor yet that great Master-sin, Idolatry, which doth quite separate us from God, and doth for ever unite us unto the Divell, without great and unfained repentance, doth bring death unto us: but every sin, and any sin whatsoever, brings death unto the sinner; For the reward of sinne, be it little, or be it great, is death; for as the small egge of a Cockatrice, will prove in time to be a devouring Serpent, and as the the little theeves, if they once get in at the windowes, will soone, like Sinon, set open the doores, for the greater Theeves to enter in, and to despoile us of all our goods; so these little sinnes, that at the first wee deeme veniall, will grow by custome to be very great, and will in time make way for the greatest of all; and therefore the sonne of Syrach, saith, we should flie from sin, tanquam a facie colubri, as from the face of a Serpent; because a Serpent*hath a head, a tayle and a body, & capite immisso totus statim illabitur, and if she get in her head into any place, the whole body is so lubrique, that it will soone and easily slide after; therefore we must shun the first appearings of sin, and the first lustfull motions of our flesh; or if we yeeld to the first heads of sin, and feare not the face or first sight of this Serpent, the whole body of sin will quickly follow after, and these small sins, like a short needle will make way for the longest thred to follow after it.

Et idolatria duplex est
1 Aperta,
2 Occulta,
& hoc modo, sine idolo fiat idololatria, inquit Tertullianus. Sic mundani sunt idololatræ, adorantes diabolũ, qui est Deus huius mundi. 1 Cor. 4.4

Eccles. 21.2.

* As I said before

No sin little.

But Saint Hierome saith, Nescio an possumus, leve aliquod peccatum dicere, quod in Dei contemptum admittitur; He knoweth no reason, why any sin should be thought to be small, when as they are all, and every one of them all is commited against the eternall Majesty of the incomprehensible God: And yet Satan at the first will perswade us, that we need not make such great account of such small sinnes, such veniall sins, quibus nunquam debetur pœna eternæ damnationis, to which eternall damnation can never be due, (as Richardus saith;) but when we have usually practised them, and throughout our whole course of life continued in them; then will he at last open our eyes, to let us see our selves where we are; even in the midst of Samaria, and in the hands of all our greatest enemies; and then (as Cyrus promised those that would warre with him against the Medes, to make every Footman an Horseman; every Souldier, a Captaine; and every Captaine, a Colonell;) so Satan will make every veniall sin mortall; and each mortall sin irremissible: O quantum mutatus ab illo Hectore!

Richardus de differen: mortalis & ven. peccati.

How subtilely Sathan deales with men, to make them sin, and then to bring them to despaire.

Qui color albus erat, nunc est contrarius albo. Ovidius.

O how is he, and how are our sins now changed? he that was an Angell of light, to perswade us unto sin, is now become a Divell of darkenesse, to bring us to despaire for sin; and those sins, which seemed to be but Mole-hills, do now shew themselves to bee bigger then Mountaines; And no marvell; Nam sicut ebrius, quando multum vini ingurgitat, &c. For as he that filleth himselfe with Wine, doth for the present feele no hurt; yea, though he sustained many losses; but within a while hee shall cleerely perceive how greatly hee was thereby indammaged; indammaged; even ſo, peccatum donec conſummatur, obtenebrat mentem, &c. Sin while it is in action, and before it is conſummate, doth ſo obtenebrate and darken the mind of man, and as a thick cloud over-ſhadow it, that it cannot perceive the uglineſſe of ſin; but when the ſinne is once finiſhed, and thoſe myſtie clouds of ſtupidity, which Satan ſets before our eyes, be vaniſhed, tum conſcientia inſurgit, then doth the conſcience awake and ariſe, and worſe than any accuſer, lay to our charge the fouleneſſe of our ſinnes, and ſo, vexe our ſoules, with the feare of the greatneſſe of the puniſhment, as we may ſee in the lives of Oedipus, that inceſtuous King of Thebes, and of Tiberius, Nero, and others; whereof you may find more, in my Treatiſe of The Delights of the Saints.

How ſin blindeth us at the firſt, that we cannot perceive its uglineſſe.

Sophocl. Suet. in vit. eorum.

And therefore S. Auguſtine doth moſt wiſely adviſe us, Non deſpicere peccata noſtra, quia parva; ſed timere, quia plura; Not to be fearleſſe of our ſins, becauſe they are ſmall, but rather, to be the more afraid of them, becauſe they are many; and ſpecially, ſeeing that the ſmalleſt beaſts are as full of deadly poyſon, and the leaſt creatures are as able to deſtroy us, as the greateſt; for, nunquid minutiſſima ſunt grana arenæ? Are not the ſands of the ſea very ſmall? and yet if you take too many of them into your ſhip, they are able to ſink her; Et quam minutæ guttæ pluviæ? And how ſmall are the drops of raine? and yet you ſee, flumina implent & domos dejiciunt, what floods they make, and what mighty holds they have overthrowne; They have deſtroyed the whole world: Even ſo, the leaſt ſinnes do make us as liable unto death, as the greateſt; for you ſee, Adams eating of an Apple, doth as well caſt him out of Paradiſe, as Lucifers uſurping the dignity of God, and the deniall to ſubmit himſelfe to Chriſt, did caſt him out of Heaven; and Uzza's touching of the Arke brings death upon him, as well as Iudas his betraying of Chriſt cauſeth him to hang himſelfe: And therefore, timenda eſt ruina multitudinis, etſi non magnitudinis, we ſhould as well take heed to be deſtroyed by the ſmalleſt, as by the greateſt things; Nam quid intereſt, ad naufragium, &c. For what skils it, whether the ſhip ſuffers ſhipwrack, from one huge billow that over-whelmes her, or by many ſmall leaks, that in time do ſink her? So, what difference is it, with Dives to be ſent to hell, for his daily deniall of his crummes of bread unto poore Lazarus, or, with Ahab, for once taking away of Naboths vineyard? Or what skilleth it, to be ſent to hell with our continuall ſwaggerers, for our daily ſwearing, and looſe-living, or with the blood-like Cain and his brood, that do, though but ſeldome, commit immane and fearfull murders? ſurely none but this; that they do walk diverſe wayes, but do meet in the end at the ſame place: And therefore the very Heathen man could ſay, Quæ parva videntur eſſe delicta, &c. Thoſe ſins, which ſeem to be ſo ſmall, as that they can ſcarcely be perceived to be ſins, by many men, ought with all care and diligence to be avoided; or otherwiſe we ſhall find our Saviours words to be true, that, for every moment of time that we have ſpent in vaine, and for every idle word that we have ſpoken, to no purpoſe, we ſhall render an account at the laſt day; For, the reward of ſin (be it never ſo little) is Death.

That we ſhould carefully take heed, not to commit the leaſt ſin.

Aug. de decem. chordis.

Flumina magna vides parvis de fontibus orta, Plurima collectis multiplicantur aquis. Ovid.

2 Sam 6.7. Mat.27.5.

Aug. de vera relig. & in Ep. 138.

Luke 16.21.

1 King.21.16.

Cicero l.1.offic.

Mat.12.39.

And this ſhould teach us to do, as the Prophet Ezekiel adviſeth us, to caſt away from us all our tranſgreſſions whereby we have tranſgreſſed; and not to allow our ſelves to commit the leaſt, though our beſt beloved ſin; for if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off and caſt them from thee; becauſe it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, than having two hands or two feet, to be caſt into everlaſting fire; and S. Paul ſaith, that having theſe promiſes, that is, of Gods bleſſings and preſence both here and hereafter, we ſhould cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſſe both of fleſh and ſpirit, and perfect holineſſe in the feare of God; and the Authour of the Epiſtle unto the Hebrewes, ſaith, that ſeeing we are compaſſed with ſo great a cloud of witneſſes, we ſhould lay aſide every waight, and the ſinne which doth ſo eaſily beſet us.

Ezek.18.31.

An exhortation to ſhun the leaſt ſins. Mat.18.8,9.

2 Cor 7.1.

Heb.12.1.

And the reaſon hereof is eſpecially twofold.

1. In reſpect of God.
2. In reſpect of us men.

} For

The reaſon of the former exhortation twofold.

1. God

1 In respect of God. Hab.1.13.

1. God is of pure eyes, and cannot indure to looke on any iniquity, but hateth every one that worketh vanity, as the Prophet David speaketh; and therefore, seeing God hateth every sinne, he that desires to live in Gods favour, must of necessitie bridle himselfe from loving any sin.

2 In respect of himselfe, for three reasons. 1 Reason. 1 Ioh 3 4. Iam.2.10.

2. A Christian man must forsake all and every sin in regard of himselfe.

1. Because every sin is a transgression of the Law, and he that shall keepe the whole law, and yet offend but in one point, he is guilty of all; for seeing the precepts of Gods Law are intwined together, like the indissoluble links of a well made chaine, howsoever we break not every link of this chaine, by this or that particular sin; yet we may be truly said to breake the chaine, when we breake any one link of it; and therefore, though a man sinneth not particularly against every one of Gods commandements; yet if he allowes himselfe the breaking of any one precept, he is as guilty of punishment, though not of as great a punishment, as if he were convinced of the breach of all Gods commandements, because he offendeth against the authority of the Law-giver, and he spurneth against the integrity of the whole law.

2 Reason. 2 Pet. 2. 1 Ioh 3.8. Gal 5 19. 2 Cor.7.1.

2. Because every sin, be it little, or be it great, is but the vomit of a dog; the worke of the devell, the fruit of the flesh, and but very filthinesse it selfe, as the Apostle termeth it: and therefore every sin ought to be hated and abhorred of every Christian man.

3 Reason. Rom.1.18.

3. Because every sin bringeth on us the wrath of God, as the Apostle sheweth, which is revealed from heaven against all ungodlinesse and unrighteousnesse of men: and he that will not forsake his sin, is continually subject to Gods vengeance in this world, because God will wound the hairie scalpe of such a one as goeth on still in his wickednesse, and he shall be surely excluded out of all happinesse, because they that do such things shall not inherit the kingdome of God; and that which is worst of all, he maketh himselfe liable both to the corporall and the spirituall, to the temporall and to the eternall death, because the reward of sin is death.

Psal 68.21. Gal.5.21.

And thus you see, how our fathers have eaten sowre grapes, and the childrens teeth are set on edge, the canker of their sin and iniquity hath fretted into all their posterity, and the contagious corruption of the root hath derived it selfe into the branches, and hath so disabled us both in body and soule, that now the whole man lieth sick of sin, and is filled with the fulnesse of sin, and with sins of all kind; as sins originall and sins actuall, sins against God, and sins against our neighbour, sins of omission and sins of commission, sins of ignorance and sins of knowledge, sins of impotency and sins of malice, sins secret, and sins publicke, and many more sins, that like so many ulcers and impostumes, are alwaies running and reaking upon us, so that from the sole of the foot to the crowne of the head, there is nothing whole therein, there is nothing but sores, and swellings full of corruptions; and our best actions are but instar panni menstruati, as filthy rags in the sight of God; and this is to be said of every mothers child, because we are all gone astray, and there is none that doth good, no not one.

How we are overspread with all kind of sinnes.

Esa.1.6. Esa.64.6. Rom 3.10,11.

CHAP. VII.

Of the true causes of sinne.

I Should now proceed to the wages of sin, but that, for the justifying of God, and to lay the burthen, where it is of right to be imposed, I think it very requisite to say some thing of the true causes of sin; for seeing sin is such a poysonous weed, such a pernicious thing, and such a deadly scorpion, how comes it to passe that any one would, for any thing, commit sin?

To this some have answered, though most wickedly, that they could not otherwise choose; because they were driven thereunto by their destinies; and what God would have done, they could not withstand; so Florinus and Manichæus, and and many others did most sinnefully make God to be the author of their sins; and Adam himselfe did little lesse, when he was so bold as to say to God, the woman which thou gavest unto me, did give me thereof; and I did eat; and it seemes by Saint Iames, there were others in his time of the same opinion; neither doth wicked man want presumption, to make arguments to confirme the same; for

Gen. 3. 12.

Ob. 1. They say, God is the author of all things; therefore of sin.

Sol. I answer, sin is no reall thing, no created substance, but a corrupted quality, and an inseparable accident adhering to us, and most wickedly flowing from our perverse wil; because that in every action or motion, we must consider both the action or motion, and the pravitie of the action or motion: that is from God; this from us.

Ob. 2. They say, he is the cause of the cause of sin, as of the divell, of our wills, of our affections, and all outward objects whatsoever; therefore of sin.

Sol. I answer quod non sequitur; for if I build a house well, and strong; and the inhabitant suffer it to decay and fall, and by the fall thereof to kill his owner; am I the cause of the death of the man, because I builded the house? nothing lesse; besides, God made the divels and our wills, and all outward objects good; therefore, as they be our instigators to sin, they cannot be said to be caused of the Lord.

Ob. 3. They say, that, qui non vetat peccare, cum possit, jubet, he that is able to prevent sin, and will not, is the cause of sin; but God is well able to hinder all sins, yet he withholdeth his grace and suffereth us to sin; therefore he is the cause of our sins.

Of this point, that God is not the author of sin, See more in the delights of the Saints, Part 3.

Sol. I answer, he that can prevent sin, and is bound to prevent it; if he doth not prevent it, doth sin; but God is bound by no law to prevent our sins, he is indebted to no man to bestow his grace upon him; therefore the not doing of these things, can no waies prove him to be the cause of any sin.

But there are arguments inough to prove it impossible that he should any waies be the author of any sin; for

That God cannot be the author of sin.

1. He that cannot be tempted with evill, that takes no pleasure in sin, cannot be the cause or the author of any evill; but S. Iames tells us, God cannot be tempted with evill, and the Prophet David saith, he taketh no pleasure in wickednesse; therefore he cannot be the author of evill.

1 Arg. Iames 1. 14. Psal. 5. 4.

2. He that is the author of all good, and the fountaine of all grace, cannot be the author of sinne: but God is the author of all good; for every good and perfect gift is from above and commeth downe from the Father of lights, saith the Apostle; and he is the fountaine of all grace saith the Prophet; therefore he cannot be the author of sin.

2 Arg. Iames 1. 17.

And so you see that God can no waies be the author and cause of sin; but for the sin of our first parents, we find that

A fourefold cause of the sin of our first parents.

1. The divell was the prime cause thereof, when he tempted Eve to eat of the forbidden fruit.

2. The object of the womans sight, when she saw the fruit was faire and pleasant.

3. The womans inticement to deceive Adam, when she offered the same to him, after her selfe had eaten.

1 Tim. 2. 14.

4. The will of man, which did yeeld to be corrupted by his wife, and so to breake the commandement of his God; for God gave Adam such a will as was neither immutably setled to do good, nor yet infected with any inclination to do evill, but so perfectly free, and so absolutely powerfull to doe either good or evill, that it was now in his owne hands, whether he would stand or fall, resist the temptation or commit the transgression.

And as then, so ever since, these are the causes of our sins; for

The causes of our sins. 1 The divell. 1 Pet. 5. 8.

1. The divell doth still practice our destruction, and goeth about like a roaring Lyon seeking whom he may devoure; and therfore it behoves us to be very watchfull, and to pray to God for helpe continually, seeing we are to wrastle not against flesh

Ephes. 6.12.

flesh and blood but against principalities and powers and spirituall wickednesses, in high places.

2 Outward objects. Gen. 34. 2 Sam 11.

2. Outward objects are most frequent allurements to intice us unto sin; for if Dina had never beene seene by Shechem, he had never deflowred her; if David had not beheld the beautie of Bathsheba hee had beene free from those two fearefull sins of adultery and murder; these outward objects doe most forcibly worke upon the most inward faculties of our soules; and therefore we should take heed of seeing stage-playes, and beholding the beauties of harlots, and hearing of leaud and lascivious songs; lest by these windowes of our sences, sin may have entrance to destroy our soules.

3 Bad counsells & evill examples.

3. Bad counsels, and evill examples are the greatest hinderances unto godlinesse, and the strongest furtherances unto all wickednesse; vivitur exemplis, for we see how prone we are to be led by examples, and how our eares are apter to listen unto the charming Syrenes, and flatterers, that worke our destruction, then to the divine exhortations of those preachers and good Christians that doe continually labour for our conversion.

4 Our corrupted wills and affections.

Gen. 6.5.

4. Our corrupted will, now naturally inclined to evill, doth carrie us headlong unto all evill; nam si stare non potuit jam integra; for if it did so readily yeeld to sin when it had such a possibility to stand, then what shall we thinke of it now when all the imaginations of our hearts are evill continually?

And as Hypocrates saith, that ægritudines aliæ in alias egrediuntur, an old feste red disease doth beget and breed many other diseases; so these causes, common to us with our Father Adam, have begot many other causes of sins unto all the sons of Adam; as specially 5 Our naturall concupiscence.

James 1.14.

1. The corruption of our nature, which filleth us with all evill, lust and concupiscence whereof the Apostle saith, every man is tempted when he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence, and is inticed: then lust, when it hath conceived bringeth forth sin.

6 Ignorance of the truth,

Acts 3.17.

1 Tim. 1.13.

2. Ignorance of what is truth, of what is good; for though the will should desire that which is good, yet our reason being wounded, and our understanding blinded, it makes us many times to preferre bonum apparens, the seeming good, before that which is truly good, so the Iewes through ignorance crucified Christ, and so Saint Paul persecuted the Church of Christ; and therefore ignorance is so farre from being the mother of devotion that we are sure to find it the producer and the nurcer of many transgressions.

7 Weakneſſe of faith. Gen. 26.7. Gen. 17.10. Mat. 26.

3. Imbecillity of faith and frailty of our flesh doe cause many good men to fall into many evills; for this made Abraham to equivocate for feare of death; this made Isaac to lie to preserve his life; this made Iacob to dissemble to get the blessing; this made S. Peter to denie his Master to save his credit, and this makes many men to use unlawfull waies to maintaine themselves, because they beleeve not, that God will sufficiently blesse their lawfull courses.

8 Custome of sinning.

4. Custome of sinning is like a cart-rope to draw on sin; for this makes them so insensible therein, that they know not themselves to be sinners.

9 Sin the cause of sin.

5. One sin is the cause of many others;

1 Reason.

1. Because that by sin we do loose the grace of God which is, the preserver of all men.

2 Reason. Rom. 1.23.

2 Thess. 2.11.

2. Because God, for sin doth oftentimes most justly give us over, and give us leave to fall into other sins, as Saint Paul speaketh of the Gentiles, and of them that should have strong delusions to beleeve lies, because they would not receive the truth.

3 Reason. Gen. [illegible] 1. Mat. 26.7 ,74.

3. Because one sin doth facilitate and drive on a man to another, as Lot being once made drunke, did easily fall into his drunkennesse againe; and S. Peter, having once denied his Master, never left till he forswore him thrice; and he that doth maligne his neighbour, will not be afraid to traduce him; so readily doth sin teach the way to sin.

4. Because we doe oftentimes commit one sin for the love of another sin; as David

David killed Uriah that he might have Bathſheba; Iudas became a traitor for the love of a little lucre; and many doe commit fearefull murthers that they may get the murdereds wealth. 2 Sam. 11.15. Mat. 26.15.

5. Becauſe ſin, like a noble prince, like your antient Gentrie, doth draw a great traine of ſins after it; as covetouſneſſe hath alwaies deceit, lying, ſwearing, bribes, uſury, extortion and the like, to attend it; and he that is a drunkard will for the moſt part, quarrell, ſweare, and abuſe both God and man. ‹ Reaſon. How ſinne commeth with his traine after him.

So you ſee the true cauſes of our ſins, and moſt of them from our ſelves; and therefore let us not unjuſtly lay the blame upon our juſt God, nor ſay we are, infaustò ſydere nati, borne under unluckie plannets; as if the heavens did involve us into our ſins; but rather in conſcience of our owne guiltineſſe, let us with holy Iob abhorre our ſelves in duſt and aſhes: and if we will ſhunne the effect let us hate the cauſe, forſake the divell, bridle our luſt, beware of evill objects, deteſt all evill counſels, and flie from evill company, as from a ſerpent; and then let us pray to God for grace that our wills may be rectified, our underſtandings inlightned, and all the faculties of our ſoules ſanctified, and ſo we ſhall the better abſtaine from ſin. Iob 42.6.

And thus much ſhall ſuffice to be ſpoken for the firſt part of theſe words, which is the worke done, that is, ſinne.

The ſecond part.

Part. 2.

The payment for Sinne, that is, Death: For the reward of Sinne is death.

Of the payment rendered for ſin, that is death.

CHAP. I.

Of the deceit of Sinne.

YOu ſaw the Worke, you ſee the Wages; and thereby you may ſee the deceit of ſin. Of the great deceit of ſin, in promiſing much, and performing the clean contrary.

——Fronte polita
Aſtutum vapido ſervat ſub pectore vultum.

For, it will appeare at firſt with a Syrens face, moſt delightfull, but it will prove at laſt to have a Serpents ſting, and to be moſt wofull: and you may eaſily find almoſt infinite inſtances of this truth; for Eve ſaw the tree was good for meate, and pleaſant to the eye, and a tree to bee deſired to make one wiſe: therefore ſhee tooke and did eate, and gave unto her Husband; But then (ſaith Moſes) their eyes were opened, and they knew that they were naked; that is, naked in body, naked in ſoule, naked of all grace, and naked of all goodneſſe: and therefore you ſee, the Serpents promiſe to make them like Gods, made them like divells, and that the deſire of delight and oſtentation did worke their griefe and confuſion; So the ſonnes of God, that is, not the Angels as Clemens Alexandrinus, Iuſtin Martyr, Sulpitius, Lactantius and others thought; but the godly ſons of Seth, as Saint Auguſtine and others doe moſt truely collect, did ſee the daughters of men, that is, of the poſterity of Caine, that they were faire; and therefore they tooke them wives of all that they liked; and what could they have more then to have their own deſires? but what ſaith the Text? when they thought themſelves moſt happy, then did they feele the greateſt miſery; for ſuddenly the flood came and Gen. 3.6,7. Cle. Al. l. 3. Strom. Iuſtin Martyr apo. pro Chriſtiania. Sulp. l. hiſt. Gen. 6. Mat. 24 9. tooke

1 Sam.15.9. tooke them all away; So Saul thought to make advantage by ſaving Agag, and the fatteſt of the Cattle, but therby he loſt his Kingdome from his Off-ſpring; So 1 King.12.28. Ieroboam thought to eſtabliſh his Throne by his Idolatry, but it proved to roote out all his Poſterity; and ſo (as the Scripture ſheweth) we find the ſame truth in all Pro.7.27.&c 9.18 other particular ſins; for though the Harlots words be ſweet, her countenance faire, and her bed perfumed; yet her houſe (ſaith Salomon) is the way to the grave, her chamber is the doore of death, and her gueſts are in the depth of Hell; and the very Heathen man could ſay:

Plautus Truc. Meritrix meum herum miſerum, ſua blanditia intulit in pauperiem, ſpoliavit bonis, luce, honore atque amicis;

This Harlot with her cogging flattery hath impoveriſhed and undone my poore miſerable Maſter; ſhe hath ſpoyled and deprived him of all his goods, honour, friends, and all; So, though ſtollen waters be ſweet, and the bread of deceit is Pro.20.17. pleaſant unto a man, yet afterwards his mouth ſhall be filled with gravell; and though the Wine ſeeme Coſ to the drunkard; that is, to have colorem, odorem & ſaporem; an excellent colour in the glaſſe, a pleaſant ſmell in the noſtrels, and a ſweet taſte Pro.23.32. in the mouth; yet in the end, it will bite like a Serpent, it will hurt like a Cockatrice, and it will Circe-like transforme Men to Swines, and make them, with Vlyſſes Virgil. fellowes and followers to become worſe then the very beaſts: When (as the Poet ſaith) Et pudor & probitas, & metus omnis abeſt; We ſhall find in them, neither feare of God, nor ſhame of face, nor ſcarce any quality or propertie of man, beſides humane ſhape; for, (as Propertius ſaith:)

Propertius l.2. eleg.xiii. Vino forma perit, vino corrumpitur ætas,
Vino ſæpe ſuum neſcit amica virum.
By Wine the beauty failes, by Wine man waxeth old;
By Wine the wedded wife, with ſtrangers will be bold.

Vt Venus enervat vires ſic copia Bacchi & tentat greſſu debilitatq; pedes. Feſtus Anieno de ven: & vino. Eccleſ.11.9. And to be briefe, though young men and Gallants doe rejoyce in their youth, and walke in the waies of their hearts, and in the ſight of their eyes, that is, injoy what pleaſure ſoever they will, what their eye ſeeth, or what their heart deſireth; yet in the end, God will bring them to judgement for all thoſe things, and then ſhall their bread in their bellies be turned into the gall of Serpents.

2 Sam.20.9,10. And ſo every ſin is like it ſelfe, like Duke Ioab, whoſe words were ſmoother then oyle, when he ſaid unto Amaſa, Eſt ne pax mi frater, Is it peace brother? and yet, while the tongue called him brother, like a friend, his ſword ſtab'd him to death, like an enemie; So ſin, as it were a cunning Apothecary, that writes on the out-ſide of his boxe, Pharmaca, medicines, when as within there is nothing but Venena, poyſons; Proponit quod delectabile, ſupponit quod exitiale, ungit, pungit; Revel.8.13. It promiſeth wealth, but it bringeth woes; Woe, woe, woe, to the Inhabitants of the Earth; that is, Væ propter culpam, væ propter tribulationem mundanam, & væ propter pœnam æternam; Woe for our offences, woe for our miſeries, woe for our eternall puniſhment; and it annointeth us with oyle; but it ſtingeth us to death: Cyprian l.1.ep 8. And ſo indeed it is like the divell, a lyer, and the father of lies; Quia peccatum mentitur ut fallat, vitam pollicetur ut perimat; Becauſe every ſin lies, that it may deceive us, and propoſeth pleaſure, that it may bring us into paine. And therefore Venerab.Beda l. exhort. 4.& 5. Sin like a witch. Venerable Bede compareth ſin unto a Witch, which transformeth every man unto a Monſter; as Luſt maketh a man like a Syren or an Horſe, to yeane after his neighbours wife; Sloth, makes him like an Aſſe or an Oſtridge; Cruelty like a Wolfe or Hyena; Covetouſneſſe like the ravening Harpies; and ſo every other ſin makes the poore ſinner to become,

Monſtrum, horrendum, ingens, cui lumen ademptum;

The moſt ougly miſ-ſhapen Monſter upon the face of the earth: Why then ſhould we not hate this ſin, which ſpeaketh friendly unto us, and promiſeth great felicity, but in the end brings us to the extreameſt miſery? Quia via peccati ingredientes Bern.in ſentent: contaminat, progredientes obſtinat, egredientes exterminat; Becauſe (as S. Bernard ſaith) ſin in the firſt entrance defileth, in the progreſſe hardneth, and in its going out, deſtroyeth every ſinner; and (as Salomon ſaith of the Harlot,) her waies leade unto death, death, and her footſteps take hold of Hell; ſo the ſame is moſt true of ſin: and therefore if any man ſhould be asked, what he doth in ſin, he might juſtly anſwer, as an old Courtier did, and that moſt truly, when he was demanded, what he did in Court, I do nothing but undoe my ſelfe; For the reward of ſin is death.

Every ſin payeth the ſame wages, though it promiſeth ſeverall pleaſures.

And here likewiſe you may obſerve, that although every ſin doth not promiſe the ſame thing; (for ſome ſins promiſe pleaſure, ſome profit, ſome honour, and ſome one thing, and ſome another) yet every ſin brings us to the ſame end, and in the end payeth us with the ſame reward; for the reward of ſin, of any ſin, is death.

Thriverus Apoth. 19.

But becauſe, as many doe make none account of moſt deadly diſeaſes, by reaſon that they are ignorant of the dangerous effects of the ſame; Ita multi evidenter peccant, quia turpitudinem & conſequentiam peccati perſpectam non habent; So many men feare not to ſin, but doe as ſmoothly drinke up the ſame as pleaſant Wine; becauſe they do not underſtand the filthineſſe and the wretched effects of ſin; and becauſe, as if a man might with his outward eyes, behold the beauty of vertue and goodneſſe mirabilem amorem excitaret ſui; It would wonderfully inflame their hearts with the love thereof; So if we did behold the loathſomeneſſe of ſin, and conſider well the fearefull events thereof, it would make us, with Iob, to abhorre our ſelves in Duſt and Aſhes: Therefore I will ſearch a little further into this Labyrinth of ſin, and take a little more paines to unfold the miſerable effects of the ſame; for the reward of ſin is death.

Vertue how amiable.

Sin how odious.

Iob 42.6.

When ſin is firſt committed, it will preſently gall and wound our conſciences, and it will continually ſhew unto us, how good a Law is violated, how great a Majeſty is offended, and how grievous a puniſhment we have deſerved; and (as the Poet ſaith) Occultum, quatiante animo tortore, flagellum; When the great Tormentor will ſhake his hidden whip in the ſoule of the offender; then is he troubled night and day, walking in the hands of his executioner, and ſleeping like the Nightingall, which hath alwaies a pricke before her breaſt: Neither is this all; for the reward of ſinne is death: and the more ſins we doe commit, the more ſpeedily and ſuddenly we doe haſten death; Quia in principio mundi cum homines viverent in majori ſimplicitate, Deus dedit eis longam vitam: poſtquam creſcebat hominis malitia & temporis abuſus, tunc abbreviavit Deus eorum dies, ſaith the divine truth.

Juven Satyr. 13.

Now by Death, we muſt underſtand not onely the ſeparation, of the body and ſoule of man, which is nothing elſe but the privation of life; but alſo all other things, that are comprehended under the curſe of God; for the curſe of God and the Death of Man, are Voces æquipollentes, equivalent termes, and doe ſignifie the ſame thing; and therfore as S. Paul ſaith here, The wages of ſin is death; So he ſaith elſe-where, out of Moſes; Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things, that are written in the Booke of the Law, for to doe them.

By death are underſtood all the miſeries contained under the curſe of God.

Gal. 3.10.

And we find, that the curſe of God for the ſin of man extendeth it ſelfe.

1. To all thoſe creatures, that were created and made for the uſe of man.
2. To all the properties, and faculties of each part of man.

How farre the curſe of God for ſin extendeth.

First, The creature was made ſubject unto vanity, and groaneth, and travelleth in paine untill now, not of it own accord, but by reaſon of the tranſgreſſion of man; the earth was accurſed for his ſake, and the very Heavens were ſubjected unto vanity: and as then he dealt with Adam; ſo ever ſince he dealeth in like manner with all the ſons of Adam; for he maketh a fruitfull land barren, for the iniquity of them that dwell therein; that is, either ſuch as bringeth forth no fruits at all, or elſe ſuch, as where,

1 To all creatures Rom 8.20. & 22.

Pſal. 107.34.

Infœlix lolium & ſteriles dominantur avenæ;

The good ſeed is overgrowen with darnell, ſmothered with thornes, or ſpoyled with cockle; for though the earth was made, to yeeld us fruits of increaſe; yet inſtantly upon our ſinning, the ground denied to pay her tribute; unleſſe (as the Poet ſaith) juncto bove, aratra trahuntur; we do rip up her bowels, to fetch it out of her bellie; And yet this is not all; for though we manure the ground and plant the ſeed, never ſo faire: yet, except the Lord gives the increaſe, all our labour is but in vaine.

How the earth is accurſed and her fruits, by reaſon of our ſins.

Psal.107.35. Hosea 8.7. And the Lord tells us plainely, that if we cease to sin and serve our God, hee will make the Wildernesse a standing water, and water springs of a drie ground; but if we continue in sin, and sow iniquity, then he tells us plainely, that we shall reape but vanity; and if we sow the wind, we shall reape but the whirlewind for our harvest.

1 Reg.17.1. Gen 7.11 And therefore if God stoppeth the windowes of Heaven, and withholdeth the raine from us, as he did in the daies of Elias, and so causeth the Heavens to be as brasse, and the earth to be as iron under our feet; the one yeelding no dew, the other bearing no fruit; or if God openeth the Cataracts and floodgates of Heaven, as he did in the daies of Noah, and so cause the Heavens to weepe, and the floods to carie away our fruits, before wee can carry them into our barnes; then must we know, that all this, and whatsoever of this kinde happeneth to us, is inflicted upon us for our sins; quia ira divinitatis est pœna peccantis; because all the grievous effects of Gods wrath, are the just deserts of mans sin, as Salvian saith; for cursed is the Earth for thy sake, that is, by reason of thy sinne.

Salvian Massalin. de gubern. Dei. Gen.3.17.

CHAP. II.

How every sinne slayeth the soule.

2 Vpon all men. How sin brought on man a treble death. SEcondly, As sin brings a curse upon all creatures; so it brings death upon all men; for the reward of sinne is death: and wee finde this death to be threefold.

1. A spirituall death of the Soule, within the Body.
2. A corporall death of the Body, by continuall castigation of the same throughout all our life, and a finall separation from the soule, at the end of our life.
3. An eternall death, both of Body and Soule, in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone for evermore.

1 The spirituall death. Chrysost. hom.11. in c.6. ad Rom. The first is set downe in the 8. of Matth. 22. Where our Saviour saith, Let the dead bury their dead; that is, Let those that are spiritually dead in trespasses and sinnes, (as the Apostle saith) bury those that are naturally dead; to shew, that a sinners body, is but the breathing Sepulcher of his sinne full soule: and therefore the Prophet David saith, that their throat is an open Sepulcher, which yeelds a more loathsome sent unto the nostrils of God, from the corrupted putrified soule, then any grave can yeeld unto the nostrils of man, from all its rotten carkases.

Psal.14.3. Rom.3.13. 2 The corporall death. Iohn 11.39. The second is set downe in the 11. of Iohn the 39. where Martha saith, her brother Lazarus was dead and stinked; that is, deprived of the fruition of the soule; and therfore if he should be taken up, he would be loathsome to be seene, and more loathsome to be smelt; for experience sheweth us, that how sweet soever we be in our life, and how soft and tender soever our flesh be, most amiably complexioned, with that fresh and lively blood, which bedeckes the same with the fairest colours, and glides up and downe in silver veynes; yet are the best of these sweetest Ladies, but most loathsome stinking carcasses within a short space after death; all flesh being subject to corruption.

3 The eternall death. Luk.16.24. The third is set downe in the 16 of Luke 24. where Dives, being in torments, prayeth unto Abraham, to shew that he had a soule, and desireth a drop of water to coole his tongue, to proove that he had a body.

But to speake of these three more fully.

1 Of the spirituall death, twofold. First, Wee must understand that the spirituall death of the soule is twofold.

1. Mori peccatis, to die to sin.
2. Mori in peccatis, to die in sin.

For

For the firſt, ὁρθῶς φιλοσοφεῖν ἐστι τὸ θάνατον μελετᾶν; the whole ſtudy and life of the Philoſophers was nothing els but a commentary or preparation for death, ſaith Macrobius; Nam mori dicimur, cum anima, adhuc in corpore conſtituta, corporeas illecebras contemnit; for he may be truly ſaid to die, whoſe ſoule ſtill remaining within the body, doth notwithſtanding contemne and abſtaine from all fleſhly delights: And this was aimed at by the Philoſophers, but it was onely attained unto by the true Chriſtians; for they that are Chriſts, have crucified the fleſh, and have mortified the luſts of the ſame, ſaith the Apoſtle; theſe have eares, and heare not the Syrenian notes of ſin, nor the flattering ſuggeſtions of Satan; they have eyes, and ſee not the alluring vanities of this world, any waies worthy to be deſired; for I have made a covenant with mine eyes, that they ſhould not looke, that is, unlawfully, or with any laſcivious deſire, upon a maid, ſaith holy Iob; and I ſaid, I would take heed unto my wayes, (ſaith the Prophet David) that I offend not in my tongue: and therefore (as the Apoſtle ſaith) they uſe the world, as though they uſed it not.

1 To die to ſin. Macrob. c. 1. in ſom. Scip. 13. Hieron. ad Heliod. ex Platone in Phædone.

What it is to die to ſin. Gal. 5. 24.

Iob 31. 1.

Pſal. 39. 1.

1 Cor. 7. 31.

And although this death be good, the only way to bring us unto a better life; for he that will not die before he dieth, ſhall never live when he dieth; yet is this the reward of ſinne; for had it not been for ſin, we had not needed to take this care and paine, to fight againſt our ſelves; yea, to martyr and mortifie our owne fleſh, by chaſtening our own bodies, to bring them to ſubjection, leaſt we ſhould prove to be caſt-awayes, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: and therefore the chaſtiſements of the Saints, are the puniſhments of their ſins.

To die to ſin is a puniſhment for ſin

Cyprian de dupl. i Martyrio.

1 Cor. 9. 27.

For the ſecond, to die in ſin, is when God forſaketh a ſinfull ſoule, and ſuffereth the ſame to lie and die in her tranſgreſſions; for as the ſoule is the life of the body, ſo is God the life of the ſoule, (ſaith S. Auguſtine:) And therefore all thoſe that live by bread onely, and not by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God; that is, which live the life of nature, and not the life of grace; they are like thoſe wanton widowes, whereof the Apoſtle ſaith, that they are dead while they live; for though the ſoule be truly immortall, yet it hath a kind of death (ſaith S. Auguſtine;) and that is, when God forſaketh the ſame for ſin; and what a heavy caſe is this? Plangis corpus quod deſerit anima, & non plangis animam, quam deſerit Deus; We bewaile the body, when the ſoule is parted, and ſhall we not bewaile the ſoule, which God hath forſaken, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome? S. Auguſtine, being as then a Manichee, and reading the Hiſtorie of Æneas and Queene Dido, did weepe (as himſelfe confeſſeth) when he came to read of the death of Dido: and therefore after that he was converted, he moſt divinely ſaith, O me miſerum, &c. O wretched man that I was, that would bewaile the death of Dido, forſaken of Æneas, and did not bewaile the death of mine own ſoule forſaken of God: ſo we, many times, do weep for the death of our friends, and do make bitter lamentations for them, but we do never weep for the death of our owne ſoules: and therefore they may ſay unto us as Chriſt ſaid to the daughters of Ieruſalem, weepe not for us, but weepe for your ſelves, and for your own ſoules, that are dead in ſins; for every one of us may ſay with the Poet;

2 What it is to die in ſin.

Aug. de civit. Dei l. 13. c. 21. Mat. 5. 4.

1 Tim. 5. 6.

A moſt excellent conſideration of S. Auguſtine in his Confeſſions.

Atq; utinam lugenda tibi non vita, ſed eſſet
Mors mea———

Luke 23. 28.

Our life is a great deale more worthy to be bewailed, than our death; in as much as the death of the ſoule, is a great deale more lamentable than the death of the body.

Repentance is the onely meanes to revive our dying ſoules.

But as we have no other remedy for the death of our friends, but onely teares.

Expletur lachrymis egerituŕ dolor.

———Eſt quadam flere voluptas;
For teares and ſighs, ſad Orators of ſmart,
Though they releaſe not, yet they eaſe the heart.

And indeed this is a great eaſe unto the afflicted perſon, and a kind of comfort unto the ſorrowfull man; ſo we have none other help for the death of our ſoules, but onely teares;

Sæpè per has flecti Principis ira solet.

Mat.26 75. Ambros. in Luc.

For though Gods anger did burne like fire, yet the teares of repentance are able to quench his wrath: and therefore S. Peter, when he sinned, in denying the innocent bloud, he went out and wept bitterly; ut lachrymæ lavarent delictum, that his bitter teares might wash away his grievous sin, and his true repentance give life unto his dying soule: Vade & fac tu similiter; go thou, and do the like; revive thy languishing soule with weeping teares; and I can say no more, Quia non invenio quid dixerit, sed quod flevit, for I find no more but that he wept; his teares perhaps drowned his words; but they restored life unto his dying soule; they laid hold on God, with Israel, and would not suffer him to depart until he had forgiven him; Nam oratio Deum lenit, sed lachrymæ cogunt, for when words do but desire him, but incline him; our teares will compell him to be mercifull unto us, saith S. Hierom.

Hieron. in Esaiam.

How sin polluteth the soule of man.

Wisd.1.4.

No dirt so foule as sinne.

1 Joh.1.7. Chrys. hom.12.ad Heb.

You see then, he that delighteth in sinne slayeth the soule; yea, sin defileth and polluteth the whole soule; and it makes it so odious, and so detestable, that God cannot indure it; for he dwelleth not in a body that is subject unto sinne: and therefore S. Chrysostome saith, that melius est luto pollui quam peccatis, it is farre better to tumble our bodies in the filthiest mire, than to touch our souls with the least sin; for he which falleth into the mire, may in a short time be washed, and become as cleane as they that never were bemired; but he that once falleth into the puddle of sin, receiveth such pollution, as that all the waters in the Ocean Sea, can never wash him cleane; nor any thing else in the world, save only the bloud of Jesus Christ, which cleanseth us from all sinnes: and this bloud also must be laid hold upon by a lively faith to effect it; and to this faith we must joyne, & pœnitentiam diligentem & lachrymas, even the bitter teares of true repentance, if we would have our soules cured from this deadly disease.

CHAP. III.

How sinne slayeth every faculty of the soule.

Bern. in dedicat. Eccles. ser.5.

AND though we may say of the soule in generall, Quòd non modo necesse est singulas ejus miserias numerare; there is no great need that we should reckon up all the particular miseries and defects thereof, how it is laden with sinne, over-whelmed with darkenesse, insnared with allurements, itching with concupiscence, prone to evill, inclining to wickednesse, open to passions, and full of all reproachfulnesse and confusion: yet we must understand, that as sin defileth the whole soule in generall, so it polluteth every faculty of the same in particular: Plato saith, (and Aristotle from him) that in the soule of man there are three especiall faculties.

That there are three speciall faculties in the soule of man.

1 The vegetative.

The first, he calleth ἐπιθυμητικὸν, that is, the vegetative faculty, which of others is called virtus naturalis, the naturall vertue of increasing; and the seat of this in man, he saith to be the liver; the properties whereof are, to nourish, and to beget, &c.

2 The sensitive.

The second, he calleth θυμοειδὲς, that is, the sensitive faculty, whose seat (he saith) is in the heart; and to which he ascribeth the vitall vertue, and the motions of the sensitive appetite.

3 The rationall.

The third, he calleth ἡγεμονικὸν, that is, the reasonable faculty, whose seat (saith Galenus) is the head; and whose operations are, to imagine, to remember, to understand, to judge, and to guide all voluntary motions.

How sin defileth every faculty of the reasonable soule.

And there is none of these but sin defileth; and especially above all the rest, the reasonable soule; for in it, we find three especiall faculties,

1. The will.
2. The understanding.
3. The memory.

} And we find all these exceedingly corrupted, and defiled by sin; For

First,

First, the will should be like the golden bridle that Minerva was said to put upon Pegasus, to guide him and turne him as she pleased; or rather like those beasts in Ezechiel, that whether the spirit would goe, they went, and they turned not, when they went; and the Philosopher saith, that there is no doubt of this; quin in affectu & voluntate perfectio summa consistit; But that all, or the chiefest perfection of man consisteth in the will and affection of man; for the will is not onely the immediate agent of all those actions, quæ vocantur elicitæ, which are called free actions; as to will, to nill, to choose, to refuse, to love, to hate, to desire, and such like; but it is also the effecter of the other actions, quæ vocantur imperatæ, which are called compelled actions; because the will commandeth all; as, the mind to thinke, and to consider; the understanding to discusse, the judgement to approve, and all the other faculties of the soule, to execute his command; so that there is neither sinne, nor vertue, but the same is first in this commanding will, before it comes to any part either of soule or body.

1 How the will is corrupted. Ezech. 1. 12. Arist. Eth. c. 10. c. 8. The chiefest perfection of man consisteth in the will of man.

And therefore all actions, both good and bad, are adjudged and deemed, according to the disposition of the will. As

All actions are adjudged according to the disposition of the will.

First, Good actions have all their goodnesse from the will; for not onely the Poet saith,

1 Good actions. Propertius. l. 2. c. 10

Quod si deficiant vires, audacia certe
Laus erit, in magnis & voluisse sat est;

That the will is sufficient, where the power is wanting; but also Saint Augustine saith, that whatsoever good thou wouldest doe, and canst not doe it, God accepteth the same as done; and Saint Paul himselfe saith, that in such cases, God accepteth the will for the deed; for God looketh not so much, quantum quilibet valet, sed quantum velit, into what a man is able to doe, as into what a man is willing to doe: and therefore our Saviour commendeth the poore widdow, and preferreth her before all the rest of the rich men; because, though her gift was lesser, yet was her will better then all the rest; for that they, out of their abundance bestowed what they could well spare; but she, out of her penuria, had cast in all that she had; and David being willing, and thereupon saying that hee would build God an house, was as well accepted as if he had built it; for, seeing God looketh not so much into the outward worke, as into the inward intention of the heart; whatsoever is intended by the will, in the very heart of man, the same is reputed and deemed as done, in the eyes of God, saith Saint Gregory.

Aug. sup. Psal. 37.

2 Cor. 8. 12. Greg. moral. lib. 10.

Mar. 12. 43.

Ver. 44.

2 Sam. 7.

Idem ibid. l. 10.

Secondly, Evill actions have the same estimation as the good; for, si sit voluntas & desit potestas, &c. If thou hast a will to doe evill, and hast no power to doe it; thou art no lesse guilty of the deed, in the sight of God, then if thou hadst done it: and therefore he that looketh on a Woman, that is, with a will to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her in his heart already, saith our Saviour; and the very heathen Poet subscribeth unto the same truth, saying;

2 Evill actions.

Mat. 5. 28.

Has patitur pœnas peccandi sola voluntas;
Nam scelus intra se, tacitum qui cogitat ullum,
Facti crimen habet:

Juven. 13. Satyr.

Whosoever thinketh evill inwardly within his breast, must needs be guilty of the outward fact and so be liable to the just punishment that is due for such a sin. And therefore (in the judgement of the very heathen) the will of sinning doth most justly deserve the punishment of the sin. For

The will or desire of sinne deserveth the punishments of sin.

It is observed by Divines, that although Satans power be very great, to corrupt all other faculties of the soule of man, as to darken the understanding, to dazle the fancie, to delude the senses, and to provoke the appetite, yet that he hath no power to remove, or to turne the will; he may tempt, and perswade; but he cannot compell the same; for seeing this is the primum mobile, the highest wheele in the frame of our soule, that moveth and guideth all our actions, and according to which they shall be discerned, and judged; therefore in the middest of mans greatest Zanch. de operibus Dei p. 1. l. 4. c. 11.

That Satan hath no power to compell the will.

greatest assaults, God would not suffer Satan to prevaile and to command the will; but he hath left the same in our owne liberty; so that Satan cannot destroy us, unlesse we be willing to be destroyed and to destroy our selves; and therefore S. Ambrose saith, Non est quod cuiquam nostram adscribamus ærumnam, nisi nostræ voluntati; quia nemo tenetur ad culpam, nisi voluntate propria deflexerit; There is no reason, why any man should ascribe the cause of his miseries, to any thing in the world, save onely to his owne will; for we perish, because we will perish; perditio tua ex te, our destruction is from our selves, and from no where else; for no man is drawne to sin, neither can it be a sin, unlesse the agent doth some way yeeld some consent of will; for if Satan had power to force the will; aliquis justorum non remaneret, then not a righteous man should remaine upon the face of the earth: and therefore are all his temptations called persuasions, or suggestions, and not compulsions; because they are all used to make us voluntary agents, to make us yeeld consent of will; for that (as I said before) Non est peccatum nisi sit voluntarium, No act can bee a sinne any way, unlesse it be voluntarie some way.

Ambros. de vita beata; & habetur. 15. q. 1. can: Non est

Our owne will is the cause of all our woe.

Plutarch de sera Dei vindicta.

And therefore, as Apollodorus the tyrant, dreamed, that he was fleaed by the Scythians, and boyled in a seething Caldron; and that his owne heart should say unto him, I am the cause of all this thy fearefull torments; so it is most certaine that there is no damned soule in hell, but he may justly say, his owne heart and his own will sent him thither; for let Satan doe what he will, and let him strive what he can; yet if man were true and not too false to himselfe, The gates of Hell should never prevaile against him; because no created power is able to compell the will of man.

Mat. 16. 18.

Rom 7. 19.

And yet now, ô wretched slaverie of man, the good which we would, that we do not, and the evill which we would not, that doe we; the armes and powers of the soule, wherewith she should resist the temptations of the divell and the concupiscence of the flesh, are so dishevered and maimed, that she is both unfit and unable to undergoe any spirituall warfare; and on the other side, the strength and power of sin is such and so great, that although reason should shew us what is good; yet it maketh us to will onely that which is evill; to leave the incommunicable and infallible good, and to follow after base and vile affections: and then God, seeing us nilling the good, and willing the evill, he gives us over to a reprobate minde, Vt cum vult homo recte agere non potest; quia quando potuit, noluit; & ideo per malum velle perdidit bonum posse; That if we would will well, we cannot; because when we could will well, we would not; and therefore, as our first Father Adam, so all we that are the sonnes of Adam, by willing evill, have and doe loose the power of willing good. For Video meliora, proboque, deteriora sequor.

Aug. de lib. arbit.

Rom. 1. 21, 24. That our sin hath deprived us of all will to do good.

As, because the Gentiles, when they knew God, glorified him not as God, neither were thankfull; therefore God gave them over to vile affections, to doe those things that were not convenient; So, because, when we had our will free, and none could command it, we willed evill, and not good; therefore God in Iustice gives us over, to such wilfull greedinesse of sinning, that now of our selves we have not the least will to doe good; for if any man willeth good it is from infused grace, and not from our inbred will; for God worketh in us both the will and the deed, saith the Apostle: but our naturall will is dead from good; for sin hath so defiled the same, that it willeth and affecteth nothing but vile and vaine things; and so it compelleth every part and faculty of the soule, to long and lust after evill; for now vis iracibilis, the iracible, distasting, and angry faculty, which should be as a dogge, to keepe away sinne, doth presently waxe angry at every vertue; and that which should detest evill in his brother, doth rage and swell at the reproofe of his Father; and so vis concupiscibilis, the concupiscible faculty, or desiring appetite, which should desire nothing but goodnesse, and what were just and honest, doth now affect nothing but lewdnesse, and what is most vile and abhominable; and it cannot doe any other wise; Nam, quemadmodum passerculus pede alligatus, &c. For as a little bird tide by the leg, when he begins to flie; is presently drawn down by the string; so the mind tied by base affections, if it seek to mount to heavenly thoughts, is easily drawn down again by sin; so

Philip. 1. 13.

Max. l. 1 de charitate.

Quam non mille fera, quam non Stheneleius hostis,
Nec potuit quicquam vincere, vincit Adam:

Ovid. Epist. Deianira Herculi.

This will of man, which neither mortall enemies, nor yet infernall spirits, nor any other created thing could subdue, is now defiled, polluted, and wholly corrupted by sin: And therefore I can freely yeeld unto our adversaries, that we have free-will in regard of any outward compulsion; for that Satan himselfe cannot compell it; for if he could, we could not justly be condemned, for doing that unwillingly, which we are wholly and forcibly compelled to do; but we have not the least free-will, in regard of our naturall corruption; for as a stone tumbling down the hill, needs no man to drive it; so the will of it self is so inclined to evill, that of it selfe, it can no more affect goodnesse, than a stone of it selfe is able to run upwards: and therefore S. John saith of the regenerate, that they are not borne of bloud, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

That no outward enemy can compell our will.

Our inward naturall corruption is that which draweth our will to sin.

Ioh. 3. 13.

And as our will is deprived of all desire to do good; so it is strange to consider, at what intestine warre the motions of the will are within themselves, making poore man a stranger unto himselfe, when his contrary wils do so distract his resolutions, that he knoweth not how himselfe doth stand affected; but somtimes willeth, and somtimes nilleth the same action, and so standeth like a blind man, that knoweth not how to make choice of his own wayes.

The will contrary to it selfe.

Secondly, as no action can be good, unlesse the will be right; so the will can never be right, unlesse the understanding be right, as Seneca saith; for though the will be the Mistresse, and the Commander of all the faculties of the soule, save only the vegetative, as Nyssenus saith; yet of it selfe it hath no light, but is inlightened by the reason and judgement of the understanding: And therefore actus voluntatis à voluntate producitur, sed à ratione suadetur; The act of the will is produced by the will, but it is induced and moved here and there by the reason, saith Ludovicus Vives: And therefore if the understanding be darkened, it is no marvell that the will should be corrupted; for if the lame will doth carry and command the blind understanding, and the blind reason doth lead and guide the lame will, then are both like to fall into the ditch.

2 How the understanding is corrupted.

Our will is guided by our judgement

Vives l. de anima.

Mat. 15. 14.

But the soule of man, though reasonable, yet in her selfe, as from her selfe, seems to have no understanding at all; because she hath no infusions, as the Angels have, nor ingrafted knowledge, as other creatures have in their own kind, but only a power and capacity to understand; and yet herein, we see how, on the one side, the soule is perplexed and tormented with ignorance, and on the other side, possessed with an immoderate thirst after knowledge; and this knowledge is seldome attained unto without long experience, and the triall of many conclusions; and all ages are not come to that stayednesse, which is requisite for the attaining of wisdome.

The soule hath all or most of her knowledge by learning.

Experience the mother of knowledge.

For though the understanding of our first Father Adam in paradise, was so perfect, that he knew his God, which made him; his wife to be bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh, though he never saw her before; and all the other creatures so well, that at the first sight, he was able to give them names agreeable to their natures; yet now the understanding of all men is so blinded, that it cannot see the light of any divine truth; and the mind of man, which is the eye of the soule, is no more Naomi, but Mara, and all dolefull creatures, beasts of the desart, owles and Satyrs dwell and dance therein; that is, dulnesse and forgetfulnesse, obscurity and confusion, ignorance and impotency, and many other mists of darknesse have therein planted themselves, and setled their perpetuall habitations; insomuch, that now the sharpest eye, or quickest apprehension of the naturall man, cannot receive the meanest things of the Spirit of God; and though the light shineth in the darknesse, yet the darknesse comprehendeth it not; Peccatum enim tenebræ, for sin is the blackenesse of darknesse, and as a deep dungeon, wherein there is no light; and all sinnes are called the workes of darkenesse; not only because they are done in darkenesse, or at least desired to be kept secret, but also because they are

Of the perfection of Adams understanding.

Gen. 2. 20. 23.

Ruth 1. 20.

1 Cor. 2. 14.

Ioh. 1. 5.

How our understanding is now darkened through sinne.

are the works of them, whose understandings are so darkened, that they cannot Rom.13.12,13. perceive the excellency of the grace of God, but do think all the mysteries of our faith to be, not only mirabilia, strange and wonderfull, but also incredibilia,
Eph.5 8. impossible and incredible: and therefore whatsoever we do say of grace, and of spirituall things, they are but foolishnesse unto them; for, as in the night time, when there is no light, a bush seems a man, and a man a beast, and we judge lead to be silver, brasse gold, and gold no better than copper; so those men, qui sordidè vivunt, which do love, and live in iniquity, can no wayes understand the ex-
Chrysost hom.4.in Iohan. cellency of piety, saith S. Chrysostome.

Eph 4.8. And therefore sin brought this infirmity upon us, to be τὴν διάνοιαν, darkned in our understandings; and our Fathers affected-knowledge of good and evill, brought
The story of a foolish widow. inflicted ignorance of all good, upon all his children; for as we read of a certaine widow, that desiring to see better than she did, had her eyes so cunningly closed,
How Adam by affecting knowledge, brought ignorance upon all his posterity. by a subtill and a false Physitian, that while she hoped for a greater measure of sight, he stole away all the treasure that she had, and then having her eyes opened, and seeing how she was cozened she worthily complained, that she saw worse than ever she did before: So Adam, desiring to know much, and to see better than he did before, became indeed to know just nothing, and to see himself
1 Ioh.1.5. in a farre worser state, than ever he was before; for God is light, and in him there is no darkenesse at all: and therefore falling away from God, we are deprived of Ioh.12.35. all light, and are plunged into the place of utter darkenesse: and therefore as he that walketh in darkenesse, knoweth not whither he goeth; so, wee being separated from God, we know not what is truth, we know not what is good.

The Philosophers saw and professed the blindnesse of men. And the Philosophers themselves, the seekers and searchers after knowledge, did finde, to their endlesse griefe, that when they had turned their strength into weakenesse, their marrow into drinesse, and their colour into palenesse, by their continuall watchings, and indefessed unwearied studies, and musing to get knowledge, they attained at length, to no more, but hoc unum scire, se nihil scire, to know this one thing, that they knew just nothing.

Ioh.3.12. And (as our Saviour said to Nicodemus, in the like case) if they could not attaine to the knowledge of earthly things, how should they understand heavenly things? For, although the understanding, which Nazianzen calleth τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν λαμπάδιον, the eye and lamp of reason, should be exceeding sharpe, to discerne the alterations of the skies, to enter into the secrets of nature, and to reach unto the How sharpe our understanding is in naturall things. height of heaven, and the deepenesse of Hell it selfe; yet in things concerning God, he could reach no further, than τὸ ἐναργὲς, such points as might be manifested by demonstration, as S. Clement saith.

How blockish every man is naturally in the mysteries of our faith. For if we talk of Christs conception, by the Holy Ghost, without the helpe of man; of his birth of a pure Virgin, without breach or impeachment of her Virginity; of his Death, as the Sonne of God personally understood, (for otherwise the divine nature is impassible;) and so of his resurrection, as he is the Sonne of Man, and of the resurrection of all flesh at the last day, and such like Mysteries of our Faith; then both the wise Grecians, even all the Schoole of Athens, and the foolish Iewes, even all the whole rank of Rabbies, will count each point
Acts 17.18. to be ξένει λῆρον, a fained thing; and cry out with the Athenians, What will these bablers say? For, as the eye of man (saith S. Augustine) being either blind or pur-blind, cannot presently discerne the cleerest object; even so (saith he) Animus pollutus, aut mens turbata, Deum præsentem videre non potest; the mind that is distracted with worldly cares, or the soule that is polluted with filthy sin, can neither understand God nor godlinesse.

Gen.6 5. Tit.1.15. Rom 8.6. And therefore Moses saith, that all the imaginations of the thoughts of mans heart, were onely evill continually; and S. Paul saith, that our very minds are defiled, and our wisdomes death; but, if the light that is in thee, be darknesse, how great is that darkenesse? If our minds and understandings be thus blinded, and defiled through sin, in what case shall the other faculties of the soule be?

Thirdly,

Thirdly, for the memory, it is a faculty, qua repetit animus quæ fuerunt, whereby the ſoule retaineth, as it were in her ſight and knowledge, all the things that are paſt; Et hoc nil ſanctius, nil utilius homini dedit Deus, and it is the beſt and moſt excellent gift that God beſtowed on man, ſaith Sabellicus; for this is the Treaſurer of all Learning, and the Keeper of all thoſe Arts and Knowledge, which by great ſtudy and labour we have attained unto: and therefore in vaine were our underſtanding, in vaine were all our ſeeking and ſearching after knowledge, if the memory did not faithfully retaine what we have induſtriouſly found.

3 How the memory is corrupted. What an excellent faculty the memory is. Sabel. l. 10. c. 9. Exemp. de memor.

And therefore it is a common ſaying, that tantum ſcimus quantum memoria tenemus; we know no more, but what we remember: And for this cauſe, Plato ſaith, that memory is the mother of the Muſes; and Ariſtotle compareth it unto a Scribe, intus manens & omnia ſcribens, that ſitteth alwaies within, and recordeth all things that are done, either within or without; and the Poets placed Lethe, that is, oblivion and forgetfulneſſe, which is alwaies the enemy moſt contrary to the memory, in Hell, among the infernall ſpirits.

Plat in Crat. & in Tyraeo. That forgetfulnes is an infernall fiend.

And in this, we find the memory to be preferred, and inriched with more excellent prerogatives than any other faculty of the ſoule; that the underſtanding hath much adoe to diſcuſſe of things, and by reaſon to find out the truth; and the will many times is thwarted, and contradicted by reaſon; when wiſdome ſheweth, the will ſhould not affect many things ſo indirectly as it doth; but the memory, according to Philoſophie, is never diſtracted by any forraigne ſoe, but retaineth peaceably at home (like a good huſwife) both what the will affecteth, and what the underſtanding findeth.

Wherein the memory excelleth the other faculties of the ſoule.

And therefore God in the delivering of the Law, doth chiefly work upon this faculty of the memory, by preſenting unto the Iſraelites, what he had done for them, ſaying, I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage; And ſo Chriſt in the ſealing of the Goſpell by the participation of his bleſſed body and bloud, recommends that excellent benefit unto our memories, ſaying, Do this in remembrance of me; for in vaine ſhould God do his wonderfull workes, unleſſe they were had in remembrance; that is, if ſo ſoone as he had done them, we ſhould, with the Iſraelites, preſently forget them; for as the meat is received in vaine into the ſtomack, unleſſe it be retained untill it be digeſted; ſo are all the works of God done in vaine for us, unleſſe the Memory, like a good ſtomack, (as S. Bernard cals it) doth retaine them, untill they have wrought their appointed ends, upon our ſoules.

How God recommendeth his benefits unto our memories. Exod 20. 2.

Luk. 22. 19. 1 Cor. 11. 24.

And yet now, this excellent faculty of the ſoule is ſo defiled and corrupted by ſinne, that like a raw bad ſtomack, it receiveth not, it retaineth not, it digeſteth not that good meat, that is offered unto it; but it is only delighted with thoſe corrupter things that do turne to bad humours and crudities, for to increaſe the diſeaſes, and to haſten the death of the ſoule; For

How the memory is defiled by ſinne.

First, touching vaine things, idle toyes, and unprofitable matters, we ſee the fidelity of this faculty therein, that admirable things are recorded of the ſame; for Cyrus could remember the name of every ſouldier that was in his huge army; and Mithridates King of Pontus, learned to ſpeak two and twenty ſeverall languages; and Portius Latronus could rehearſe any ſpeech verbatim, that he had once written, without miſſing of any word thereof; and the like memory had Themiſtocles, Lucullus, Hortentius, Seneca, and diverſe others.

Autor Plinio. How faithfull is our memery in vaine or evill things.

So now in all men, tenaciſſima eſt injuriæ memoria, we can never forget ill turnes done unto us; we will write theſe things in marble; yea though we ſay that we do forgive them, yet we do profeſſe that we ſhall never forget them; (a fine diſtinction to deceive our ſelves, to deſtroy our ſoules, and a witty way to go to hell:) and ſo of many other things, that do oftentimes teare our hearts, and vexe our minds with unſpeakable griefs; we cannot (though we would never ſo faine) forget them: and therefore Themiſtocles, when it was told him that Simonides had found out the art of memory, ſaid, that he would like better of him that Scribit in marmore læſus. Cicero l. 2. de Oratore.

that could teach him the art of forgetfulneſſe, that he might forget thoſe things, which he ſhould not and would not remember: But

How ſoone we forget good things.

Secondly, touching good things, that ſhould be had in everlaſting remembrance, we ſee quam facilis eſt oblivio boni, how eaſily they are forgotten, as S. Hierom ſaith; there be but ten commandements, ten words, ſaith Moſes, but two, ſaith our Saviour, but one, ſaith the Apoſtle; and that is but a ſhort one too, Love, and that is all; and yet how hardly do we learne it, and how ſoone do we forget it? How many thouſands have we in England, that can tell you a thouſand tales, but cannot ſay their Prayers, their Creed, and their ten Commandements? There is but one God; and, as the Poet ſaith,

Mat. 12. 30, 31. Rom 13. 9.

Eſt Deus in nobis, agitante caleſcimus illo.

Pſal. 139. 7. Acts 17. 28.

This God is not only preſent with us, about our beds, and about our paths, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; but he is alſo within us; for in him we live, we move, and have our being, as the Apoſtle ſaith; and yet we do quite forget him; we think not of him: yea, we forget our ſelves, and whatſoever is good for our own ſoules; for though there be but unum neceſſarium, one thing that is needfull for us, (as our Saviour teſtifieth) yet alas you ſee, how few of us do remember that one thing: and therefore forgetting this one thing, we forget all things; and we can remember nothing that is good for our own ſelves.

Luke 10. 42.

Deut. 24. 18.

Thou ſhalt remember (ſaith Moſes unto the Iſraelites) that thou waſt a bondman in Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee thence; but they ſoone forgate (ſaith David) what God had done, and the wonderfull things that he had ſhewed for them: So we ſhould remember Gods bleſſings, that we might be thankfull to him, and we ſhould remember our owne ſinnes, that we might be ſorrowfull for them: we ſhould remember Gods juſtice, that we might feare to ſinne, and we ſhould remember his mercy, that we might not fall to deſpaire.

Pſal 78. 11. What wee ſhould alwaies remember.

Franciſc. Petrarch. dialog. 8. de memoria.

But alas, alas; ſuch is our nature, ſuch grievous ſores do poſſeſſe our ſoules, and this excellent faculty of our memory is ſo wounded by ſinne, that as we read of Meſſala Corvinus, who became ſo ſottiſh, as to forget his own name; ſo we are become to that paſſe, Ut dediſcenda diſcimus, & diſcenda dediſcimus; we alwaies remember what we ſhould forget; and we ever forget what we ſhould ever remember.

And ſo, I hope, you ſee, (as to our griefe we feele it) how filthy ſinne ſlayeth the ſoule; corrupting and defiling each part and faculty of the ſame; the will, with lewd affections; the underſtanding, with groſſe ignorance; and the memory, with ſottiſh forgetfulneſſe; ſo that now, we will indirectly, we judge darkly, and we remember nothing that is heavenly.

The faculties of the ſoule diſagreeing among themſelves.

And not only ſo, but we find alſo, that theſe and all other faculties of the ſoule do moſt miſerably contend and diſagree among themſelves; for a good wit will ſeldome agree with a good memory; (I ſpeake not in reſpect of the multiplicity of inventions, which thereby might ſeeme to over-preſſe the memory, which otherwiſe might be commendable and good in it ſelfe, but I ſpeak it, as it ariſeth from the very conſtitution.) A moiſt braine, full of ſpirits, is the apteſt for invention; but the cold and drie temper will longeſt retaine the impreſſion; and as good wits cannot agree among themſelves, but ſometimes fall out into factions; ſo the witty profeſſions ſeeme to oppoſe each other; and ſometimes you ſhall diſcerne wit without diſcretion, and a great deale of learning in a fooles keeping.

Biſhop of Gloceſter of the fall of man.

Wits are not the ſame in all ſtudies

Beſides, the ſame wits will not ſuffice for all ſtudies; for the ſuperficiall Rhetorician with his colours and allegories ſhall never be able to ſadome the depth and grounds of Philoſophie, and he that is naturally addicted to Mathematicall lines and engines, ſhall never be able to comprehend, within the circles of his ſphere, the motions and abſtractions of the Metaphiſickes: ſo practicall arts can never be attained unto by ſpeculation: but we muſt learne them by experience, and as the beſt naturall wits can endure leaſt paines in ſtudies, but doe expect to receive all by infuſion; elſe much reading dulls their underſtanding, and night-watchings diſtemper distemper their bodies; and dazle the eyes of their mindes: so these quicke wits are soonest abused and seduced, and the greatest judgements take the deepest discontentments, and all from the distractions of our minde.

Beſt wits take leaſt paines.

How our soules are fuller of diseases then our bodies.

Hence it comes to passe, that our bodies are not so subject to diseases, as our soules be to sins; for pride is the soules tympany; when it doth——turgescere fastu, waxe big, and swell through the distaine of others, and then it is but like a bladder puft up with winde; envie is the worme that gnaweth at the heart; then which, it is most certaine that

Vidi ego vesicam modico turgescere flatu,
Quis puer ut sonuit quamvis impositis,
Hanc puer unus acu tetigit, vesica repente
Vilis & absq; suo flaccida ilatamus.

——Siculi non invenere tyranni tormentum majus.——

The Sicilian Tyrants did never feele a more fearefull torment; and wrath is a plurisie, that will not be appeased without blood; for of the raging man it is most truly said,

Mad that his poyson cannot others kill,
He drinkes it off himselfe, himselfe to spill.

And therefore of all the men in the world, we are advised to keep no company with an angry furious man; but as the Poet saith,

Ovidius l. 2. de rem. amor.

Dum furor in cursu currenti cede furori;
Difficiles aditus impetus omnis habet.
To turne aside from every furious wight,
Cause fury will have passage in despight.

Furor arma ministrat.

Jude aspice late florentes quondam civitates quas everterit urbes.

Quippe nec ira Deum tantum, nec tela, nec hostes, quàm sola nocet animis illapsa voluptas. Sylius 15.

And Lust is the soules feaver; the flames thereof are the flames of fire; and the waters thereof are aquæ τῆς ἀνοίας, the waters of folly and madnesse, that as the Poet saith, have overwhelmed many famous cities.

How the sicknes of the soule is worse then the sicknesse of the body.

And in this, the sicknesse of the soule doth exceed all the sicknesse of the body; for the body hath some respite, from its sicknesse; but the soule hath none from sin; and every sicknesse of the body kils it not; but every sin slayeth the soule; for the reward of sin, that is, of every sin, is death, saith the Apostle.

Lactan. divin. instit. c. 5.

And hence likewise, in my judgement, that branch of Pellagianisme, taught also by Lactantius, & now I feare maintained by too many, that the light of nature, if it were well used, might make way for Divine instruction, may be sufficiently confuted; for, though they teach, that man by sin hath not quite killed his soule; but wounded the same, like the man that fell among theeves, and was left halfe alive; and therefore might, (saith Lactantius) come to the same doctrine, that we doe follow, Si quæ, natura ducente, senserunt defendisset; If they had constantly maintained those things, which Nature taught them; yet the Apostle saith here, that sinne brings death unto the sinner; and if death, then sure there was no life; that is, no life of Grace in him: And so in many other places, the Apostle sheweth as much; for he saith, that we were dead in trespasses and sins; and that God hath quickned us by Iesus Christ.

That Nature though never so well used cannot procure the gifts of grace. Ephes 2, 1, 5. Col 2 13.

And therefore it is apparantly plaine, that at the beginning of our conversion, we are altogether passive, and have no power in the world, to releeve our selves, untill grace hath quickned our dead soules.

Ob. But against this, it may be objected, that the Apostle saith, the Gentiles knew God; τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, so much as might be knowne concerning God; that is, his eternall power and God-head, when they considered him in his workes; and therefore the light of Nature, was not quite extinguished in them.

Rom. 1 21.

That sin extinguished all knowledge of God, but what God revealeth to man.

Sol. I answer, that this knowledge of God, was not from the light of Nature in them; but it was revealed by God unto these naturall men, to make them without excuse, as Zanchius well observeth; for so the the Apostle sheweth in the 19 verse of the same Chapter; where he saith, Deus enim illis manifestavit, for God revealed the same unto them: and therefore I say that the sinne of Adam did quite kill the soule of every man; for the reward of sinne is death: and therefore we may all of us cry out with the Apostle, O wretched men that we are, who shall deliver us from the body of this death?

Rom. 7. 24.

Gods sentence executed upon Adam. Gen. 2. 17.

And here-hence we may also see, the judgement of God threatned in Paradise, In what day thou eatest of the tree of Knowledge of good and evill, thou shalt die the death, to be truely and presently inflicted upon Adam; for, though his body seemed to live, yet was his soule separated from God, and therefore it must needs be presently dead.

Aug. de ser. dom. in monte, & habetur de pœnitent. distinct. 3.

But as sin is three manner of waies committed, (as I shewed before) so is the death of the soule three waies inflicted; and they are prefigured by those three sorts of dead men, which our Saviour raised in the Gospell, as Saint Augustine sheweth.

Three sorts of dead raised.

The first was Iayrus his daughter: and she was a Virgin, and was as yet within the doores; and therefore our Saviour went into the house, and put out all the people, and vouchsafed to take her by the hand, and to say Talitha cumi, Damosell, I say unto thee arise: This signifieth that soule, which sinned onely by consent, but hath not as yet brought forth the sin into fact: and therefore God will be mercifull unto such, and will not require to shame them before the world; but hee will go in himselfe, and accept of their inward repentance only for such inward sins.

Mar. 5. 41. Of a threefold death of the soule 1 Death.

The second was the Widdowes sonne of Naim; and he was caried out to be buried; and therefore our Saviour, in the presence of them all, Did touch the Beere, and said, Young man, I say unto thee, arise; and he sate up, and began to speake: And this signifieth the soule that sinneth in fact: and therefore as she publikely sinned, so she must be publikely restored; and as by her sin she offended many; so by her sitting up, that is, by her standing and constancy in grace, and by her talking, that is, by her confession of her sins, she must give satisfaction unto many; Nam qui publicè peccat, publicè corrigendus, publicè restauraudus est; For he that publikely offendeth, is publikely to be reproved, publikly to be restored, saith the Law.

2 Death.

Luk. 7. 14.

They that publikely sin, must publikely testifie their repentance.

3 Death. Iohn 11.

Ver. 33.

Ver. 43. Ver. 44.

The third was Lazarus; and he was dead and laid in his grave; and therefore Iesus was faine to goe a great journey to raise him; and when he came to him, hee groned in his spirit, and was troubled; he wept and he groaned againe; he lifted up his eyes, he prayed, and he cryed with a loud voice, saying, Lazarus come forth: and then he came forth, but how? bound, hand and foot (saith the Evangelist;) with grave clothes, and his face bound with a Napkin; so that his friends and standers by, were faine to loose him, and to let him goe: And this signifieth the soule that is accustomed to sin, that is dead and buried in sin: and therefore many groanes and sighes, many teares and prayers, and loud cryes, must be used, before such a soule can be raised from her sins: and because the accustomed sinners are bound with sins, as with a chaine, and have their faces bound up with shameless impudency, and are covered with the same, as with a Napkin, so that now they are past all shame to sinne; therefore the Ministers of the Word, their friends, their neighbours, by reproofes, by counsell, and by all other meanes, must doe their best, to loose them, and to let them goe; that is, to withdraw them from their evill waies, and to cause them to walke in the paths of Righteousnesse.

How hard it is to recover a sinner accustomed to sin

Well then, seeing ψυχὴ ἁμαρτήματος, ψυχῆς ἐστι θανατος, the life of sin is the death of the soule; yea, seeing every sinne slayeth the soule, and that it is so hard a thing to revive the soule from accustomed sins; Oh why should we accustome our selves to sin? for it is more dangerous to sleepe with one sinne, then with an hundred Scorpions; For they can but kill the body, but sin killeth both, the body and soule.

That the love of goodnesse should move us to hate sin. Si scirem Deos ignoscituros & homines ignoraturos: Tamen propter peccati turpitudinem peccare dedignarer. Seneca.

Oderunt peccare boni virtutis amore.

We know that good men will not sin, for the very love they beare to vertue, and for the detestation they beare to vice; for so we reade that Seneca, though a Heathen, hated sin; least it should defile the soule; and Anselmus, that good Christian saith, that if he should see all punishments, without sin, on the one hand; and find sin with all the pleasures of sin, on the other hand; and were compelled to make choice of one of them as Origen was, either to commit Sodomie with a Blackamoore,

Blackamoore, or to caſt Thuribilum his cenſer into the fire, for to ſacrifice unto the Idols; he would ſurely imbrace the puniſhments, and forſake the ſin; becauſe all the Saints of God, do ever eſteeme it better, to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon. Heb. 11. 25.

And yet, as Arellius the Romane painter made the pictures of thoſe Harlots, which he loved, to be as images of the goddeſſes, for the people, to be adored; and Praxiteles formed the faire Venus after the ſhape of his wanton Cratina, as Clemens Alexandrinus affirmes it; and ſo all other painters made the pictures of the ſame goddeſſe, after the feature of the faire curteſan Phryne, while ſhe flouriſhed; ſo every ſinner maketh a god of that ſin, wherein he is moſt delighted, and hee offereth ſacrifice to the ſame ſin, not ſlaine beaſts, but his owne ſoule, as S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, and the Scripture teacheth moſt plainely, when ſpeaking of worldly men, the Prophet tells us, they doe ſacrifice unto their nets, which bring ſo much wealth unto their coffers, and Saint Paul ſaith, the epicure or glutton, drunkard and riotous perſon makes a god of his bellie; and every one maketh a god of that ſin which he loveth beſt. Plin. natur hiſt. l. 35. cap. 10. Alexand. in o. at. ad genus. Chryſoſt hom 6. in ep. ad Rom. Hab. 1. 16. Phil 3. 16.

But if we will not imitate theſe good men, to forſake ſinne, for the filthineſſe of ſin; yet, as many wicked men are ſaid to have done it, ſo let us doe it—formidine pœnæ; for feare of the reward of ſin; for the wages of ſinne is death, and that not onely of the ſoule in ſin, but alſo of the body for ſin: And therefore wee muſt either kill our ſinnes in the day of grace, or els our ſinnes will kill us in the day of the Lord; becauſe the Apoſtle tells us plainely, that the reward of ſinne is death. And ſo I come to the ſecond kinde of death. That wicked men ſhould forſake ſin for feare of puniſhment.

Chap. IIII.

How ſinne ſlayeth the body, by inflicting on it, all the miſeries of this life: and of the large extent of death over all men.

2 Of the corporall death.

Secondly, Touching the death of the Body; that we may the more fully take a view thereof, and the more orderly proceed in this point; I muſt deſire you to conſider theſe three things.

Three things to be conſidered concerning naturall death.

1. How this death is defined.
2. How farre it extendeth.
3. How variably it worketh.

} And

1 What is meant by death.

For the firſt, ὁ θάνατος ἐστι ψυχῆς καὶ σώματος διάλυσις; death is ſaid to be the diſſolution of the body and ſoule; that is, the ſeparation of the one from the other, and not the deſtruction of either: And we muſt note, that whatſoever worketh or cauſeth the divorſe and diſſolution of theſe two, muſt needs be a branch of this tree: and therefore by death is underſtood, not onely the laſt finall ſtroke, and fatall ſeparation of the body and ſoule, but alſo all other fore-runners, and fore-cauſers of this diſſolution; as ſickneſſe, griefe, ſorrow, and all the other miſeries that doe happen throughout the whole courſe of mans life; for (as I told you before) the death of man, pronounced here, & the curſe of God denounced elſewhere, are æquivalent, that is, the like, nay the ſame reward of ſin: and therefore whatſoever is the curſe of God, the ſame muſt needs be contained under the name of death; but we know, that all the miſeries of man, doe proceed from the curſe of God for ſin: and therfore all the miſeries, and troubles, and ſorrowes of this life, muſt needs be underſtood under the name of death, for as the laſt ſtroke of a tree, is not the onely cauſe that doth throw downe the tree; but that, with all the reſt, is properly ſaid to have cut it downe; ſo the laſt ſtroke of death, cannot bee ſaid to be the ſole killer of any man; but that, with all the reſt of his precedent miſeries. So death daily ſtrikes to beat us downe; and the more ſorrowes are ſuffered, or the more daies are paſſed, the more chips are chopped off from this tree of life.

By death is underſtood all that is contained in the curſe of God.

Death from our cradle to our laſt gaſpe is ſtill beating upon the tree of our life.

Now the whole life of man, is nothing elſe but a mappe of miſeries; and my life would be too ſhort to relate it: yet ſeeing all is the wages of ſinne; for man ſuffereth all that he ſuffereth for his ſins; (as the Prophet ſheweth,) my Text calls upon me to ſpeake a little of all, and the time bids me to ſpeake but a little of the ſame.

Foure parts of the world

The whole world is divided by the Coſmographers into foure parts.

1 Europe.

The 1. is Europe, the glory of countries, that is like the garden of Paradiſe, whereof the Poet ſaith,

Induperatrici decorata Europa corona
Orbem, quo ſedet ut ſolio regina ſuperbo,
Cum numero populi haud poſſet ſuperare vel auro,
Viribus & valido ſibi ſubdidit inclyta ferro.

2 Aſia.

The 2. is Aſia, next in all worth and plenty unto Europe, whereof the ſame Poet ſaith,

Nympha potens ſpatijs terrarum & divite cenſu,
Hirti Aſiæ dorſo reſidet ſpectanda camelis:
Quæ virtute velut Europa viriſq́, triumphat,
Fœmineis meritò palmam fert unica formis.

3 Africa.

The 3. is Africa, a ſpacious continent, but drier and more barren, whereof the Poet ſaith, Murus Babilone Coloſſus Mauſoleum, Diana templum Pyramides Iupiter Olymp. Puteus.

Tertia terga premens crocodili decolor æſtu
Perpete, balſameum dextra tenet Africa ramum,
Tertia, ſed rerum præſtans novitate ſtupenda
Primas pyramidum fert molibus æternarum.

4 America.

The 4. and laſt is America, laſt found, and ſcarce yet fully knowne to us, whereof the Poet ſaith,

Illa quidem dudum noſtris non cognita terris,
Facta brevi auriferis latè celeberrima venis,
Viſceribus ſcelerata ſuis humana recondens
Viſcera feralem prætendit America clavam.

Foure parts of the yeare.

And the yeare is diſtinguiſhed into foure quarters.

1 Spring.

1. The Spring, when all budds and pleaſant flowers doe begin to ſhew forth their faces and complexions out of the wombe of their mother earth, and the very birds doe chirpe and ſing for joy; whereof the Poet ſaith,

Vere novo redeunt florentia germina plantis,
Et monſtrant qualis copia meſſis erit.

2 Summer.

2. The Summer, when the earth yeeldeth forth ſuch plenty of fruits and all other delights for the uſe and ſervice of men; whereof the Poet ſaith,

Sole nitet tellus formoſaq́, meſſibus æſtas
Ridet, & algentes ore petuntur aquæ.

3 Autumne.

3. The Autumne, when men beſtirre themſelves to gather and lay up for the colder times, and the leaves doe fall from off the trees, and all things begin now to faint and decay; whereof the Poet ſaith,

Congregat & ſpargit ſegetes autumnus in agris,
Quæq́, jacent frugum ſemina & illa metit.

4 Winter.

4. The Winter, when, for feare of the cold windes and ſtormes, all fruits and flowers, and all other pleaſant things doe hide and cover themſelves within the holes and cavernes of the earth and the whole face of the world ſeemes withered and wrinkled, and the Iſicles hanging on every tree, doe, like the decrepit old mans gray and ſqualid beard, threaten all diſaſters and death unto him; whereof the Poet ſaith,

Horrida ſqualet hyems, tolerata ſed igne levatur
Sol ubi flammivolas ſuſtulit orbe faces.

Now

Now, look into any part of the world, and to any time of the yeare; and you ſhall eaſily find, in every place, and at all times;

1. How all ages,
2. How all eſtates,
3. How all creatures

do accumulate and heape upon man heapes of miſeries.

1 The manifold miſeries of all ages.

For the firſt, in our infancy, we come crawling into the world, without any ſtrength.

Our infancy how miſerable.

Editus in lucem jacuit ſine viribus infans,

Ovid. Met. l. 15.

And as Lucretius ſaith, Nudus humi jacet——— we come naked out of our mothers wombs, & we have not any, the leaſt, covering to hide us, ſave only the blond of our filthineſſe; and if we had underſtanding to ſee it, we might perceive our mothers halfe-dead, by giving us a little life, and that if we were not helped by others, the houre of our birth would be the end of our life: and therefore as the Poet ſaith:

Lucret. l. 5. Iob. 3.

Vagituq́, locum lugubri complet, ut æquum eſt,
Cui tantum in vita reſtet tranſire laborum.

Lucret. ibid.

The poore infant now begins with dolefull cries, (and teares within a while) as his beſt orators, to expreſſe his own miſeries: and you never ſaw, neither have we ever read of any one, ſave only of Zoroaſtes, King of the Bactrians, that either laughed or ſmiled at his birth; nor yet within forty dayes after, (ſaith Ariſtotle) except it be ſomtime, as they ſleep and are at reſt.

Iuſtin Hiſt. l. 1. The infant laughs not in 40 dayes. Ariſt. Hiſt. Animal. l. 7. c. 10.

And after we are thus caſt into the world, weak, wailing and miſerable; our whole life is divided by Galenus into foure parts, whereof he maketh the

1. πᾶν νέων, juvenum, of children, till 15.
2. πᾶν ἀκμαζόντων, vigentium, of youths, till 30.
3. πᾶν μέσων, mediorum, of men, till 50.
4. πᾶν γήρων, ſenum, of old age, till death, as Varro diſtributeth the ſame.

} Yeares of their age.

Galenus de diff. medic.

The age of man is divided into foure parts.

Firſt, in our childhood we are all alike, the heire differing nothing from a ſervant, though he be Lord of all, all Lords, or what you will; but they muſt be under Tutours and Governours, ſaith the Apoſtle; and becauſe

1 Our childhood. Gal. 4. 1, 2.

Exultat levitate puer———

Children are childiſh, and apiſh, rather delighting in toyes, than imbracing inſtructions; therefore they are kept under correction, and brought unto vertue by good diſcipline, while they may be taught; for as it is proverbially ſaid,

Flexilis eſt juncus, ſalices flectuntur amaræ,
Robora dura minus.———

Pro. 29. 18. & c. 23. 24.

The tender branch may be eaſily bowed, but the well-growne Oke will be ſooner broken than ſtraitned; ſo we may teach a child a trade in his youth; but we ſhall hardly teach an old horſe to amble: and therefore, the wiſeſt among the ſonnes of men, adviſeth all men to correct their children; though they be never ſo deare in their ſight; becauſe this is as neceſſary unto the children as their food, and it is as comfortable unto the parents, as is the child himſelfe; in as much, as to have a good child, is better than to have a child.

Correction, how neceſſary.

And yet this inſtruction, and eſpecially the correction, is ſuch an intolerable burden, ſo heavy for them to beare, and ſo unpleaſant unto their taſte, as that they think no creatures more miſerable than themſelves, when they ſee all others free, and themſelves only (as they think) bound under the rod; and therfore they would give all that they have, to be once rid out of this ſervile bondage.

What a burden correction is unto children.

Secondly, in our youth, we are like untamed colts, wild and wanton, unable to rule our ſelves, and unwilling to be ruled by others: and therfore we do looſen our bridles to all licentiouſneſſe; and every young man is for the moſt part, as the Poet deſcribeth him briefly.

2 Our youth.

Invidus, iracundus, iners, vinoſus, amator:

We burn with luſt while we be youths, and are ſtill inflamed with that untameable fire of wanton love:

How dissolute we are in our youth. Ovid.l.13. Metam.
Dum mihi læta genas convestit flore juventus,
Militiæ ingredior castra cupido meæ:
Prodigus, & curæ vacuus, temerarius, audax,
Omne genus vitæ luberioris amo.

——neq; enim robustior ætas
Ulla, nec uberior, nec quæ magis ardeat ulla est.

Pleasure and youth do smile on us, to woe us
To taste vaine lusts; tasted, they do undoe us.

Therefore S. Hierom saith, that it is almost impossible to find a young man, that is not somtimes tempted with fleshly lusts; and S. Ambrose saith, Inter omnia certamina Christianorum, durissima sunt prælia castitatis; Among all the combats of Christians, it is the hardest thing for us to overcome, and to subdue our owne lusts, and to keepe our own flesh a chast and a modest virgin: And as we are inflamed with lust, so we are drowned in drunkennesse; we swell with pride, and we fill our selves with all filthinesse; and thereby we do many times, (as we daily see in many desperate youths) by drinking, whoring, swearing, quarelling, and such like effects of deboysnesse, suddenly cut off our selves in our owne wickednesse: and what greater miseries can there be than these? And yet behold I will shew thee greater abominations. For 3 Our manhood. The miseries incident to us in our manhood.

Nunc me ludus habet, nunc me formosa puella,
Nunc fera propacta prælia nocte gero;
Sed velut herba perit, sic flos cadit iste juventæ,
Felix qui potuit dicere talu eram.

Thirdly, In our manhood we are come to the middest of miseries; so that

Quocunq; aspiciam, quocunq; lumina vertam;

Wheresoever we look and turne our eyes, we shall see nothing, but our selves swimming in a sea of sorrowes, and there tumbled and tossed with many waves of woes; micat ignibus æther; clouds of darknesse are instead of comforts; and about our heads we shall find haile-stones and coales of fire; for now we find the affaires of the world, the feares of enemies, the cares for families, the discontents at home, many times of thy wife, that lieth in thy bosome; many times of thy children, the fruits of thine owne bowels; the wrongs of Neighbours abroad, the suits of Law neare home, and a thousand such like bitter fruits of sinne, do so vexe and affright the heart of man, that they make him often sleepe like the Nightingale, that is said to have alwaies a pricke before her breast; and then to rise up early, and late to go to bed, and to eat the bread of carefulnesse, and all to no purpose; for after we have wearied, and worne out our selves in the pursuit of this world, all our works and labours are but as the Spiders web, that will make no garment for us: and when we have brought our yeares to an end, as it were a tale that is told; then, notwithstanding all our former pomp and power, we shall be as poore, as when we were born, even as poore as Iob; for, as we came naked into the world, so naked we shall returne againe: and so this is not only the misery, but also the folly and madnesse of men: And yet behold a little more; For Pfal.129.3.

Pfal.90.9.

4 Our old age. The miseries incident to us in old age.
Iob 1.21.
Nunc mihi cum medicis res est, & studeo summo,
Et miserè vitam semisepultus ago:
Rixosæ invectant vetulæ, execrabile vulgus,
Invidus in terræ parta recondo stum.

Fourthly, in old age,

Usq; adeo gravis uxori, gnatisq;, sibiq;,
Ut captatori moveat fastidia Cosso:

We are troublesome to our selves and others, to our own wives and our children; and all, that ought to love us, begin now to loath us; for ἐκληρὸς ἀνὴρ ὄζει ἐν νεοῖς γέρων.

An old man is troublesome unto youths, saith Menander; yea, as I said, our own wives, though they cannot leave us, yet do they not love us; and indeed our owne selves do now begin to hate our selves, and are even wearie of our owne lives;

Laudat præteritos, præsentes despicit annos;

For these be the daies wherein there is no pleasure, wherein we can take no joy.

χαλεπὸν τὸ γῆρας ὄζει ἀνθρώποις βάρος.

Because old age is like an heavy burden unto men, that makes them stoupe down to the earth,

Eccles.12.1.

Nec cœlum spectare licet, sed prona senectus
Terram, à qua genita est, & reditura videt:

And it never suffers them to rise, or scarce to looke up towards Heaven, untill they return to the earth, from whence they were taken: Alas then, what a misery is this, to consider the miseries of old age? our bodies are weakned, our beauty vanished, our

Gen.3.19.

senses

ſenſes blunted; the eyes cannot ſee, the eares cannot heare, the hands cannot work, and the feete cannot walke: and then beſides,

——Circumſilit agmine facto
morborum omne genus——

We are ſeized upon by all kinde of diſeaſes; our heads ake, our hearts faint, and all our bodies tremble; Coughes, Rheumes and Feavers, do now ſeeme to bee our vitall ſpirits: and ſo the Heathens ſaw, and ſo they ſaid, that no age was free from miſeries, yet not one ſo bad as this; for notwithſtanding all this, and that they ſee they cannot live, and Nature tels them they muſt needs die; yea, all theſe fore-runners of death, doe daily tell them, that they are even drawing their laſt breath; yet the neerer they be unto their death, the more covetous they are, the more worldly minded, the more deſirous to live, and the more loath to leave this wretched life.

Auri ſacra fames, & amor ſceleratus habendi, aſſolet inprimis excruciare ſenes.

Secondly, as all the Ages of mans life, ſo all the eſtates of life, are full of the puniſhments of ſin; For 2 The miſeries of all eſtates.

First, if thou beeſt poore; ----Nihil habet infælix paupertas. Thou ſhalt be ſure of nothing, but contempt, which is poverties neceſſary attendant; for the poore man ſhall be deſpiſed and deſpighted of his owne brethren; and it is ſtrange to ſee, what paines and drudgery, thoſe poore ſnakes (as we call them) doe take, and indure both at home and abroad, to get a little maintenance; in the ſweat of their face, and it may be in the coldeſt Winter, they doe eate their bread, and perhaps ſcarce ſufficient to ſatisfie meere neceſſity; as if they onely were allotted to ſuſtaine that heavie ſentence, that was firſt denounced againſt man for ſin: and therefore Menander ſaith, ---οὐδὲν πενίας βαρύτερόν ἐστι φορτίον; No burthen is more burthenſome then poverty; and Plautus ſaith, Omnibus modis, qui pauperes ſunt, miſerè vivunt; The poore are miſerable every way; and it was the common received opinion of the Gentiles, miſeros eſſe deis inviſos; that they were hated of the gods, which were thus plagued by the gods; and the Iewes thought little leſſe; becauſe this is numbred among the curſes of the Law.

1 The miſeries of of the poore.

Gen. 3. 19.

Plaut rud.

Deut. 28. 27, 33.

And the reaſon why poverty ſeemes to be ſo miſerable, is fourefold.

The reaſon why poverty is ſo miſerable, is fourefold.

1. Propter injuriam, for the injuries and wrongs that they ſuffer at the hands of their oppreſſors, who as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, doe raviſh the poore when they get them into their nets; and theſe nets ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome are their writings, bills, bonds and morgages, that are ſtronger then any iron chaines; and raviſhing is a diſhoneſtie joyned with cruelty; ſo the oppreſſor ſheweth no mercy unto the poore; but as the ſame Prophet ſaith, they eate up the people as they eate bread; that is, they make no more account to undoe a poore man, then they doe to eate their meate when they are hungrie; and this undoing of the poore is termed the grinding of his face, and the murdering of the poore; becauſe the meanes whereby we live, is uſually termed our life, as where it is ſaid, that the woman, which had the iſſue of blood twelve yeares, ſpent ὅλον τὸν βίον, her whole life, that is, all her ſubſtance upon the Phyſitians, and therfore they that deprive a man of his livelihood, and rob him of his living, do in the account of God take away his life.

1 Propter iniuriam Pſal. 10. 9. γράμματα προσάγετε σιδήρια ἰσχυρότερα. Chryſ. Pſal 14. 4.

Luk 8. 43. So Mar. 12. ult. the like phraſe is uſed.

2. Propter imbecillitatem, for the frailty and weakeneſſe of our corrupted nature, which is ever ready to faint when our meanes doe faile us; for as Hagar was not much offended ſo long as her bread and her bottle laſted, but as ſoone as ever theſe were ſpent, ſhe cried out that ſhe was undone, and both ſhe and her child muſt needs periſh; ſo when our wealth is exhauſted, we thinke our ſelves utterly loſt; and they that know no want, do little know, into what plunges and extremities the poore man is often driven in the time of need.

2 Propter imbecillitatem.

Gen 21. 15.

3. Propter infamiam, for the ſcorne and contempt that are the inſeparable companions of a poore eſtate; for, as when the poore Prodigalls wings were clipt, and his wealth was all waſted, his elder brother would not owne him, but diſdainefully ſaid, not this my brother, but οὗτος ὁ υἱός, this thy ſonne; it ſeemes he ſcorned now to call him brother, becauſe he was ſo poorely attired and ſo meanely at-

3 Propter infamiã.

Luk. 15. 30.

attended; so it is with us, hæc nimis inimica amicitia, this friendship is friendlesse, when the want of lucre shall cause the want of love, and every man is valued, not according to what he is, but according to what he hath, not for his vertues, but for his riches.

Iames 2.2,&c.

4 Propter inediam,

4. Propter inediam, for the hunger, and famine, and want, that the poore do suffer in the time of their scarcity; for as it was a most lamentable thing in Ierusalem, cum parvuli panem petebant; when, as Ieremie saith, the little children cried for bread, and there was no man that could give it them; so it is a pitifull thing, when a poore man shall toyle and moyle, and labour from morning to night; and yet for all that he can do, he can hardly get bread for his poore wife and children; O what a wretched thing is this! when a mans meanes is like the prisoners pittance, ὅτε τρέφει, ὅτε ἐᾷ πεινῆσαι, that is, such as will neither keepe him alive, nor yet suffer him to die; but even so much as will hold life and soule together.

Lam.4.4.

Hecuba's miseries.

And therefore Hecuba, being brought to such extreame poverty, as that she had neither clothes to cover her nakednesse, nor yet food to satisfie nature, cals her mis-fortunes and miseries, ξυμφορὰς καὶ χλαῖνας καὶ φέρλας, such as surpassed the sufferance of any creature; and Plutarch reports, that many men, to avoid the same, did prevent this misery of life, by a sudden and unnaturall death; choosing to die manfully, rather than to live in extreame poverty: and so with the unpatient fishes, they did but leape out of the frying-pan into the fire, and run away from that misery, which, for a while, they would not indure, into those intolerable torments, which now they must eternally suffer.

2 The misery of the rich,

Secondly, if thou beest rich, then art thou envied of others, and shalt be very like to be couzened of thy goods; for theeves will seek to rob thee, thy friends to betray thee, and thy neighbours to deceive thee; which makes the rich men to take more care to keepe their wealth, than they took paines to get it; and thereby they are vexed and crucified of themselves;

Juvenal.Satyr.10.

Nam plures nimia congesta pecunia cura
Strangulat.

Eccles.8.

For gold and silver have destroyed many a man, saith the Sonne of Syrach; for riches are like thornes, saith our Saviour Christ; because they have the same power to teare our hearts, as the others have to rend our garments: Neither is this all the evill that riches bring unto us; but they puffe us up with pride, they make us to disdaine our inferiours, wrong our neighbours, forget our God, and to think our selves poore wormes, to be no lesse than gods on earth: and therefore the Lord saith, that he is greatly angry against rich Nations; because, they that will be rich do fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtfull lusts, which drowne men in perdition and destruction; and our Saviour saith, it is a very hard thing for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of heaven: Not that rich men cannot be saved; for Abraham, Iob, David, and many others were very rich and very good, but they that will be rich, saith the Apostle, that is, not they that are inriched by God, and inriched with grace, nor they that would be rich, if God would blesse them with just goods, but they that will have it so, whether God will or no; their resolution is to be rich, per fas & nefas, they will have it, though they hazard their soules for it; these do fall into temptations and snares, and, as our Saviour saith, shall hardly enter into the kingdome of heaven.

Mat.4.18.

Zeph.1.

1 Tim.6.9.

Mat.19.23.

Five reasons why riches make us miserable.

And there be five speciall reasons why riches and abundance of wealth do make men miserable; as

1 They grieve us. Mar.4.18.

1. Quia cruciant animum, because they grieve and vexe the hearts of their possessours; for they are like thornes, saith our Sauiour, which are very painfull in the piercing, but a great deale more painfull in the pulling out; so riches make us miserable while we gather them, but a great deal more miserable when we must part with them; and therefore Iob compares them unto poyson, that goeth sweetly down, but afterwards will gnaw and gripe the heart strings asunder.

Riches like poyson.

2. Quia

2. Quia corrumpunt mores, because they corrupt our manners, and make men worse than beasts; for they that will be rich, do fall into many temptations, and snares, and lusts; and Tertullian thinks that Iudas caried himselfe honestly, usq; ad loculorum officium, untill he was made his masters purse-bearer; for when he began to be a master of money, he grew to such a divelliſh humour of covetousnesse, that rather than he would omit his gaine, he would commit the greatest sinne, he would sell his Saviour, that he might fill his bag; a faire match, as S. Augustine well obserueth, Iudas sold his salvation, and the Pharisees bought their damnation; and all for a little money.

2 They corrupt us 1 Tim 6 9.

No merchant more foolish than a covetous wretch

3. Quia onerant conscientiam; because they load and burthen both our minds with cares, and our consciences with sins; for as a ship may be over-laden with gold, and so pressed with silver, untill it sinks into the bottome, so may a man be over-whelmed with wealth; and not uneasily neither; because wealth and riches, gold and silver, are of a mighty waight; and therefore the Prophet saith, Woe to him that ladeth himselfe with thicke clay.

3 The, load us.

Riches and wealth very waighty.

Hab. 2. 6.

4. Quia citò pereunt, because they will soone vanish and come to a naughty end; they will scarce prosper to the third generation; nay many times, he that gathereth them, scattereth them; for as fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery; that is, the Lord shall burne or pull downe to the ground all those pallaces that are built by unlawfull means; so all unjustly gotten goods are put into broken bags, that will not hold them, saith the Prophet.

4 They leave us.

Iob 15. 34.

De malè quæsitis vix gaudet tertius hæres.

5. Quia semper damnant, because they do ever destroy us, unlesse God doth guide us; not that riches are evill in themselves, being the good creatures of a good God; but because our corrupted natures are so bewitched by them, that as Ixion imbraced a cloud for Iuno, so do we many times preferre our gold before our God.

5 They destroy us.

And therefore, though poverty be an extreame misery, yet do not I know well, whether to be wealthy, or to be in want, is the worser or the greater misery; for though to be poore, is a miserable thing in this life, yet to be rich, is a great hinderance for us to eternall life: and therefore I find that the sonne of Iakeh prayed to God, that he would giue him neither poverty nor riches, but feed him with food convenient; because the meane state is the best state, in the judgement of the wisest men. And yet

Whether to be poore, or to be rich, is the more miserable.

Pro. 30. 8.

Thirdly, if thou beest meane, then art thou accounted base, and deemed unfit for the society, nay, for the service of many men; for now gentlemen, and not good men, are the men, that are most generally required, for the service of great men.

3 The miseries of the meane estate.

And if we mark it well, all the honest vocations and callings of men are in verity and truth, nothing els but services and slaveries; for every sea-faring man seems to be a galley-slave, every occupation seems a meere drudgerie, which the very beasts themselves do not suffer the like; for what a dangerous and painfull labour is it to work in a coale-pit and in repairing of sea-banks, where some are over-whelmed with waters, and others die surfeitted with cold, when the very night must give no rest unto their labours? And how many trades are noysome, unfitting for mans health? And as many base and ignoble, not well befitting the dignity of mans condition, as coblers, tinkers, chimney-sweepers, and the like, which do, like the criers in London streets, cry out to proclaime the miseries of these meane men.

The slaveries of poore tradesmen, and day-labourers.

Fourthly, If thou beest noble, then art thou ever in feare of disgrace, and must, perhaps in forraigne warres, with the imbruing of thy hands in others blood, maintaine the reputation of thine owne blood at home: this is the honour that they stand upon.

4 The miseries of the Nobility.

Fiftly, if thou beest one of the vulgar people, then art thou at others command, and ever in feare of thy Iudges anger.

5 The miseries of the common people.

Sixtly, If thou beest a Magistrate, then must thou labour and toyle for the good of others, and many times, disturbe thine own rest and peace; yea, disburse thine

6 The miseries of the Magistrates.

thine own state, and suffer many other hazards, to undergo and to procure rest and peace unto thy neighbours: and when in any difference betwixt men, thou hast done thy best, and dealt as justly as justice it selfe could do; yet, for his saying, that is righted, and perhaps but coldly too, that thou hast done well, thou art like to be sure, of him, that would have done the wrong, to be more wronged thy self, by his railing and proclaiming thee to be a corrupt and unrighteous Iudge.

7 The miseries of the Ministers.

Mat.10.16.

Ezek.18.

Seventhly, if thou beest a Minister, and a Teacher of Gods people, then shalt thou see, that this highest calling in Gods Church, is subject to the greatest miseries in the world; for they are sent as sheep into the midst of wolves, and they are incident to be punished by God, many times, for the sinnes of others, when they make them their own, because they reprove them not in their people; and to be scorned and contemned of men, when they do their best: and we see many of them, even of the best, to be left both unregarded and unrewarded. And what should I speak of more? Fathers, Children, Husbands, Wives, Masters, Servants, and what soever else; no estate is free from sin: how can they then be free from miseries? I may justly say,

It would be too tedious to inlarge the miseries of these in particular

The world's a bubble, and the life of man
So various, and so little, lesse than a span.
In his conception wretched, from the wombe
He's full of feares and troubles, so to th' tombe.
Nurst from his cradle, and brought up to yeares,
With many hazards, so with cares and feares.
Who then to fraile mortality will trust,
Limmes in the waters, or but writes in dust;
Yet whilst on earth we here do live oppresst,
It is uncertaine still, what life is best.
Courts are but superficiall schooles,
To deceive the ambitious, and to dandle fooles.
The rurall parts are turn'd into a den
Of subtill beasts, and of savage men.
And where's a city from fowle vice so free,
But may be term'd the worst of all the three?
Domesticke cares afflict the husbands bed,
And sorrow breakes his heart, or paines his head.
They that live single take it for a curse,
And they do thus and thus, or do things worse.
Some would have children: those that have them, mone,
And wish them better, or would wish them gone.
What is it then to have, or have no wife,
But single thraldome, or a double strife?
Our owne affection still at home to please,
Or to suppresse them, is a sore disease.
To crosse the seas to any forraigne soyle,
Is fruitlesse, full of perils, and of toyle.
Warres with the noise affright us: when they cease,
We fleece our neighbours, so wee're worse in peace.
What then remaines, but that we still should crie,
Not to be borne, or, being borne, to die?

3 How all creatures do heape up miseries upon man.

Thirdly, we know, that when God made man, he made him Lord of all his creatures, & so the trembling trees bowing, yeelded their fruits; the silver streams running, offered their service; the lions roaring after their prey, and all other creatures standing in their order, subjected themselves willingly unto man; but he, not contented to be a man above these, but desiring to be a god above all, was made a worme and no man, inferiour unto all; & then all, like Acteons dogs, seeing us metamorphosed from men to worse than beasts, began to rebell against us, & most furiously ously to pursue us; for the fire now began to consume us, as it did Sodom and Gomorrah; the ayre to infect us, as it did the Israelites, in the time of David; the water to drowne us, as it did the whole world in the daies of Noah; the earth to swallow us, as it did Corah, Dathan, and Abiram; and all other creatures to devoure us, as the beares did those children that mocked Elizeus; the Starres in their order, did fight against Sisera; and since we have sinned and rebelled against the Lord, there is no creature but hath quite cast away the created yoke of obedience, and hath rebelled against us: so that now hic labor hoc opus est; It is a taske too great for Hercules to bring them againe to the obedience of man.

Gen. 19. 24.
2 Sam. 24.
Gen. 7 23.
Num. 16. 32.
Iudg 5. 20.

For doe not the fowles of the aire take the first-fruits of our crops? doe not the vermine spoyle our substances? doe not the moaths abate the pride of our garments? and the flies taste of our best dishes? and doe not those house-creatures, the bee, the flie, the waspe and the spider, threaten to vexe and to destroy our persons? and if we come abroad, doe not the Beare, the Wolfe, and the Lion, the Snake, the Serpent and the Dragon, stand readie prest with open violence, to set upon us? and therfore we cannot use any creature with sufficient safetie & security of our lives: for though the horse wanteth hornes, yet he hath hooves, and though we find ease by him in our travells, yet we must take heed of his trippings; and, as man abuseth himselfe and all the creatures, so all of them doe conspire against him, and worke their owne malice upon him.

How the creatures rob us.

ô Deus, ô quantis vita est humana periclis
Subdita! quis tali vitet ab hoste necem?
Quoquò oculos vertam, ipse mea discrimina mille
Tensa animæ cerno, retia mille meæ.
Sive cibos capiam, seu dem mea membra sopori,
Seu quid agam, laqueos subdolus hostis habet;
ô Deus, ô quisquam fugiet tot retia? vano
Mens ea quæ fastu libera semper erit.

Furthermore, if we compare man with the bruit beasts, we shall see the beasts to excell man in every sence, in every thing; in length of yeares, in strength of body, in soundnesse of constitution, activitie, quickenesse, cleannesse, and the like; for as the distich saith,

How the bruit beasles do excell man in most things.

Nos aper auditu, linx visu, simea gustu,
Vultur odoratu, vincit aranea tactu.

In strength, the Lyon doth exceed him; in swiftnesse, the Hare will out-run him, and the Dolphin out-swimme him; in sweetnesse, the Nightingale will out-sing him; and in labour, the Oxe wil out-toyle him; and as they are superiour to man in these feates of activity; So for ingenuity, man cannot seeme to be more subtle to insnare them then they are cunning to prevent us; and you may assoone surprise and conquer a state, as prevaile against them in this kinde. And to descend a little into more particulars.

1. Though no creature seemes so much to loath uncleannesse as man, yet doe we scarce find any creature whose flesh is so apt to be tainted as his is; for whereas the shepheard onely with his tarre-boxe is able to preserve a whole flocke of sheepe, and the farrier with a drench to cure all the diseases of his beasts; yet, for all the sweet perfumes that we doe get, there cannot be a more noysome sent then that which doth proceed from the body of man.

1 Man sooner tainted then the beasts. Goodman of the fall of man.

2. Though man delights much in pleasures, and no pleasure without musicke; yet if we examine the Masters of this art, they will tell you, how the little birds doe sing the meane, the Goldfinch and Nightingale do joyne in the treble, the Blacke bird and Thrush doe beare the tenor, and the foure footed beasts doe bleate and blow out the base; and all of them do sing in their order, and keepe their due times and continued notes: onely man, as if he were a kinde of wilde and a fierce creature, hath no other tune but such harshnesse of voice and language as is most loathsome to the eares of God, untill his painefullnes in learning, and grace infused shall recompence his delight in hearing, and make the same acceptable both to God and man.

2 The creatures naturally better musitians then man.

3. Though

3 The irrationall creatures not so much addicted to lust as man.

3. Though other creatures be hotter in constitution, yet is not their inclination so much addicted to lust as mans is; and, as they are lesse inclined to lust, so doe most of them seeme more temperate in their diet, then most men, who doe often eate till they surfet, and drinke while they be drunken; when as the bruit beasts will be contented with that, which sufficeth nature. And to what end should I use many words, the beasts seeme to have lesse dangers, more pleasures, and a better condition then man, poore man, wretched man, whose sin hath made him, that was above all, to become inferiour unto all, worse then all, full of all sorrowes, full of miseries, whereof the Poet experimentally could say,

Ovid. de trist. l. 4. Mea, tot adversis cumulata, quot littus arenas, quotq; fretum pisces, ovaq; piscu habet, vere prius flores, sim numerabu aristas, poma per autumnum frigoribusq; nives.

As many shells on shore, as roses sweet,
As many sleepes as men by poppy seeds doe get,
As many beasts in wood, fish in the sea doe lie,
As many birds as in the ayrie heavens do flie;
So many griefes me passe, their number should I tell,
Icarian waters I must surely number well.

And thus you see, that from our first entrance into this wretched life, sinne laboureth still to kill us; and doth at all times, and by all meanes, vexe us, grieve us, weaken us; by passions, sorrowes, sicknesses, and such like, and will never leave us untill it layeth us downe in the dust: and therefore, that all these are the prodromi, the fore-runners and beginnings of death, or rather like so many little deaths, that doe bring us, unto our last and fatall death: For all these are the reward of sinne, and therefore branches of this death. And so you see what is meant by Death.

2 Of the large extent of death.

For the second point, having seene what is meant by death, that is, all the miseries that doe consume and waste our lives; we are now to consider how farre this death extendeth: And this the Apostle sheweth briefly, when he saith, Statutum est omnibus semel mori; It is appointed for all men once to die; and the very Heathens say as much; Lex universa jubet nasci & mori; It is an universall Law, and a debt that we owe, and must pay to Nature, that every one which is borne to life, should passe away by death. Plutarch in the life of Solon, tells a story, that on a time, the young men of Ionia, standing by the river side, where the Milesian fishermen had newly cast in their net, bought of them that present draught; and it happened, that when they drew their net unto the shore, they found therein, besides their fishes, a golden table, or trevet, as Suidas saith, which Helena had let fall in that place, as she sailed towards Troy; whereupon the buyers required the same as a part of their bargaine, but the sellers would part with nothing but their fishes; and the contention grew so hot, that it would have growne to I know not what, if both sides had not concluded to rest satisfied with the arbitration of Apollo; who determined it should be given to the wisest of all men; so they sent it to Thales Milesius, who was then counted the wisest man in all Greece, but he refusing the same caused it to be sent to Bias Prienaus, and he returned it to a third, the third unto the fourth, and so from one unto another untill at last it came to Solon; and he judging Apollo to be the wisest, caused it to be presented for an altar in the house of his Oracle. And truely as these men did in modestie with the golden trevet, so all men out of timiditie deale with pale-fac'd death; for when it knocks at the poore mans gate, he sends it to the rich, which can make it the best entertainement; the rich payeth deere to transport it to the Scholler, he with his learning perswades it to the Cittie; the Citizen will carrie it himselfe to the Court; the Courtier hath no desire to bid it welcome, and therfore he posteth it over unto his Page; he like a wild bucke runnes away, and leaves it to take hold of his Lord, the Lord had rather it should carry away his Lady, and the Lady would more willingly preferre her maide; and so of all the rest, all refuse it; none thinketh himselfe worthy of death; yet the passing bell is alwaies toling in our eares, and our friends from all corners are brought unto their graves; because man is as water spilt upon the ground, he must needs die, and cannot be gathered up againe; and as one wave of the sea drives on the other unto the shore, or

Heb. 9 27.

Seneca.

Plut. in vita Solonis.
Laertius in vita Thaletis.
τρίποδα.

τὸν σοφὸν πάντων πρῶτος; τοῦτο τρίποδ' ἀνέδω.
Laertius in vita Thaletis.

Festinat enim decurrere velox, — Flosculus angustæ miseræq; brevissima vitæ Portio. Juvenal. Satyr. 9.

or one graine of ſand runs after the other, untill the whole glaſſe be empty, even ſo one man poſteth after another unto the grave, and none can ſtay them: And therfore when it was told Anaxagoras, that all his ſons were dead, he anſwered, Sciebam me genuiſſe mortales; I knew that I had begotten mortall creatures; for as, nullis amor eſt medicabilis herbis, love cannot be procured by any art, ſo, nihil eſt moderabile morte, there is nothing in the world that can moderate the rage, or preſerve us from the fatall ſtroke of death: Non Torquate genus, non te facundia, non te reſtituet pietas, ſaith Horace unto his friend Torquatus: * And we ſee the faith of Abraham, the ſtrength of Sampſon, the wiſedome of Salomon, the riches of Cræſus, and the kingdomes of Alexander could not preſerve them from death.

Polydor Virgil writeth, that King Canutus, ſeeing the ſea beginning to flow, ſaid, I command thee not to touch my feet; but his command was bootleſſe, for he had ſcarce ended his Edict, but the ſurging waves daſhed at his teeth; So we may outbrave death in words, but we may be ſure, that as the ſea, ſo death antiquum obtinebit, will keep his old wont; Yea, though we could hinder the courſe of the ſea, for meanes have been found to tame the fierceſt beaſts, to break the hardeſt marble, to mollifie the impenetrable Adamant, and to deale with the ſeas as Xerxes did with the waters of Helleſpont, or Cæſar with all the Rivers of Germany; yet is there no meanes in the world to eſcape the hands of death: and therfore S. Auguſtine ſaith, Reſiſtitur ignibus, undis, ferro, reſiſtitur regibus, imperijs, venit una mors, & quis ei reſiſtit? Fire, Waters, Swords, Kings, & kingdoms were reſiſted, but who hath ever withſtood the ſtroake of death; Quia nec miſeretur inopum, nec reveretur divites; Becauſe (as S. Bernard ſaith) it neither pittieth the poore, nor regardeth the rich; but Nereus the faire, Thirſites the foule, Cræſus the rich, Irus the poore, Solym the cruell, Solyman the magnificent, Diomedes the Prince, and Dametas the Peaſant, muſt all fall downe at deaths feet; becauſe that no teares, no prayers, no threatnings, no intreatings, will ſerve the turne, to turne away the face of death: So ſtiffe, ſo deafe, ſo inexorable is death.

Quicquid luminibus vides,
Pertingis manibus, naribus olfacis,
Mors eſt; nil laqueo vacat;
Sic viſum eſt ſuperis, jura negantibus
Fato ſolvere; non licet
Aram profugio ſupplicibus dari.

For every man is but a congealed ice, ſoon diſſolved, compacted duſt, by death eaſily diſperſed; & as we begin ſo ſhall we end in the earth, yea though ſome ſpin out their daies to a greater length then others, yet at length their threed muſt be cut, & they muſt follow that track, ſo much troden and beaten by others before them.

And therefore the Egyptians in their Hierogliphickes painted death like a goddeſſe, holding a ſickle in her hand, with this motto or inſcription, Nemini parco, I ſpare no man: And becauſe they found her ſo hard-hearted, ſo implacable, and ſo inexorable, that nothing could appeaſe her wrath, when ſhe did meane to cut us downe, but that ſhe took the Husband from the boſome of his loving wife, & the Parents from the poore helpeleſſe Infants; and ſo fulfilling her owne will, and carefull for none elſe: therfore they built her no temples, they offered no ſacrifice, they celebrated no rites unto her; but ſeeing ſhe uſed all alike, Conſtantinus imperator, & famulus meus; making no difference betwixt Agamemnõ & Thirſites; therfore all uſed her alike, & ſtood all upon their guards to defend themſelves, ſo well, & ſo long as they might, againſt all her darts; though they knew that in the end, ſhe would overcome them all; becauſe they had all ſinned; & the reward of ſin is death. O conſider this, al ye that forget God; al ye that neglect God, al whoſoever, Kings, Lords, & great men; old & yong, rich & poore, one with another; for though you live like gods; & none dare ſay, why do you ſo? yet you ſhall die like men, and if you fearleſly commit the ſin; I dare boldly ſay, that you ſhal be ſure moſt fearefully, to indure the puniſhments of ſin; for, as you ſee death ſpareth none, but cutteth down, as well the Cedars of Lebanon and the Oakes of Baſhan, as the Shrubs of Cades; So, much leſſe will God ſpare any man that ſinneth.

Lantius l. 2. c. 3.

Horatius lib. 4.

* Æqua lege neceſſitas, urbes, Sceptra, caſas imperio premit. Meus charus amicus M. Iob. Poyndext.

How unreſiſtible is death.

Aug. Pſal. 121.

Bernda conn. cler.

Meus ſimiliaris amicus M. Johan. Poyndexter.

How the Egyptians expreſſed death to be the ſole enemy of all men.

Eadem ſint σκελετον, hoc eſt cadaver hominis exiccatum vixq; oſſibus hærens circum ſerebant in convivijs & ſingulis ex ordine intuendum oſtendabãt. Plut. in convivio 7. ſap.

Pſal. 50. 22.

Æquo pede pulſat pauperum tabernas, regumque turres. Horatius.

CHAP. V.

How Death worketh variably in divers respects, and the divers causes thereof.

3 Of the variable working of death

Aëra nil vacuum polo quæ subsunt, varia Styx patet orbita; cunctum faucibus imminet umbris atra palus, parcere nescia; non una facies ruunt morbi, sæva cohors, neq; sibi simplici contenta iaculo, neq; dantes uni iugis membra doloribus. Meus amicus. Iob. Poyndext.

FOr the third point, we must consider, that although Death passeth over all, yet that it worketh not upon all alike: but it worketh variably, and that, (as we find it) in foure speciall respects.

1. Of the manner. 3. Of the place.
2. Of the time. 4. Of the effects, or, consequents of Death.

For the first, we find that there be more waies of death, then there be meanes to preserve our life; for as the Poet saith,

Mille modis lethi miseros mors una fatigat.

Though there is but one way for all men to come into the world, yet there are 1000. waies, for every man to goe out of the world: And so we find, some have perished with sudden death, as Ananias and Saphira; some with Gluttony, as Domitius Afer; others with drunkennesse, as Attila King of the Hunnes; some by fire from Heaven, as the Sodomites, the two fifties that were sent to fetch Elias, and Anastatius the Emperour, an Eutychian Hereticke; others by waters, as Marcus Marcellus, King Pharaoh, and all his hoast, and all the old wicked world, excepting those eight persons that were saved in Noahs Arke; Some with hunger, as Cleanthes; others with thirst, as Thales Milesius; some were swallowed up quicke to Hell, as Corah, Dathan, and Abiram; others were overwhelmed with their owne houses, like Iobs children, Samson, and the Philistines, with those 18. persons whose bodies were destroyed by the sudden fall of that ruinous tower in Siloam; others were stoned to death, as Achan; others hanged with Haman; others were slaine by their friends, as Abner; others were smitten by Angels as Herod; and others by earthquakes were stricken dead, as Ephrasius Bishop of Antioch: Some were stifled with smoake, as Catulus; others died with a fall, as Nestorius; some were taken in their lascivious dalliances, as Cornelius Gallus; others with overwatchings, as M. Attilius; some with poyson, as Phocion; others choked with flies, as Pope Adrian; some at the disburdening of nature, as that wicked Arrius; others torne in pieces by wild beasts, as Heraclius, Lucan, and Acteon by doggs; Hypolitus by wilde Horses; Licus the Emperour, and the disobedient Prophet, by Lyons; Ancæus King of Samos by Bores; the scoffing boyes of Bethell, that abused the good Propher, by Beares; and Hatto Bishop of Mentz by Rats; and so som die with joy, as Chylo the Lacedemonian, and Diagoras the Rhodian; who seeing his three sons crowned Champions in one day, he rejoyced so much, that he died for joy in the very place; More die with griefe; Quia spiritus tristis exiccat ossa; Because a broken spirit drieth the bones; and a heavie heart doth hasten to death: and therefore the Prophet David, when he found himselfe so melancholicke and discontented, did rouze up his heart and spirits, saying, Why art thou so heavy, O my soule? and why art thou so disquieted within me? yet put thy trust in the Lord, for he is thy helper and defender; and so should we doe, when either cares, or crosses, doe dismay us: But most men die with sicknesses and diseases, Feavers, Fluxes, Gouts, Plagues, and 1000. more, they being so many, that neither Galenus nor Hypocrates, nor all the best Physitians in the world can number them, saith Bosquierus; the generations of men here on earth, being as Homer saith, ὁιπερ φύλλων, γενεὴ τοίηδε καὶ ἀνδρῶν.

Tale, quale est foliorum; Like unto the leaves of a tree, whereof some do perish, and others spring in their places: They spring, they flourish, they waxe old, and soone wither away; Et tum quoque cum crescimus, vita decrescit, and our life then decreaseth, as our yeare increaseth.

1 In respect of the manner
How death hath divers waies to shorten life.
Pro. 17. 22.
Acts 5. 10.
Gen. 19. 24.
Exod. 24. 28.
Gen. 7. 21.
2 Pet. 2. 5.
Num. 16. 32.
Iob 1. 19.
Iudg. 16. 30.
Luk. 13. 4.
Numb. 15. 35.
Hest. 7. 10.
2 Sam. 2. 27.
Acts 12. 23.

2 King. 2 24.

Turpe pecus mutilum, turpis sine gramine campus, & sine fronde frutex, & sine crine caput. Ovid. l. 2.
Yet is it a great offence to God to mock our brethren for the defects of nature.

Bosquier. de finibus bonorum & mal. pag. 31. & 32.

Seneca l. 3. ep. 24.

Ut rosa manè viget, & serò mox vespere languet,
Sic modo qui fuimus, cras levis umbra sumus:

That is, in the Prophets Phrase, We bring our yeares to an end as a tale that is told.

For the second, that is, the time when death doth attach us; S. Augustine saith, Nullus putat se citò moriturum, sed puer putat se adjuventutem perventurum, juvenis ad virilem, vir ad senectam, senex ad ætatem decrepitam, & cum in eo est, non putat eo anno se moriturum; None thinks he shall shortly die; but the child, that is a bud, presumes he shall live to blossome; the youth questions not the lease of his life, till he comes to the flower of his age; the old man hopes he shall renew his yeares, as doth the eagle, and when he is bedrid, and past sight, he thinks he may see one new yeare more; yet we see all men encompassed with mortality, and at some times or other all die; we see some are taken young, and some are left untill they be very old; some tast of death before they do see the light; when their mothers wombs are the tombs for their buriall; some die in their cradles, as the babes of Bethlehem; and some live so long, that they are weary of life: and somtimes the good are soonest taken, as Enoch; somtimes the bad, as Onan; Et vocantur ante tempus boni, ne diutius vexarentur à noxijs; and the good are often taken away, that they should be neither vexed nor corrupted, by the wicked; & the wicked are somtimes take away, that they should not persecute the godly any longer, and that they might be an example of Gods vengeance, upon all such as feare not God. And somtimes death fore-warneth us, as it did Ezechias, by sending his messengers to bid us, to set our houses in order, that we may be prepared for death, as age, sicknesses, and such like; and somtimes it preventeth us, and takes us afore we are aware of it, as it did young Onan, and old Ely, who were both suddenly met by death, when death was looked for by neither of them.

a In respect of the time. Death taketh men of all ages. Forma, genus, mores, sapientia, vis & honores, Non retinent hominem, quin redat in cinerem.

Mixta senum ac iuvenum densantur funera. Ideò τελ& ὀεργν Vulgò. Gen. 1. 24. Gen. 33.

For the third, that is, the place where death will meet us; we know death is not very scrupulous, be it faire or fowle, wide or narrow, private or publike, in the field or in the Church; or whereseever; where he meets us, there he will arrest us; Poet Eupulus and his wife, both a bed, Urias in the field, and Ioab at the hornes of the altar:

Quocunq; ingrederis, sequitur mors corporis umbra:

And all this taking of us, in any Manner, at any Time, and in any Place, is to teach us, to be alwaies ready, and to looke for death, at all times, and in all places.

Omnem crede diem tibi diluxisse supremum, Saith the Poet.

Or, as another saith,

Discè mori, sursum, quisquis sapis, erige vultus
In patriam, terras despice, discè mori.

3 In respect of the place. Death smiteth in every place. Romanæ cupiens dapis boleto tacitum condit aculeum calatiù bibitur scyphu, & largo nimium blanda subest mero. That we should be alwaies ready for death.

Henric. Decimator

For seeing thou knowest neither the time nor the place, where death meanes to arrest thee; it is thy chiefest wisdome to be ready for death at all times, and to wait for the same in every place.

For the fourth, that is, the effects of death, we must note, that they are very different, both about the time of the dissolution, and after the time of the separation of the body and soule; for first, at the time of their dissolution, bona mors justi, right deare in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints; and this is the thing they longed for, to be loosed from the bonds of sin, and to be with their Saviour Christ in happinesse; to be with him, which was dead, and is alive, and liveth for evermore: And therfore to these men

——Mors ultima pœna est,
Nec metuenda viris.——

4 In respect of the effects. Death is a comfortable thing to the godly. Psal. 116. 15. Rev. 2. 8.

Lucan. l. 8. Nec mihi mors gravis est posituro morte labores; Mors mihi merces erit.

Death is the ending of their paine, and the beginning of their pleasure; nay more, as Prudentius saith,

Tormenta, carcer, ungulæ,
Stridensq; flammis lamina,
Atq; ipsa pœnarum ultima
Mors, Christianis ludus est,

All the bitternesse of the bittrest death, is joy and sweetnes unto them; for that in death they see their life, they behold the Angels pitching their tents roūd about them, & ready to receive their souls to glory,

Prudent. in hymno de Vincent.

before their bodies can be laid in their graves: and therfore well might Salomon say, that the godly man hath hope in his death; for he knoweth not, what to feare, because he knoweth, in whom he believed.

Prov. 14. 32.

The death of the wicked is most terrible unto them.

But, mors peccatorum pessima, the death of the wicked is most feareſull; and therefore the very remembrance of it is most bitter unto them; for now, before it shuts the eyes of their bodies, it will open the eyes of their consciences; and they shall see that they must part from all the things that they have gathered; but that not one of those sins will part from them, which they have committed; and lest they should forget them, Satan will now open his booke, and set all their sins before their eyes; and then he will bestirre himselfe, because he knoweth his harvest is great, and his time is but short: and therefore he will tell them, that if they would have entred into life, they should have kept the commandements, as our Saviour Christ himselfe doth testifie; he will alledge against them, that not the hearers, but the doers of the Law, shall be justified; and he will inferre, that if the just shall scarce be saved, it is intolerable for them being wicked men to appeare; and what the Preachers of God now cannot beat into the thoughts of these careleſſe men, this wicked and damned spirit will then irremoveably settle in their deepest considerations; viz. that neither adulterers, nor fornicators, nor drunkards, nor swearers, nor usurers, nor extortioners, nor lyers, nor envious men, nor haters of men, nor any such like, shall inherit the kingdome of God, and of Christ.

Mat. 19. 17.

Rom 2. 13.

1 Pet. 4. 18.

How Satan discourageth the wicked at their death.

1 Cor. 6. 9, 10.

O then, what agonies and perplexities will invade, and teare the wofull hearts of wicked men? In that day, saith the Lord, I will cause the Sunne to go downe at noone, and I will darken the earth in the cleare day; I will turne their feasts into mournings, and their songs into lamentations; that is, they shall be sure then to have the greatest griefe and bitterest vexation, when they have the greatest need of comfort and consolation; for I will make all those things, that were wont, most sweetly to delight them, now most of all to torment them; the pleasure of sin shall now turne to be as bitter as Gall; and now they shall see that they must die, and live they can no longer; and that Satan, whom they would not forsake all their life time, will not forsake them now at their death time; but he will be still sounding in their ears, Me have you served, & from me you must expect your wages.

Amos 8. 9, 10.

We read the divell assailed the best Saints, S. Martin, S. Bernard, Eusebius, Ignatius and many others, good and godly men; and if these things be done in a greene tree, what shall be done in a withered, saith our Saviour? If he be so busie about the Saints, which have the Angels of God round about them to preserve them; what shall he do to sinners, who have nothing but divels round about them to confound them? This is the state of wicked men at their dying day: and therefore, mors peccatorum pessima, of all terrible things, the death of sinfull men is the most terrible.

Luke 23. 31.

1 Pet. 4. 17.
Psal. 91. 11.

How death equalizeth the bodies of all men.

2. After the separation of the body and soul, then death indeed makes different effects; for though it makes the bodies of all alike; their dust is so mingled, and their bones are so like one another, that we know not Irus from Crœsus; as Diogenes, being demaunded by Alexander, what he sought for among the tombes, said, he sought for his father Philips bones, but among so many dead mens sculs, he knew not which they were; yet in respect of the soules, it worketh very different consequents; for it sends the good souls into Abrahams bosome, & the wicked souls to hell, to be tormented in fire, for evermore. Now, that the efficient cause of death which is sin, should be the same in al men; & that the fruits & effects, or consequents of death, should be so different in the godly from all other men, we find a triple

How death sendeth the soules of the good to heaven, and of the wicked to hell.

A threefold reason of the subsequent different effects of death.

Reason. The { 1. Is, the practise of a godly life. 2. Is, the meditation of our own death. 3. Is, the application of the death of Christ. } And

These things (as Samson said in his riddle) out of the eater bring meat, and out of the strong suck sweetnes; for these things do translate the sting and curse of death into a sweet and a blessed life.

Iudg. 14. 14.
1 Reason.

Of the 1. S. Augustine saith, mala mors putanda non est, quam bona vita præcessit;

Aug de civit. Dei. l. 1 c. 21.

In

It is impossible that his death should be ill, whose whole life hath been alwaies good; Quia nunquam Deus deserit hominem, quousq; homo deserat Deum; because God will never forsake that man at his death, which hath truly served God throughout all his life: and therefore Seneca saith, Ante senectutem curavi ut benè viverem, ut in senectute bene morerer; while I was young, all my care was, to live well, that when I were old, I might die well: and so let us do; if we would die well, let us live well; let us learne artem vivendi, the art to live the life of the righteous; and we shall be sure to die the death of the righteous; for seeing the wages of sinne is death, it must needs be, that the lesser and the fewer our sins be, the better our death will be; but if we live like Balaam, which loved the gaine and wages of unrighteousnesse, it is impossible that we should die the death of Israel; for God beheld and saw that there was no iniquity in Iacob, nor any perverseness in Israel: and therefore the Lord his God was with him.

That to live well is a speciall means to make us die well.

Senec. in quad. Epist.

Num. 23. 21.

And therefore we should not be solicitous for the shortnesse of our lives, but rather make that an inducement to live well, to walke with God, and to make our election sure, while it is called to day; because the benefit of life is not in the length of our dayes, but in the right use of that time, which we have to live; as Seneca saith: and therefore (saith he) dic dormituro, potes non expergisci, dic experrecto, potes non dormire amplius; when thou goest to bed, say to thy selfe, perhaps I shall never awake againe; when thou risest from thy bed, say, perhaps I shall never sleepe more; when thou goest out, say, perhaps I shall never returne home alive, and when thou art at home, say, I know not whether I shall ever go out againe; and let this add wings to thy desires, to bestow thy time well, and to remember thy Creatour in the dayes of thy youth; for as that was an abomination to the Lord, to bring any offering with a blemish, so is that man hatefull to God, who devotes his youth unto the divell, and the dregs of his dotage unto the Lord, as S. Augustine saith.

Disce non esse positum bonum vitæ in spatio ejus, sed in usu & posse fieri ut qui diu vixit, parum vixerit. Sin. Ep. 50. l. 6.

Maledictus omnis qui fragrantissimum vernantis ætatis florem diabolo, fœtidas vero decrepitæ senectutis fœces Deo consecrat. August.

Of the second, Bosquierus saith, that, à culpa natæ sunt duæ filiæ, Tristitia & Mors; & hæ duæ filiæ hanc pessimam matrem destruunt; Sin brought forth two goodly damosels, Sorrow and Death; and these two daughters, like the brood of vipers, do eat through the bowels, and destroy that wicked mother; For 2 Reason. Godly sorrow for sin, and the meditation of our death, is the death of sin.

1 Daughter of sin. Mat. 3. 7, 8.

First, Pœnitudine commissa delentur, by repentance we wash away the sinnes that are past: and therefore John Baptist saith, O generation of vipers, if you would kill your cruell wicked mother, that is, sinne, bring forth fruits meet for repentance; for that is the only way for you to escape death, and to flee from the wrath to come. And 2 Daughter of sin. Aug. l. 1. cont. Man.

Secondly, Meditatione mortis futura caventur, by the frequent meditation of death, we come more and more to detest and to beware of sin; for so S. Augustine saith, that, nihil sic revocat hominem à peccato, quam frequens meditatio mortis; Nothing is so powerfull to make a man hate sin, as continually to consider of this bitter fruit and reward of sin, which is death: and Seneca, before him, saith the same thing: and therefore he adviseth every man, efficere mortem sibi familiarem, to make death his companion, and as his wife, that should ever lie in his bosome; that by the continuall sight of death, he might be ever kept to abstaine from sin; for the covetous man, might be the easier drawne to contemne the trash and trumperies of this vaine and transitory world, if he did believe that he should presently die; for so prophane Esau saith, Loe, I die, and what good will my birth-right do unto me? So the proud man would let fall his Peacocks feathers, if he could think that he is but dust and ashes, and that when he dieth, he shall inherit wormes, as the wise man saith:

Meditation of our death, what good it doth. Sen. Ep. 25.

Facile contemnit omnia, qui credit se citò moriturum. Hieron in Ep. ad Paulin.

Eccles. 10.

Omnia Cæsar habet, sed gloria Cæsaris esse
Desinit, & tumulus vix erit octo pedum.

Incert. autor.

And that if he triumphed in his life, like Cæsar, to be the sole Monarch of the world; yet would his glory soone faile when death should lock him up in his coffin: and so of all other sins, the frequent meditation of death, is the only preservative against them; for, as one truly saith of himselfe,

Bern in Carm.

Quum recordor quod sum cinis, / Et quam citò venit finis; / Sine fine pertimesco, / Et ut cinis refrigesco.

When I think I am but dust, / And how soon to earth I must, / Then incessantly I shake, / And as dust it doth me make.

So questionlesse, if we did continually think of death, and fix that fearfull day of Gods just judgement before our eyes; it would be a marvellous great meanes, to deterre us from all sins.

Bosq p.12 de finibus bonorum.

The frequent meditation of death is a great meanes to preserve us from the feare of death.

And as the meditation of death doth prevent sin; so it sweeteneth death, and makes it farre the lesse terrible unto us: for if our eyes be dead, and weaned from beholding vanities; our eares, from hearing the Syrens songs of sinfull pleasure; and our hearts especially, from the love of vaine and worldly things; then certainly they will not, (being thus mortified, and accustomed with this death to sin) be any whit afraid of the death of the body; which is the reward of sinne; but as a horse that is to run a race, having often walked his way before, is the more fearlesse to go on, when he comes at the day of triall; so the man that is acquainted with the wayes of death, through the daily meditation of death, is not afraid to die when he seeth the day of his dissolution: Palladius reports it, that an Eremite, being at the point to die, his schollers and friends asked him, if death did not seem terrible unto him; he smilingly answered, that death was no stranger, but a most familiar acquaintance to him; it was his manuall, and his vade mecum, his table-book, which he alwaies caried about him: and therefore dying, he did but now repeat that his old lesson, which he had been long in learning: O that it were so with every one of us, that throughout all our life, we would learne to die; that having made death present with us before it comes, it may never prove terrible unto us when it comes!

The Eremites godly practice.

3 Reason. The application of Christs death is the only cause that maketh us happy after death Hos.13.14. Death of Christ the only antidote against death.

Of the third, the divine verity saith, that the chiefest cause, the onely cause indeed of this different effect of death, is the application of the death of Christ; for it is he that saith, O death I will be thy death, O grave I will be thy destruction: and therefore, as when Alexander overthrew the wals of Thebes, and Phryne, a harlot, promised to build them up againe, if she might ingrave upon them this inscription, Ἀλέξανδρος μὲν κατέσκαψεν ἀνέστησε δὲ Φρύνη; Alexander battered down this wall, but Phryne built it up againe; so we may truly say, that Eve threw downe those muddy wals of ours, but Christ doth raise them up; for though the wages of sin is death, yet the grace of God brings eternall life, through Iesus Christ our Lord.

Rom.6.23.

The manner how Christ delivereth us. Ioh 8.28. & c.12.32.

And the manner how he doth deliver us, and metamorphose death, to become life unto us; he himselfe doth shew, when he saith, If I be lift up, I will draw up all unto my selfe: that is, if I die, I will destroy the power of death; for so the Apostle saith, That forasmuch as the children were partakers of flesh and bloud, he himself likewise took part of the same; that through death, he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the divell, and deliver them that through the feare of death, were all their life time subject unto bondage: and therefore, as Eleazar, by his owne death, did put the great Elephant to death, and Sampson, by pulling down the house, upon his own head, did put to death all the Philistims; so Christ, by his own death, did put the divels, and all the powers of darknesse, unto death: and therefore Origen saith, that upon the crosse of Christ, two were crucified; that is, Christ and the divell, but after a diverse manner: for Christ was crucified visibly, and most willingly; for he layed downe his life himselfe; but the divell was crucified invisibly, and most unwillingly; for this strong man armed, was faine to be bound, before Christ could spoile his house.

Heb.2.14,15.

1 Machab.6.46. Iudg.16.30.

Origen.Hom.8.in Iohan.

Ioh.10.18.

Mat.12.29.

And the Lord, speaking of his enemies, and saying, that he would be unto them as a Lion, and would observe them as a Libbard in the way of Ashur; doth foreshew unto us, both the destruction, and the maner of the destruction of these our spirituall enemies; for in being like a Lion, he sheweth their destruction; and in being like a Libbard, he sheweth the manner, how he would destroy them; for it is observed of the Libbard, that he useth this policy to kill those Apes that do molest him; first, he lieth down as dead, and suffereth the Apes to mock him, and trample upon him, and

Hos.13.7.

The particular manner how Christ by death overcame death, shewed in the Libbard.

and to insult over him, as much as they will; but when he perceiveth them to bee wearied, with leaping and skipping upon him; he revives himselfe on a sudden, and with his clawes and teeth hee teareth them all to pieces; even so, our Saviour Christ suffered the divell, and death, and all the wicked Iewes, like apes to mocke him, to tread him, and trample him under feete; to crucifie him, to bury him, to seale up his grave, and to have armed Souldiers to watch him, that hee should not rise any more; and it may be to knocke him on the head againe, if he sought to revive; and so to doe what they list unto him; but when he saw they had done their worst, and that they could do no more, then He waked as a giant out of sleepe, and smote all his enemies upon the cheeke bone, and brought them unto perpetuall shame; and as the Apostle saith, he spoyled principalities and powers, and led away captivity captive, and received gifts for men. Pſal. 78. 66, 67. Col. 2. 15. Ephes. 4. 8.

And therefore, as many as lay hold upon this death of Christ, they need not feare their owne death; for they may say with the Phenix;

Moritur, me moriente, senectus:

Sin and misery dieth in us, but we doe still live with Christ: And therefore Saint Cyprian saith, that, ejus est timere mortem, qui ad Christum nolit ire; it is enough for them to feare death, which will not beleeve in Christ his death; for hee that beleeveth in him shall never die; but they that will not beleeve in him, may well feare and tremble at the remembrance of this death; because after death comes judgment; and then shall they feele another death, which is eternal death; for the reward of sinne is death, that is indeed, eternall death in hell, where their worme dieth not, and their fire is not quenched. Cyprian de mortalitate. Iohn 11. 26. Mark 9. 44.

Chap. VI.

How sinne brings eternall death both of Body and Soule.

THirdly, Touching eternall death, we must understand, that this is 1 a separation of man from God, which is pœna damni, the losse of eternall happinesse; a losse farre exceeding the losse of all the world, and the most deplorable thing that is in hell; for this irrevocable losse of the beatificall presence of God, the eternall privation of Gods sight, shall be so uncomfortable to them, that it shall more grieve their hearts and wound their afflicted soules then all the torments of their burned bodies; and 2 an alligation or chaining of a damned soule in a tormented body; non vivendi sed dolendi causa; not to give any the least comfort of life or joy, but to give the true sence and feeling of eternall death and sorrowes unto it, which is pœna sensus, the paine of feeling, and suffering the greatest paines that can be conceived; for when the wicked are called by God, to be adjudged for sin, they shall be condemned by Christ, and then caried by the divels, into everlasting torments, into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone for evermore; and there their musicke shall be horrors and howlings; their meate shall be balls of fire, and their drinke shall be fountaines of teares; alwaies distilling downe from their eyes; and yet never procuring them any ease: there, their torments shall be intollerable, their time endlesse, and their companions divels; for so Saint Augustine saith, that, in inferno nec tortores deficiant, nec miseri torti moriantur. sed per milia milia annorum cruciandi, nec tamen in secula liberandi; in hell neither the cruell tormenters shall be wanting, nor the miserably tormented shall be eased; but for thousand thousands of yeares they are to be plagued, and never thence to be delivered; and as Isidorus saith, Ibi erit semper velle, quod nunquam erit, & semper nolle, quod nunquam non erit, there shall be a will never satisfied, and a nille never gratified; never injoying the ease they would; and ever suffering the paines they would not: And if we dive into the depth of that dolefull tragedie of miserable Dives, we shall see this truth fully confirmed;

3 Of the eternall death.

What eternall death is.

Of the intollerable paines of hell.

Aug. ser. 55 de tempore.

Isidorus de summo bono.

How the least comfort shall be denied unto the damned.

for that here in hell, as the Scripture sheweth, judgement shall be without mercy, and that every one shall receive his punishment, in weight and measure, according to the measure of their sinnes; so we finde it true in him, who, as he denied the crumbes of bread to poore Lazarus, to abate his hunger; so is he now denied the least drop of water, to coole his burning tongue, and the least dramme of mercy, to refresh his poore distressed soule; quis talia fando sustineat a lachrymis? Who can indure to dwell in devouring flames? and yet behold, this is the reward of sin; for the wages of sin is death.

Three things considered.

And that you may the better see, the greatnesse of this payment, and the severity of this punishment of sinne; I beseech you to consider these threefold circumstances.

1. The persons tormented.
2. The place where they are punished.
3. The time of their continuance.

1 The persons punished.

1. The persons are all the wicked; not a good man amongst them, for whose sake they might hope for some comfort; and as the more faggots will make the greater fire, so the more they be in number the greater will be their labour, the lesser will be their comfort, the heavier will be their punishment, and the more hideous will be their howling one to another; And as they can have no consolation from without, when not onely men and Angels shall denie them the least drop of comfort, but shall praise God for his judgements, and the Lord himselfe shall laugh at their destruction; so they can have not the least graine of ease from within; when neither any member of their body, nor any faculty of their soule can be free from paine and griefe; and therefore, if the pangs and fits of the stone or cholick be most terrible and pitifull; ô then how insupportable are the miseries of those poore soules, whose gnawing wormes never die, and whose wretched bodies ever burne, and are tortured upon the racke of Gods displeasure, that is never to be appeased?

Revel 19.1, 2. Proverb.1.26.

Body and soule punished.

2 The place where the wicked shall be punished, the center of the earth.

2. The place where they are to be punished, is said to be a bottomelesse pit, and a place of utter darknesse where there is neither light nor comfort; and most men thinke this place to be the heart or center of the earth.

1 Reason.

1. Because this place is most darke, the furthest off, and most deprived of the light of all celestiall bodies. And

Ob. If you say, there is fire in hell, therefore light.

Sol. I answer, that mirabilis Deus in operibus suis, God is wonderfull in all his workes; and therefore as the bush burned and consumed not, and the fire of Nebuchadnezzars furnace had not so much heat as would singe the childrens garments, so the fire of hell shall be deprived of his light, that it may increase the punishment, and decrease the comfort of the damned.

Exod.3.2. Dan.3.94.

2 Reason.

2. Because it is a place diametrically opposed to heaven, and the Scripture speaketh in that phrase, as cannot literally be understood of any other place; as where the divell, in the likenes of Samuel, is said to have come up from the earth: and the Prophet David saith, if I climbe up to heaven thou art there, and if I go downe to hell, thou art there also: and our Saviour saith, thou Capernaum, that art lifted up to heaven, shalt be throwne downe to hell; and Saint Paul saith that at the name of Iesus al knees should bow both of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; by which things, under the earth, we can understand none other, but the damned soules and spirits, which have already seene the majesty and felt the power of Iesus Christ.

1 Sam.28.13. Psal.139.8. Mat.11.23.

What is understood by things under the earth.

And this adds unto the afflictions of the wicked, that they shall be tormented in such a dungeon; a place so strait, where they shall have no elbow-roome; and a place so darke, where there is no light, but the blacknesse of darknesse and the shadow of death.

3 The time of continuance that the wicked shall remaine in hell. Vide Esay 66.24. Mat.25.41.& Chap.3.12.

3. The time of their continuance in these flames, in this darkenesse, adds the greatest weight unto their torments; for though their punishments were never so great and the place never so bad, the one so great and the other so bad, as the greatnesse greatneſſe of Gods power could any waies make it, yet if they might hope for any end, they might conceive ſome hope of comfort: but when they ſhall conſider, that if there were ſo many worlds as there be ſtarres in the heavens, and in every world ſo many trees as there be drops of raine, and on every tree ſo many boughs as there be pile graſſe upon the earth, and upon every bough ſo many leaves, as there be ſands by the ſea-ſhore, and every graine of ſand ſhould paſſe for a million of yeeres, and that after all theſe multitude of yeeres and unlimited times, beyond all the rules of Arithmetique, they are anew to begin their endleſſe paines, and as farre from their end, as when they firſt began; ô this is able, if it were poſſible, to turne their hearts with Niob's, into ſtones, and to reduce their ſoules to nothing; but it cannot be; becauſe the wrath of God abideth upon them, yea abideth upon them for ever and ever; and as S. Bernard ſaith, nec qui torquet aliquando fatigatur, nec qui torquetur aliquando moritur; they ſhall burne but not diminiſh, they ſhall be buried in theſe flames but not conſumed, they ſhall ſeeke death but ſhall not finde it, they ſhall deſire it, but it ſhall flie from them; ſo they ſhall injoy eternity, like the Saints, but not the Saints eternity; for their eternity ſhall begin in horror, proceed in confuſion, and continue moſt lamentable and wofull for ever and ever; turning all things to them into its owne nature; and making all things where the damned ſoules be to be eternall; for the fire is eternall, when the breath of the Lord, like a river of brimſtone ſhall ſtill kindle it, that it can never goe out day nor night, but the ſmoake thereof like the ſtench of Sodome ſhall aſcend for ever; the worme is eternall, when the conſciences of the damned ſhall be everlaſtingly tormented with the ſight and ſence of all their ſins; the priſon wherein they are incloſed is eternall, when no pikes can pierce theſe walls, no power can overthrow them, no time can ruine them, no ranſome can deliver them; becauſe this laſt ſentence of the Iudge ſhall for ever ſtand unreverſed; and ſo you ſee the unhappy ſtate and condition of the damned in the other world, and how the higheſt linke in all this chaine of their intollerable ſorrowes, wherewith they are invironed, is the miſerable perpetuity of their torments, when their reſtleſſe thoughts ſhall continually conſider, they are but to begin where they thought to end.

Ovidius Metamor. l. 6. p. 113. intra quod viſcera Saxum eſt. Bernardus meditat cap. 3.

All things ſhall be eternall to the damned.

1 Fire.

2 Worme.

3 Priſon.

And all things els

Adeſſe intelerabile, abeſſe impoſſibile.

O then, (beloved brethren) ô conſider this, all ye that forget God: and ſeeing every ſin ſlayeth the ſoule within the body, corrupteth the body in the grave, and eternally tormenteth both the body and ſoule in hell; let us hate and deteſt all ſins: for though we read of many tyrants, Nero, Phalaris, Caligula, Heliogabalus, and ſuch like, that were carnivorants, and blood-thirſty men, ſavage beaſts in the ſhapes of men, delighting themſelves only in blood, and cruelties; yet we never reade of ſuch a tyrant as Sin; for the blood of death would quench theſe mens rage; but no paine, no death, but eternall death, a death that never dieth, and a paine that never endeth will ſatisfie this tyrant Sin: This is the deceit of ſin; as the Poet ſaid of Venus;

A moſt earneſt perſwaſion to forſake ſin.

Læta venire Venus, triſtis abire ſolet.

To preſent pleaſure, or profit, unto our eyes, but aſſoone as ever the ſin is done, to deale with us, as Ammon did by Thamar, thruſt her out and hate her; wound our conſcience, and deſtroy our ſoules.

2 Sam. 13. 18.

And therefore (once againe I beſeech you) let us forſake our ſinnes, let us leave our drinking, our ſwaggering, and our ſwearing; and inſtead of, by God, by God, and more fearefull oathes (which I am afraid to name) at every word, which is the moſt odious, yet moſt careleſſe cuſtome, both of Court and Countrey, let us ſay, in truth, in truth: the words are as eaſie, and they will bring more eaſe unto our ſoules; for ſwearing graceth not your ſpeech; but diſgraceth you, and diſhonoureth God: and therefore one day you muſt greatly repent you of it, or you ſhall fearefully die for it: and I beſeech you pardon me for ſpeaking it; for it is my duty that I owe you, and it would be my deſtruction if I did conceale it from you, as Saint Clemens ſaith in the like caſe; and truly I deſire not ſo much, with Ariſtotle, my God of Heaven is my witneſſe, that I lie lie not, to be deemed a great Scholler, as with Gregory Nazianzen, to be indeed an honest man, to live as I teach, and to discharge my duty in reproving sinne, rather then to shew my knowledge in any Science; and therefore, I humbly intreate you all, to give me leave, to beseech you, to leave your sins; and because we cannot quite forsake them, to confesse them, and to be ashamed of them; for if we confesse our sins, God is mercifull and just to forgive us all our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousnesse.

Clement. l. 1. recog.

1oh 1.19.

That the divell cannot indure we should confesse our sins.

But the divell cannot indure that we should confesse them, least God should thereby forgive them; and therefore as he perswadeth us ever to commit them; so he perswadeth us ever to conceale them, and never to confesse them; For I read, that on a time, a sinner being at confession, the divell intruded himselfe and came to him; and being demanded by the Priest, wherefore he came in, he answered, to make restitution; and being asked what he would restore, he said shame; for this shame, saith he, I have stollen from this sinner, to make him shameless in sinning, and now I am come to restore it to him, to make him ashamed to confesse his sinnes: And surely thus he deales with us all; he makes us shameless to commit all sinnes, even with Absolon, in the sight of all Israel, and in the sight of the Sunne; but he makes us ashamed to confesse any sin.

2 Sam.16.22.

But if we feare this punishment of sin; all miseries in this life, death shortning life, and eternall torments after death, and would be delivered from it; then let us not make the Ministers afraid to reprove our sinnes, nor be our selves ashamed to confesse our sinnes; for as the first degree of righteousnesse is, not to sinne; so the second is, to acknowledge and forsake our sinnes: If we had not sinned, we had not died; and if we doe acknowledge, and forsake them, we shall receive no dammage by death; but if we continue in sin, we shall die; and we shall justly die; for the reward of sin is death.

And so I come to the third part, which is the equity of this reward; because, death is the wages of sin.

The third part.

Part. 3.

The equity of this payment, Death is the stipend of Sin.

CHAP. I.

How just a thing it is to punish Sinne.

The reward of Sin is Death

YOu have heard of a world of miseries, that are inflicted on man for sin, here, in this life; you have heard of eternall death, and intollerable torments for ever and ever, that shall be inflicted on sinfull soules in the future life; and now it resteth, that I should shew the equity of this punishment; how just it is with God, to render all this on man for sin: and therefore, that I may the more fully cleere this point, I must desire you to consider these three especiall things.

Three points to be considered, to shew the equity of the punishment of sin.

1. That it is just to punish sinne.
2. That God is the justest Iudge that can be found, to punish it.
3. That this punishment, which God imposeth and inflicteth for sinne, is most right and just.

1 That it is just to punish sin. Cicero de nat. deorũ l. 1.

First, there is nothing in the world, (saith Cicero) more agreeable to reason, then that true and honest labour should be commended and rewarded, and the vices of men should be severely punished according to their just desert; & nihil in rebus humanis inæqualius esse duco, quam & fortem & ignauum æqualibus præmijs ornari, Xenoph. de Cyri. institut. l. 2. for, it is unpossible (saith Cicero) that either house or Common-wealth should stand, Si in ea nec rectè factis præmia extant ulla, nec supplicia peccatis, if there be not in the same both rewards for good deeds, and punishments for sins: and therefore Solon being demanded, what was most profitable for the well-fare of a Common-wealth, said; Si boni præmijs invitantur, & mali pœnis coercentur, to defend and reward the good, and to restraine and punish the bad: and M. Cato saith, that there is nothing more pernicious unto any state, Quam si improborum mores pœna non coerceantur, then to suffer wicked men to go away unpunished: and therefore he would have those Magistrates, that did not punish the impieties of the wicked and dissolute fellowes, Non tantum non ferendos, sed lapidibus obruendos, not only not to be suffered, but to be stoned with stones to death: and so the Lawes of all Nations do provide, that good and vertuous deeds should be rewarded, and evill deeds should be punished; for we find it true by experience, that impunitas delicti invitat homines ad malignandum; because punishment is deferred, the hearts of the children of men, are even set to doe evill: and therefore God himselfe doth say, that whosoever justifieth the wicked, is a like culpable before him, as if he had condemned the innocent; and S. Ambrose tels us plainely, that it is sometimes misericordia punire, & crudelitas parcere, a pious work to punish, and a cruelty for to spare; for this doth not only incourage sinners, to go on from one wickednesse to another; but it is an ill patterne, and a great provokement to draw others to do the like: and therfore we may well conclude this first point, that it is a most just thing to punish sins and offences.

Idem l. 3. de nat. deor.

Stobæus Ser. 41.

Plutarch in Apoth. Præmia bonorum malorumq; bonos ac malos faciunt. Plin. S. in paneg. The Law of Nature teacheth, that sin should be punished.

To forbeare the punishment of sin doth increase the number of sinners. Pro. 17. 15.

Quo quisq; est maior cæteris, eo maiors sit exemplo, si pecces, pœna magnitudine. Thucyd. l. 5.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

How God is the justest Iudge to punish sinne.

SEcondly, the Poet, speaking of Iustice, saith in this Dialogue-wise.

Philosophus. Iustitia.

P. Quæ Dea? I. Iustitia. P. At cur torvo lumine spectes?
I. Nesciu sum flecti, nec moveor precio.
P. Unde genus? I. Cœlo. P. Qui te genuere parentes?
I. Mi modus est genitor, clara fides genetrix.
P. Aurium aperta tibi cur altera, & altera clausa est?
I. Una patet justis, altera surda malis.
P. Cur gladium tua dextra gerit? Cur læva bilancem?
I. Ponderat hæc causas, percutit illa reos.
P. Cur sola incedis? I. Quia copia rara bonorum;
Hæc referunt paucos sæcula Fabricios.
P. Paupere cur cultu? I. Semper justissimus esse
Qui cupit, immensas nemo parabit opes.

The description of Iustice.

And these are fine descriptions of equity; sweet expressions of Iustice, and her uncorrupted properties; but if we looke to God, we shall find him farre beyond all this, to be the justest of all Iudges, and to be Iustice it selfe.

God the justest Iudge in the world for three reasons.

First, because he loveth righteousnesse; For it is the property of a just Iudge, not onely to judge righteously, to justifie the innocent, and to punish the offenders, but also to love righteousnesse, and to hate iniquity; but of God the Prophet saith, Thy throne O God, is for ever and ever; thou hast loved righteousnesse, and hated iniquity; wherefore God, even thy God, hath annointed thee with the oyle of gladnesse above thy fellowes. And againe, Thou hatest all those that worke vanitie.

1 God loveth righteousnesse. Psal.45 7,8.

Heb.1.9. Psal.5.5.

Secondly, because he judgeth without any respect of persons; for this is one of the chiefest properties of a righteous Iudge, to judge according to the equity of the cause, and not according to the quality of the person: and therefore Iethro, Iehosaphat, and others, do make this not respecting of persons, to be one of the essentiall properties of a righteous Iudge: but with God there is no respect of persons; for he will not be corrupted with the reward of the rich; for all the beasts of the forrest are his, and so are all the cattell upon a thousand hils; he will not be terrified for feare of the mighty; for he will bind Kings in fetters, and Nobles in links of iron; neither is he angred or molested with the incessant complainings of the poore, but he will heare their cry, and will help them, Psal. 145.19.

2 God is no respecter of persons

Exod.18.21. 2 Chron.19.7. Pro.24.23. 1 Sam.16.7. Acts 10.33. Gal 2.6. Psal.50 10. Psal.149.8. Deut.26.7. Psal.145.19.

Indeed with men, it is a common practice, to have our lawes to be tela aranea, like a spiders web; wherein the little flies are catcht, and the great buzzing bumble bees doe easily passe through: and therefore it is truly said of mans Law, That

Dat veniam corvis, vexat censura columbas.

It spares the rich, but spoiles the poore.

With men we find Iustice often perverted.

But Gods law is rete Vulcanium, like Vulcans iron net, which takes the gods, and apprehends and condemns all alike; for if the greatest men hurt the poorest, and those poore men cry unto me, saith the Lord, I will heare them; that is, to helpe the oppressed, and to punish the wrong doer: and therefore Moses saith of him, that he is a great God, mighty and terrible, which accepteth no person, nor taketh reward; but doth justice and right unto the Orphans, and the Widow: and David saith, Deus Iudex justus est, God is a righteous Iudge, and that the heavens shall declare his righteousnesse, that is approve and justifie him in his judgements:

That God is most just.

Deut.10.17.

Psal.7.12.

And

And S. Paul saith, that he shall have the crowne of righteousnesse, which the Lord, the righteous Iudge, shall give him in that day: and the very Heathens say as much; for not only Euripides saith, 2 Tim. 4. 8.

Δίκη δ' ἃ κ ἔνες ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς βροτῶν,

That justice is not in the eyes of mortall men; but Hesiod goeth further, saying, Iustice the daughter of God.

ἥ τε παρθένος ἐστὶ Διὸς κυδρὴ ἐκγεγαυῖα.

Ipsa autem Iustitia est virgo, ex Iove nata; castaq, venerandaq, dijs qui olympum habitant: That Iustice is a pure Virgin, and an immaculate daughter of the chiefest God; that is indeed, a true and essentiall property of the true and ever-living God: and therefore it must needs follow, that of all Iudges, God is the justest Iudge that can be found, to punish sin.

Thirdly, because he rendreth to every man according to his works, and punisheth great sins, with the greater punishment; and the longer he stayes to expect our amendment, the sorer will be our punishment, if we do not repent. 3 That God judgeth every man according to his desert. Valer. l. 1. Lucius Apuleius de asino aureo.

I have read of an Asse, that having an huge burden upon her back, by chance stumbled at a stone, and fell; her master presently began to chide, and to beat her; whereat the poore Asse repined and bemoaned her self, saying, In what a miserable state do I live, and what a cruell master do I serve? for I have done him many good and faithfull services, and yet see, how for one fault by chance committed, I am thus grievously handled: The fable shewes us, that men many times do neither reward, nor punish according unto just deserts; but do often times suffer good deeds to go unrewarded, and punish small offences, with severer punishments, than in the rigour of justice they have deserved; and it may be, often suffer the greater sinners, to escape all punishment. Men reward not men according to just deserts.

But it is not so with God; for if we do well, and have our hearts upright, to do him service, he will not alwaies be chiding, though we should commit many faults: but if we do ill, sinne lieth at the doore, ready to accuse us, and God the righteous Iudge will deale with us according to our sinnes, whether they be great or small: Nam injustus quisquis eò atrocius in tormentis obruitur, quo altiùs in peccatis elevatur; for every sinfull wretch, the more hainous hath been his sins, the more grievous shall be his punishments, saith S. Gregory; so S Hierom saith, Cui dubium, quin inter tres peccatores, Gentilem, Hæreticum, & Ecclesiasticum, multò majoribus pœnis dignus sit, qui majoris fuerit dignitatis? Who maketh any doubt of this, but of three sinners, that is, the Gentile, which is without the Church, and the Hereticke, which is against the Church, and the Hypocrite, that is within the bosome of the Church, he (that is, the Hypocrite) shall be the most severely punished, which had the chiefest place, and was most dignified with that honourable title of a Christian? And so S Augustine saith, Mitissima omnium pœnarum erit eorum, qui præter peccatum, quod originale contraxerunt, nullum insuper addiderunt; of all punishments theirs shall be the least, which, besides their originall sin, have committed none other sin: and the divine Scripture is as plain in this point as need to be; for the Lord, speaking of Iezabel, saith, Quantum in delicijs fuit, tantum date illi tormenti; that as much as she hath been in pleasure, that is, of sin and iniquity, so much torments shall be laid upon her; and our Saviour saith, It shall be easier for Sodom and Gomorra, and more tolerable for Tyre and Sydon in the day of judgement, than for Corazin and Bethsaida, and other like sinfull Cities, which heard our Saviour preach, and did see his mighty works, and yet would not repent them of their sinnes. Pſal. 103. 9. Gen. 4. 7. Greg. in Mor. Hieron. sup. Ezech. That God punisheth the greater sins with the greater punishment. Aug. l. 3. de lib. Arb. Rev. 18. 7. Mat. 11. 12, 24.

But against this it may be objected; how can it be, that they should be all in the same place, tied in the same lake, and burning in the same fire, and yet that they should not feele the same punishment. Object.

To this we answer, that they shall feele the same punishment, but not in the same measure; the same for length of time, but not the same for quantity of pain; Nam sicut uno sole omnes tanguntur, &c. For as men (saith S. Gregory) sitting in the heat of the same Sun, are not heated and warmed in the same manner; because the weight of the heat is felt according to the quality and disposition of the body; Sol.

That the torments of hell are not equall unto all. Greg. in Moral.

Sic damnatis una est gehenna, quæ afflixit, & tamen omnes non uno calore combuxit; quia quod hic agit dispar valetudo corporum, hoc illic exhibet dispar causa meritorum; Even so, though there be but one hell, which tormenteth all; yet doth it not torment all alike; for as here the different disposition of their bodies, doth cause men differently to perceive the heat; so there, the inequality of their merits, will be the cause of disparity in their torments: And therefore, seeing God loveth righteousnesse, judgeth all without respect of persons, and in his judgements, rendreth unto every man according to his deeds; it is most apparent, that God is the justest Iudge that can be found to punish sin.

CHAP. III.

That God doth not inflict eternall punishment upon the fore-sight of any act of the will, that we would eternally sinne.

How a temporall sin can deserve an eternall punishment.

THirdly, that this punishment, which God inflicteth on man for sinne, is most right and just; it is concluded by all Divines; but how this can be, or how it comes to passe, that our mercifull and most gracious God, who is so infinite in his goodnesse, and so abundant in his love, that his praises are amplified twenty seven times together, with this conclusion, for his mercy endureth for ever, should be thus infinitely severe, as to inflict upon a finite sin an infinite punishment, and that he should continue millions of yeares, yea to everlastingnesse in the avengement of those sins, which were committed as it were in a moment of time; a strange thing, that he, who hath offended but temporally, should be bound to suffer intolerable paines eternally, and a sin suddenly committed should be everlastingly punished; it seems a doubt not easie to be decided; for some say, it is because the sinners will is eternally to live, that he might eternally sin; so S. Gregory saith, Iniqui ideo cum fine deliquerunt, quia cum fine vixerunt; nam voluissent utiq; sine fine vivere, ut potuissent sine fine peccare; The wicked do therefore make an end of sinning, because there is an end of their being; for they would desire to live without end, that they might sin without end; for this sheweth, that they do alwaies desire to live in sin, because while they live, they never cease to sin: Ad magnam igitur judicantis justitiam pertinet, ut nunquam careat supplicio, cujus mens in hac vita nunquam voluit carere peccato; And therefore (saith he) it sheweth the great sincerity of the Iudge, and it behoveth his justice to deale so with them, that they should never want punishment, whose wils and minds in this life, would never want sin; and that there should be no end set to the torments of the wicked, because, whilst they are able, they set no end to their wickednesse. And S. Bernard is of the same mind; for he saith, that for this cause is the sin of an inflexible and obstinate mind eternally punished, though it be temporally committed; Quia quod breve fuit tempore vel opere, longum esse constat in pertinaci voluntate, ita ut si nunquam moreretur, nunquam velle peccare desineret; imo semper vivere vellet, ut semper peccare posset; because that, which was but short in time or action, doth appeare to be long in an obstinate will and affection; so that if he never died, he would never leave to sin; nay, he would desire ever to live, that he might ever sin: And I find most of our own modern Divines to joyne with these Fathers in the same judgement.

Ex nullus detur iniquo terminus ultionis, quia, quamdiu vixit, habere voluit terminum criminis.

Bern. Ep. 252.

Whether God punisheth a sinner eternally, because he willeth to live eternally, that he might sin eternally.

But for mine owne part, I cannot fully yeeld unto this opinion; for if this be true, then God damneth them for sinnes that they would have done, and not for the sinnes that they have already done: Indeed it was the opinion of Pelagius, that God received many into glory for those good works they would have done, if they might have lived; and damned others propter præviſa mala, for the evill works that they would have done, if they could have lived to do them; for he that would do any thing, whether good or evill, it is as done in the sight of God; because he seeth as well the inward intention of the heart, as the outward outward execution of the work, as our Saviour sheweth in the example of him, that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, and is said thereby, to be an adulterer in his heart already; but Matth. 5. 28.

Propter præviſa bona, quæ facturi essent, si vixissent.

To this S. Augustine answereth, that it cannot be, that any man should receive either glory or punishment, for the works that he never did, but would have done, if he might have lived to do them; for That God punisheth no man for the sins he never did.

First, the Apostle saith; We must all appeare before the judgement seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, that is, while he lived, whether it be good or bad: Where we must observe, that he doth not say, according to that he would have done; but according to that which he hath done: So our Saviour saith, that they which have done good, shall come forth to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evill, to the resurrection of damnation: Where againe, we must note, that he doth not say, they that would have done evill, but they that have done it; so, when he saith, Come ye blessed into everlasting life, and sheweth the reason of it, saying, for I was hungry, and ye gave me to eat; and to the wicked, Go ye cursed; for I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat; it is to be observed, that he saith not, you would have given me, or you would not have given me; but you have given me, and you have not given me: and therefore God saveth none, for any good works fore-seene, that they would have done; nor condemneth any, for any sinnes fore-seene, that they would have committed. Aug. de praedest. c. 12. & l. de perseveran. c. 9. 1 Reason. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Ioh. 5. 29. Mat. 25 35. &c.

Secondly, if this were true, that God judgeth according to what men would have beene, if they could have continued; then the Tyrians, and the Sydonians, and many other wicked men should be saved, or could not well be justly condemned; for, If the great works and wonders, which our Saviour did among the Iewes, had been done amongst them, they would have repented them of their sinnes in dust and ashes: And so many of the godly, must of necessity have been condemned; for they are speedily taken away, least that wickednesse should alter their understanding, or deceit beguile their soule; for the bewitching of naughtinesse doth obscure things that are honest. 2 Reason. Mat. 11. 21. Sap 4. 10.

Thirdly, if this were true, it must needs follow, that God should fore-see those things, as future things, which were never to be; which doth imply a contradiction; for though God knoweth, what may be done, though it be never done; yet can he not be said to fore-see any thing to be, which indeed shall not be; for things that are existent, and have a being, are seen; things that are possible to be, are knowne; and all future things, that shall be, and are to be, are as present with God, as if they were; but those things, that were never to be, nor shall ever be, cannot be said to be present with him: and therfore, to say that God will punish them eternally, because they would have sinned eternally, if they had eternally lived, is neither agreeable to the justice of God, to punish them for the things that they have never done; nor to the truth of God, which saith, they shal receive their reward, according to what they have done, and not according to what they would have done; nor yet to the reason of mã, that sins never cõmitted should be so severely punished. 3 Reason. Zanch de nat Dei. l. 5. c. 2. p. 530. 2 Cor. 5. 10.

To the reason alledged, that the will of sinning is the same with God, as if they had actually sinned; I answer

First, that sin is two wayes to be considered; First, as it is in the heart and intention; And secondly, as it is in the act and execution; Now our Saviour doth not say, that he which looketh on a woman, to lust after her, hath committed the fact in the sight of God, but is guilty of the sin, in respect of the desire and intention, which is an act already done, and not in respect of the outward act, which is not done at all: and therefore he saith, that such a one hath committed adultery with her in his heart, that is, inwardly, but not outwardly: and therefore is he only so far guilty, that is, so far forth as the act is done, but no further. That the desire of the heart is an act done.

Secondly, I say that if their will were, to desire to live ever, that they might sin ever; yet this is but a temporary act of the will, and doth not include an everlasting willing of the same; because we see there is no necessity to continuate the same That to will to sin ever is a temporary act.

act of the will, but that it nilleth now, what it willed a little before: and because no act can exceed the bounds and limits of the agent; but the agent falling, the act is ended: therefore man being temporary, being but a while to live here, his will is also temporary, being no longer properly the will of man than it resteth in man: therefore all acts of the will, which it produceth, while it is in this life, must needs be temporary; and so all sinnes done, or of the will to do them, must be likewise temporary.

God punisheth only sins done.

And therefore I say, that God doth not punish them, for any fore-seene facts that they would have done, nor for any fore-seene continuance of the will, in the same desire to live ever in sin; nor for any other fore-seene future thing whatsoever; but only for those things that are done in this life; either those works that are outwardly acted, or those desires of the heart, and acts of the will, which it produceth, while it is in this life, and no otherwise: so that God punisheth only sins done, and not sins that would be done.

Two things make a temporary sin to deserve eternall punishment.

And if we search a little further into the nature of the sin done, we shall see the hainousnesse of the offence, and the equity of this inflicted punishment in two respects.

1. A levitate præcepti injuncti, from the easinesse of the things commanded.
2. A gravitate peccati perpetrati, from the hainousnesse of the sinne committed.

CHAP. IV.

How easie and light are all the commandements that God doth give, and how hard are the wayes of sinne.

1 The easinesse of the things commanded. Iohn 5.3. Mat.11.30. Psal.119.

FOr the first, Saint John saith, His commandements are not grievous; and our Saviour saith, His yoke is easie, and his burden light; so easie, that the kingly Prophet David saith, he did run the way of Gods commandements, when God had set his heart at liberty; that is, when God had untied him from those bonds of sin, wherewith he was so tied by his naturall corruption, that he could not stirre, nor walk one jot in this easie path: and therefore, if the way be cragged, and the gate narrow and straight, that leadeth unto life; it is in respect of our unableness, now, to performe any thing that is good, and not in respect of any difficulty or hardnesse in themselves simply considered.

How the way to heaven is said to be hard.

What a small matter it was that God commanded Adam. Gen 2.17.

Looke into the commandement, that God gave unto Adam, and you shall easily find this truth; for, at that time, there was no man to be envied, no man to be oppressed, no woman to be defiled, no Churches to be robbed: and therefore he cumbred them not with many precepts; all was but one; to forbeare the fruits but of one Tree; they might eat of all besides that one: and as his precepts were not many, but one; so this one was not great; not to create Worlds, not to remove Mountaines, but to forbeare the fruits of that one Tree: Alas, was this so great, was this so grievous? What if he had forbidden all, but one? Had it not beene right that we should obey? And if we had asked him, what he would have done with all the rest; might not he have justly said, May I not do what I will with mine owne? And what is that to thee? Do thou as I command thee; but he was contented to make himselfe, as it were, poore, to give them store; for he gave them leave to eat of all the rest, and reserved but one for himselfe; yet would they needs eat of that one; and as if they longed to breake this one Commandement of God, they would presently eat of that Tree, and it may be, before they tasted of any other Tree, sure, before they saw any other day; Quia non pernoctavit in honore, for he remained not one night in his dignity, saith the Vulgar Latine.

Mat.20 15.

Iohn 21.22.

What a small matter it is that God requireth at our hands.

So looke into the commandements he giveth unto us, and we shall soone see the same truth; for they are pauca, brevia, levia, & utilia: Few, short, easie, and and profitable; for he gives not many, but ten, but two, but one; and that one is not large, not long, but one word, one syllable, love; and therefore it is impossible to forget it; and it is easie enough, it is naturall enough to performe it, to love; the poorest, the youngest, the eldest, the richest, at home and abroad may do this: and who can say he cannot do it? For there needs no wealth, there needs no wisdome to love: and therefore all may do it, if they would do it, and it is for our own profit to do it; for to that end doth the Lord require it; that it may go well with us and our children.

Deut. 5.33. & c.29.9.

But on the other side, the wayes of wickednesse are intricate, very hard, and full of labour; for all the world may see, that the envious man doth more vexe his wretched soule, at the prosperity of the righteous, than the godly man doth any waies trouble his righteous soule, either at the sinnes or the prosperity of the wicked; that the wrathfull man takes more paines, and frets and chafes more, to execute his fury, than the patient man doth, in suffering all his injuries; that the tyrants were, and are more tormented, in tormenting the poore Christians, than the Christians are, in suffering all their exquisite and most strangely invented torments; that the worldlings do weare and wearie themselves, a great deale more, in pursuing after the vanities of this life, and purchasing unto themselves eternall miseries, than the righteous do, in seeking for the grace of God, to attaine unto everlasting happinesse; and that the divell requires more time, and greater paines, to serve him, than God doth to keep his Commandements; for God gives us six dayes to provide for our selves, and requires but one day to be served of us, himselfe; but the divell will have the six, the seventh, and all, to serve him; and all is too little too; for we must serve him day and night; and God requires but one houre or two, of that one day, that he reserveth for himselfe, to heare his Word, and to call upon his Name, and that for our own good, (as I shewed unto you before;) but the divell requires not only many houres, and them, not only to be spent in vaine pleasures and vanities, but also in horrible sins and iniquities; but he would have us also, to forget that one day of Gods service, and to spend the greatest part of those few houres, wherein we should chiefly serve our God, Aut male agendo, aut nihil agendo; either in doing nothing, or in doing worse than if we had done nothing at all.

What a slavery and bondage it is to serve sin.

The divell requires more service of us than God doth.

That sinners take more pains to go to hell, than the godly do to attain unto eternall happinesse.

And so in all other things, the workes of darknesse are a great deale more hard and difficult than the works of light; so painefull are the wayes of wickednesse, as that it is most true of the sinner, which God pronounced of the woman, that in sorrow she should bring forth; and so themselves, when it is too late, do most lamentably confesse it, saying, we have wearied our selves in the wayes of wickednesse; yea, we have gone through desarts, where there was no way, but rocks, and crags, and dangerous paths; and no marvell; for as it is a great deale harder to do any work, or to walk in the darke, than in the light, so it is a great deale more difficult to do the works of darknesse, than to do the works of righteousnesse: And so we see, a proud man takes more paines to make himselfe ready in the morning, than the humble man doth; and the malicious man laboureth more to revenge, than the peaceable man doth to forgive; and so of all other sinners; though we be naturally inclined to all sinnes, yet we take a great deale of paines to go to hell; as a stone tumbling down a rockie hill, shall have many a knock before it comes to the bottome: and therefore, as one said unto his friend, that would faine see the games of Olympus, but was discouraged with the tediousnesse of the journey; that if he would go every day, but so much as he used to walk for his recreation, he should at last arrive unto his journeyes end; so may I say unto every man; that if he would take as much paines, to attaine unto the joyes of heaven, as we do to gaine the vanities of this world, we should both soone and easily arrive to happinesse.

Gen 3.16.

Wis.5.7.

No paines should discourage us to go towards heaven.

And yet for all this, (though the way of Vertue be never so easie, and the way of sinne never so hard) such is our wilfull frowardnesse, that we had rather, take the paines to rise up early, to go late to bed, to eat the bread of carefulnesse, to spend all our time, and to weare out our whole life, in these inextricable works of darknesse, than to follow this pleasant path of vertue, and to do these sweet and easie works of grace, which do lead us unto eternall salvation.

Psal.127.3.

The smalnesse of the duty required, deserves the greatnesse of the punishment inflicted.

And therefore, seeing the labour is so small, the commandement so easie, and the burden so light, what marvell is it that the punishment should be so great, if we neglect to do so small a service? If a King should say unto his Subjects, he that will not say, Good morrow King, shall have his goods confiscate, his house subverted, and himselfe condemned to perpetuall imprisonment; would ye not think that be justly deserved it, which would refuse to obey so light a precept, and neglect to performe so small a duty? And yet God, in a manner, requires as little at our hands; to ask of him what we want, and to give him thanks for what we have; for who so offereth him thanks and praise, he honoureth him: And therefore justly do we deserve so great a punishment, because we refuse so small a service; for lesser at our hands he could not require; and therefore lesser at his hands we cannot deserve; but we must confesse, that as nec injusta est ejus gratia, his grace is not unjust, when he forgiveth sin, so nec crudelis potest esse justitia, his justice is not cruell when he punisheth sin.

Aug. de Civit. Dei. l. 21. c. 12.

CHAP. V.

Of the hainousnesse of every sin, in three respects.

2 The hainousnes of the sin committed.

FOr the second, we must consider, that as the levity and smalnesse of the service required, so the gravity and greatnesse of the sin committed, doth most justly require the height of all punishment: Now touching the greatnesse of the sin, it is seene in a threefold respect.

The hainousnesse of sin is seen in a threefold respect.

1. Of him that is offended.
2. Of him that doth offend.
3. Of the offence that is done.

} And

First, touching the Person that is offended, we must consider his

1. Greatnesse.
2. Goodnesse.

} For

1 The person offended is 1 A great God, mighty, and terrible.

First, if thou strikest thy fellow, the offence is not so hainous; but if thou strikest a King, a Prince, or a Priest, thine offence deserves the greater punishment; for the quality of the person that is offended, doth aggravate and add unto the quantity of the offence; but we, by our sinnes, do offend not any one of all the earthly Kings and Potentates of this world, whereof the best and the greatest it but man, as we are, and his breath is in his nostrils, as ours is; but we offend the great God of heaven and earth, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords; Cujus magnitudinis non est finis, of whose greatnesse there is no end: and therefore offending an infinite God, his anger is infinite, and our punishment must needs be infinite. And because a finite vessell is not able to hold or comprehend an infinite wrath; therefore seeing we cannot beare the height of Gods indignation, propter immensitatem doloris, we must of necessity satisfie his justice duratione temporis; and so the long continuance of our suffering must supply what is wanting in the waight of our punishments.

Scelus non temporis longitudine, sed iniquitatis magnitudine metiendum. Aug. de Civit. Dei. l. 21 c. 11.

Ideo non longitudo temporis peccandi, sed peccati gravitas, non gravitate supplicij, quam sustinere non possumus, sed longitudine temporis compensatur.

2 A most good and a most gracious God.

Secondly, if thou shouldest kill a Tyrant, whose delight is in the ruine of his subjects, and whose intention, every way, is to work thy destruction, thy fault were the more tolerable, though not justifiable; but if thou shouldest offer violence unto such a Prince, as not only is the life and happinesse of his subjects, by doing good to all, ill to none, like Titus Vespasian, that was Deliciæ generis humani, the very joy and delight of all mankind, but also hath raised thee from the dust, inriched, innobled and indowed thee with all the indowments that possibly could be heaped upon thee; Oh what a miserable caitife, and how worthy of all punishment, would all men judge thee most justly to deserve? surely they would think no punishment to be sufficient enough for such a wretch.

But

But our God, whom we offend, is good and gratious unto all, ill to none, and he hateth nothing that he hath made; for when Adam was created, he raiſed him out of the duſt,

Of the incomprehenſible goodneſſe of God to man, and what a good God wee doe offend.

——Divino ſemine fecit; He made him in his owne image and likeneſſe, and he made him ſole Monarch of this whole world; and as if every ſoile were not fit for ſuch a creature, he placed him in Paradiſe, the choiſeſt place of all pleaſure; hee put all things in ſubjection under his feet, and looking if there was any thing wanting for his happineſſe, he ſaw that it was not good for him to be alone; and therefore he made him an helpe meete for him; ſuch a helpe, as that Adam himſelfe, as ſoone as ever he ſaw her, ſaid; This is now bone of my bone and fleſh of my fleſh; as if he had ſaid, among all the other creatures, which thou Lord haſt brought unto mee, I could not ſatisfie my minde with any mate; but now I am fully pleaſed, and cannot diſlike this woman while I like my ſelfe, becauſe ſhe is of my ſelfe: Thus did God looke, that man might want nothing, that might make him happy: therefore

Pſal. 8. 6, 7.

Gen. 2. 23.

Say thou wert none of Adams race, but wert an indifferent Iudge to cenſure ſuch a creature, that ſhould offend ſo good a God, Et reddere malum pro bono, And render unto him evill for good, and hatred for his good will; what puniſhment I pray thee, wouldeſt thou thinke too great, for ſuch great ingratitude? for as the Prophet David, at the conſideration of Gods goodneſſe unto man, ſaith; O God, what is man, that thou art ſo mindfull of him, or the Sonne of man that thou ſo regardeſt him? So, at the conſideration of mans ſinne againſt God, we may all cry, and cry againe; Oh man, what is God, that thou art ſo unmindfull of him, or the Sonne of God that thou ſo little regardeſt him?

Pſal. 8. 4.

And as God was then good and gracious unto man, ſo now, and ever ſince the fall of man, we may ſay with the Prophet; Oh how good a God is the God of Iſrael? How many are raiſed from the duſt, like Saul, that ſeeking his fathers Aſſes, found a Kingdome; or David, that from the Sheepefold, was raiſed unto the Scepter; and how doth God continually beſtow his bleſſings upon men, and make his Sunne to ſhine upon the good, and upon the bad, and ſend his raine, yea, and that a gracious raine upon the juſt, and upon the unjuſt, and cauſe our wives to be like the Vine, that is by the houſe-ſide, and our children to be like the Olive branches round about our Tables, our Oxen ſtrong to labour, and our ſheepe to bring forth thouſands and ten thouſands in our ſtreets? And therefore as he ſaith unto the Iſraelites, What could I doe more for my Vineyard? So may he ſay to every man, what ſhould I doe more for thee, then I have done? If thou thinkeſt others in better ſtate then thy ſelfe, thou muſt know that thou doeſt not know thine owne eſtate, nor underſtandeſt what is beſt for thy ſelfe; Sed quid proſit vel obſit, novit medicus non agrotus; But God knoweth what is beſt for every man, and he ever worketh all things together for the beſt for them that love him.

1 Sam. 9. Pſal 78. 71.

Mat. 5. 45.

Eſay 5. 4.

Rom 8. 28.

And, though our ſins have moved him to abhorre the workes of his own hands and to diſtaine the beauty of his own creation, yet if we do adviſedly looke into his moſt gratious proceedings, his loving indulgence in reſtraining his incenſed diſpleaſure, and his abundant kindneſſe in ſhewing us a way to eſcape his furie, I know not whether we ſhall find greater cauſe to vindicate his juſtice, or to admire his mercy; for if we looke upward, his mercy reacheth unto the heavens, ſaith the Prophet; if we caſt our eyes downeward, they that goe downe into the deepe doe ſee the wonders of God, and his mercies in the great waters; and if wee looke round about us, then the ſame Prophet tells us, that they which put their truſt in the Lord, mercy imbraceth them on every ſide: and Saint Paul, to ſhew the ſuperabundant goodneſſe of God towards man, ſaith, that God is faithfull which promiſed, he cannot denie himſelfe; and if he were any thing but mercy, then he might denie his mercy, though he did not denie himſelfe; but now by not denying himſelfe he giveth mercy, who by not giving mercy ſhould denie himſelfe; which ſaith the Apoſtle, he cannot doe; and yet ſaith a Father, ſuperare ſeipſum

Pſal. 108. 4.

Pſal. 107. 23.

2 Tim. 2. 13.

ſeipſum poteſt, deſertos miſerendo, ſed negare ſeipſum non poteſt, miſericordiam deſerendo; he may overcome himſelfe by pittying the forſaken ones, but he cannot denie himſelfe by forſaking his pittie towards us; for how ſhould he denie himſelfe to us that hath given himſelfe for us, and loſt his owne life to procure us eternall life?

And therefore, for ſilly man to offend ſuch a good God, that doth ſo much good for man, I know not how this ſin ſhould be ſufficiently puniſhed; to eate his bread, to enjoy his Sunne, to receive his bleſſings, and to ſpurne him with our heeles, to teare him with our teeth, and to abuſe him in all our actions; It is ſuch a tranſcendent ſin, as it paſſeth all underſtanding, to imagine puniſhment enough for the ſame.

a The offender is a moſt vile and baſe creature, and the baſeneſſe of the offender doth ever aggravate the offence.

Secondly, we muſt conſider the quality of the Offender; for if a King ſhould injure his ſubject, or a Maſter his ſervant, the offence is not ſo great, as if a Subject ſhould rebell againſt his Soveraigne, or a ſervant lay violent hands upon his maſter: and therefore humane lawes decreed, that the baſeneſſe of the offender ſhould be cenſured with the ſeverer puniſhment; as if a Maſter ſhould kill his Servant, or a husband his wife, they ſhould but hang for their labour; but if a Servant ſhould kill his Maſter, or a wife her husband, they muſt be burnt all to aſhes, as for a ſin againſt Heaven and againſt Nature.

What a poore miſerable thing is Man that doth offend ſo great & ſo good a God.

But what are we that doe offend ſo great and ſo good a God, which the very Heathens tearmed Optimus Maximus; beſt and greateſt? We are but men and no Angels, but wormes and no men, duſt and aſhes, things of nothing, and worth nothing, baſe and beggerly, not able in deed to releeve our ſelves with one drop of cold water to coole our tongues.

Omnia ſunt hominum tenui pendentia filo,
Et ſubito caſu quæ valuere ruent.

Pſal. 1. 5. All our ſtrength is but like a ruſh, that may be ſoone knapt a ſunder, and all we have is but like the duſt, which the winde can eaſily ſcatter away from off the face of the earth: The very Heathens tell us, that omnis homo bulla eſt, Every man is but like a bubble of water, ſoone blowne up, and ſooner off.

Pſal. 144. 4. Sic in nos hominem vertitur omnis homo; So meane, ſo poore and ſo baſe a thing is man; Hee is like a thing of naught, and his time paſſeth away like a ſhaddow.

And yet theſe ſilly wormes, like as the poore Pigmi would warre againſt the winde, untill they were all overwhelmed with the ſands; ſo will they ſequaxin, with the Gyants, rebell and warre againſt their God, (Impar congreſſus Achilli) untill (as the Pigmies were by Hercules) they ſhall ſee themſelves to be farre over-matched with this God of Gods, that holdeth the Winds in his fiſt, and rideth upon the Heavens as upon a Horſe: And therefore what marvell is it, that their puniſhment ſhould bee interminable, whoſe rebellion is ſo intollerable?

3 The quality of the offence. How we offend God, and as it were ſell God for trifles, for nothing

Thirdly, we muſt conſider the quality of the Offence; For if once for ſome great matter we did offend, it might be thought the more tollerable; Nam ſi violanda fides, regnandi cauſa violanda eſt; For ſmall matters ſhould never make us to breake our word, ſaith the Heathen man: And therefore the Romanes were ſo upright, and ſo faithfull unto their confederates, that they would never offer to breake faith and promiſe, but in caſe of dominion, of very great advantage; for they deemed him a very foole, that would undoe himſelfe for nothing; So Cæſar would not be diſhoneſt but for a kingdome, and Sylveſter the ſecond would not give his ſoule to the divell for no leſſe then the Popedome; ſo the craftie thiefe will not hazard his necke for a trifle; and ſo our owne Citizens here have learnt this rule of the Romanes; for, when they breake, they will never doe it for nothing, but for hundreds, and for thouſands, that they may, with the unjuſt Steward, gaine ſomething to themſelves, for the loſſe of their honeſtie.

Platina in vita Silveſt. 2.

Luke 16. 6, 7, 8.

But

But how doe we offend our God? even for nothing; for as Saint Paul ſaith, An idoll is nothing in the world, ſo may I ſay of ſinne; it is nothing in the world; it is no ſubſtance, it is no being in the world; but it is the corruption of being, a deviation from the truth, and it brings us nothing in the world, but the leaſt and vaineſt momentary pleaſure that ever can be imagined; and ſo themſelves in Hell doe confeſſe it, ſaying, What hath pride profited us, or what good hath our riches, with our vaunting, brought us? What are they the better for their daily ſwearing, ſwaggering, drinking, and ſuch like vile and horrible ſinnes, which I doe abhorre to name, but that I muſt, in ſuch groſſe tearmes, becauſe I love not to guild ſinnes, and to give them better names then they deſerve; they are all paſt away like a ſhadow; Tranſit quod extollitur, permanet quod punitur; for the pleaſure is paſt, as ſoone as ever the fact is done; but the puniſhment remaineth never to be aboliſhed.

1 Cor. 8. 4.

Wiſd. 5. 8.

Greg. in Moral.

And yet, as unfortunate Lyſimacus, for a cup of cold water, delivered up the keyes of his citty unto his mortall enemie, ſo we unhappy men for ſuch a trifle, for ſuch a momentary pleaſure, ſuch a nothing, will adventure to offend our God, and yeeld our ſelves into the hands of the divell; Adam for an Apple will forſake his Creator; Iudas for thirty pence, will ſell his Redeemer; and we, for a cup of drinke to make us drunken, for a little traſh, it may be one penny, to make us richer, for an oath of our mouth, to ſhew our ſelves Gallants, and for ſuch like other things of nothing, will not bee afraid to offend our God, to loſe his favour, and to caſt him off for ever: ſo we ſhew our ſelves worſe then Iudas; becauſe he ſold Chriſt but once, and then he had for him 30. pieces of ſilver; but we ſell him, when we ſin againſt him, 30. times and more too, for one piece, for leſſe then a pennie, for a point of honour, the breath of another mans mouth, the wantonneſſe of the fleſh, or any other trifling vanity; and then, as Pilate crucified Chriſt to give life unto Barabbas a murderer, ſo doe we crucifie againe the Son of God, to give being unto our ſins, that doe ſlay our ſoules.

Plutar de ſera numinis vindicta.

Gen. 3.

Speculum peccatorum & iuſt. pag. 26.

I remember, that when God ſheweth how little he reſpecteth wicked ſinners, the Prophet ſaith; Thou ſelleſt thy people for naught and takeſt no money for them; as if they were worth nothing in the world: even ſo doe theſe men deale with God, they ſell him for naught, and eſteeme him worth nothing in the world; for putting God on the one hand, and the leaſt pleaſure or profit of ſinne on the other hand; they will imbrace that ſin, and forſake their God: and this they will not onely doe once or twice, and then leave; but they will doe it daily, and hourely, and every moment; never leaving to ſin untill we be compelled to leave the world; for every one of us may ſay with Manaſſes, Peccavi ſuper numerum arenæ maris, My ſinnes are more in number then the ſands of the Sea: And therefore, as often wounding the ſame ſcarres doth increaſe the danger, (ſaith Boſquierus;) So the continuall committing of the ſame ſins, doth every way much increaſe and aggravate the offences; for if we did it but once, it might be thought we did it precipitately of inconſideration; but when we doe it continually, it is apparant that we doe it wilfully, with delight and deliberation: and therefore it muſt be left every way without excuſe.

Pſal. 44. 13.

Vt febrium recidivarum maiora pericula, & ut vulnerum poſt cicatrices, &c. Boſquierus de paſſione Dom. conc. 3. p. 692.

Anſelmus comparing the ſinne of Satan with his owne ſinne, ſaith, Diabolus nulla præcedentis vindicta ſuperbiens, peccavit; ego viſa ejus pœna non continens, ad peccatum properavi: ille in innocentia conſtitutus, ego vero reſtitutus: ille perſtitit in malitia, Deo reprobante; ego vero Deo revocante: ille obduratur ad punientem; ego verò ad blandientem; & ſic uterq; contra Deum; ille contra non requirentem ſe; ego verò contra morientem pro me; ecce cujus imaginem horrebam, in multis aſpicio me horribiliorem: The Divell not ſeeing any vengeance upon any former ſinner, by waxing proud did ſin, but I, though I ſaw puniſhment for ſinne, did notwithſtanding haſten unto ſin; He ſinned in his innocency, wherein he was firſt created, I, after I was againe reſtored; he perſiſted in his malice, God forſaking him, I perſiſt in my ſinne, God ſtill ſeeking to reclaime me from ſinne; he was hardned againſt God puniſhing him, I againſt my God

Anſel in l. de caſu diaboli.

God, that gently and mildly intreated me: and so both of us did sinne against God; he against him, that after he sinned, sought him not; but I against him, that after I had sinned, sought me, and dyed for me: and therefore behold I find my selfe in many things, more vile and horrible then him, whom for his obstinacy against God, I do so much hate and detest: So infinitely great, and so transcendently horrible is the sinne of man; insomuch that Divines conclude, that as God is infinite, Propter summam formositatem, In regard of his excellent beauty; so is sinne infinite in respect of us, Propter summam deformitatem, By reason of its unspeakeable deformity: and therefore that it can deserve no lesse then infinite punishment.

Man is not able to comprehend the infinite deformity of sin.

The nature of sin.

And if we did but truly apprehend the nature and quality of our sinnes, wee would not repine at the judgements of God; for, whereas God made man a noble creature, both beautifull and glorious, by stamping on him his owne image, that is, righteousnesse and true holinesse, I beseech you to consider how strangely sin hath disrobed him of all his excellencies, what rebellions it hath setled in all his members, and what staines and pollutions it hath wrought in all his faculties? for it is our sin, which hath disjoyned the confederacies and societies of the dumbe creatures, and hath armed them not onely with an antypathie one against another, but also with an untamable rebellion against man; it is sin, which hath so strangely altered the manners and conditions of our times, that hath turned mens browes into brasse, their hearts into stones, their hands into blood, and their tongues into Scorpions; it is sin, which hath wrought such a confusion and chaos in all things that are under the Sunne, which hath changed truth into flattery, matters into formes, substances into shaddowes, nature into art, decencie and comelinesse into all kind of fantasticall newfangledne and the renting of our hearts, into the slashing of our garments; it is sin, which at all times and especially in this our time, hath dissolved those sweet bonds and obligations of correspondencie and peace, that were wont to knit together the hearts and affections of all neighbour nations, and in steed of that unanimous concord hath sent in fire and sword amongst them, which, in very few yeeres have spilt such a deale of innocent blood, and sent such a number of noble spirits unto death and destruction; and to let passe a thousand such other like bitter fruits and effects of this tree; it is sin, which at last shall turne the very elements into fire, and the whole frame of all things into their primitive chaos and originall confusion, and wicked sinners into everlasting damnation.

What our sinnes have done to us.

All punishment ought to be answerable to the offence.

Well then, beloved Brethren, seeing the person offended, is so great and so excellent; the offenders so base and so beggerly; and the offence so hainous and so intollerable; and that the punishment of a sin, Vt nec major crimine, ita nec minor esse debet, As it ought not to be more, so it should not be lesse then the offence deserveth; what man can imagine a punishment great enough for such, and so great offences, as we daily commit against our God?

A stipend what it is.

Hence it is that S. Paul, willing to shew the equity of this inflicted punishment, calleth it ὀψωνια stipendia; The stipend, or the wages of sin: Now, stipendiū dicitur a stipe; A stipend is an hirelings reward, and was wont to be called the wages that was appointed to be paid the Souldiers, to make provision for their daily meate and drinke, to sustaine themselves untill they received their full pay; this was called ὀψωνιον, their stipend; and none can say, but the poore Souldier, which adventureth his life and his limbes every moment, for the defence of his Prince, Peeres, and Countrey, is justly worthy of this small measure of meate: Now Death, saith the Apostle, is the stipend of the sinner: and therefore Death is as due to him, Vti militi stipendium suum, as is the stipend unto the souldier, saith Aretius. And so you see, the Work, Sin; the Wages, Death; and the Equity of it, as justly due to him, as the stipend is to the Souldier; For, the wages of Sin is Death.

Aretius in Rom. c.6.23.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

Of the eſpeciall application of each one of theſe three parts of the whole Text.

AND now, to preſſe each one of theſe points to make impreſſion in our hearts, let us ever learne and remember;

The application of the former doctrine.

1 Leſſon.

First, ſeeing ſinne is ſo various, ſo ambiguous, ſo horrible, and ſo odious, in its meandrian windings, we ſhould be very carefull to look into the ſecret corners, and tortuous labyrinths of the ſame; for it comes (as I ſhewed you) creeping by degrees, and it comes vayled with ſhadowes into our ſoules.

Looke into all the Eccleſiaſticall Stories, and you ſhall ſee that neither Idolatry nor Superſtition ſtept into its height at firſt, but rather crept on by little and little; Saint Peters Succeſſor was long before he could come to weare a triple Crówne; ſo Satan ſeekes to bring in ſinne; and therefore, ſeeing that

As the Serpent crept into Paradice, ſo the Divell creepeth into our hearts, & draweth us into the height of ſin by little and little.

——Serò medicina paratur,
Cum mala per longas convaluere moras;

It is hard to cure an old feſtered diſeaſe, we ſhould obſtare principijs, withſtand the very firſt beginnings of ſinne, and hate the very garment, that is any waies ſpotted or ſtained with iniquity, that is, the very leaſt thing that may occaſionate evill.

Iude verſ. 23.

But you will ſay, how ſhall this be done? you tell us what we ſhould doe, but you ſhew us not the way to doe it? I anſwer, that I finde two ſpeciall meanes, whereby Satan ſought to inlarge the Kingdome of Sinne, and by which, he had almoſt overthrowne the Kingdome of Iſrael: The one was, the advice of Baalam, the ſonne of Beor, a great Prophet, that taught Balak King of Moab, to intangle Iſrael, by making mutuall matches and mariages betwixt their Children; whereby the anger of the Lord was ſo kindled, that he ſlew of them three and twenty thouſand in one day.

How wee may withſtand and hinder the growth of ſin.

Num. 24. 14.
1 Cor. 10. 8.

The other was, the practice of Ieroboam, the ſonne of Nebat, a great King, that to eſtabliſh his Kingdome, did make Officers, and Prieſts, of the baſeſt of the people; and thereby he made all Iſrael for to ſin.

1 Kings 12. 31.
1 Kings 13. 31.

And therefore, if you would ſuppreſſe, or hinder the increaſe of ſin, you muſt take heed, among other things, of theſe two eſpeciall points.

Two things to be done.

First, Marry not your Children unto ſinners, and if you thinke Popery not to be the beſt religion, if you thinke it to be, as it is, full of idolatry and ſuperſtition, marry not your children unto any Papiſt, whatſoever his meanes or eſtate ſhall be; preferre not the love of the world before the love of God; but looke rather into the ſincerity of their Religion, the purity of their profeſſion, and the uprightneſſe of their converſation, then the greatneſſe of their reputation here amongſt men: and if you find them Drunkards, Swearers, Players, Idolaters, ſuperſtitious, or leud livers, or any waies inclined to theſe, or the like ſinnes; decline you from them, and meddle not with them; leaſt their ſins doe bring a plague and puniſhment, to conſume both you and yours; for though it be a good thing to beſtow thy Daughter in marriage; yet is it not good, unleſſe it be to a man of underſtanding, ſaith the Wiſeman; Eccleſ. 7. 25. but they are a people void of reaſon, and a nation deſtitute of underſtanding, that turne the Divine Verity into Idolatry, or that doe any waies erre from Gods Commandements.

1 That we ſhould not marry our Children but to the beſt men.

Secondly, make not any Officers, eſpecially Prieſts, of the baſeſt of the people; but looke into their lives, and conſider well their profeſſion; yea, marke their inclination: and whom you ſee corrupted with ſin, or any waies infected with the poyſon of iniquity, drunkenneſſe, prophaneſſe, cruelty, idolatry, or ſuperſtition, promote them not unto your ſeates of Governement; or if they be promoted, and preferred by others, yet have you nothing to doe with that ſtoole of wickedneſſe;

2 That we ſhould not make any Officers, eſpecially Prieſts, but thoſe that are truly religious & honeſt.

Pſal. 94. 20.

wickednesse; receive them not into your Houses, entertaine them not at your Tables, have no commerce or conversation with them, meddle not with them, favour them not; for you may be sure that they will favour sinne; and you should feare, least by medling with them, you should bee defiled, and tainted with sinne; for the bewitching of naughtinesse, doth soone obscure things that are honest.

Wisd.4.10.

But make much of them that feare the Lord, and whom you see zealously affected to follow the true Religion, and earnestly labouring to leade an upright conversation; O let them be helped, and furthered, to be promoted both in Church and Common-wealth; for you may be sure, that they will faithfully doe what lyeth in them, to suppresse Idolatry and all iniquity: Who so is wise, will ponder these things; and he shall understand, and perceive, and feele, the loving kindnesse of the Lord: And as sin seekes to creepe by degrees, so if you looke into the lives of men, you shall see how it comes fairely clad, and vailed, with the shaddowes of vaine excuses.

That we should make much of those that are good and godly men, and doe our best to promote such into dignity.

Excuses of sinners 1 Of infirmity.

Sometimes of infirmity, either of Age, or of Nature; young men thinke it too soone for them to be precise and zealous, old men are weake, and are not able to indure any longer service; the wrathfull man, with Lamech, layeth all the fault on his fury, if he slayes a man in his wound, and a young man in his hurt; the Drunkard saith, it was his drinke, and not he, that acted all the mischiefe; and the lascivious man excuseth himselfe, with the heate of his blood, and the lust of his flesh.

Gen.4.23.

2 Of conformity.

Sometimes of conformity, the proud, the drunken, the ambitious, the covetous, and the like sinnefull men, they doe but as most men doe; and why should they be singular?

3 Of simplicity. Gen.3.7.

Sometimes of simplicity, their meaning is good, what evill soever they doe. And thus sin covers it selfe, like Adam, with the fruitlesse figge-leaves of hypocrisie.

Psal.148.12.

But alas beloved, we must know, that for Gods Husbandry, no season proves unseasonable; but young men and maidens, old men and children, must praise and serve the Lord; and Nature must be subdued by Grace, if ever we will be the Children of Glory; and all your excuses of sin will not free your soules from eternall death; but as the Proverbe is, Kill a man when thou art drunke, and thou shalt be hanged when thou art sober; So sweare, and raile, and rage, and offend thy God, and abuse man, when thou art in thy drinke, in thy fury, and God will lay the punishment on thee, and not on thy drinke, when thou shalt not have a drop of drinke to quench thy thirst, nor a droppe of water to coole thy tongue: And we have learnt it in Gods Schoole, that Iudah must not sinne, no, though all Israel should play the Harlot; but, as the River Alphæus convayes it selfe, through the Seas, into his beloved Arethusa, and yet participates not at all with the Sea-saltish humour; so must Lot preserve himselfe chaste in the middest of Sodome, and the Saints in the middest of the World; as I have shewed at large in my Treatise, of the Delights of the Saints; And the Schoole of Divinity teacheth us, that Bonum est de integra causa, The beginning, meanes, and ending of every action, must needs be right, or the whole action will prove wrong: and therefore wee must take away these vailes from sin, if wee would perceive the ouglinesse of sinne; and so escape the wages of Sinne, which is Death.

Luk.16.24.

That we ought to keepe our selves spotlesse in the midst of the wicked.

The Delights of the Saints. Page.47.

3 Lesson.

Secondly, seeing Sinne is the reall, and radicall cause, Et mali, & morbi, & mortis, Of weakenesse, sickenesse, miserie, death, and destruction, (a pernicious parent of most dreadfull and deadly off-spring;) for foolish men are plagued, because of their offences; and I will smite thee (saith God himselfe unto Iacob) because of thy sinnes; and it is an axiome infallible, that sin and punishment are inseparable companions; so inseparable, that the Hebruists doe often call them both, by one name; as where the Text saith, Sinne lyeth at the doore, and My sinne is greater then I can beare; and againe, your Sinne shall finde you out; there

Psal.107.17.

Mich.6.13.

Gen.4.7. & ver.13.

Arius

Arias Montanus, and Tremellius tranſlate it, puniſhment: therefore if we feele any plagues or miſeries, either Dearth of Corne, or decaying of Trade, increaſe of Superſtition, or decreaſe of Religion, or any ſuch like plagues and miſeries; let us not blame the times, nor the truth of God; but let us lay the fault where it is, upon our ſelves, and upon our own Sins; for though the many multitude ſay, it was a good world with them, When they ſacrificed unto the Queene of Heaven, yet the King of Heaven knowes, what a wofull time it was for Man, when the Crucifixe was kiſſed with the kiſſes of their Mouthes, and Ieſus Chriſt was crucified againe with the workes of their hands; and when they changed, The truth of God into a lye, and Worſhipped and ſerved the creature, made a god with their own hands, More then the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever, Amen. And if we would be free from plagues, free from puniſhments; let us free our ſelves from ſin.

Numb. 32 23. That we ſhould acknowledge our own ſins to be the true cauſe of all our miſeries.

Ier. 44. 17.

Cant 1.

Rom. 1. 25.

For though Hieruſalem was a glorious cittie, the joy of the whole earth, yet the ſins of that nation brought the ſame to duſt; it is reported of Quinſay in China, that it hath ſixteene hundred thouſand of inhabitants, that it is an hundred miles in compaſſe, that there are in it 12. thouſand ſtone bridges of marble, and that ſome of them are of ſuch height and ſtatelineſſe as a great ſhip with her top ſaile may paſſe under them; but the Scriptures tell us of Alexandria, ſpecified in the Prophet Nahum under the name of No, that it had the ſea for a ditch, Put and Lubim for her helpers, Egypt and Æthiopia for her ſtrength, and that it was a cittie full of people; and more particularly, it is ſaid of Ninive, that it multiplied her Marchants above the ſtarres, that her Princes were as the graſhoppers, and that there were in it ſixſcore thouſand perſons, that could not diſcerne betwixt the right hand and the left; ſo Babilon is deſcribed by Herodotus to be ſo ample and ſo inſolent in her buildings, reared up to heaven by the Princes of the earth, ſo populous and ſo full of multitudes, as if it had beene ſowen with the ſeede of man; yet if theſe, or the greateſt of theſe, or if there be greater in the world, doe ſin againſt God, and provoke his wrath againſt them, he will blow upon them and they ſhall wither, he will ſpeake the word and they ſhall come to nothing; for if you lay more weight upon the roofe, then the pillers can ſupport, the houſe muſt needs fall, though the pillers were of braſſe, and ſin is of ſuch an intollerable weight, that no man, no houſe, no cittie, no kingdome is able to ſtand under it, for iniquity is like a talent of lead, that preſſeth downe to the bottomeleſſe pit; it is a burden to the whole earth and makes it reele too and fro like a drunken man; it is a burthen to all creatures and maketh them grone and travell in paine, and it is ſuch a burthen to God himſelfe, that it preſſeth him even as a cart is preſſed which is full of ſheaves, and it lay ſo heavie upon his ſhoulders, that the weight thereof made him ſweate the drops of blood, and it lieth ſo heavie upon the ſoule of every ſinner, that as a malefactor preſſed to death, crieth for weight, to end his paine the ſooner, ſo this calls to heaven for the burthen of the Lord, that is, for more vengeance to be inflicted upon the impenitent ſinner; and therefore, though the Phyſitians potion and the fearefull mans practice to eſcape the plague be to flie citò & longè, and to returne tardè & cautè, be ſomewhat availeable, and not altogether to be miſliked; yet is this nothing els, but as the Prophet ſpeaketh, to flie from a Lyon and to meete a Beare, to eſcape the ſword of Barak and to fall under the hammer of Iahell, to avoid one, and it may be the better, and to be overtaken of another, perhaps farre worſer; but deſine a malo & fac bonum, to eſchew evill and to do good is the potion, that delivereth from all danger, and will remove the evill which we feare, that it ſhall not come neere us; for though the Iudge had pronounced ſentence againſt the Ninivites, yet the guilty perſons by repentance did diſſolve it; they did not flie out of the cittie, but abiding at home, and flying from their ſinnes, they diſanulled the ſentence; they heard their houſes ſhould fall upon their heads, yet none of them did forſake his houſe, but every one of them departed from his wicked way; for they truſted not to the change of place for their ſafety, but to the change and amendment of their manners; and yet all this repentance of theirs was built upon uncertainties; for all that they had was but this, who can tell whether God will turne

Iſay 24 20.

Amos 2 13.

Luke 21. 24.

Iſa. 5. 30.

Iſa. 1. 14.

Iſa. 66. 15.

Epiſcop. Lond. in Ionah ex p. verus. geog. de ſcript.

Nahum 3. 8, 9, 16, 17.

Ionah 4. 11.

Herodot. l. 1.

Ier 31, 37.

The Phyſitians rule to eſcape the plague.

Amos 5. 19.

Iudg. 4. 19.

Chryſoſt. ad popul. Antioch.

Ionah 3. 9.

and repent, and turne away from his fierce wrath that we perish not; but we have a most certaine promise, both in the Law and Gospell, and they were ignorant of both, that if we will repent us of our sins, God will repent him of the evill that he threatneth against us.

I know that the feare of Poperies comming againe, with the superstitions of that idolatrous Church, hath spread it selfe over the face of this whole Iland; but alas, We feare where no feare is; for I dare confidently affirme, that it never was his Majesties mind, nor the purpose of the State, to bring in Idolatry and superstition into this land againe; for We have washed our feet, and shall we foule them againe? But the secrets of the State, is more then either I can perceive, or most of you well understand; Or if they did, yet were it in vaine, Quia non est consilium contra Dominum; because no device of man can subvert the truth of God, unlesse our sins doe provoke our God, to remove our Candlestick, and to take away our light: and therefore though all the Iesuites of the world, and all the Cardinals of Rome, nay, though all the divels of Hell, should do their worst against us; yet if we feare our God, and forsake all sin, the divels may have all their servants, before they all shall be able to hurt any one servant of the Lord; quia non plus valet ad deijciendum terrena pœna, quam ad erigendum divina tutela; because He that is in us, is greater then he that is in the World; and he is more able to preserve us, then the Prince of darknesse is to destroy us.

Cantic 5.3.

Revel.2.5. Nulla nocebit adversitas si nulla dominetur iniquitas. Gregor.

Cyprian.

1 Iohn 4.4.

And therefore, if you think Popery to be evill, as I am sure it is, and if you would be free from superstition, as I hope you doe all desire to be; then never feare the State, nor lay the blame on others; but leave your sins, and Turne to the Lord your God, with all your hearts, and with all your soules, and you shall see the Salvation of the Lord, which he will shew unto us this day; for the Egyptians, whom you have seene, and feare, you shall see them againe no more for ever; he Lord shall fight for you, and you may be sure, no evill shall happen unto you; it shall not come nigh your dwelling; for the only way to escape all punishments is to forsake all sins.

That we should turne to the Lord our God.

Exod. 14.13.

Neither do I say this, as if we could be cleane from all sins; for I know it was Novatus his error, and we must all know it for an error, that a Christian after Baptisme doth not sin, and it was but a Pelagian conceit, before him invented by Pythagoras, that the exercise of vertue rooteth out all the seed of vices; for a Bad tree cannot bring forth good fruit, and in some things, saith the Apostle, I feare I may say (as it is in our last English translation) in many things we sin all; And if we say we have no sin, we deceive our selves, and there is no truth in us.

None free from sin.

Hieron. adversus. Pelag.

Mat. 7.18.

Iames 3.2. 1 Ioh. 1 8.

But I say this, that we should have a fervent desire, not to sin, and to say with the Prophet, O that my waies were made so direct, that I might keepe thy Commandements; and that we would endeavour, pro virili, to the uttermost of our abilities, not to sin, and labour alwaies, with the Apostle, to keepe a cleere conscience in all things, both before God and Man.

Psal. 119.

Acts 24.16.

Thirdly, seeing all miseries, death, and damnation, are as justly inflicted upon the sinner, as the poore souldier may justly claime his little stipend; we should not complaine against God, with Vespasian, Immerenti sibi vitam arripi, that he tooke away his life without any fault of his, or without any failing on his part; but wee should, with the Levites in Nehemiah, with Daniel, with Ieremy, and with all the rest of the men of God, commend the Lord, and condemne our selves, saying, surely thou art just in all that is come upon us, thou hast dealt truely, but wee have done amisse and dealt wickedly.

3 Lesson.

Sueton in vita Vesp. c. 10.

Nehem. 9.33.

And thus I have shewed thee, O man, quid sit malum, what is evill; and you have heard a large discourse of sin, and the most lamentable effect and wages of sin, that is, death; And now its a thousand to one, that the first thing, many one of us will doe, is to goe home, or perhaps afore we go home, to sin; some to sweare, some to their whores, some to be drunke, some to deceive, and most of us to some sin or other.

But if ever any of you doe, for those sins, receive this pay; then remember that I have told you, what you should have, Death; for the wages of Sinne is Death; and and I can doe no more, but pray to God, that he would give us grace to forſake Sin, that we may eſcape Death, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord; To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, three diſtinct Perſons, of that one eternall individed Eſſence, be given, as is moſt due, all praiſe, and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

A Prayer.

O Bleſſed God, which haſt created Man, we doe acknowledge that thou haſt made him righteous, but he ſought out many inventions, and hath moſt grievouſly ſinned againſt thy divine Majeſty, and thereby hath moſt juſtly pulled upon himſelfe, and all his poſterity all miſeries, death, and damnation: Yet thou deſireſt not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould turne from his wickedneſſe and live: And therefore we do confeſſe our ſins, we do deteſt our ſins, and we do moſt humbly pray thee, even for thy mercies ſake, for Ieſus Chriſt his ſake, to be merciſull unto us, to deale with us, not according to our offences, but according to thy Grace, to give us Grace to ſerve thee; that ſo we may be delivered from our juſt deſerved puniſhment, and be received into thine everlaſting favour, to praiſe and magnifie thy bleſſed Name, for ever and ever, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

A wearied loathed Life I leade, content with onely Sadneſſe,
To ſee my life oppreſt with Sinne, and with this worlds Madneſſe.
I alwaies ſtrive with wicked Sinne, yet doth my Sinne prevaile
I therefore hate my Seife, becauſe my Sinnes I cannot quaile.
And I do likewiſe wiſh for Grace, that I might never offend,
But truly ſerve my Maſter Chriſt, and pleaſe him to mine end.
And yet I ſee this tyrant Sinne, and wicked men do wrong me,
To Hell the one, to Miſeries, th'other ſtill would throng me.
But reaſon bids me for to Waite, till God delivereth me,
And fetch my priſon'd Soule from hence, to live at libertie.

Iehovæ Liberatori.

The Analysis of the second Treatise.

This Treatise sheweth,

1 What God is, and how God is knowne, what he is, two wayes:

1 As he is in himselfe: so none knoweth God but God himselfe.

2 As he hath expressed himselfe to us, and so he may be known

1 By way of negation.

2 By way of affirmation.

3 By way of super-excellency, and so hee is shewed to be

1 An eternall being in himselfe.

2 A giver of being
- 1 To all creatures.
- 2 To all his promises;

Which should teach us to labour to be united unto him, to be thankefull, and to believe all his promises.

3 An absolute Lord of all things, which should teach us to serve him for three especiall reasons.

1 By his Power, touching which is handled,

1 The number and quality of the adversaries of Gods power, which are
- 1 The Infidels, that will not believe in him.
- 2 The desperate men, that cannot hope in him.
- 3 The ubiquitaries of Germany.
- 4 The pontificials of Rome.

2 How the active power of God is to be cõsidered in respect

1 Of his inward operations.

2 Of his outward operatiõs, and so it must be considered
- 1 Relatively, as it respecteth the will and decree of God.
- 2 Absolutely, & so he can doe all things,
  - 1 Which are not contrary to Gods Nature.
  - 2 Which imply not contradiction.

3 The proofe of Gods omnipotency, which is shewed from

1 The Word of God.

2 The works of God
- 1 In the beginning of the world.
- 2 Throughout the continuance.
- 3 In the end of the world.

3 The consent of all Divines.

4 The testimony of many Heathens.

5 The confession of the very Divels.

4 The answering to the chiefest objections
- 1 Of the infidels.
- 2 Of the desperate.
- 3 Of the ubiquitaries.
- 4 Of the pontificials.

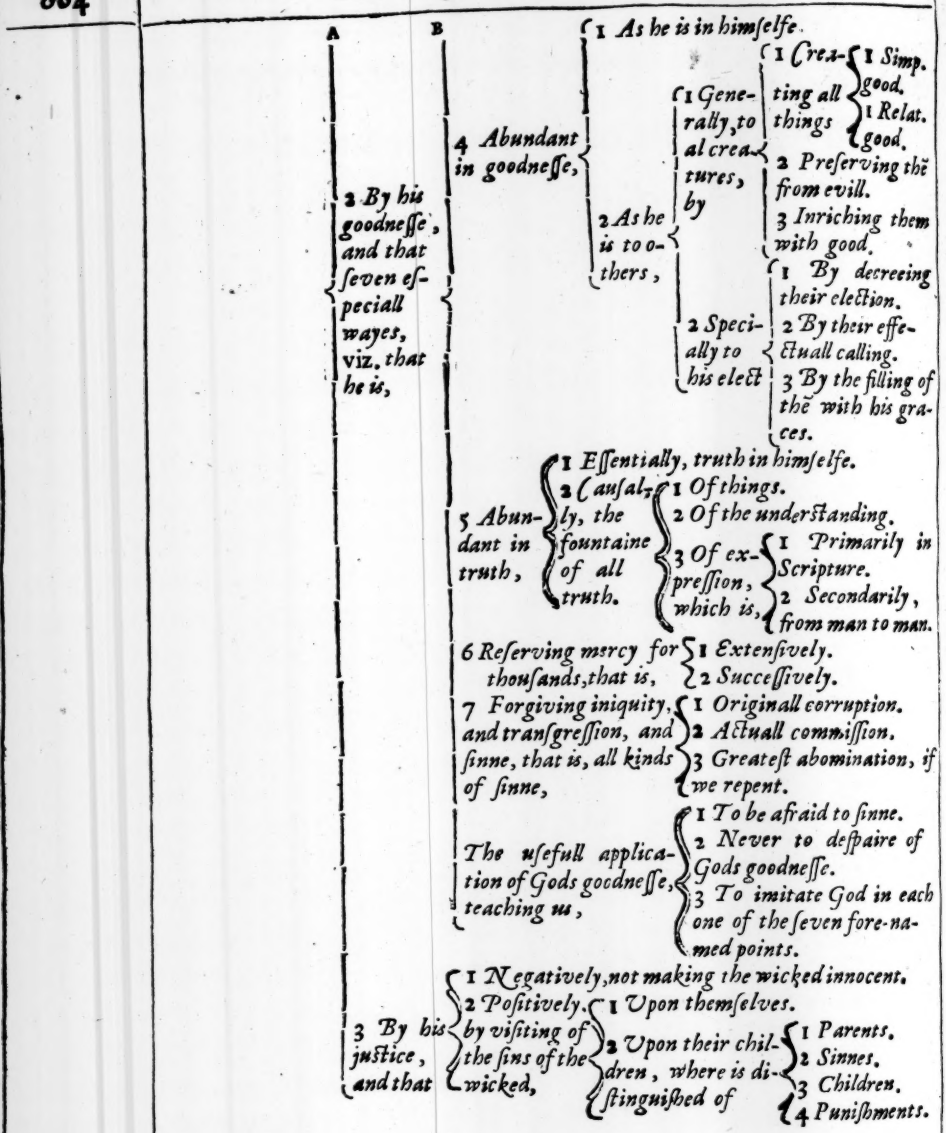
5 The usefull application of this doctrine, which serveth
- 1 To confute many heresies.
- 2 To comfort all the godly.
- 3 To condemne all the wicked.

2 What manner of God he is; where the nature of God is shewed by three speciall attributes, viz.

1 Mercifull, which consisteth in
- 1 Giving of graces.
- 2 Forgiving of sinnes.
- 3 Qualifying of punishments.

2 Gracious, which signifieth
- 1 Amiable.
- 2 Placable.
- 3 Liberall.

3 Slow to anger, shewed
- 1 By Scriptures.
- 2 By examples, old and new.



A
B
2 By his goodnesse, and that seven especiall wayes, viz. that he is,
4 Abundant in goodnesse,
1 As he is in himselfe
2 As he is to others,
1 Generally, to all creatures, by
1 Creating all things
1 Simp. good.
1 Relat. good.
2 Preserving thē from evill.
3 Inriching them with good.
2 Specially to his elect
1 By decreeing their election.
2 By their effectuall calling.
3 By the filling of thē with his graces.
5 Abundant in truth,
1 Essentially, truth in himselfe.
2 Causally, the fountaine of all truth.
1 Of things.
2 Of the understanding.
3 Of expression, which is,
1 Primarily in Scripture.
2 Secondarily, from man to man.
6 Reserving mercy for thousands, that is,
1 Extensively.
2 Successively.
7 Forgiving iniquity, and transgression, and sinne, that is, all kinds of sinne,
1 Originall corruption.
2 Actuall commission.
3 Greatest abomination, if we repent.
The usefull application of Gods goodnesse, teaching us,
1 To be afraid to sinne.
2 Never to despaire of Gods goodnesse.
3 To imitate God in each one of the seven fore-named points.
3 By his justice, and that
1 Negatively, not making the wicked innocent.
2 Positively, by visiting of the sins of the wicked,
1 Upon themselves.
2 Upon their children, where is distinguished of 1 Parents.
2 Sinnes.
3 Children.
4 Punishments.

The ſecond

Golden Candleſticke,

HOLDING

The ſecond greateſt Light of Chriſtian RELIGION.

Of the Knowledge of God.

EXOD. XXXIV. VI, VII.

Iehovah, Iehovah, Strong, Mercifull, and Gracious, ſlow to anger, and abundant in goodneſſe and truth.

Reſerving mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, and tranſgreſſion, and ſinne, and that will by no meanes cleare the guilty, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the childrens children, unto the third and fourth generation.

YOu have heard in my former Treatiſe, the poore and miſerable eſtate of diſtreſſed Man, how lamentable he made himſelfe by Sinne; I am now to ſhew you a poole of Bethesda, wherein, if we can but bathe our ſelves, we ſhall be made perfectly whole, and moſt comfortably delivered from all diſeaſes: and therefore, I beſeech you, let this Panchreſtum, this medicine for all maladies, be diligently acquired, and be moſt carefully applied to every ſickned ſoule: You ſhall find it in Ieruſalem, that is, in the Church of God, and no where elſe; for extra Eccleſiam non eſt ſalus, no ſalvation is out of the Church; and you ſhall find it by the ſheepe-market, that is, in the place where the ſheep of Chriſt, and children of God, do find all proviſion for their ſoules; that is, the holy and heavenly Scripture; and there, if you look, you ſhall find a porch ample enough for you to enter into this Bethesda, in theſe words, which I have read unto you.

The coherence of this with the former treatiſe.

Ioh. 5. 2.

Cyprian de unitate Eccleſiæ.

The Lord, the Lord God, or else, Iehova, Iehova, Strong, Mercifull, and Gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodnesse, and truth, &c. And I hope you will give the more diligent heed unto my words, Quia speciosi pedes Evangelizantium pacem, Esay 52.7. because (as the Prophet Esay saith) the feete of them that bring tydings of good things are most welcome unto us; and (as the Angell said unto the Shepheards,) Luk.2.10. I bring you tydings of great joy, which shall be unto all people; For I am now to preach and to expound, that gracious Sermon unto you here, which God himselfe hath Preached heretofore unto Moses, in Mount Sinay; and it containes the whole description of Almighty God, so farre forth, as himselfe thought it fit, to reveale himselfe at this time unto his people: and therefore Chrysost. uvior. loc in Mat. Hom. 9. Excutite pigritiam, quia non est res levis quam audituri estis; I doe most humbly crave your attention, and most diligent observation of these things; for I thinke that you can neither heare, nor reade, a sweeter Text, if God give me grace to handle it well.

It is large indeed, I must confesse, and my allotted time is short, and it is as difficult to contract much into a little, as to inlarge a little into much; yet seeing I cannot speake all that I would, I will, by Gods helpe, speake a little of all as I may.

The Occasion of these words. The occasion hereof is plaine enough, in this precedent Chapter; for Moses desired to see God; and God tells him he cannot; because it is as naturall unto him, to be invisible, as to be a God: and therefore Saint Iohn saith, Iohn 4.12. no man hath seene God at any time; yet, (to satisfie Moses, so much as was fit for his happinesse) God saith; that hee should see his backe-parts; that is, he should understand so much concerning God, as the weake understanding of Man could possibly comprehend; for he saw nothing at all, after any visible manner, but onely heard this voice describing God; and we must know, that God hath neither forepart nor backepart, that can be seene with any mortall eyes; and therefore this phrase, of seeing Gods backeparts, is onely used, quoad captum nostrum, after a humane manner; and it importeth thus much in effect; thou shalt see, that is, thou shalt understand, or see with thine eyes of knowledge, my backeparts, that is, so much concerning mee, as thy weake apprehension shall bee able to comprehend; For

That God is not to be seene with any materiall eyes. First, That God is no otherwise to be seene, then with the spirituall eyes of our Faith and understanding, it appeareth plaine; because Moses here saw no visible thing, but onely heard a voice; So, when God appeared to Elias, there passed 1 Kings.19.11,12. before the Lord a mighty strong winde, but the Lord was not in the Winde; then an Earthquake, but the Lord was not in the Earthquake; and then came a still soft Voice, and the Lord was in that Voyce; and so when he delivered the Law, hee saith; Ye saw no similitude, save onely that you heard a voice; therefore, as God sheweth himselfe none otherwise then by a voice, so he can be seene none otherwise then by the spirituall eyes of our understanding.

That God ought not to be represented by any outward shape. And this doth exceedingly condemne the great folly of those men, that, measuring God by themselves, do clothe him with the figure and the affections of a man, and think that they doe not, nor cannot, serve God aright, unlesse they make him like unto a man or a beast, that they might have before them some present object, on which they might settle their eyes and their devotion; This was the language of the Israelites unto Aaron; Exod.32.1. make us gods, which shall goe before us; which wee may see to be with us; and this is the practice of many, that because God made man to the image of God, therefore to requite his curtesie, they againe will make God to the image of man; & after they have discharged some small ceremonies and outward services to these visible gods, they conceit themselves to be safe, not onely from their sins already committed, but also to be licenced to commit those sins that they intended: so these sinfull men doe become as senceless, as their painted woodden gods; for they that make them are like unto them, and so are all they that put their trust in them: but our God is invisible to any mortall eye: and therefore, when I pray unto him, I will rather close mine eyes of flesh, that no outward Psal.115.8.

That we should rather make our selves spirituall, like God; then make God corperall, like unto us.

object

object may disturbe the eyes of my minde, then present my God to the eyes of my body in any outward shape.

Secondly, that by the backe-parts of God is understood so much knowledge of God, as our weake apprehension can conceive, it is apparant in this place; for Moses neither saw nor heard any other thing, but onely this voice, proclaiming these words, that I have read unto you; and therefore this is all one, as if the voice had said unto him, this is all thou canst understand of me, that I am such and such a one, as I shew unto thee: It is true indeed, that I am so glorious, so excellent, so ineffable, and so incomprehensible in my selfe, that if I should shew thee my Majesty, and fully declare unto thee mine excellency, what I am, thou wert not able to comprehend it; and therefore humano more loqui, to speake unto thee as a man, that thou maist the better understand how farre thou mayest know me, the true God; I would have thee to looke upon a Man, and to consider how much more glory and excellency shineth in his face, then in his backeparts; even so thou must understand, that all this, which I shew unto thee, concerning my selfe, in comparison of what I am, in the excellency of my Majesty, is but as the backe-parts of a man, in comparison of his face and fore-parts; So farre short is this, that thou canst know of me, to what I am; and yet this least part of my excellency is so much, as thou, or any man breathing upon the face of the earth, is able to comprehend; yea more then any man is or shall be ever able fully to understand, while he liveth in this mortall life.

By the back-parts of God is understood so much knowledge of God as we are able to comprehend.

That we can conceive but the least part of Gods excellencie.

And therefore the meaning of this phrase, to see the backe-parts of God, is nothing else, but the revealing of himselfe unto Moses, so farre as Moses was able to comprehend him, that is, a little, but not neere all his properties; for to bee incomprehensible is as proper to God; as to be Invisible; Quia secundum essentiam incognitus & secundum majestatem immensus; because his Majesty is immeasurable, and his being is unconceivable, saith Thalassius; πάντα γὰρ ἐστι, πάντα δὲ βλέπει Θεός; For he is every where, and he seeth every thing, when as nothing can see him.

Thalas. apud Pan. sinum Presbyt. Iob 28.24.

Ob. But here it may be, some will say, that although now, by reason of our sin that blindeth us, we can neither see his Essence, nor comprehend his excellencie; yet when this corruption shall put on incorruption, and this vaile of ignorance shall be taken from us, we shall fully see him, and comprehend him in his excellencie; for, wee shall see him face to face, we shall see him as he is, and wee shall know him as wee are knowne: And therefore he is neither so invisible, nor so incomprehensible, but that he might be seene and comprehended, were it not for our sins and ignorance, that doe so blinde our understandings, that wee cannot perceive him.

1 Cor. 15.53.

1 Cor. 13.12.

Sol. To this I answer, that if Adam had never sinned, yet could he never have seene the essence of God, unlesse God would have taken some visible shape upon him to appeare unto him; for no man saw God at any time, nor can see him, saith the Apostle; therefore Adam, in his innocencie, saw him not, but in an assumed shape; and so I say, that in the life to come, when the Saints shall be free from all sinne, and indued with a farre more excellent measure of knowledge and understanding, then ever Adam was in Paradise, they shall never see the Deitie, any otherwise, then in the face of Iesus Christ; for so the Apostle sheweth, that God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkenesse, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Iesus Christ; And our Saviour himselfe more plainely saith, when Philip desired to see the Father; Hee that knoweth mee, knoweth the Father; and hee that seeth mee, seeth the Father; because I am in the Father and the Father in mee: And therefore seeing it is an essentiall attribute of the Deitie, to bee invisible; I say, that Visio Dei beatifica, The blessed sight and fruition of the God-head, which the Saints shall have in Heaven to make them happy, shall bee no otherwise revealed unto us, then in the face of the Man Iesus Christ; because the Deitie, considered in it selfe, Inhabitat lucem inaccessibilem,

That the Essence of God shall not be seene in Heaven, but in the face of Iesus Christ. Ioh. 1.18. 1 Tim. 6.16.

2 Cor. 4.6.

Ioh 14.7. & 9. & 10.v.

1 Tim. 6. 16. inaccessibilem, dwelleth in the light that no man can attaine unto it, as the Apostle sheweth.

And so you see the occasion of these words; that God having told Moses he could neither see his Essence, nor yet fully understand his Excellency; hee would notwithstanding so farre satisfie his desire, as to shew him all that hee could possibly comprehend; viz. that hee was Iehova, Iehova, strong, mercifull, and gracious, Et sic condescendit nobis Deus, ut nos consurgamus ei; And so God doth most graciously condescend, and make himselfe knowne to man, that man might ascend, and, as much as possibly lyeth in him, know his God.

The division of the Text. Now in all this Divine description of Almighty God, you may see these two especiall things set downe.

{1. Quid est / 2. Qualis est} Deus, that is, {1. What God is, and / 2. What manner of God hee is.}

And in the handling of these two points, I shall by Gods helpe spend and finish this whole Treatise.

The

The firſt part.

Chap. I.

Of the deſcription of God, how he may be knowne; what he is: and of this ſpeciall Name, Iehovah.

The chiefeſt happineſſe of man is to know God.

TOuching the firſt Part, Danda imprimis opera eſt, ut Deum noſcamus, quotquot fœlices eſſe volumus; It muſt be the chiefeſt care of all that would be happy, to know God, which is the chiefeſt happineſſe of all; for to feare God, and to keep his Commandements, Hoc eſt omnis homo; Eccleſ.12.13.

This is the duty, and this is the felicity of every man: At non potes aut amare quem non noveris, aut habere quem non amaveris; But thou canſt neither love him, whom thou doſt not know, nor enjoy him, whom thou doſt not love; Quia ignoti nulla cupido; becauſe knowledge is the ground of love; and whom we love not, we can neither ſeeke any helpe from him, nor yet render any ſervice to him: and therefore our Saviour ſaith, that this is eternall life, to know him to be the only true God and whom he hath ſent, Ieſus Chriſt: And this is the reaſon why ſo many thouſands ſhall be deſtroyed; becauſe they know not God: And this the very Heathens perceived, though they could not attaine unto it, when among all their Precepts, this was their chiefeſt leſſon, γνωθι τὸν Θεὸν, Know God; For the learning of which leſſon, S. Paul gives us this rule, that he which will come to God, muſt believe that God is, or that there is a God; becauſe it is impoſſible we ſhould know what he is, untill we believe, that he is.

Bernard. Ioh.17.3. 2 Theſ.1.8. Heb.11.6.

It is ſtrange, I confeſſe, that ſuch a man ſhould live amongſt men, as ſhould any wayes doubt, that there is a God; yet, as Ovid confeſſeth of himſelfe;

Sollicitor nullos eſſe putare deos.
Temptations oft ſollicit me,
To think in heart no gods to be;

Ovid. Amor. l.3. Eleg.8. Tentat enim dubiam mentem rationis egeſtas, Ecquænam fuerit mundi genitalis origo Lucret. l.5 Iuſtin Martyr in dial cum Typh. p.152. Videetiam Theodoret. de provident. ſer. 1. to 2 pag. 576.

So I feare that theſe ſollicitations and ſuggeſtions of Satan have prevailed, not only with diverſe of the Heathens, but alſo with many Chriſtians, which, as Iuſtin Martyr obſerveth, are ſo called, and yet are nullius numinis cultores, no better indeed than plaine Atheiſts, though not ſuch, as Diagoras and Theodorus, that did plainly deny all deity, but ſuch as the Prophet David ſpeakes of, that ſay in their hearts, there is no God, and this they do plainly ſhew by their lives; for they are corrupt and become abominable in their doings, and there is none of them that doth good, no not one; but though they do profeſſe they know God, yet, as the Apoſtle ſaith, by their works they denie him; for, as the Heathen man could ſay, Pſal.14.1. Titus 1.16.

——Tubulus ſi Lucius unquam,
Si Lupus, aut Carbo, aut Neptuni filius
Putaſſet eſſe Deos, tam perjurus aut tam impius fuiſſet?
Lucill demaunds, if any man could dreame,
That Tubul, Lupus, Carbo, and their curſed crue,
Or Neptunes ſonne, that impious Polipheme,
Would ſhew themſelves ſo perjur'd, ſo untrue;
If they had once a thought, but that there is
A God, that plagues what ev'r we do amiſſe.

Cicero de nat. deor. l.1.p.152.

And therefore, if we cannot perſwade them to believe it, and to frame their life according to their faith; yet we muſt make this truth ſo cleare unto them, that

What we muſt prove to them that will not believe it.

Proofs that there is a God, of two sorts.

that they cannot denie it, but that there is a God. The proofes hereof are brought either

{1 Out of the Scriptures. 2 Out of the creatures.} But they that will not believe, there is a God, how shall we ever perswade them to believe, that the Scripture is the Word of God? For did they yeeld to this, they could not denie the other; and therefore the best testimonies to confute them, must be from themselves; from reason, and from those deductions that are made from the rules of reason.

Atheists believe not the Scriptures

Acts 14.17.

And truly God left not himselfe without witnesse sufficient, at all times, and in every place, to prove unto every one, that there is a God: and therefore it was requisite we should have more testimonies than the Scriptures, to testifie the same, because there are many millions of men, that neither saw nor heard of the Scripture, and yet are convinced by many arguments to confesse, that there is a God. I will only set down a very few. And Proofs that there is a God.

1 From the creation of things, which could not produce themselves.

1 Either every thing, in his own kind, must be the cause and authour of his owne being; or els only one thing, which is infinite and all-sufficient in it selfe, must give a nature and essence unto all other existing creatures.

But no creature can or could give being unto it selfe; because

1 Reason. Grotius de verit. relig. p.8. Quod non est, agere non potest.

1. That, which is not, cannot produce any thing, and hath no power to be, before it was; because that to do doth presuppose to be.

2 Reason.

2. Because that, if things produced themselves, then certainly every thing would give the best being unto it selfe; and every part would be the best part in every creature; the earth would be the heaven, the starre would be the sun, the ape would be a lion, the senslesse plant would be a rationall man, and in man the foot would be the head, and every member would be the eye, or the heart, or that which he thought best; and so by this we should have no comparison, either of creatures, or of parts among themselves; but all and every one would be the best. And

3 Reason.

D. Goodman of the fall of man. p.408.

3. Because that, if they produced themselves, then every thing would be wholly for it selfe, for it owne good; and not for the good of others; but we see, that nothing is for it selfe alone, but in relation to other things; as the Sun is in continuall motion, not for his owne use, but for the good of all this inferiour world; and in every kind there is a difference of sex, that the one might be fitted and referred to the good of the other; and so of all things els; their goodnesse is to be extended for the good of others; and therefore, these things could not subsist of themselves, but were constituted by a more intellective and supereminent agent, who, fore-seeing all things, did so ordaine all things, that by their relation one to another, they might make a perfect demonstration of his deity.

2 From the disposition of all things. Molinæum de cognit. Dei. p.6, Aug. §.12.

2 As the production of things, so the perfection of that order, wherein all things do subsist, doth sufficiently shew that there is a God; for confusion comes by chance, but order is the child of wisdome and industry; and therefore, as when I see a library, wherein all the books are so exactly disposed in their ranks, that they cannot be better ordered, I shall presently suppose they came not to those stations by their owne election, but rather by the care and disposition of him, that is their owner; so, when we consider the fixed seasons of the yeare, the beauty and operation of the heavens, how the sun doth rule the day, and the moone and the starres do governe the night, the seas ebbing and flowing, and imbracing the earth in her armes, which ballanced with equall waights, doth hang as a ball in the midst of the ayre, and gives way to the perpetuall gliding of the streames to passe through the same, into their owne proper places, and then behold the growth and vertue of all flowers and plants, and the diverse formes, shapes, and qualities of all other living creatures, and the many multitudes of other things, that are so admirably disposed for the continuall preservation, and unspeakable benefit of the whole universe; there is no man that can be so strongly dull, as to thinke these things could possibly be thus, without the power and Pfal. 136.8.

Consideration of the seas, how admirable.

wisdome

wisedome of a most expert and exceellent disposer, which is God.

3. As the creation and disposition of these things which we see, doe sufficiently prove that there is a God; so the continuall gubernation and preservation of the same doth no lesse; for if a ship cannot passe the seas without a Pilot, an army cannot subsist without a Generall, and a kingdome cannot be governed without a Ruler; nay a company of boyes can never be kept in order without a Tutor; then how should we thinke it possible for this whole world, and all the things in this world to subsist, and so sweetly to sympathise and accord together, without the care and providence of a most wise and omnipotent Governor, which is God.

3 From the gubernation of all things.

4. The innumerable and almost infinite accidents that every man hath seene, or may see every day, doe infallibly convince the most incredulous heart, against her will, to yeeld, that there is a God; for let him but consider, how he came into the world; for parents have not power to beget children when they please, for if they had, then many Kings, Princes, Nobles, and rich men, would never, as oftentimes they are compelled to do, leave their kingdomes and all their possessions unto strangers; then let him thinke how strangely he hath beene preserved, and how many things have happened, so farre beyond his owne reach and imagination, how they should come to passe, without some secret power of an incomprehensible disposer; then let him ponder with himselfe, how it happeneth, that in the fairest day in summer, when the heavens are most serene, the windes asleepe, the clouds dispersed, and the Sunne smiling upon these inferiour things; yet all of a sudden, the glorious light doth hide his face, the heavens put on their mourning weeds, the windes like roaring Lyons rush out of their dens, the cloudes conglomerate themselves together like armed men, and there followeth a mighty tempest that would shake the earth, and rent the mountaines, and reduce all things to their ancient chaos by these haile-stones and coales of fire; and then againe a sudden calme, and all are at peace, all are well, as if there had beene no distemper; and when he hath runne over a thousand of such things, which his meditations may bring into his minde, then let him consider, that, if either himselfe or any thing els was able to bring it selfe to being before it was, then it is a great deale easier for that thing, which is, to preserve it selfe, then for that, which is not, to produce it selfe; and therefore let him provide, if he can, for his perpetuall preservation, let him arme himselfe against all the assaults of death; hee may have all the advice of Doctors to direct him, he may have all the vertue of herbes and mineralls to be his medicines, and he shall have all his friends to assist him; and if all this will not doe it; then let this and the contemplation of all these things assure him, that there is a God, which doth all these, and whatsoever els pleaseth him.

4 From daily innumerable observatiō of things.

The alteration of the weather how admirable.

It is easier for any being to preserve it selfe, then to produce it selfe.

5. Though such things, as proceed from mans will and arbitriment, are not the same with all men; yet, except it be among such as have the light of reason almost altogether ecclipsed, or abolished by their savage cruelty and most odious affections, this notion is every where admitted of, by the consent of all nations, that there is some divine Majesty, which ought to be adored, as you may see, by the severall religions of all countries, who will worship any thing for their god, rather then they will be without a god.

5 From the generall consent of all nations.

Hugo Grotius de verit. relig. p. 93.

6. The testimonies of the wisest men and of the sharpest apprehentions in the world, doe all confirme this, that there is a God; and to make this manifest, Plutarch distinguisheth the wisest men of this world to be either

1. Philosophers
2. Law-givers
3. Poets

& hi omnes uno ore dicunt Deum esse, and all these with one voice, do say that there is a God; For 6 By the testimonies of all the wisest men.

Plutarch in amat. to. 3. mor. p. 416.

1. Plato, not onely saith it, but also confirmeth it by many invincible reasons; that he is therefore called Moses Atticus, as if he had seene God face to face; Aristotle, though a man, saith Grotius, not very credulous in this kind; yet,

1 Philosophers affirme that there is a God.

Plato de legibus. l. 10. Euseb de prepar. l. 11. c. 6.

(if he was ſo in his firſt workes or yonger yeeres) we find that in his latter works, as in l. de mundo, p. 1566. and in *l.*1. *Metaph. to.*2.*c.*2.*p.*1372. he doth moſt plainely affirme God to be the cauſe and the beginning of all things, and in his laſt booke of naturall Philoſophie, after he had written five afore, (of 8 that hee writ in all) onely of motions and the affections of it, he doth end his laſt booke in the firſt mover, who is immoveable; for ſeeing all things, that are moved, are moved by ſome one thing, and that againe by another, and ſo forward, it muſt needs follow, that, in ſuch a chaine of motionarie things, becauſe we cannot proceed to what is infinite, we muſt needs ſtay at one firſt mover, which though he moveth all things, yet is himſelfe immoveable: Zeno, which Cicero calleth the Father of the Stoicks, doth not onely affirme that there is a God, but ſaith further, unum Deum eſſe, ipſumq́, & mentem & fatum & Iovem multisq́, alijs appellari nominibus, that there is but one God, which is ſometimes called by one name, and ſometimes by another: and Epicurus, quem nihil pudendum pudet, tamen Deum negare pudet; who was not aſhamed of any ſhamefull thing, yet was he aſhamed to denie that there is a God, as Du-Pleſſis ſaith.

The 6 laſt bookes of his 8 are of motion.
*Meluinus de cognit. Dei. p.*8.§.17.

Motion of things an inanſwerable argument againſt all Atheiſts to prove that there is a God.
*Cicero de nat deor. l.*3.
D Laertius in vita Zenon.

*Marnaus de verit. relig.c.*1.

2 The Law-givers affirme there is a God.
*Plut.to.*3. *conf. Colos.mural. p.*532

2. For the Law-givers, Plutarch ſaith, that in conſtitutione legum, facilius urbem condi ſine ſolo, quam civitatem coire ſine religione, in the making of their lawes, it is no more impoſſible for a man to build a cittie without a foundation, then it is for him to gather and guide his cittizens without religion; and therefore all the antient law-givers gave it out among their people, that they compoſed their lawes by the aſſiſtance of ſome one or other of the gods; as Menes, the law-giver of the Egyptians, from Mercury; Minos, the law-giver of the Cretians, from Iupiter; Lycurgus, the law-giver of the Lacedemonians, from Apollo; Zamolxis, the law-giver of the Getians, from the goddeſſe Veſta, Numa Pompilius, the law-giver of the Romanes, from Egeria; Zaleucus the law-giver of the Locrians, from Minerva; and ſo all the reſt, derive their lawes from their gods: and no wonder; becauſe as Iob ſaith, nullus eſt ſimilis in legis-latoribus; there is none like him amongſt all the law-givers; nay he is the onely law giver, which is able to ſave and to deſtroy, as Saint Iames teſtifieth; and God himſelfe ſaith, by me Kings doe raigne, and Princes decree juſtice: and therefore Plato ſaith, it is not man but God, qui legum condendarum eſt cauſa; which is the cauſe of the making of all good lawes.

*Diodor.Sicul.l.*1. *c.*5.

Iob 36.22. in vulgar ed.

Iames 4.12. Pro.8.15.

*Plato de legibus, l.*1

3 The Poets teach there is a God.

3. For the Poets, it is a common thing with them all, a Iove principium Muſe; to begin their works with the invocation of the gods; as Ovid ſaith,

*Ovid. Met.l.*1.

——dijs ceptis——
Aſpirate meis——ô gods I crave your helpe to aſſiſt me in this my worke;

for they had a perſwaſion, as Manilius ſaith, that

*Manilius, l.*1.

——Cœlo carmen deſcendit ab alto: the whole faculty of Poets depended more upon a divine incitation, then any humane gift or artificiall inſtruction; and therefore Martiall, in his ſcoffing vaine, ſaith of Cicero;

*Martial.l.*2.Epigr. 89.in Gaur.

Carmina quod ſcribis, muſis & Apolline nullo,
Laudari debes, hoc Ciceronis habes: that he was no Poet, becauſe he wanted Apollos helpe.

7. The teſtimony of every mans conſcience, and eſpecially of all or moſt wicked men, that continually affright them for their odious facts, doth ſufficiently ſhew unto them, that there is a God, which will one day call them to a ſtrict account for all their wicked deeds; for Suetonius reporteth of Caligula, that he was often heard to threaten Iupiter, ſaying,

7. The feares of mens conſciences teach there is a God.

*Sueton. in vita Calig.c.*22.*p.*161.

Εἰς γᾶν Δαναων πεμψω σε.

Vnto the land of Greece will I
Thee a confin'd bondman tie.

And he in his atheiſticall veine, would often repeat that Homericall verſe,

*Homer. Iliad. l.*3.

Σεῦ πάτερ ὑ πς σεῖο Θεῶν ὀλοώτερος ἄλλος.

That Iupiter was the worſe of all the gods; and yet as often as he heard it thunder, hee ſought out holes to hide his head; hee was ſo affrighted with the appreapprehention of this revenging God; for, as Lucretius saith,

——eſt mortalibus inſitus horror, Lucret. l. 5.
Qui delubra Deum nova toto ſuſcitat orbi
Terrarum, & feſtis cogit celebare diebus;

There is an inbred feare of God in all mens hearts, and according as they live vertuouſly or vitiouſly, ſo is this feare augmented or diminiſhed; Quis enim non timeat omnia providentem, & cogitantem, & ad ſe omnia pertinere putantem Deum? Cicero l. 1. de nat. deorum. for who can chooſe but feare a provident, remembring, and an all obſerving God, that profeſſeth all things to belong unto himſelfe? and therefore every one that is addicted to vice, is many times afraid at the ſhaking of a leafe; or if, as the Poet ſaith,

——Virides rubum dimovere lacertæ
Et corde & genibus tremit.
The Lizards greene do move the bramble,
He in his heart and knees doth tremble:

And though in the courſe of his proſperity he ſhakes off all thought of God; yet in any ſudden danger, he will cry out, ô God, and crave his aſſiſtance to be releeved, whom, in all his former actions he prophanely deſpiſed; And this feare of theſe men Lucretius deſcribeth at large, ſaying,

——Et magnum percurrunt murmura cœlum; Lucret. l. 5 p. 228.
Non populi gentes q; tremunt, reges q; ſuperbi
Corripiunt diuum perculſi membra timore?
Ne quod ob admiſſum fœdè, dictum q; ſuperbè
Pœnarum grave ſit ſolvendi tempus adactum.

Which I find thus tranſlated in the Bb of Sarum's Atheomaſtix. Epiſcop. Sarùbur. Ath. l. 1. c. 12. p. 129
When ratling thunders run along the clouds,
Doe not both people poore and Princes proud
A terror feele, as ſtrooke with feare of God?
Doe not their trembling joynts then dread his rod!
Leſt, for foule deeds, and black-mouth'd blaſphemies
The ruſull time be come that vengeance cries.

Or if any of theſe wicked men be ſo foole-hardie, and hath his conſcience ſo ſeared, that he is growne ſenceleſſe of all his ſins; yet God, which planted the ſame in his heart, will oftentimes awaken the ſame when they are aſleepe, and ſhew himſelfe unto them in the dreames of the night, that will not ſee him by the light of the day, as you may ſee in Wiſd. 17. 13. &c. For though their ſleepe is a kind of reſt unto their bodies, yet, in the meane while they do find no reſt in their ſoules, but terrors, and viſions and thoughts full of perturbations, as the Poet Juvenal ſets the ſame downe at large, Vide Iob 4. 12, 13 &c. & 33. v. 14. 15.

Nocte, brevem ſi forte indulſit cura ſoporem,
Et toto verſato toro jam membra quieſcunt;
Continuò templum, & violati numinis aras;
Et quod præcipuis mentem ſudoribus urget,
Te videt in ſomnis tua ſacra, & major imago
Humanâ, turbat pavidum, cogit q; fateri.

Or if they ſhould eſcape all this in their life, yet when they ſee themſelves attached with ſickneſſe, and death ready to carry them into the jayle, then will they ſurely thinke, that this is ſent as a ſcourge of God to plague them for contemning him.

I might here accumulate many arguments more, which prove to every man that there is a God: but I doe not this to ſatiſfie the doubting minds of wicked Atheiſts, that beleeve there is no God; becauſe I beleeve that ſuch deſerve rather to be executed by the tormentor then inſtructed by any Philoſopher, but wee bring theſe things to ſhew, how farre they are beyond excuſe, that having ſo many arguments before their eyes, (nam Iupiter eſt, quodcunq; vides) to prove that there is a God, will notwithſtanding not glorifie him as God; And therefore, as by the operation of our ſoules, we doe know that we have ſoules though we ſee Why the Author proſecuted the former doctrine. Rom. 1 21.

them not; so by the works of God, in our selves, and in all things els, we do assuredly believe, and most certainly know, there is a God, though our blind eyes cannot see this great light; And, though the negligence of the Heathens, and their wickednesse, that blinded all their light, which nature had ingraffed in their soules, made them multitudes of gods, that in Hesiods time they amounted to the number of thirty thousands; yet to us, that are guided by the light of Gods Word, and are inspired with the graces of Gods Spirit, to believe that Word, it is most apparent that there is but one God; and this, not onely the Scriptures, but also reason it selfe can make it plaine; because (as Grotius saith) the multiplication of particular things, that are of the same nature, doth proceed from the exuberancy and fruitfulnesse of those causes, from whence such things are generated more or lesse; but of God there is neither any beginning, nor any cause of his existence; and therefore it is impossible there should be any more than one being, that is to be of necessity, and of it selfe.

Grotius de veritate Chr. relig. p. 15. Multiplicatio rerum singularium congenerum est ex causarum fœunditate, &c.

Now for the understanding and knowledge of this one, eternall and omnipotent being, we must understand that there are three wayes of knowing God, (I speak not of that knowledge which the Booke of Nature teacheth; for that is too small to make us happy, but of that which we do collect out of the Booke of God) and those, according to the Schooles, are these:

That there are three wayes of knowing God.

1 according to what he is in himselfe.

The first is, according to that, which he is in himselfe, whereby he is ἀκατάληπτος, unspeakable, infinite, and incomprehensible; and thus, none knoweth God but God himselfe; and the reason hereof is, that although, Nihil magis intelligibile quam Deus, nothing of his owne nature is more intelligible than God; because he is the first, the perfectest, and the truest being, most pure and simple, and free from any matter; yet is our understanding towards God, but as the eyes of the Owles, or Reremouse, which are not able to behold the brightnesse of the Sun: and therefore, thus, if we seek to know him, we shalbe but like Symonides, that being commanded by the Emperour to tell him, what God was, demaunded three dayes respite for to resolve so great a quære; and when he came, he required six dayes more, and then twelve; and being therefore asked, why he prolonged so the time, and thereby so deluded him, he ingeniously answered; because the more I search into him, the further I find my selfe from attaining to him; for seeing, as Aristotle saith, ὅρος δέ τι λόγος ὁ τὸ τί ἦν εἶναι σημαίνων; the definition of any thing is the expression of what it is in its own nature and vertue; and so we cannot possibly shew what he is; when as he is the purest and the simplest essence, to whom we can ascribe neither kind nor difference, without which no true definition of any thing can be given; and this the very heathens knew full well, when Orpheus, speaking of God, could say,

Exod. 33. 19, 20, 23

Zanch de nat. Dei. l. 3. c. 2. p. 199.

That we are not able to know God as he is in himselfe.

Arist. Topicor. l. 1.

αὐτὸν δ' οὐκ ὄψει, ὡς ἐγὼ θέμις ἐστὶν ἰδέσθαι.

Vide Nancel. p. 54.

I cannot see him, because he is compassed about with darkenesse; and Damascins the Platonist, speaking of the wise men of Ægypt, saith, πρώτην ἀρχὴν, σκότος ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν νόησιν, σκότος ἀγνωστον, ὅτις τοῦτο ἐρημάζοντες; They call the first beginning of all things, darknesse, unknown darknesse, passing all our understanding, answerable to that place of the Psalmist, he made darknesse his secret place; because we can no more see him, than we can see the blacknesse of darknesse; for so he is called sometimes an inaccessible light, and sometimes to be in the darknesse, or in the darke cloud; and all to this end, to shew that he cannot be seen or comprehended by us; because an excessive brightnesse doth as much dazle and blind our eyes, as any darknesse doth.

Ita etiam alluxit Plutarchus in Iside de theologia Ægyptiorum.

Vide Iob c. 22. Psal. 18. 9, 11.

1 Tim. 6. 16. Exod. 20, 21.

And therefore in this respect we should sapere ad sobrietatem, be wise unto sobriety, and not curiously search into his ineffable Majestie, but rather, with the Cherubims, to cover our faces with two of our Wings; because we are not able to know him as he is; this being an essentiall attribute of God, to be incomprehensible.

Esa 6. 2.

2 As he may be knowne of us.

The second is, according to that, which may be knowne of us, and may be any wayes comprehended in our minds and best understandings: And thus we conceive, conceive him to be moſt admirable; but yet by infinite degrees inferiour to that, which he is in himſelfe; and therefore we ſhould ſtrive and labour what we can, to underſtand and know him more and more; for the more fully that we ſhall know him, the more perfectly we ſhall love him; and the more perfectly we love him, the more happineſſe we ſhall add unto our own felicity.

The third is, according to that, which may be ſpoken or written by the beſt of men; And this is the narroweſt way to expreſſe him; and yet we can reach no further; for as he is in himſelfe, he is (as I ſaid before) a light of an infinite brightneſſe, in whom is no darkneſſe at all; and, as the Apoſtle ſaith, He dwelleth in the light that none can attaine unto; no Eagles eye can fully look upon the brightneſſe of his light, no underſtanding can comprehend the incomprehenſible excellency of his Majeſty; and therefore we muſt reſt our ſelves contented to know him ſo, as we are able to conceive of him, and to expreſſe him ſo, as our ſlender ſpeech will give us leave.

And thus we find three ſpeciall wayes of expreſſing what he is;

First, by way of negation, by removing from him what we find in the creatures, or what ever is ſaid of any of them; as when, with the ancient Philoſophers, we ſay, God is not the Sun, not the Moone, not a Man, not moveable, not finite &c.

And thus we ſhew not, what God is, but what he is not; as when we ſay and affirme him to be, ἀθάνατον, ἄληρον, ἄπειρον, ἄοριστον, ἀσώματον, ἀκίνητον, ἄρρητον, ἀόρατον, ἀμεγέθη, ἀγήρων, ἄφθαρτον, ἀίδιον. Immortall, inviſible, infinite, incorporeall, immoveable, unchangeable, and ſo forth: And becauſe, as Dionyſius the Areopagite ſaith, αἱ μὲν ἀποφάσεις ὅτι περὶ θείων ἀληθεῖς, αἱ δὲ καταφάσεις ἀναρμόστοι τῇ ἀκρότητι τῶν ἀπορρήτων. Negations are true in God, but affirmatives are not alwaies agreeable to him; therefore this is the beſt part of our knowledge of him, (as S Auguſtine ſaith) when we know rather what he is not, than what he is; for, as a curious Statue is compoſed and perfected, by hewing and cutting ſomething ſtill from it, and not by adding any thing unto it; ſo is our God knowne of us, by denying him to be ſuch and ſuch things, as are common to the creatures, and by paring away all humane conceits from him, when we go about to conceive what he is.

Secondly, by way of affirmation and perfection, as when we do analogically and in reſpect of certaine ſimilitudes, aſcribe unto God the beſt and moſt excellent things that can be found in any of the creatures whatſoever; and ſo we ſay, he is great, ſtrong, faire, mercifull, juſt, &c.

So Hermes ſaith, Ἀκήρατον μὲν δεῖ πνεῦμα ὁ Θεος, God is an indefatigable Spirit, ὕπατος βασιλεὺς περὶ ὅλων, ἀγαθὸς Θεος, the higheſt King of all kings, and a moſt good God, and Thales Mileſius calleth him Θεὸν πρεσβύτατον καὶ ἀγεννητον, the moſt ancient, uncreated God: And Aſcræus ſaith,

Ipſe ſuo regno ditione q; continet omnes,
Nec tenet imperium hoc ex immortalibus ullus.

And Plato defineth God to be τὸ θεῖον ἀθάνατον, καὶ ἀγαθὸν, καὶ φρόνιμον, καὶ νοητὸν, καὶ μονοειδὲς, καὶ ἀδιάλυτον, καὶ ἀεὶ ὡσαύτως, καὶ κατὰ πάντα ἔχον, ἑαυτῷ ὁμοιότατον; a divine Godhead, immortall, and good, and wiſe, and underſtanding, of one and the ſame manner, indiſſoluble, having himſelfe alwaies after the ſame way, and moſt like unto himſelfe; and in another place, he ſaith, that God is τὸ ἀγαθὸν, ἰδέα τῆ ἀγαθῆ, βασιλεὺς τῆ νοητῆ γενοις, καὶ τόπου τὸν ἥλιον γεννήσας, ἐπέκεινα τῆς ὐσιας, τῆ παντος ἀρχη, ἐφ' ᾧ εἶναι ὄζι, καὶ ἡ ὐσια τοις γεγενημένοις; The chiefeſt good, the ſhape or idea of the chiefeſt good, the King of all kinds, and of that inviſible and inacceſſible place, that none can attaine unto, the Maker of the Sun, beyond all ſubſtance, the beginning of the univerſe, from whom are all the beings and ſubſtances that are knowne to bee.

Sicut multa de Deo intelligimus quæ loqui penitus non valemus: ita multa loquimur quæ intelligere non ſumus idonei, Chryſ. in Ep. ad Heb.

3 According to what may be ſpoken.

1 Ioh. 1. 5.

1 Tim. 6. 16.

That there are three eſpeciall wayes of expreſſing what God is. Caſman. in theſi de Deo.

1 By way of negation.

Aug. in l. de ceg. nis. veræ vit. & de verbu Dom ſer. 38.

What God is not.

Nancelius lib. 1.

Dionyſ. de cœleſt. hierarch c. 2. Intelligamus Deum, quantum poſſumus, ſine qualitate bonum, ſine quantitate magnum, ſine indigentia creatorem, ſine ſitu præſidentem, ſine habitu omnia continentem, ſine loco ubiq; totum, &c. Aug. de Trin. l. 5. c. 1.

2 By way of perfection.

Plato in Phædone.

3 By way of ſupereminency.

Thirdly, By way of ſupereminency, and tranſcendent excellency; as when we aſcribe to God, whatſoever excellencies that are ſpoken, or may be ſpoken of him; farre above all the excellencies of all other creatures whatſoever: and ſo we doe referre and reduce all excellencies unto him, as unto the common cauſe of them all, or as unto the fountaine, from whence all theſe little channels of excellencies doe flow: And therefore we ſay not onely in the concrete, that God is juſt, mercifull, wiſe, ſtrong, good, and ſuch like, but alſo in the abſtract, that he is juſtice, mercy, wiſedome, ſtrength, and goodneſſe it ſelfe, which cannot be ſaid of any of all the creatures; for that all the beſt excellencies of the chiefeſt creatures, are but as little ſparkes, in reſpect of a huge infinite fire, or as a few drops of raine, in compariſon of the whole Ocean Sea, if we ſhould compare them to the excellency of God; Nay, we ſhould find their wiſdomes follie, their ſtrength weakeneſſe, their beauty baldneſſe, and all their goodneſſe to be nothing in reſpect of the goodneſſe of God; for he chargeth his Angels with folly, and the Heavens are not cleere in his ſight, ſaith holy Iob.

That the abſtract names of all excellencies, are only proper unto God.

Iob 4.18.

A deſcription of God by way of 1 Negation. 2 Affirmation. 3 Supereminency

Now according to theſe three waies, God is deſcribed to be an immortall, inviſible, incomprehenſible, ſpirituall, infinite, eternall Eſſence, the cauſe of all cauſes, and the Author of all excellencies.

And I may add, that

God is primum movens immobile, the firſt mover, which beſtowes impreſſion on all the lower orbes, but receives none; he is actus puriſſimus, the pureſt act, the higheſt, ſublimateſt elixar; he is primum ens, the ſupremeſt entity; eſſentia ſimpliciſſima, the ſoveraigneſt and ſimpleſt eſſence, without the leaſt imaginary metaphyſicall compoſition at all; for he is not compounded ex partibus quantitativis, as bodies are; becauſe then, he were not the nobleſt eſſence, (a body being inferiour to a ſpirit); and then alſo he were moveable, as bodies be, and diviſible too; nor ex materia & forma, as the elements are; for then ſhould he be perfect, per participationem forma, non per eſſentiam, not by inheritance of nature, but by the participation of a forme; nor ex actu & potentia, as the ſpirits are; for then hee were imperfect, (that being perfecter which does, then that which can doe) a poſſibility being ever inferiour to an act; nor ex genere & differentia, as all creatures are; for then were he not the prime cauſe, (his genus being higher then he;) nor ex accidentibus, for then, (Quia id quod eſt per ſe, prius eſt eo, quod eſt per accidens) there muſt be ſome thing elder then God; and briefly, he can no waies be compounded; becauſe, as the Schooles affirme, compoſitum poſterius eſt partibus ſuis componentibus; Every compound is, in order of nature, after the parts that make it; for divers things meet not of themſelves, without a cauſe to unite and ſoder them; and every compound is that, which the parts are not; for example; that river which waſheth our walls, is perchance a rod over, but every drop is not an inch; and I am not my head, or my foot; and although I am a man, that have hands, yet it followes not, that my hands are I; quia id, quod eſt homo, habet in ſe aliquid, quod non eſt humanitas, ſaith Aquinas; there is ſomething in a man, which is not his humanity or manhood; but 'tis not ſo in God; for there is no prius nor poſterius there, becauſe he is eternall; and his ſuppoſitum and his nature are all one, and the Eſſence of God is nothing els but God; eſſentia and eſſe are the ſame too; he hath nothing, but is that he is: and therefore he is not ſaid to have a forme, or to have a life, but to be one, Iohn 11.25. and therefore, becauſe there is no compoſition in God, there are no parts; and, becauſe there are no parts, there is no diſtinction; and, becauſe there is no diſtinction, there is an unity of eſſence; and, becauſe there are no accidents in this eſſence, therefore his attributes and his eſſence are one; and, if they be the ſame with his eſſence, then are they not originally divers; and, becauſe there is no naturall diverſity of attributes, therefore his juſtice and his mercy are one, and ſo are his providence and his faithfullneſſe; and, if his attributes are one, then are they equall: and therefore his juſtice is of as large an extent as his mercy; becauſe it is God, whatſoever our apprehenſion rightly conceives to be in God, and whatſoever is his, is he.

God moſt ſimple, and no waies compounded.

Every part of man is not man.

Ioh. 11.25.

Whatſoever is in God is God.

So

So here you ſee a boundleſſe Ocean, and a very large deſcription of God; and I may ſooner looſe my ſelfe, in the proſecuting of the ſame, then to finde him fully, as he is, in any place, which is fully and truly in every place.

But I remember that excellent rule of Saint Auguſtine, Cavendum eſt, ne dum de Deo cogitamus, & non poſſumus invenire quid ſit, aliquid de eo ſentiamus quod non ſit; We muſt take great heed, leaſt in ſeeking to know what God is, wee thinke him to be what he is not: and therefore that I may not erre in this point, I will ſay no more, but with himſelfe, which knowes himſelfe beſt; that he is Iehova, this he is, and this is his Name for ever; and as the old ſaying is, Conveniunt rebus nomina ſæpe ſuis; and of all his Names, if any name doth it, this is the onely Name that doth expreſſe the Eſſence and the Nature of God; for all other Names are but adjuncts, expreſſing Qualis eſt eſſentia, Of what manner of being he is, as Eternall, Omniſcient, Omnipotent; or elſe qualis non eſt, what hee is not, as Immortall, Inviſible, Incomprehenſible; or elſe derived from the roote of this, as Eheieh, κύριος & Θεὸς (as ſome would have it;) but Iehova, Nomen tetragrammaton, This Name of foure letters, the moſt Venerable, and Ineffable Name amongſt the Iewes, (as Galatinus ſaith,) derived of Hajah, (as the Hebritians note) which ſignifieth Eſſe, an everlaſting being, Eſt ſolummodo proprium & eſſentiale nomen Dei; is the onely proper and moſt Eſſentiall Name of God; Becauſe all the other names of God (whereof Saint Hierome collecteth nine) beſides Iehova, and ſuch as are derived from the roote thereof, are names attributed unto him in reſpect of his workes, either internall, as Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt, and ſuch like, which are names attributed unto him, in reſpect of the inward operations of God; or elſe externall, as El, Shadai, Lord, Creator, and ſuch like, which are names attributed unto him, in reſpect of his outward works; as Galatinus ſheweth.

Aug. de Trinitate l. 5. c. 1.

Galat. l. 2. c. 9. The name Iehova, is the moſt proper Name of God.

Hieron. in epiſt. ad Marcell.

And therefore, when Moſes deſired to know the Name of God, God nameth himſelfe Ehejeh Aſcher Ehejeh, which the Septuagint tranſlated, ἐγώ εἰμὶ ὁ ὤν. I am that I am, (putting the preſent Tenſe for the future Tenſe;) this is my Name; and it is all one, as if he had ſaid more plainely, He that was, he that is, and he that ever ſhall be. For if you looke never ſo farre backe, you ſhall never finde where his being began; or if you inquire never ſo curiouſly into the time to come, you ſhall never finde likelihood of his ending; for Thou art God from everlaſting, and world without end, ſaith the Pſalmiſt; and ſo, Yeſterday, to day, and the ſame for evermore, ſaith the Apoſtle; and in this reſpect, he is called the King of Ages, which hath made the times, and doth inhabit eternity.

Exod. 3. 14.

Pſal 93. 3.

1 Tim. 1. 17.

Eſay 57. 15.

Moreover, it is obſerved, that in this name Iehova, (beſides many other Myſteries, that the more curious ſearchers into the ſame doe collect) there is not onely ſhewed, the being of God, but alſo the manner of that being; that is, the three manner of ſubſiſtings in that one ſimple and eternall being; or the Trinity of perſons in that Vnity of Eſſence: And I confeſſe, that ſeeing there cannot be but one Iehova, one infinite and eternall being, and that both the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Spirit, are called each one of them Iehova, as you may moſt apparently ſee, if you compare the 6. of Eſay and the 9. where the great Iehova ſaith unto the Prophet, Goe and tell this people, heare and underſtand not; ſee, but perceive not; make the heart of this people fat; with the 12 of Iohn 14. Where the Evangeliſt ſaith, that theſe words of the Prophet were ſpoken of Chriſt; when hee ſaw his glory and ſpake of him; and with the 28 of the Acts 25. Where Saint Paul ſaith, The Holy Ghoſt ſpake theſe words by Eſayas the Prophet; and if you looke into the firſt of the Revelation, ver. 8. where Chriſt aſſumeth the ſame name unto himſelfe, ſaying, I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, ὁ ὤν, καὶ ὁ ἦν, καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, which was, which is, and which is to come; And ſo into the 8 of Iohn, the 58. where our Saviour alludeth unto the ſame Name, ſaying; Before Abraham was, I am; It doth ſufficiently prove each one of theſe perſons to be an infinite God, ſubſiſting in that one eternall Eſſence; becauſe it is moſt certaine, that the Name Iehova, is ſo proper unto

The myſtery of the Trinity included in the name Iehova.

Each perſon of the Trinity, is the true Iehova.

God, that it can be aſcribed to none elſe, as Zanchius ſaith.

Zanch. de natura Dei l. 1. c. 13. p. 35.

But becauſe many other places of Scripture, are more plaine and pregnant to prove this great Myſtery of godlineſſe; I will not inſiſt to wring out an apparant truth from the obſcureſt places; and becauſe, as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith, Neque ad loquendum dignè de Deo lingua ſufficit, neque ad percipiendum intellectus prævalet; Our tongues are not able to ſpeake worthily enough of God, and our underſtandings are not ſufficient to conceive of him as we ought to doe; yea, and that, De Deo loqui etiam vera aliquando periculoſiſſimum eſt; It may be dangerous ſometimes to ſpeake truths of God; for as Euclides, being demanded of one, what God did, and in what things he moſt delighted, did moſt truly anſwer; that he knew not well what he did; but he was certaine he delighted not in vaine and curious perſons; ſo I ſay that curioſity, in this higheſt point of Divinity, is very dangerous; or, as Saint Bernard ſaith, to inquire too farre into this point, is perverſe curioſity; to beleeve it, as the Scripture teacheth, is infallible ſecurity; and to ſee him, as he is, is moſt abſolute felicity: therefore I will wade no further into this depth; but I will exhort and deſire you all, Potius glorificare eum, qui eſt, quam inveſtigare quid eſt; Rather moſt faithfully to ſerve him, which is, then too curiouſly to ſearch what he is, Ne & in hac illicitè curioſi, & in illa damnabiliter inveniamur ingrati; leaſt in this, we be found unlawfully curious, and in the other moſt damnably unthankefull, as Proſper ſpeaketh.

Maxim ſer. 33. That it is not ſafe to ſearch too far into the being of God.

Chryſoſt. quo ſupra hom. 2 in Heb.

Proſper de vocat. gentium.

And yet I muſt tell you, that the knowledge of Gods name, brings us to the preſence of his Majeſty and to be confident of his goodneſſe, as the Prophet David teſtifieth, they that know thy name will truſt in thee for thou never faileſt them that ſeeke thee; but till we know his name, we never truſt in him, we never ſeeke unto him; and that is the onely cauſe why the wicked love not, ſeeke not, care not for God; becauſe they know not God, they underſtand not ſo much as the name of God, they know not whether there be a Holy Ghoſt or no; for if they knew but the ſweetneſſe of his name, though not the infiniteneſſe of his nature, they would love him above gold, and ſeeke him before all the treaſures of this world; for his name is as ointment powred out; as that ointment, mentioned in the Goſpell, which filled all the houſe with the odour of it; or indeed, beyond all the ointment of this world; becauſe no ointment can be ſo delightfull to the naturall ſence of any man, as the name of God is to the pious heart of a faithfull Chriſtian; and therefore, the Wiſeman ſaith, that the virgins love it; that is, ſuch as doe not goe a whoring after their owne fleſhly luſts, to abuſe his bleſſed names, or after the vanities of this world, to forſake their firſt love, but doe ſtill keepe their faith to God; for they know, there is no evill that can befall them, but the name of the God of Iacob is a ſufficient remedy againſt it; and there is no good that they can deſire, but it is contained in this name, and the having of this name, is the onely way to obtaine the ſame; And therefore woe to them that know this name, to blaſpheme it by their fearefull oathes, but not to honour it by their fervent prayers; ô my ſoule, hate to heare them, and loath to be in the company of ſuch, though they ſhould be thy deereſt friends.

Pſal. 9. 10. Why the wicked love not God.

Acts 19. 2.

Cant. 1. 2.

Iohn 12. 3.

Gods name ſweeter then the moſt pretious ointment Cant. 1. 3.

Revel. 2. 4.

Pſal. 30. 1.

Not to love thoſe that abuſe the name of God.

CHAP. II.

How God is the giver of Being to all Creatures, and the fulfiller of all his promiſes.

YOu have heard of the name of God, Iehova, I ſhould proceed to the next word, Lord, but I muſt note unto you, that here Iehova is twice repeated, not to make Moſes the more attentive, (as ſome do thinke it,) for the very ſpeech of God, at ſuch a time, and in ſuch a manner, was enough, in my judgement, to move attention; but rather, to ſignifie (as I take it) that as he is an eternall being in himſelfe, ſo he giveth being to all things elſe; viz.

Zanch. de natura Dei l. 1. c. 18. Why Jehova is twice repeated.

1. To

{1 To all creatures. 2 To all his promiſes.} For

1 God gives being to all creatures. Acts 17.1.28.

First, In him we live, and move, and have our being, ſaith the moſt learned Apoſtle of the Gentiles, even in the ſtreets of Athens, the chiefeſt Schoole of all humane learning; and of him, and for him, and through him are all things, ſaith the Apoſtle unto the Romans, the ſole Monarchs of the whole world; and ſo God himſelfe ſaith, I am Iehova that made all things; which is all one, as if he had ſaid; As I am called the Creatour, becauſe I have made, and created all things; ſo I am called Iehova, Being, becauſe I gave, and do give their being, unto all the things that are: And it is obſerved, that as in the Hebrew word Iehova there is nothing but Conſonants, Iod, He, Vau, Ain, which, without their pricks, that do ſtand for the vowels, cannot be pronounced; to ſhew how ineffable, and how unexpreſſible the eſſence of God is; ſo in the Latine word Iehova, there are contained all the vowels, a. e. i. o. u. without ſome of which, no word can be ſpoken, no name can be uttered; and that in it there is nothing but vowels, excepting h, which is no letter, but the aſpiration of the word; to note unto us, that, as the vowels, together with the aſpiration, are the life, and as it were the ſoule of every word; ſo is Iehova, the Lord God, the very life, and being, as it were, of every creature that can be named; becauſe that, of him, and for him, and through him are all things.

Rom. 11.36.

How ineffable is God.

That God is the very life of all things.

Rom. 11.36.

Non quod illa ſunt, quod ipſe eſt, ſed quia ex ipſo ſunt; Not that they are the ſame that he is; but becauſe they have their exiſtence and perfection from him, as S. Bernard ſaith.

Bern. in Cant. ſer. 4

2 God gives being to all his promiſes. Exod. 6.3. This place of Exodus explained.

Secondly, when God ſaith, He was not knowne unto Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, by his name Iehovah; it is not to be underſtood of his eſſentiall being; for ſo they knew him, even by his very name, Iehovah; as we may ſee Gen. 15. 17. and Gen. 28. 13. of the originall Text; and ſo Tremelius reads it; neither is it to be underſtood de gradibus divinarum patefactionum, of the degrees of the divine manifeſtations of God, (as Gerardus ſaith) becauſe ſomtimes it is the manner of the Scriptures to ſay, that things are then, when they are manifeſted to be, as it is ſaid of the Holy Ghoſt, Quod nondum erat, quia nondum innotuerat, that he was not, becauſe as yet he had not manifeſted himſelfe to be; for ſo he may be ſaid not to be knowne unto Moſes, nor unto any man elſe, becauſe neither himſelfe, nor any of his names can be knowne of any man, but only in part, as the Apoſtle ſheweth: And the example alledged of the Holy Ghoſt is miſ-interpreted; becauſe the Evangeliſt ſpeaks not there of the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, nor yet of the inviſible beſtowing of the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; for ſo they ever knew him to be, and his gifts to be given unto the Saints: and therefore they did uſe to pray with the Pſalmiſt, That God would renew a right ſpirit within them; but the meaning of the Evangeliſt is, that the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt, were not as yet plentifully, viſibly, and miraculouſly given; becauſe that Ieſus was not yet glorified; for that, according to the Prophecie of David, Chriſt was firſt to aſcend up on high, and to lead captivity captive; and then, in that manner, to beſtow gifts on men.

Gerard. l. 3. de nat. Dei.

Alſted Lexic. Theol. c. 2.

Ioh. 7.39.

1 Cor. 13.

Pſal. 50.11,12.

Pſal. 68.18.

But theſe words, that he was not knowne unto them by his name Iehovah, are to be underſtood of the performing and accompliſhing of thoſe promiſes, which he made unto them, of the giving of the land of Canaan unto them, and their poſterity; for the words going before, I have appeared unto them by the name of Almighty God; and the words immediately following, and I have eſtabliſhed my covenant with them, to give them the Land of Canaan, the Land of their pilgrimage, wherein they were ſtrangers; doth make it ſufficiently plaine, that the meaning of the Holy Ghoſt is this, viz. that although by the creation of the world, and the deſtruction of the ſame, and ſo by the reſtauration and the continuall preſervation of the world, and of themſelves eſpecially, in all their pilgrimage, he had ſufficiently ſhewed himſelfe unto them to be Almighty; yet by the giving of the Land of Canaan unto them and their poſterity, he had not ſhewed himſelfe a fulfiller

Zanch. de nat. Dei, l. 2. c. 13.

fulfiller and accompliſher of his promiſe; becauſe that ſame promiſe of giving them the Land of Canaan, though it was faithfully made unto Abraham, yet was it not fully accompliſhed untill the dayes of Ioſhua.

That God is a faithfull performer of all his promiſes.

And therefore, God hereby would give Moſes and us all to underſtand, that as he is an eternall Iehovah, or being in himſelfe, and the giver of being unto all creatures, ſo would he performe, and give being unto all his promiſes; and as he was now mindfull to accompliſh this promiſe, which he made with Abraham, of giving the Land of Canaan; ſo would he be as mindfull to performe that great promiſe, which he chiefly aimed at, and intended by this; viz. of giving eternall life unto Abraham, and all his faithfull Children; for we muſt underſtand, that whatſoever was done, or ſaid unto the Patriarchs, and the Fathers of the Old Teſtament, Omnia in figura contingebant illis; they were but Types and Figures, and had relation unto farre more excellent things: and therefore the chiefe meaning of God herein is, that although he had but promiſed unto Adam, that the Seed of the Woman ſhould breake the Serpents head; and unto Abraham, that in his ſeed all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; and ſhould through the ſaid ſeed be brought to poſſeſſe and enjoy the everlaſting Canaan; and had not as yet performed the ſame in their time; yet, as now he intended by him, and eſpecially by Ioſhua, to give unto the poſterity of Abraham, the temporall Land of Canaan, (as their own eyes ſhould immediately ſee) ſo he would as certainly, in his due time, by and through Ieſus Chriſt, (whereof Ioſhua was but a type and figure) give unto all the faithfull ſonnes of Abraham, the poſſeſſion and inheritance of the ſpirituall Canaan, that is, eternall life: and then they ſhould all ſee, and perceive him to be as true a Iehovah, that is, as true a performer and giver of being unto this his promiſe of their redemption, and eternall ſalvation; as they do ſee him, and know him to be an eternall being in himſelfe, and the giver of being, that is, the Creatour of all the things that be; or as the Children of Iſrael do ſee him, to performe his promiſe, of giving the Land of Canaan unto the poſterity of Abraham.

1 Cor. 10, 11.

Gen 3.15. Gen.22.18.

And ſo much for the moſt ſpeciall things that we may obſerve out of this name Iehovah.

CHAP. III.

Of the uſefull inſtructions that we may gather out of the former doctrine.

WEll then, beloved Brethren, let us apply this truth unto our ſelves. And

How we may attaine unto immortality.

Firſt, ſeeing that good is no good, which wanteth perpetuity, (as Nazianzen ſaith) and that God only is that eternall being, which hath and giveth immortality; it teacheth us where to ſeek for our eternity. Indeed, of our ſelves we ſhall be ever: for though God made us ex nihilo, out of nothing; yet he did not make us ad nihilum, to returne to nothing: There may be a diſſolution of ſoule and body for a time, but there cannot be an annihilation of either, becauſe they muſt be re-united againe, to remaine for ever; but ever (without God) in eternall miſery: and therefore, ſeeing it is a deadly immortality, to be immortall only for immortall torments, we ought to aſcend to him, and be united to him, if we would be happy, and deſire to make our immortality profitable unto us.

1 Pet.2.11. Heb.13.14.

Why then ſhould we place our reſt on Earth, where we be ſtrangers and pilgrims, and have no continuing city? And not rather crie to God?

Claud. l.1. in Eut.

Eripe nos tandem, ſervitibus eripe regnis.

Rev.6.10.

How long tarieſt thou, holy and true? Or when commeſt thou, O good God, to free us è lutulentis manuum operibus, from this more than Egyptian bondage in this wicked world, and to bring us Lord unto thy ſelfe, where we ſhall have a moſt happy being, and a moſt glorious Kingdome, without ending? For here alas,

Mille

Mille parit luctus mortalibus una voluptas.

We have a thouſand bitter ſighs, for every little ſmile; Et præterit jucunditas non reddituræ, & manet anxietas non peritura, and our little pleaſure will ſoone vaniſh, and yet leave a ſting and a torment that ſhall never be finiſhed: but in thy preſence there is fulneſſe of joy, and at thy right hand there is pleaſure for evermore. Pſal.16.12.

Secondly, ſeeing we, and all things elſe, have our being from God:

Iupiter eſt quodcunq́, vides, quocunq́, moveris. Lucan l.9.

That we ought to be thankfull unto God, becauſe we have all things from God.

For whatſoever we are, or whereſoever we be, we are all, and have all from God; Why then ſhould we be ſo ungratefull, and ſo undutifull as we are unto God? For had we not had our being, all the titles of honours, all the confluence of wealth, and all the pompous things that we have from Parents, Kings, Maſters, Friends, or whom you will, had availed us nothing; nay, had we not had theſe things from God, we had had nothing at all; becauſe he gave them their being, and then gave them to us, per manus eorum, by the hands of them which brought them unto us: for he is the giver of every good and perfect gift; and all other things are but the inſtruments whereby he conveyes and ſends thoſe gifts unto us: And therfore why ſhould we not wholly dedicate our ſelves and ours, unto the ſervice of God? For, who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruits thereof? Iames 1.17. 1 Cor.9.7.

And yet God may juſtly ſay of us, Filios enutrivi, I have nouriſhed and brought up children, but they have deſpiſed me; for though he made man, and made all things for man; yet cannot all theſe things make man to ſerve him, as he ought to do; but that every one of us will follow after the luſts and concupiſcence of his own fleſh, which (as the Poet ſaith) Eſay 1.2.

Et nocitura placet, & placitura nocet;

Doth even wound our ſoules, when it moſt delighteth our bodies.

Thirdly, ſeeing God giveth being unto all his promiſes, and keepeth his promiſe for ever, as he hath done already, in ſending a Ioſhua, to give the Land of Canaan unto the Iſraelites, and eſpecially in ſending Ieſus Chriſt, to give eternall life unto all believers; and that, dicta Iehova ſunt dicta pura; the words of the Lord are pure words; we ſhould expectare impletionem, never doubt of the performance of Gods promiſes, nor ſay with thoſe incredulous Atheiſts, in the ſecond of Peter 2.4. Where is the promiſe of his comming? But we ſhould believe them to be as ſure and as certaine, as if they were already accompliſhed; for he is Iehovah, that will give them their being, in their appointed time: Heaven and earth ſhall paſſe away, but his Word ſhall not paſſe; that ſhall be ſurely accompliſhed; and he will moſt faithfully performe, not onely what he promiſeth, but alſo what he threatneth; and therfore, Nemo dicat in corde ſuo, verum eſt quod promittit, falſum quod minatur; nam ſicut quod promittit verum eſt, ſic quod minatur certum eſt; let no man once ſurmize that God is true in his promiſes, but falſe in his threatnings; for as that which he promiſeth is true, ſo that which he threatneth is ſure; becauſe he is that Iehovah, that eternall being, which giveth being to all things, and to all his ſayings, whether they be promiſes for well doing, or threatnings for evill doing; and therefore we ought aſwell to feare the one, as to believe the other. Pſal.146.4. That we ſhould never doubt of Gods promiſes. 2 Pet.2.4. Mat.24.37. That we ought to feare Gods threatnings. Aug to. 8. in Pſal. 94 p.1030.

CHAP. IV.

Of the word LORD, and how many wayes it is taken, and of the reaſons to perſwade us to ſerve him.

I Might now paſſe unto the ſecond part, but that the tranſlating of this word Iehovah, by our laſt Tranſlatours into the word Lord, (for ſo we read it, The Lord, the Lord God, mercifull and gracious, &c.) muſt here ſtay me a little while; for ſearching into the reaſon why Iehovah ſhould be tranſlated Lord, I found found that the LXX. Interpreters do translate it so in every place; and that because κύριω or κυρέω, from whence κυριος is derived, signifieth I am, which is the same in effect, as Iehovah; and also because he is properly called κύριος, the Lord of any thing, Qui plenum κῦρος & ἐξουσίαν in eandem rem habet, which hath full right, and a most absolute authority over the same thing; for Dominus primò dicebatur à domo; he was at the first called Lord, which was the Master of the House, and had full right and authority over all the Household: and we find that none, but God alone, can simply and absolutely say, that he hath full right and authority over any thing in the world; because he only is the Maker and preserver of all things, and of every thing: and therefore all other Lords are but Lords under him, and from him; and he only is αὐτοκράτωρ, Lord of himselfe, and so indeed Lord of Lords, as the Scripture termeth him.

Why Iehova is translated Lord.

Polanus Syntag. l.2 c.6.
Rev 19.16.

That God onely is an absolute Lord.
Tertul. in Apol. c. 34.
Lamprid. in Alex. Sever.

And in this respect, we find κύριος, Lord, and Iehovah, to be equivalent, and to fall into the same thing: and therefore Augustus, the first founder of the Roman Empire, refused to be called Lord; and so did Alexander Severus, and diverse others; because they thought the name of Lord, to be too high a title for so meane creatures, as they knew themselves to be, as I have more fully shewed in my Delights of the Saints.

But we distinguish betwixt a { Lord simply, and / Lord κατ' ἐξ, in some respect. } And we say that

In the first sense, none is Lord but God alone; and therefore in this respect, our Saviour saith, Be not you called Lords; but

Mat.23 10.

In the second sense, Dicam planè Imperatorem Dominum, saith Tertullian; I may, and will call the Emperour Lord; and so saith Obadiah unto the Prophet Elias, Art not thou my Lord Elias? Because God, which gave them their rule and dominion in his stead, hath also innobled them with his own names; Et ego dixi dij estis. And I my selfe (saith God) have called you gods, and have given these names unto you, to be called Gods; and so Lords: And yet they should remember S. Peters rule, μηδ' ὡς κατακυριεύοντες, not to Lord it so, as to over-rule Gods people; or as S. Augustine saith, Non dominandi superbiâ, sed officio consulendi; Not for the love of Soveraignty, but in a desire to do them good, and to imitate God himselfe;

Tertul. quo sup.
1 Reg.18.7.
Psal.82.6.
1 Pet.5.3.

Parcere subjectis & debellare superbos.

That is, to defend and help the innocent, and to punish the wrong doer.

And so you see how Iehovah is rightly translated κύριος, Lord, because truly and absolutely he alone is Lord of all things, as the sole giver of their being, and preserver of them in that being: And this should incite us to feare, and to serve this our Lord; for, Si Dominus, ubi timor? If I am a Lord, where is my feare? The Prophet David saith, that the earth is the Lords, and all that therein is, because he hath founded it upon the seas, and prepared and established it upon the floods; and so this Iehovah is our Lord, because he made us, and hath given us our very being; and yet we find, that he is our Lord in a more excellent respect; for as those, which by right of warre might justly be put to death, and yet were redeemed and preserved alive, were called servants, and those that redeemed them, were called their Lords; so are we called Gods servants, and he our Lord; not only because he made us, but also because that, when we might have been justly put to eternall death for our sinnes, we were redeemed, and saved by the death of Iesus Christ: And in this respect, we find, that although the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be each one of them our Lord, as our Creatour, and the giver of our Being; yet is Christ generally, and most commonly throughout all the New Testament, called our Lord; as if this name were now wholly and solely to be appropriated unto him, because he is our sole Saviour and Redeemer: And therefore, seeing the very name of a Servant doth include servitium, a service to be performed unto our Lord and Saviour; and that indeed we were preserved to that end, that we might serve him, as Zacharias tels us, That we were delivered from our enemies that we might serve the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse all the

That we should feare and serve our Lord.
Mal 1.6.
Psal.24.2.

Aug de Civit. Dei. l.19.c.15.

Why Christ is most properly called Lord.

Luke 1.75.

the dayes of our life, we ought to endeavour, what lieth in us, to ſerve this Lord; and we ſhould the more willingly, and indeed the more joyfully do it; becauſe, as Philo ſaith, θεῷ δουλεύειν, οὐκ ἐλευθερίας μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ βασιλείας ἄμεινον, to ſerve this Lord is, not only better than liberty, but alſo more excellent than all Soveraignty: And Hugo de Prato ſetteth down three eſpeciall reaſons, to perſwade all men to ſerve the Lord.

Philo in l. de Reg.

Hugo de Prato ſer. 6. de temp.

1 Becauſe in all reſpects we owe our ſervice unto God.
2 We ought to ſerve God, that we may obtaine a good reward from God.
3 That we may eſcape the puniſhment of them, that n'glect to ſerve God; for Three ſpeciall reaſons to perſwade us to ſerve our Lord.

1 Reaſon.

Firſt, the Lord hath made us, redeemed us, preſerved us, inriched us with all that we have: and therefore, What reward ſhall we render unto the Lord, for all the benefits that he hath done unto us; unleſſe we will be contented, to take the cup of ſalvation, and to call upon the name of the Lord, and ſo dedicate our ſelves wholly to the praiſing and glorifying of his name?

2 Reaſon.

Secondly, if we will ſerve him, we ſhall be ſure to have in this life, his grace to guide us, his Angels to guard us, his holy Spirit to comfort us, and whatſoever he knoweth to be needfull for us; and in the life to come, we ſhall have eternall happineſſe; we ſhall have the crowne of everlaſting glory.

3 Reaſon.

Thirdly, if we will not ſerve him, but ſay, Nolumus hunc regnare ſuper nos, we will not have him to be our Lord and Maſter, but we will ſerve our ſelves, and the luſts of our owne fleſh; then you muſt know what he will ſay to ſuch, Thoſe mine enemies, that would not ſerve me, bring them hither, and ſlay them before me; nay, if you will deſpiſe my ſtatutes, and abhorre my judgements, ſo that you will not do all my Commandements, I alſo will do this unto you; I will even appoint over you terrour, conſumption, and the burning ague, that ſhall conſume the eyes, and ſhall cauſe ſorrow of heart, and you ſhall ſow your ſeed in vaine, and I will ſet my face againſt you; he meanes here in this life; and at the laſt dreadfull day, they ſhall be bound hand and foot, and caſt into that lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone for evermore; there ſhall be weeping, and gnaſhing of teeth: And therefore, to diſcharge our duty, to attaine unto eternall felicity, and to eſcape this endleſſe miſery; let us ſerve the Lord with feare, and rejoyce unto him with reverence: And bleſſed are all they that ſerve him.

Luke 19.27.

Levit. 26.15,16,17.

Mat. 24.51.

Pſal. 2.11.

And ſo much for the firſt Part, What God is, or, of the Eſſence of God.

The ſecond Part.

Of the Nature of God, or what manner of God he is.

CHAP. I.

Of the power of God, and how many ſorts of Adverſaries there be, which do oppoſe the truth of this doctrine of the power of God.

God expreſſeth himſelfe here by three ſpeciall attributes.

YOu have heard what God is, IEHOVAH, that is, an eternall being in himſelfe, and a giver of being unto all the things that do ſubſiſt; and now we are diligently to conſider the nature of God, or what manner of God he is; for I find that God doth here expreſſe himſelfe unto Moſes by three eſpeciall attributes.

1 His Power, to make us believe in him.
2 His Goodneſſe, to make us love him.
3 His Juſtice, to make us feare him.

} 3 excellent points to be throughly knowne, to be ever learn'd, and never to be forgotten; for

The firſt attribute of God, that is, his Power.

Stella in Luc. c. 1. p. 36. b.

Hieron tom. 3 p 95. in Ep ad Marcell.

First, the Doctrine of Gods Power is the very Anchor of our Faith, and the foundation of all Chriſtian Religion; for hence proceed hereſies; becauſe the hereticks know not the Scriptures, nor the power of God; and hence proceeds all Faith; becauſe we believe with the bleſſed Virgin, Quia potens eſt, that God is able to do all theſe things, which Reaſon is not able to comprehend; and therefore here, immediately after Iehovah, he addeth EL, which the Septuagint turned and tranſlated Θεὸν. God; and Aquila, ſearching into the Etymologie of the word, interprets it, ἰσχυρὸν, that is, ſtrong, ſaith S. Hierom; and ſo Zanchius every where, Tremelius, and ſome other Latine verſions, and the old Engliſh Tranſlation reads it ſtrong; and ſo in Lege credendi, in the Symbole of our belief, as ſoone as ever he ſheweth himſelfe to be, he ſheweth himſelfe to be Almighty; and ſo the Prophet David ſaith, God ſpake once and twice, I have alſo heard the ſame, that Power belongeth unto God.

How needfull is the doctrine of Gods power. Pſal. 62. 11.

And ſurely this Doctrine of Gods Power is ſo uſefull for all Chriſtians, and ſo neceſſary for the underſtanding of the Scriptures; that among all the Attributes of God, this deſerveth firſt to be diſcuſſed; becauſe, there is almoſt no page of Scripture, wherein there is not ſome mention made of the Power of God; and the ignorance, or the not rightly underſtanding of this Truth, is the cauſe of ſo many Infidels and Hereticks in the world: and therefore I muſt crave leave to inſiſt a little upon this point of Doctrine, of the Power of God; And for Method ſake, I will divide my whole diſcourſe of this point, into theſe foure heads.

Zanch. de nat. Dei. l. 3. c. 1.

Foure points handled, touching the power of God

1 I will ſet downe the number and the quality of the Adverſaries of this truth.

2 I will explaine this point, and ſhew wherein and how farre this Power of God extendeth.

3 I will ſufficiently confirme the truth hereof, and anſwer to whatſoever is or can be ſaid againſt it.

4 I will briefly ſhew the uſefull application of the whole Doctrine.

1 Of the adverſaries of Gods power.

For the firſt, the Adverſaries of this truth, which do either exceedingly erre, or be mightily deceived are almoſt infinite: but I may reduce the chiefeſt of them into into these foure sorts; whereof two, by impairing and denying his Power, do unto him the greatest wrong, that is,

1 The Infidels, that will not believe in him.
2 The desperate men, that will not hope in him.

Foure sorts of men do erre, about the truth of this Doctrine, of the power of God.

Because, these two sorts of men do think he cannot do those things, which in very deed are most facile and easie for him to do.

And the other two sorts, by mis-understanding the extent of his Power, do not shew much lesse indignity unto God, than the former; and they are

1 The Vbiquitaries of Germany.
2 The Pontificials of Rome.

Both which do say he can do those things, which indeed are agreeable, neither to the Power, nor to the Truth of God: And so, as Goclenius saith,

Crimen in excessu, necnon defectus aberrat,
Sed verum, medium qui tenuere, tenent:

But we must walk in the middle-way, if we would not walk awry. And therfore

First, for the Infidels, The foole hath said in his heart, there is no God; and what he saith in his heart, he testifieth and confirmeth by his works; for by their works they deny God, saith the Apostle, and some say it in plaine termes, as Diagoras, and others: And therefore seeing they deny him to be, what marvell is it that they should deny him to be Almighty? And therefore one of the Captains, and a Lord of the King of Israel, said unto Elizeus; If the Lord should make windowes in Heaven to raine downe Corne like haile-stones, yet how can he do those things that thou hast spoken? And the wicked in Iob say, Quis est omnipotens ut serviamus ei? Or, quid est omnipotens, as Tremelius reads it, who, or what is Almighty God, that we should serve him? as if they said we know none such: But what do I stand upon infidels? the most learned of their Philosophers, the wittiest of their Poets, and many hereticks have made but a scoffe of that doctrine, of the Omnipotent Power of God, and did with all their strength maintaine, that Ex nihilo nihil fit, Of nothing nothing could be made: and therefore they concluded, that it was impossible for God, Ex non ente ens producere, To make any being of that, which had no being in the world: and thereupon Aristotle, the Prince of all the Philosophers, doth strive with all his might to prove, that this world is Eternall, and never had any beginning; and they that yeeld it was made, doaffirme that it was composed of a præ-existent matter; this was the opinion of the Stoicks and Peripateticks, which Cicero embraceth; so Seleucus and Hermias (as Sebastianus Medices witnesseth) and Hermogines (against whom Tertullian writ a most elegant booke) have said, that the matter and the substance of the Elements, whereof the world was made, was not made by God; but was coeternall with God: all which, with many others (whose opinions Diodorus Siculus, and Eusebius Cæsariensis have most painfully collected, and which is needlesse for me to rehearse) have erred in this point; because with Petrus Abaylardus (as Medices saith) they were ignorant of the omnipotent power of God.

1 Sort of adversaries, infidels. Psal. 13. 1.

2 Reg. 7. 2.

How the Atheists and Infidels deny the power of God

Arist. l. 1. & 2. de cœlo & mundo.

Cicero l. 3. de nat. deorum.
Medices in summa hæres.

D. Sicul. l. 1. c. 1.
Euseb de præparat. Evang. l. 1.

But against all these, and the like, the power of God may be easily shewed, both from the Creation of the world, and also from the Gubernation of it, and of all things that are therein: for the world it selfe, saith S. Augustine, Ordinatissima sua mutabilitate, & mobilitate, &c. by his most comly mutability and mobility, and all visible things in their kind, do, as it were, tacitely, and after a secret manner, proclaime it selfe to be made; yea, and to be made by none other, but by that most ineffable and invisible excellent God: and therefore, although Aristotle in saying that this world was eternall, was farre wide from the truth, because that whatsoever doth consist of a solid and a ponderous body, as it must of necessity have an ending, so it must needs be, that at some time or other, it hath had its beginning; yet diverse of the very Heathens have, by the light of Nature, seen and confest this Truth; for we read that Orpheus said, εἷς ὅτι αὐτογενὴς, &c. There is one of himselfe, that is, God, and from him alone are all things that are; and Pythagoras (as Iustin Martyr cites him) said,

How the power of God is proved.

First, from the creation of things.

Diverse Heathens confessed God to have made the world.
Iustin. Martyr. in l. de Monarchia.

εἰ τίς ἐρεῖ, θεὸς εἰμι, πάρ' ἐνὸς ἔτος ὀφείλει, κόσμον ἴσον τεύξῃ, εἰπεῖν ἐμὸς ἔτος.

Heydelpheldius de Deo.c.2.

If any man (beſides that one ever-living God) doth ſay, I am God, let him create a world like unto this, and ſay, this is mine; And ſo Epicurus himſelfe, did in this thing confeſſe the Truth, and ſay, that this world had a beginning, and muſt in its due time have ending; and ſo many others, of the moſt ancient Philoſophers, did profeſſe this truth, and left their faith written for their poſterities: If any man deſire to ſee it, let him looke into Iuſtin Martyr in his exhortation unto the Gentiles, and in his Book of Monarchy; and to Euſebius Ceſarienſis de præparat: Evang: and eſpecially into Lactantius Firmianus, *l.*1.*c.*5,6.& 7. By whom the ſayings and opinions of the former age are moſt carefully collected.

No man by the light of nature is able to ſhew the reaſon how the world ſhould be made. Heb.11.3.

And yet not one of them was able, either to ſhew any reaſon, or to expreſſe the manner how any of theſe things ſhould be made, (which was the cauſe that Ariſtotle and his followers, that would have the reaſon of every thing, or els would believe nothing, to ſay it was not made at all;) becauſe they were all ignorant of thoſe Divine Oracles, whereby God had made knowne this truth unto men; and eſpecially, becauſe they were deſtitute of that Spirit, whereby we are perſwaded to believe this truth; for that (as the Apoſtle ſaith) through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed by the Word of God: So it is faith and not reaſon that maketh us to believe that this world is made; or were it not for faith, I ſhould be of Ariſtotles mind; becauſe we can find no naturall demonſtration that can infallibly conclude this moſt powerfull production of all things out of nothing. And Seeondly, Gods power is proved from the government of the world.

Seeondly, as the Creation of the world, ſo the Gubernation of the ſame doth as fully ſhew the Omnipotent power of God; for I may truly ſay,

Non minor eſt virtus quam condere, facta tueri.

Quintus Curtius de rebus geſt. Alex. and.

It requires as great a power, or greater, to ſuſtaine all things, that they turne not to nothing, as to create all things of nothing: and therefore when Alexander asked a certaine people, what thing they feared moſt, (thinking they would ſay, they feared him) they ſcoffingly anſwered, the falling of the skies; and indeed, if we knew all, we might feare both the falling of the Heavens, and the overflowings of the ſeas, and the untamed furie both of men and beaſts, were it not for Almighty God, which rideth upon the Heavens as upon a Horſe, and by his Power ruleth the rage of the Seas, and the noyſe of his waves, and the madneſſe of the people: and therefore well doth that Chriſtian Poet conclude,

Pſal.68.4.

Eſt Deus omnipotens, qui temperat omnia nutu;

That he muſt needs be an omnipotent God, which ruleth and guideth all things with his beck, or with a word, according to his owne will: And Victorinus Strigelius ſaith, that it is worth the obſervation, to conſider out of Hiſtories, the beginnings and inlargements, the declinations and ſubverſions of Empires; becauſe that this conſideration doth illuſtrate and confirme unto us the ſong of the bleſſed Virgin, and the Power of the great Creatour, Qui fecit Potentiam & depoſuit potentes; which raiſeth the poore out of the mire, and bringeth down the high looks of the proud; becauſe his hand is able both to exalt the one, and to deject the other; as Æſope, being demanded, what God did, anſwered, Exaltat humilia, & dejicit alta, he exalteth the lowly, and caſteth down the mighty; and this may be ſeen, as in all things, and in all ages elſe, ſo eſpecially in thoſe Empires, which we call the foure Monarchies, ſaith Strigelius. And the Poet Iuvenal ſaith;

State of Empires prove Gods power.

Victor. Strig. in Juſtin. Epit. p. 296.

Fortuna multis dat nimis, nulli ſatis;
Si fortuna volet, fies de conſule rhetor,
Si volet hæc eadem, fies de rhetore conſul.

Iuvenal. Satyr.

The Heathens did falſly aſcribe that to Fortune, which is true indeed of God.

Fortune we ſee doth give too much to many,
And yet alas gives not enough to any:
If Fortune will, thou maiſt be a Conſull made,
And if that will, thou muſt unto thy former trade.

And

And therefore Maro conſidering this admirable diſpoſition of things, doth poſitively pronounce;

Fortuna omnipotens, & ineluctabile fatum. Virgil. Æneid. l. 8.

That Fortune is Omnipotent, and the deſtinies uncontroulable: All which, Mutato nomine, If we change the name of Fortune, (which was their error to ſay, Te facimus fortuna Deam,—And to aſcribe all to chance) into the unchangeable providence of God, we find it to be moſt apparantly true: and therefore of an unanſwerable validity, to confirme and prove the power of God,

Secondly, for the deſperate men; All wicked wretches, when they are growne unto the height of ſinne, or fallen downe into the depth of all iniquity, and ſhall, on the one ſide, ſee God exceedingly angry with them for their ſinnes, and the fire kindled in his wrath, which ſhall burne unto the bottome of Hell; and on the other ſide, the devouring Gulph, ready to receive them, and to detaine them in everlaſting flames; then doe theſe men, not ſo much ἄθεοι Atheiſts without the Knowledge of God, as ἄπιστοι, Infidels, without Faith or Hope in God, ſay with wicked Caine; Our ſinnes are more then can bee forgiven us; for that our iniquities, which are ſo horrible, and Gods Iuſtice, which is ſo uncorruptible, have ſuch a χασμα μεγα, great Gulfe and diſtance betwixt them, that

Non bene conveniunt, nec in una ſede morantur; Ovid Metam. l. 1.

They can never be reconciled; and therefore our iniquity can never bee remitted.

Neither doe I, truely, find theſe men, to be much more ſtupid then the former, whereof I have even now ſpoken; for although I finde many men affirming, the powerfull Creation of all Creatures, others ſaying, the conſervation of the ſaid created things, and others the Incarnation of the Sonne of God, to be the greateſt worke and argument of Gods divine Power; yet I find many Divines not meanely learned, moſt confidently to averre, the remiſſion of our ſinnes, to be ſimply and abſolutely the greateſt and moſt remarkeable worke of Gods power; and not without reaſon neither; becauſe it is eaſier to create a thouſand worlds of nothing, then it is to forgive one ſinne that is committed; for to the bringing forth of all creatures he did but Speake the word, and they were made; hee commaunded and they ſtood faſt; But to obtaine for us remiſſion of our ſinnes, multa dixit, magna fecit, dira tulit, he ſpake many words, he did great works, and he ſuffered grievous wrongs, as Saint Bernard ſaith; for Sin is ſuch a tranſcendent thing that as God himſelfe in regard of his infinite beauty, ſo ſin in reſpect of its infinite deformity, cannot be defined, nor ſhewed how haynous a thing it is: and therefore the Church in the Collect upon the eleventh Sunday after Trinity, (which alſo I found obſerved by Aquinas) ſaith; God which declareſt thy Almighty power, moſt chiefly in ſhewing mercy and pittie: And ſo Chriſt himſelfe, that knoweth all things, ſhewing how hard it is for a rich Man to enter into eternall life, doth ſeeme to ſhew as much; and thereupon his Diſciples were aſtoniſhed out of meaſure, ſaying among themſelves; Who then can be ſaved?

Tantæ molis erat cœleſtem condere gentem.

So hard a thing it was to pardon ſin; though we poore blinded fooles, doe eſteeme it nothing to commit the ſin.

But yet againſt deſpaire, that it is not impoſſible with God to remit all ſins, our Saviour brings this reaſon, becauſe all things are poſſible with God; and the bleſſed Apoſtle Paul, diſputing of the incredulous Iewes, and ſaying, that they alſo if they remained not in unbeliefe, ſhould be ingraffed againe into the Olive tree, doth frame his argument from the power of God, ſaying, That God is able to graffe them in againe; for ſeeing that as a bough which is cut off, cannot graffe it ſelfe into the tree againe; ſo no more can a man, dead through ſin, revive himſelfe any more, nor an infidell caſt off his infidelity, and poure faith into his owne heart againe: therefore the Apoſtle confeſſeth, this is not of our ſelves; a Sort of adverſaries, deſperate ſinners.

How wicked ſinners think God cannot forgive their ſins. Deut. 32. 15.

Gen. 4. 13.

That to forgive ſins, is the greateſt work of Gods power.

Pſal. 33. 9.

Heydelphelde: c. 2. de Deo p. 9.

Mar. 10. 25.

Verſe 26.

That God is able to forgive ſins. Mar. 10. v. 27.

Rom. 11. 23.

All graces from God. Rom. 4. 17.

and he sheweth that indeed all graces, our Conversion, our Faith, our Perseverance, and all else, are scited in the sole Will and Power of God; because he alone doth vivifie the dead, and call those things which are not, as if they were; that is, to cause those Men, which are dead through sinne, to be revived againe by grace; and those things, which are not at all in rerum natura, to have their existens and being by his onely word, without any labour or paines, but as easily, or easier, then we doe call the things that are: whereof both is entis simpliciter ex non ente productio; a production of being out of nothing, saith Pareus: and therefore it is unpossible to be effected by any created power; but not with God; because all things are possible with him: and therefore is he able, to make our sinnes that are as red as Scarlet, to become as white as Snow.

Pareus in Rom. c. 11.

Mar. 10. 27. Esay 1. 18.

3 Sort of adversaries. The vbiquitanes.

Thirdly, For the Vbiquitaries; they doe conclude that by the omnipotent power of God, the man Christ Iesus, by reason of the communication of the properties of the one nature unto the other, may be, and is Omniscient and Omnipresent, that is, to know all things, and to be every where, in all places, even at one and the selfe same time; for thus Mentzerus reasoneth against Sadeel; Hee that is Omnipotent, can be present where he will; but the Man Christ Iesus, or Christ as Man, is Omnipotent; therefore Christ, as Man, can be present where hee will; in the Church, in the Sacrament, in the midst of his enemies, or in any other place, where he pleaseth: whereas Sadeel, on the other side saith, and he saith most truly, that if God should intend and indeavour to extend all the nerves and sinewes of his Omnipotencie; yet can he not make one numericall, and naturall Body, to be in many places at one and the selfe same time: which in very deed is most infallibly true, as hereafter I shall shew unto you.

Mentz. contra Sadeel p. 269.

The error of the Vbiquitaries.

4 Sort of adversaries, Romanists.

The error of the Church of Rome about Gods power, to prove Transubstantiation.

Fourthly, For the Pontificialls; Bellarmine doth most stoutly withstand us, and to establish his opinion of Transubstantiation he saith, (but most falsely) that God can make the true and naturall body of Christ, though finite and numerically one, to be substantially present in all those places, where soever their Masse is celebrated, and to be orally received, and eaten of all those Men, that doe communicate, whosoever those Men should be; and so the rest of them, taught herein by that Arch-hereticke the divell, doe strive with all their might, to confirme the probability (for the verity they shall never doe) of that opinion, from the Omnipotent power of God. And truely this is nothing else, but most cunningly to hide their true faults and false errors, under the pretext and vayle of the power of God: Miserable men (herein I assure my selfe) qui dum volunt esse mali, nolunt esse veritatem, qua condemnantur mali, who while they desire to bee in error, doe wholly oppose the light of Truth, whereby their errors are reproved, and doe bring their subtilties and fallacies, into the Church of God; intruding falsehoods into the roome of Truth, and bare names, accidents without any subjects, (even as Ixion imbraced a Cloud for Iuno) to be received of us for true and reall things; and, because we will not yeeld to be thus seduced, and to be made fooles; they call us Fooles, and Heretickes full of Heresies, and I know not (as I care not) what: But it is easier for them, to call us then to prove us so; and they are but parties and not judges of this controversie; and parties must not bee Iudges in the same case wherein they are parties: And therefore wee will not judge of them, least we should bee judged of the Lord; neither will we give them any other names, then the members of the Church of Rome, the patrons and defenders of her doctrines, and such as beseemeth Modestie and Christianity; for we know the spirit of Christ is a spirit of Love, not of hatred, a spirit of Meeknesse, not of harshnesse, and a spirit of Peace, not of strife and contention; but according to true reason, and the judgement of all antiquity, and especially the divine verity of the most holy Scripture (whose property is, judicium αὐτόπιστον, & infallibile, to give an absolute and infallible judgement of truth,) we will by Gods helpe, discusse this point, of the power of God; because the knowledge of this point, is so exceedingly necessary for the Church of God.

Parties must not be judges,

We give no ill termes unto our adversaries.

CHAP.

Chap. II.

How many waies the power of God is to bee considered, and how farre the absolute power of God extendeth.

For the second point, that is, how farre the power of God extendeth; we must first note, the difference betwixt δύναμιν and ἐξουσίαν, Power and Authority; for Authority is that which is established by right; and of this our Saviour speaketh, when he saith, Mihi data est omnis potestas, All power is given unto me, in Heaven and in earth; that is, all authority over all creatures, both in Heaven and Earth; and of this I am not to speake in this place; it was formerly expressed in the word, Lord; But Power is that facultie of doing any thing, which consisteth in strength, and might, as Musculus saith; and this is that which I am to speake of; And it is either,

2 Of the truth and extent of Gods power.

Mat. 28. 18.

Wolfg. Musc. de omnipot. Dei.

1. Passive.
2. Active.

} And

First, A passive Power is nothing else, but ens in potentia, a being in power; or else a power to be such and such a thing, as cold water to be made hot, a poore man to be made rich, an ignorant man to be made learned and the like, and it is opposed to the act of doing or effecting such things; And this we utterly deny to be in God; because God is, μονοειδὴς, καὶ ἀυτὸ ὡσαυτὸς, κατὰ ταῦτα ἔχων uniforme, having himselfe by himselfe alwaies alike, and the selfe same manner, and never receiving any waies, any change or alteration, being without any shadow of turning, as the Apostle saith.

Power is twofold.
1 Passive power what it is.

Iames 1. 17.

Secondly, An active power is that, whereby such and such acts are fully done and accomplished; and this also (if we speake properly) is farre from the nature of God, because God is a meere, and a pure act; and nothing adventitious can be said to be God; but to retaine the usuall manner of speaking, for our better understandings sake; we say that an active power is in God; But then we must further note that an Active Power is either,

2 Active power what it is.

The active power twofold.

1. Accepta, received, or
2. Innata, inbred.

} }

The first is of the Creature, the second is of the Creator; and That subsisteth by anothers strength, so long as it doth indure, as our Saviour sheweth, Without me you can doe nothing; because he giveth the power of working; but This never subsisteth by any other strength, but by its owne proper might for ever; and besides, That is particular and limited; particular, because no creature is so powerfull, that it can universally worke all things, (God giving not such a perfect power unto any man, save onely unto his onely begotten Sonne Iesus Christ,) and limited, because, to doe infinite things, is impossible for any creature; and because those things which are possible for them to doe, are not so possible unto them, as that they can performe any jot of them, beyond the measure of the limitation given of God: and therefore the power of Kings, Monarchs, and Potentates; yea, of the very Angels, and divels; as it is given them from above, so it is limited, how farre it shall goe; They may slay the bodies, but they cannot touch the Soules; and they can for a while, and in some measure, execute their rage and tyranny against the Saints of God; but if they could doe as much as they would doe; not a Righteous man should be left upon the face of the Earth: and therefore oftentimes, either by death, or by some singular judgement of God, their power is terminated, and sometimes turned to their shame and confusion. But

1 The received power.

Iohn 15. 5.

The received power is
1 Particular.
2 Limited.

That the power of the most powerfull creatures is limited.

2 The inbred power, considered two waies.

The Second, that is, the Inbred power of the Creator, is to bee considered either,

1. In respect of the inward acts and Operations
2. In respect of the outward acts and Operations

} Of God.

1 In respect of inward operations.

First, The power of God, considered in respect of his inward operations, is that, whereby God doth inwardly understand, love, and worke for ever and ever; because he cannot, non ἐνεργεῖν, be idle and not to worke, by reason of the necessity of his immutability, those things, which are called, τὰ ἀΐδια that is, æternorum, the acts of eternity; and this power is likewise twofold.

The power of God in respect of his inward acts is twofold:

1. Speciall to each person.
2. Common to the Father, Sonne and Holy Ghost.

} And

1 Speciall.

First, The speciall power is that, which pertaineth unto one person, and not unto the other, as potentia γεννητική, the power of begetting is proper unto the Father, and not to the Sonne, nor to the Holy Ghost; because this Power is his Power, as he is a Father, and not as he is God; and of this power S. Aug. ad Maximum saith, if the Father cannot beget him a Sonne, equall to himselfe, how is he Omnipotent: therefore it is proper and not common; because that for the Father to beget, and not to be begotten, and for the Holy Ghost to proceed, and not beget, nor to bee begotten, are, Proprietates personales, personall proprieties; whereby the persons of the God-head are distinguished betwixt themselves.

2 Common.

Secondly, the common Power is that, which doth appertaine to each person in generall, as well to the one, as to the other; as the Power of working those internall operations, which are common unto the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost; such as are, those acts of loving each other, understanding each other, and the like.

2 In respect of outward operations.

All the outward actions of God, are common to each person of the God-head.

Why common attributes are appropriated to the persons.
Gen. 1.2.
Iohn 1.3.
Heb. 1.2.
Iob 26.13.

Secondly, the Power of God considered, in respect of his outward operations, is that, wherby God created all things, governeth al things & can do al things, whatsoever pleaseth him: And this is so common to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, that it is most rightly said, that opera Trinitatis ad extra sunt indivisa; The outward workes of the Trinity are indivisible, that is, common to each person: And therfore this Power of God in respect of these outward operations, though in our Creed it is ascribed unto the Father, lest that, because he is called Father, we should imagine some defect and impotency to be in him; as to the Sonne we finde Wisedome ascribed, lest that, because he is called Sonne, we might conceit some ignorance, or inexperience to bee in him; yet, as the wisedome of God, so is this Power of God, and the workes of this Power, common to each person of the Deity, as we may see in the first of Iohn and the third. Heb. 1.2. Gen. 1.2. Iob 26.13.

2 Properties of Gods power.

And we find this Power of God, to be

1. Proper unto God.
2. Absolute in all things.

1 That the power of God is so proper unto God, as that it cannot bee communicated to any creature.

First, It is proper, yea, so proper unto God alone, as that it cannot be communicated to any creature; no not to the humanity of our Saviour Christ; because the humanity, existing and hanging upon the Crosse, was not able to helpe it selfe, but was faine to cry unto his Father, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken mee? which the humanity of Christ would never have done, if his humanity had beene omnipotent: And therefore Aquinas doth most truely conclude, that the soule of Christ was not capable to receive into it selfe infinite Power; no more then a creature is able to containe or comprehend his Creator; for this is a most certaine rule, that whatsoever is received into another thing, is onely received according to the capacity of the thing receiving, and not of the thing received; as a bucket can take out of the well but a bucket full of water, and Axioma: Quicquid recipitur, recipitur ad modū recipientis.

and as the graces of Gods ſpirit, though they be moſt pure and perfect in themſelves, yet are they impure and imperfect in us, becauſe they are received by us, not as they are in themſelves, but according as we are able to receive them; and therefore though Gods omnipotencie were able to communicate his infinite power unto a creature, yet is it moſt apparant that a finite creature is, no waies capable of an infinite power. Beſides, if an infinite power or Omnipotencie be communicated to the humanity of Chriſt, then this power muſt needs bee either created or increated, if not created then is it the eſſence of God, and ſo it is incommunicable, and if it be created then is it finite, becauſe nothing that is created can be infinite, either by nature or by object or by action; and therefore it is not omnipotent; ſeeing that Omnipotencie is nothing elſe but that power, which is by nature infinite, and therefore can extend it ſelfe to infinite objects, and whoſe action is ſuch, as that it can moſt infinitely inlarge it ſelf: and yet I confeſſe with the Apoſtle, that in him, that is, in the perſon of Chriſt, dwelleth the fullneſſe of the God-head bodily; yea, and that the man Chriſt Ieſus received grace, not by meaſure, Sed uſque ad plenitudinem, but even unto the fullneſſe, that is ſo much, as a creature is any waies capable of; becauſe the God-head did Communicate ſuch perfections unto the humanity, as the condition of a creature could poſſibly beare; yet is it manifeſt, that all thoſe perfections and excellencies, wherwith the man-hood of Chriſt was indowed and innobled, were all of them created excellencies; becauſe no attribute of God can be Communicated unto any created ſubſtance; becauſe every attribute of God, is God himſelfe: but whatſoever is given and beſtowed upon any creature, muſt needs be a created thing as Aquinas confeſſeth; and therefore neither the wiſedome, nor the power, nor the goodneſſe which are attributed unto God, as they are the eſſentiall properties, nay, the very Eſſence of God it ſelfe, can be any waies communicated to any thing; but that which is communicated unto us, muſt needs be ſome other thing from them: as the goodneſſe which we have, is a created goodneſſe, and not that, nor any part of that goodneſſe, which is in God; and therefore, though the Power, Wiſedome, and goodneſſe of God, (as they are God himſelfe) are indiſſolubly united by a perſonall union unto the humanity of Chriſt, innobled with all poſſibly created excellencies; yet are they ſo proper unto the Deity, as that they cannot be communicated to be the Eſſentiall properties of it, or of any other creature whatſoever: and ſo the very names of them, that they are the properties of God, doth ſufficiently ſhew, that they cannot be the properties of any other thing.

Omnipotencie what it is.

Col. 1. 9.

Thom. de provid. p. 2. q. 5. artic. 8.

Secondly, as this Power of God is proper unto God alone, ſo it is abſolute in all reſpects; becauſe it is not ſo limited, by the univerſall Law of Nature, as if beſide, or above it, God could not doe any thing that he would; but it is plenary, and univerſall; becauſe nothing is unpoſſible unto him, but that without all limitation, or determination, he can do all, and every thing, which, howſoever and whenſoever it pleaſeth him: And it is called abſolute, or omnipotent in three reſpects.

That the Power of God is abſolute in three reſpects.

Firſt, becauſe he can doe whatſoever he will doe; for whatſoever pleaſeth the Lord, that did he in Heaven and in Earth, and in the Sea, and in all deepe places; and the Wiſeman ſaith, that hee can ſhew his great ſtrength, at all times, when he will; and it is worth the obſerving, that as he can doe what he will; ſo hee can doe it, as he will; he need but ſay the word, and they are done; Let there be light, and there was light; He can doe any thing without meanes, with meanes, with ſmall meanes, and many times contrary to the nature of the meanes, that hee uſually uſeth to doe ſuch and ſuch things. 1. Without meanes, as in creating all things of nothing; 2. With meanes, as to fructifie the earth, by the dropping of the cloudes; 3. With weake meanes, as to leade his people out of Egypt, by the hands of Moſes and Aaron; and by the fooliſhneſſe of Preaching, to ſave thoſe that beleeve; And 4. Contrary to the nature of meanes, as when to let Iſrael paſſe through the red ſea, he cauſed the ſame to ſtand upon heapes; and to preſerve the three children, he made the fire to forget his owne vertue, and not to ſinge Firſt, he can doe what he will. Pſal. 135. 6. Sap. 11. 21.

Gen. 1. 3.

Heſea 2. 21.

Pſal. 77. 20.

1 Cor. 1. 21.

Sap. 19. 20.

Dan 3. 27.

singe an haire of their head; so absolute is his Power, that whatsoever he will have, and as he will have it, so he can easily bring the same to passe.

Secondly, his Power is said to be absolute, Quia est ἀδεσποίνων; because he is subject to no hinderance, his power is unresistible, and he can easily hinder whatsoever is intended against his will; as he did the Giants to build the Tower of Babel; and Saul to persecute his poore Church; but none can hinder him, to doe whatsoever he will; for as the Prophet Esay saith, There is none that can deliver out of his hands; and if he will worke, who shall hinder it? no counsell, no strength, no indevour of any created thing, can any waies prevaile against God; and therefore Daniel saith, that the Throne of God was like a fiery flame, and his wheeles like burning fire; to shew that against God there is no resistance, saith Amandus Polanus, no more then the stubble can resist the raging fire. And Saint Augustine saith, that in this respect God is said to be omnipotent; Quia facit quæ vult, & non patitur quæ non vult; Because he doth what he will, and suffereth nothing to be done that he will not; For none can hinder him to doe what he will; but he can hinder any thing that he will not; and therefore Salomon saith, Many devices are in a mans heart, but the counsell of the Lord shall stand, that is, let men plot what they will, nothing shall bee effected that God will not.

Secondly, his Power is said to be absolute, because he can do more then either he doth, or will doe; for we must understand that the Power of God is to be considered, either

1. ἁπλῶς; absolutely, or
2. κατὰ τι; Ex hypothesi, relatively, as it hath respect and relation unto the will and Wisedome of God.

In the first sence, the absolute Power of God is that, whereby God can simply doe, whatsoever hath the possibility of being; that is, to be done; and therefore by this Power, God could and can doe many infinite things, more then he doth, and more then he hath revealed unto us, that he will doe; as by and by I shall declare unto you.

In the second sence, the hypotheticall or conditionall Power of God, which is called the Actuall Power of God, and unto which pertaineth the ordinary Power of God, (whereof Scaliger speaketh, Exercitatione, 365. Sect. 8.) is that, whereby God can do only what hee will, and not those things which he will not; and so his Power extends it selfe no further then his will, nor his will any further then his Power; but as Saint Ambrose saith, Voluntas ejus potestas ejus; his will and his Power are both alike: And therefore it is apparant that God, by his absolute Power, can doe a great deale more then he doth or can do by his ordinary Power; because by that he can doe all things that are possible to be done; but by this hee can doe but onely those things which he willeth, and hath decreed to be done: To make it more plaine; God could of these stones raise up children unto Abraham, saith John Baptist; that is, by his absolute Power; but he could not doe it by his ordinary Power; because he would not; So the Father could have beene incarnate, and made man by his absolute Power; because this doth neither destroy his nature, nor imply a contradiction; but he could not do this by his hypotheticall or conditionall Power; because it repugneth with the decree of Gods will; so hee could and can create a thousand worlds, by his absolute Power; but he cannot doe it by his ordinary Power; because he willeth no more but this one; and to say all in a word, God can do only these things which out of his goodnes and wisedome (which is the rule, by which the ordinary Power of God is guided) he hath from all eternity decreed, that he would doe, by his limited and ordinary actuall Power; but he can doe, not onely this, but also all things else, that he can will, and many thousand times more then either he doth, or willeth to bee done, by his absolute, and illimited power: This is the truth; you shall heare the proofe. For,

First,

Secondly, he can hinder what hee will not. Gen. 11. 8.

Esay 43. 13.

Polan. tom. 2. p. 513

Pro 19. 21.

3 He can do more then he will.

Gods Power to be considered two waies.

Goclen. disput. Philos. p. 133.

1 Simply.

2 Relatively. That the will and decree of God, is the rule and measure of the ordinary Power of God.

Mat. 3. 9.

What God could doe by his absolute power.

First, Our Saviour Christ himselfe saith unto Saint Peter, Put up thy sword into his place; Thinkest thou, that I cannot now pray to my Father, and hee shall presently give me more then twelve legions of Angels? And therefore it is apparant, that he could both have asked his Father, and that his Father could have supplyed him; and yet neither of them would doe that, which both of them were able to doe.

That God by his absolute power can doe more then he doth, or ever did. Mat. 26. 53.

Secondly, the Fathers doe thus explaine this Truth; for Saint Augustine saith, Consequens est, ut quod est, esse potuerit, &c. It is consequent, that that, which is, might be; but it is not consequent, that that, which might be, is; for, because the Lord raised Lazarus from the grave, it is without doubt that he could doe it; and because he did not raise Iudas, that is, spiritually from sinne, shall we say, that he could not doe it? therefore he could, but he would not; for, if he would have done it, he might with the same power, have raised him from sin, as he did the other from his grave; because, the Sonne quickneth whom hee will: So Tertullian, in his booke against Praxeas, saith, Non quia non potest facere, ideo credendum est illum non fecisse, etiam quod non fecerit; sed an fecerit requirendum; We must not therefore beleeve, that God hath not done those things, which he hath not, nor will not doe, because he cannot doe them; but we must inquire what he hath done, or will doe; for assuredly he could, if he would, have given unto man wings to flie withall, as he did unto the birds of the ayre; hee could presently destroy Praxeas, and all other Hereticks whatsoever; and yet he doth not doe it, because he can doe it; for there must be Heretickes and it behoved Christ to have suffered; In this respect, may any thing be said to be hard for God to doe; that is, whatsoever he will not doe; not because he cannot doe it; but because he is not willing to doe it; Quia Dei posse velle est, & non posse nolle est; because that to be able with God, is to be willing; and not to be able, is to be unwilling, because he can doe whatsoever he will doe: And so Damascene saith, πάντα μὴ ὅσα θέλει δύναται, οὐκ ὅσα δὲ δύναται θέλει; δύναται γὰρ ἀπολέσαι τὸν κόσμον καὶ θέλει δὲ. He can do whatsoever he will do, but willeth not whatsoever he can do; for he can consume the world, but he willeth it not.

Iohn 5. 21. Tertul. contra Prax. 1 Cor. 11. 19. Luk. 24. 46. Damasc. ad Calcem, l. 1.

And so we see that God can both will and doe, much more things then he did, or doth, or will doe, by this his absolute and illimited Power.

And this distinction well observed, doth make way to reconcile the writings and the opinions of divers, both ancient and moderne Writers, in many points, concerning the power of God; for whereas Anselmus thinketh it was so needfull for humane kinde, to be repayred by the passion of Christ, as that otherwise it could not possibly have beene redeemed; because no meere or bare creature could possibly effect so great a reparation; It is most true of the ordinary Power of God, and in respect of the necessity of conveniency, and the appointed ordinance of the Divine wisedome; because God hath decreed it so to be: and therefore it could not otherwise be: And whereas Scotus saith, Aliter potuisse λύτρωσιν fieri, That the ransome of mans redemption might have beene otherwise paid, Quam per θεανθρώπε mortem, then by the death of him that was both God & Man; so that, which Saint Augustine saith, Alium modum redimendi hominem Deo non defuisse; that God could otherwise have redeemed man, if it had so pleased him, it is most true, if we understand it of his absolute Power; to which all things are subject, as Saint Augustine speaketh: And so in like manner that saying of Damascen, ἀδύνατον φύναι φύσιν ἐκτὸς τῶν φυσικῶν ἰδιωμάτων, That it is unpossible for any nature to subsist, if you take away the naturall properties thereof, is true; if we understand it of Gods ordinary Power; but it is false if we understand it of Gods absolute Power; because that whatsoever is created is so created, that any thing may be made of any thing, by the absolute power of God; as blood may be made water, and water wine; the fire not to burne, and the water not to quench; for though the ordinary power of God is limited and guided by his will, to doe all things according to his prescribed rule; yet is his absolute power so free, and so large, that as his will can will any thing that is willible; so can this power doe any Anselm. in l. quidr: cur Deus homo. The sayings of divers Authors reconciled by this distinction of Gods ordinary and absolute power.

Aug. l. 13. de Trinitate.

Psal. 78. 41. Iohn 2. 9. Dan. 3. 25.

any thing that is possible, or hath the possibility of being.

Ob. Then you will say, Transubstantiation may hold good; because it may be done by Gods absolute power, that any nature may subsist without its properties; though this cannot be done by his ordinary power.

Accidents cannot subsist without their subjects.

Sol. I answer, that there is a great deale of difference, betwixt these two, for natures to subsist without her properties, and for the properties to subsist without the nature; for it is one thing to say that the substance can subsist without the accident, and another thing to say that the accident can subsist without any substance; and of the first we finde examples, and we can yeeld reasons, that by Gods absolute power it may be done; but of the second, which is the case of Transubstantiation, we have no example, but have many reasons to shew that by no power it can be done.

Of the extent of Gods absolute Power.

But now, we are come into the greatest depth of this Doctrine, to know how farre this absolute power of God extendeth; or to know what are those things, which by this absolute and unlimited power of God, may bee effected: For,

The erronious conceits of many men about the absolute Power of God.

Some affirme, or rather faigne, that by this absolute power of God, all things simply may be done, which can be either spoken or imagined; yea, even those things, which are impossible in their owne nature to be done, and doe imply the greatest contradictions that may be, as they which doe contend and strive to prove, that God can make a humane and a naturall body to be every where, and that bread should be bread, and yet transubstantiated into flesh, and that accidents should subsist without their subjects; and so the greatest part of the vulgar sort, which thinke that God is therefore called Almighty, because he can doe all things, that can be imagined; Nam qui dicit omnia, excludit nihil; for hee which saith all things, excepteth nothing; and if there be any thing, which hee doth not doe, that this happeneth, because he will not, and not because he can not.

But such fictions are to be rejected, and the blasphemies of them, which attribute such an absolute power unto God, as that he can sin, and lie, and doe all things else, without order, without reason, without truth, and without Justice, are to be execrated and accursed; because the Apostle saith himselfe, there bee some things, which God cannot doe, as God, which cannot lye, which cannot denie himselfe; and therefore others of a sounder judgement, for the more fully expressing the truth of this point, have used divers formes of answers; but they doe all fall at last to the same end; as Titus 1.2. 2 Tim. 2.13.

How divers men have explained this point.

1 Answer.

First, some say, that God can doe all those things, which neither signifie imperfection, nor imply a contradiction; as to sin, to sleepe, to walke, and such like, doe argue imperfection in them that doe them; and to cause those things which have beene done, not to have beene done, or the things that are, not to be, doth imply a contradiction.

2 Answer.

Secondly, others say, that God can doe all those things which are nothing derogatory to the Power of God; but all those things, which denotate a privation of power, Et quæ ἀδυναμίαν potius quam δυνάμιν significant, and which shew an impotency rather then omnipotency, must needs be derogatory to the Power of God; So, to sinne is a signe of weakenesse; because it signifieth a privation of rectitude in any action; So to move signifieth an imperfection, because the mover cannot be every where; and so to suffer is a note of infirmity, because the sufferer cannot resist; and to die is an argument of great weakenesse because wee cannot live; and such like; they doe all shew impotency and weakenesse, in the doers: and therefore, Gods not being able to doe these things, doth sufficiently argue the infiniteneſſe of his Power; for if he could sin, or die, deceive, or be deceived, then could he not be omnipotent, saith Saint Augustine: Ideo magna Dei potentia mentiri non posse; And therefore it is from the greatnesse of Gods Power that he cannot lye, that he cannot deny himselfe, and the like, saith Saint Augustine.

Aug. l. 1. c. 1. de Symbolo Idem de Trinitate l. 15. c. 15.

3 Answer.

Thirdly, Others doe more briefly say, that God can do all those things, which are are not repugnant to the nature of God; and this answer they doe collect out of Saint Augustine, where he saith, that God cannot doe any injustice, because he is Iustice it selfe; neither can he deny himselfe, because he is faithfull, as the Apostle speaketh; nor die, because he is life; nor lie, because he is Truth; nor sinne, because he is the chiefest goodnesse; nor doe any corporall acts, such as are to walke, to move, to eate, and the like, because he is an immoveable Spirit, and the purest act, with whose nature, no corporall act can square to fall on him; And so as Saint Augustine saith, in another case, Alij atque alij alijs atque alijs loquendi formulis usi sunt; Divers men have framed divers answers unto this point, and I, out of them all, doe with the most learned Zanchius say, that God can doe all those things, Quæ neque apud Deum, neque sua natura simpliciter sunt ἀδύνατα; Which are neither contrary to the Nature of God, nor yet of their owne Nature simply impossible to be done.

Idem in l. de spiritu & litera.

Zanch. de natura Dei.

Two sorts of impossible things.

First, of the first kinde are all those actions, which though they may be done of the creatures; yet have they no place with God; and such are to sinne, to move, to die, to walke, to eate, and all other humane acts; and so whatsoever doth repugne the nature of God, or be any waies contrary to his essentiall, or personall properties; because, to be able to doe these things, were to evert and destroy the nature and properties of God: And therefore God cannot imagine any folly; because this doth contradict his Wisedome; he cannot suffer any sinne to goe unpunished; because that is contrary to his Iustice; neither can he lye; because that is contrary to his Truth; neither can he doe, but he must be just, good, wise, pure, invisible, incorporeall, and so forth; not onely, because that to be able to doe this, would argue a defect of power; but especially, because the deniall and sublation or taking away of these properties is the negation and destruction of the Essence of God; ἡ γὰρ τῶν ἰδιότητων ἀναίρεσις ἐστι φύσεως ἄρνησις; For the taking away of the essentiall properties is the abolishing of the nature, * saith Theodoret: And therefore these, and the like things, which doe repugne with the essentiall, or personall properties of God, cannot be done, on Gods part, nor by God, though they may be done by the creatures; because in very deed, he cannot, by any meanes, will to doe these things; for none can naturally will, to be contrary to that, which naturally he willeth to be; as no man can naturally will himselfe to be miserable; because every man naturally willeth felicitie: and therefore seeing God is naturally Wise, True, and Good, it is most absolutely necessary, that he should alwaies Will Wisedome, Truth, and Goodnesse; and he cannot possibly Will the contrary, as Theodoret doth most excellently say; Dominus Deus nihil vult eorum, quæ non sibi suapte natura insunt, potest quæcunque vult, & vult quæ naturæ suæ apta & convenientia sunt; God cannot will any of those things, which are not naturally agreeable unto him; he can doe what he will, and he can will whatsoever is apt, and agreeable to his nature.

Theodor. Dialog 3.

* That is, of God; otherwise Gods absolute power may take away the essentiall properties of the creatures, and yet cause the creatures to subsist; as I have shewed unto you before

That God cannot will those things that are contrary to his nature.

Idem quo supra.

Secondly, Of the second kinde are all those things which imply a contradiction; as for a thing to be and and not to be together; because all such things ἁπλῶς & κατ' αὐτὸ & ὅλως, sunt ἀδύνατα, are simply and absolutely impossible; as contradictorily repugning, and so destroying one another; and therefore they can no waies be done: Quia res talis non potest habere rationem factibilis; Because such a thing hath not the reason, nor way, nor possibility of being done, as Thomas saith: and therefore we doe say that God can neither doe, nor will contraries, as good and evill; (which in a nature obsolutely, and every way simple, cannot subsist;) nor yet contradictories, as to make a thing to be, and not to bee; which in the essence of God, voide and cleere from all falsehood, and most perfect in all truth, can have no place, saith Trelcatius.

2 Sort. How contradictories doe destroy each other

A thing that cannot be don, is called by Aristotle, ἀδύνατον κατ' αὐτον; hoc est, res, non quam Deus facere non potest, sed quæ fieri nequit. Trelcatius in thesi de Deo & Amand. Polan. in Syn.

And so we doe affirme, that God cannot make, that a triangle should bee a triangle, and yet not to have three angles or corners; or that a triangle should have three angles, and not three angles; that that which is, while it is, should not be; that those things, which have beene made, should not have beene made; that a body should be a true naturall body, and yet destitute and free from all those naturall proprieties, which doe as it were constitute the very being of the thing, and without which the very definition of the thing is taken away: and all other such things, which doe simply imply a contradiction.

But you said even now, Gods absolute power can take away the properties of a creature, and yet cause the creature to subsist.

Ergo, where the essentiall properties of bread are, there is bread. * But to say the truth, the fire did not burne the children by reason of the substraction, but by reason of the repression of his naturall properties; because the fire burned those that put them in: Ergo, the heate of the fire was not taken away. Venera. Bede in Marc. C. 11.

I answer, that for the creature to subsist is one thing, and to subsist, or to be and continue the same thing without its naturall properties, is another thing; for when the water was turned into wine, the fire deprived of his heate * or any other matter disrobed of his forme and essentiall properties; I say they may and doe subsist, yet not subsist to be the same things; and therefore take away the naturall and essentiall properties of any thing, and take away that thing; but yeeld the properties, and you must grant the thing.

And we find Men, in all ages, to have confest, and to have taught the same truth; for venerable Bede, expounding those words of S. Marke, All things are possible with God, saith; it is not so to be understood, that the covetous and proud men can, with their pride and covetousnesse, enter into the kingdome of Heaven; because this is impossible unto God; because neither the Covetous, nor the Proud, as God himselfe doth testifie, by the mouth of his Apostle, shall inherit the kingdome of God, 1 Cor. 9. 10. but that it is possible for God, (as often it hath beene done, and we daily see it to be done) so to worke in the hearts of these wicked and ungodly Men, that by the preaching of his Word, and the working of his Spirit, they should be converted, and weaned from the love of worldly things, and be inflamed with the longing desire of Heavenly things, Et à pernicioſa ſuperbia ad humilitatem ſaluberrimam reducantur, And be reduced from their aspiring and pernicious pride, unto that most wholesome practise of humility; in which words, he plainely sheweth, that God cannot doe those things which do imply a contradiction; So Saint Augustine, against Faustus the Manichie, and in many other places; and so Aquinas, and all Schoole-Divines, doe all of them teach the same truth; And they that say otherwise, doe but mocke both God and Man, and take away all truth from Divine and Humane things, and lay open a most unsufferable and unrepairable gap, for all wicked Hereticks; for God which is immutably and infallibly true, αὐτὸ ἀλήθεια, and the very truth it selfe, can neither will, nor suffer, that an affirmation should be a negation, that an yea should be a nay, or that truth and falshood should be mixed together in the very selfe-same simplest subject; as for a man to say, this is fire and not water, and this very selfe-same thing is water and not fire, at the same time, and in the same respect; or this is bread, and not flesh; and this is flesh, and not bread, that is, one thing to be two distinct things, at the selfe-same time, and in the selfe-same respect, I say it is unpossible for the truth of God to doe, as Saint Augustine doth most excellently and most largely shew against Faustus Manichæus; for though God can change both formes and substances; yet he cannot make any thing to be and not to be the same thing, either in respect of property, forme or substance, as to be such a substance and not to be such a substance, to have such a forme and not such a forme, and so to have such properties and not such properties; because these things do evert the nature of all truth, and so overthrow the nature of God.

The most horrible impieties of the, which say God can worke all contradictories.

Aug. com. Faust. l. 26. c. 81.

And therefore, I cannot sufficiently wonder, who hath bewitched our Vbiquitaries, which do so stiffely contend, that the Body of Christ remaining a true body, yet notwithstanding may bee, and is, every where, illocall, invisible, intactible and so forth; for if these things be not meerely contradictories, I know not what are nor what can be; because every true body hath his quantity, and is defined, and hedged by the bounds and limits of his quantity; and because every body is limited with the bounds of his trinary dimensions, length, breadth and depth, and so measured and finite; and the taking away from any body the proper passion of a body, namely the possessing of one place, must necessarily include the destruction and abolishment of the forme, nature and essence of the body it selfe; for as much as the property of occupying one place floweth, of necessity, from the very

That every true naturall Body must be locall.

forme

forme and nature of a body; and cannot, by Gods power, be ſeparated therefrom, without deſtroying the ſubject it ſelfe, on which it dependeth; And that this confining of a body to one place, is a true property, or proper paſſion of a body, it is evident; becauſe it ſuiteth with bodies, univerſally, onely, and alwaies, and is reciprocated with a body, (as the Schooles do ſpeake:) and therefore, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that every body muſt be locall, and no humane body can be illocall; for if you take away the locality or place from a body, you muſt firſt take away the quantity and the limits of his trinary dimenſions, and you muſt take away the definition of a body; and ſo of neceſſity a body ſhall be no body: and therefore S. Auguſtine doth moſt rightly ſay, that the body, in which the Lord did riſe, muſt of neceſſity be in a place; but his divine efficacy and nature is diffuſed every where; and in his third Epiſtle he ſaith, How much ſoever the body be, or how little ſoever the body be, it behoveth the ſame to occupie the bounds of a place; and in Epiſt. 146. he ſaith, I believe the body of Chriſt to be ſo in heaven, as he was on earth, when he went to heaven: But it was then circumſcribed; Ergo, he is ſo alſo now. And in his Epiſtle to Dardanus, he ſaith, Tolle locorum ſpatia corporibus & nuſquam erunt, & quia nuſquam erunt, non erunt; take away the ſpaces of places from bodies, or bodies from places, and they ſhall be no where, and becauſe no where, not at all; but to be, and not to be at all, is ſo contradictory, as I know nothing more: and therefore, for the body of Chriſt to remaine a true body, and to be every where, or in diverſe places at the ſame inſtant, is a thing impoſſible to be done; God himſelfe by all his power cannot doe it, and that, not by reaſon of any want of active power in God, but through the defect of a paſſive power in the creatures, which cannot ſuffer their eſſentiall and concomitant properties, to be torn away from the maine ſtocke, without the deſtruction of the whole nature and eſſence of the ſubject, to be ſuch a ſubject.

Aug. in Iohan. tract. 30. & in Epiſt. 146.
Aug. in Ep. ad Dardan.

The impoſſibility is in the ſubject, not in the agent.

Furthermore, ſeeing that contradictories cannot be done, becauſe they take away all the reaſon and poſſibility of being; it muſt needs follow, that God in this reſpect cannot make an Angelicall nature, or the ſoule of Man, or any body, or any other created thing, to be actually infinite; becauſe no creature is capable of infiniteneſſe, but is ever ſhut up and bounded within his limits, and is ever diſtinguiſhed from his Creatour, by this perpetuall and immutable condition, to be finite: and therefore a creature, which is produced from nothing unto his being, is not capable to be Co-eternall unto his Beginning or Maker, as Damaſcen ſaith.

That no creature can be made capable of infiniteneſſe, or of infinite perfections.

Damaſc. de fide Orthodox. c. 8.

And here I cannot ſilently paſſe a moſt memorable ſaying of a late Schoole-Doctor, which is this, Communicavit Deus creaturis eas perfectiones quas conditio creaturæ ferebat, &c. God hath communicated unto his creatures all ſuch perfections, as the condition of a creature was able to beare; but thoſe perfections, which exceeded the ſtate and condition of a creature, that is, which ſuffer not a creature to be a creature, (as to be every where, infinite, omniſcient, and ſuch like,) God neither ought, nor could communicate unto his creatures; he ought not, becauſe the creature had been then, in all things, equall to his Creatour; and he could not, becauſe then he ſhould have made his creature to be a God; and ſo there ſhould be two Infinites and two Gods, which is impoſſible: and this not being able to do theſe things, doth moſt manifeſtly ſhew, the moſt incomprehenſible excellency of God, to whom no creature, either in eſſence, or perfection, or in vertue, or in continuance, or in any ſuch things, can be equall: and it ſheweth alſo the defect of every created thing, that it hath not the reaſon of the poſſibility, or capacity to be made ſuch a thing, that is, infinite, or to be made a God.

The excellency of God.

The incapacity of the creature.

And therefore, hence likewiſe it muſt needs follow, that the omniſcience and omnipreſence of the body of Chriſt, cannot ſtand; for ſeeing the eſſentiall properties of God, (as is his infinite ubiquity, and incomprehenſible omnipotency) are the very eſſence of God; and that neither theſe properties, without the eſſence, nor yet any one eſſentiall property, without the other, can indeed be communicated to any creature, and that (as the Prophet teſtifieth) God will not, nay cannot, give his glory, that is, his eſſentiall glory, unto another, by reaſon of the incapacity

Caſman. Phiſcholog. part. 2. p. 13.

Eſa. 42. 8.

That it is impoſſible for the body of Chriſt to be every where at the ſame time.

pacity of every creature, to receive or comprehend in himſelfe this glory, that is, his Deity, and the unability of God to make a creature to be a God: therefore it is impoſſible, that the Body of Chriſt ſhould be indued either with this incomprehenſible omnipotency, or this infinite ubiquity: And ſeeing, that God is eſſentially infinite, and ſo every where according to his eſſence, wholly in every place, and that that, which is of the eſſence of God, cannot be in any creature, no not in the humane nature of Chriſt; therefore neither the omniſcience, nor the omnipreſence, nor any other eſſentiall property of God, can be in the humanity of Chriſt; for that nature, which is never transferred into the eſſence of another, can never obtaine the eſſentiall properties of the other into it ſelfe; but the humane nature of Chriſt, though it be capable of the infiniteneſſe of the Word, by inhabitation and perſonall union, yet was it never changed into the eſſence of the Word; neither did it ever receive into it ſelfe, as into a ſubject of inherency, the eſſentiall properties of the Word; Quia propria non egrediuntur ſua ſubjecta, becauſe properties do never paſſe their own ſubjects, and a created thing (as I ſaid before) cannot poſſibly receive into his eſſence infinite proprieties; otherwiſe it ſhould be a creature, and no creature; a creature, becauſe a humane body, and no creature, becauſe omniſcient, omnipreſent, and infinite, which is moſt abſurd, which is incredible, and which is impoſſible.

How the humane nature is capable of the infinitneſſe of the word.

Fathers confirme the former point.

And this truth the Fathers do moſt plainly confirm; for Iuſtin Martyr, propounding this queſtion, how the Word is, according to his eſſence, every where, and how he is in the humanity, as in his proper temple, anſwereth, that the word indeed, according to his eſſence, is every where, which is onely proper to God; but yet, he is in his body, which he aſſumed, after a more excellent ſort, than in any other thing; becauſe the eſſence of the word is united to the humane nature, as a part of that compound: where you ſee the Father affirmeth, that to be every where, according to eſſence, is only proper to God, and cannot belong to the body of Chriſt; becauſe that although it be the body of God, yet is not that body a God.

Ob. But you will ſay, the body is joyned to the Word, therfore as the Word is every where, ſo is the body.

How the humanity and the Deity are united.

Sol. I anſwer, that although the body is united to the Word, yet the Word is not therfore turned to the eſſence of the body, nor the body turned to the eſſence of the Word; therefore the body of Chriſt, remaining finite, cannot have an infinite ubiquity, neither of it ſelfe, nor from the Word: I confeſſe that the body of Chriſt, being united to the Word, is made partaker of diverſe prerogatives of the deity; but in no ſort to be partaker of the eſſentiall properties or divine eſſence, which he, that is every where, muſt needs be.

Cyrill. in Johan. l. 2 c. 49.

S. Cyrill Biſhop of Alexandria, that lived in Anno 283. ſaith, that we muſt note this diligently, that howſoever Chriſt hath removed from hence the preſence of his body, yet is he every where by the majeſty of his Deity; Where you may note, he aſcribeth Majeſty only to his Deity, and ſpeaketh not of any Majeſticall body: and writing upon the words of Chriſt, Yet a little while I am with you, he ſaith plainly, that Chriſt is abſent in body from us; and in his dialogue of the Trinity, he doth peremptorily determine, that every body is in ſome place, and muſt have both quantity and magnitude.

Tertullian proves Chriſt to be God, becauſe he is every where, ſaying, if Chriſt be a bare man, then how is he ſaid to be preſent with ſuch as call upon him; becauſe this is not the nature of man, but of God, to be in every place.

Aug. in Tract. de divinit. Dei quem Eraſm. exiſtimat eſſe Hugonem Victorin.

S. Auguſtine ſaith, we ought to believe, that Chriſt, according to his Deity, is not contained in any place, but in his humanity is in one place, and to be of another mind, is both impious and prophane: and he confirmeth the ſame point, in Tract. 3. ſup. Iohan.

Ambro. 4. in Luc. 10. c. 14.

S. Ambroſe is as plaine as any, to prove that the fleſh of Chriſt is neither in the earth, nor above the earth, but only aloft in heaven.

S. Chryſoſtome

S. Chryſoſtome thinks it abſurd to ſay, that Chriſt his fleſh, when it was here upon earth, was alſo in the kingdome of heaven: and I think it as abſurd to ſay, that his fleſh, being now in heaven, ſhould be alſo here on earth.

Chryſ to. 3. in Joh. hom. 26.

Theodoret ſaith, that the body of Chriſt, after his reſurrection, had the ſame dimenſions, which it had before, and that it is now in one place: Athanaſius in his Orat. againſt Idols is of the ſame mind.

Vigilius againſt Eutiches proves, that the word and the fleſh are not both in Chriſt of one nature, becauſe then, either as the word is every where, ſo the fleſh ſhould be every where; or els, as the fleſh is not every where, ſo the word ſhould not be every where, which are both abſurd; and therefore they are not both of one nature.

Vigilius contra Eutych. l. 4. 5

Fulgentius produceth many Scriptures to prove, that Chriſt, according to his Deity, is every where, but according to his humanity, is in one only place. And ſo Leo and S. Gregory both Biſhops of Rome, and many others, are of the ſame mind.

Fulgen. ad Tranſimund. &c.

And ſo you ſee all thoſe things, which are ſaid to be impoſſible to be done, or which God cannot do; touching which, we muſt further note this one thing, concerning the phraſe of being able to do things, that there are many things, which, though in reſpect of the name, may ſeeme to expreſſe ſome power, yet in reſpect of the thing it ſelfe, do plainely ſhew a great defect; as, to be able to ſuffer, to be able to die, and ſuch like; for according to the forme of ſpeaking, they do ſeeme to expreſſe ſome power, but in very deed they do ſhew a defect of power: Even ſo, not to be able to die, not to be able to ſuffer, according to the phraſe of ſpeech, they do ſeem to deny a power, or to ſhew an impotency, whereas indeed they ſhew the greateſt power that can be: and therefore thoſe affirmations, to be able to die, to be able to ſuffer, in regard of the ſubſtance of the matter, have the force of negations; becauſe they deny him to be impaſſible, which can ſuffer, and him immortall, which can die; and thoſe negations, not to be able to die, not to be able to ſuffer, have the force of affirmations; becauſe they affirme him to be eternally life, which cannot die, and to be the pureſt act, which cannot ſuffer: And therefore we ſay, that God cannot doe thoſe things, which imply and ſignifie a defect of power, and which is infirmity, and not power, to do them; for there is nothing, which God cannot do, which is of power to do; and there is nothing which he can do, which is of infirmity to do it, ſaith Bonaventure, which is infallibly true.

An obſervation about the phraſes of being able, and not being able to do things. Zanchius de natura Dei.

Bonavent. ſerm. 35.

And ſo much for this point, how farre the power of God extendeth.

Chap. III.

The proofe of Gods infinite power, and the anſwering of the chiefeſt objections that are made againſt the fore-ſhewed truth of this doctrine.

3 The confirmation of the truth of Gods power, and the anſwer to the objections of the adverſaries.

THirdly, having well conſidered and underſtood all the premiſes, it will not be hard for me to prove unto you the moſt infinite and moſt abſolute power of Almighty God; that is, how mighty and how powerfull he is in all things; For 1 Proofe. How the Scripture ſheweth the power of God. Pſal. 93 3. Pſal. 89. 5, 10, 14.

Firſt, the Scriptures are moſt copious in this point; as, the Prophet David ſaith, The waves of the Sea are mighty, and rage horribly; but yet, the Lord that dwelleth on high, is mightier: And againe, he ſaith, O Lord God of Hoſts, who is like unto thee? For thou ruleſt the raging of the ſea, and thou ſtilleſt the waves thereof when they ariſe; thou haſt a mighty arme, ſtrong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand; For this ſhewes him to be mighty; and we can ſhew him to be Almighty; for though the Hebrewes have no word that ſignifieth Almighty, yet do the Greeks elegantly, and with a full ſignificant word, call him παντοκρατορα. He that can do all things, as Wolfgangus Muſculus ſaith: And therefore in the vulgar

Wolf. Muſc. de omnipot. Dei. p. 402.

Gen. 17. 1. Exod. 15. 3. Gen. 18. 14.

version we read, Ego sum Deus omnipotens, I am the Almighty God; And againe, Omnipotens nomen ejus, Almighty is his name: And therefore the Angell said unto Abraham, Numquid Deo quicquid est difficile? Is any thing too hard for the Lord? And the Angell Gabriel saith unto Mary, Non est impossibile apud Deum omne verbum; that is, No word is impossible with God; which is, (saith S. Bernard) whatsoever God saith, or will command, that he can easily do: And if it were as easie for men to doe, as it is to say what they will, then should no word be impossible unto them neither: but there is a great deale of difference betwixt speaking and doing amongst men, as Ajax saith, Satius est contendere verbis, quam pugnare acie; But with God it is all one, to doe as to say; to say as to will: And so Euthymius interprets it; whatsoever the Lord saith, that is not impossible for him to performe; because he did but speake, and they were made, he commanded, and they stood fast: But others, putting thing in stead of word, do more rightly interpret it, saying, that with God no thing shall be impossible: And so our last Translation hath it; because the Hebrew word Dabar, doth signifie both word and thing, saith Barradius; and our Saviour plainly saith, All things are possible with God: And therefore it is apparent, that he is not only strong and mighty, but also strength it selfe and Almighty.

Luc. 1. 37. Bern. hom. 4 sup. Missus.

Ovid Metam. l. 13.

Psal. 33. 9.

Barrad. de annunt. Angel. l. 7. c. 9. p. 331. Mar. 10. 27.

Secondly, not only the Word of God, but also the works of God, do sufficiently prove the power of God: and not only his wonders, which he did in Ægypt, and at the Red Sea; but also all other works, which he did from the beginning of the world, and which he now daily doth, do most apparently shew him to be a most powerfull and omnipotent God; for as the Prophet David saith, The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy-worke; and the works that I do, they testifie of me, saith our Saviour; of these works of God, S. Hillary saith; if there were none other reason, yet this it selfe would serve, to shew how wonderfull, and how worthy of all praise, are the works of God; that they are mightily effected, and most powerfully done by him, which is not only said, to do a thing, but mightily to do it; for he could, and can, with his sole word, produce any thing out of nothing, by creation; continue the species, or any kind of things, by propagation; and change any compleat substance into another, by his powerfull operation, as he did Lots wife into a pillar of salt: yea, he could, and can work all naturall things, supernaturall things, miracles, and wonders (as the Psalmist saith, Which only doth great wonders;) and impossible things in nature; that is, such as do exceed the usuall and ordinary course of nature, as to make the running Sun to stand still, the hottest fire not to burne, the heaviest iron to swimme upward upon the top of the water, and of stones to raise up children unto Abraham; because the order, and the Law of Nature is in all things to give way unto this God of Nature, which can do any thing, that implies no contradiction, or repugneth not with the definition of the thing, as Aquinas saith.

2 Proofe. The works of God do shew the power of God.

Psal. 19. 1. Iohn 5. 36.

Gen. 19. 26.

Psal. 72. 18.

Iosh. 10. 12. Dan. 3. 17. Mat. 3. 9.

How the power of God appeareth at all times.

And this power of God appeared in the beginning, when God created all things of nothing; it appeared ever since, and will appeare untill the ending, by preserving them that they turn not to nothing; Quia fundavit Deus mundum supra nihilum, ut fundaret se mundus supra Deum; for God established the world upon nothing, that the World might relie, and settle it selfe upon God: And therefore the Prophet David saith, The earth is weake, and all the inhabitants thereof; he beareth up the pillars of it; and it will appeare in the end of all things, when God shall burne the world, raise the dead, blesse the good, and condemne the bad into everlasting fire.

Psal. 75. 5.

3 Proofe. Hilar. in Psal. 144. p. 635.

How the Fathers do extoll the power of God. Psal. 145. 3.

Thirdly, the Fathers do most excellently extoll (for they cannot fully expresse) this power of God; for S. Hillary saith, Hæc Dei prima & præcipua laudatio est, &c. This is one of the chiefest commendations of God, that he hath no meane, nor measure in him; for his power, his vertue, his majesty, cannot be contained in place, determined by time, expressed in words, nor conceived in our best understandings; our sense is too narrow, our wit is too blunt, and our tongue too mute, to performe so great a taske; because, as the Psalmist speaketh, There is no end of

of his greatneſſe: And therefore Saint Auguſtine ſaith excellently well, Demus Deum multa poſſe, & nos intelligere non poſſe; That we muſt grant, that God can doe many things, which we muſt confeſſe, we can neither ſearch out the cauſe, nor underſtand the things; becauſe the power of God is not to be ſtraitned within the compaſſe of our ſhallow apprehenſions: And therefore we ought to take great heed, that we neither ſay, nor conceive any thing derogatory to the power of God: for if it be ordained by humane Lawes, that he, which ſhould offend the Majeſty of a King, though but a man, ſhould leeſe his head for his offence; Quis finis contemnentium divinam omnipotentiam erit? What ſhould become of thoſe that contemne, or ſpeake againſt the Divine Omnipotency of God? ſaith S. Bernard.

Aug. ep. 3. ad Voluſian.

How great a ſin it is, to lay any thing derogatory to the Power of God.

Bernard. in cant.

Fourthly, the very Heathens, Poets, Phyloſophers, and all of the learneder ſort, have confeſt as much as is ſufficient to prove the Omnipotent power of God: for Homer brings in Minerva ſpeaking unto Telemachus, and ſaying, ῥεῖα θεὸς γελεδὼν καὶ τηλόθεν ἄνδρα σαῶσαι; Which is as much, as if ſhee ſaid; That God can doe what hee will, and none can hinder him: becauſe, as one ſaith;

4 Proeſe.

Homer Odyſſ. 3. f. 65.

Ille poteſt ſolis currus inhibere volantes,
Ille velut ſcopulos, flumina ſtare facit.

He can hold ſtill great Phœbus wayne, } As he did in the daies of Ioſhua,
And ſtouteſt ſtreames he can reſtraine. } As he did at the red Sea.

How the very Heathens have extolled the Omnipotency of God

For though (as another ſaith) Aſtra regunt mundum, Theſe ſublunary creatures are generally guided by the influences of the higher Orbes; yet to conclude the verſe, he ſaith, Sed regit aſtra Deus, The God of Heaven doth rule the Heavens, and rideth upon the ſame, as upon an Horſe: And therefore an Indian Gymnoſophiſt, being demanded by Alexander what God did, anſwered; What he will, Et quod nulla creatura facere poteſt; And what no mortall man, nor any other creature can doe: for they daily ſaw how by his ſtrength unlikely matters have come to paſſe, the greateſt imaginations have beene diſſolved with a blaſt, and dying hopes have beene revived from their graves: and therefore they all concluded, that Ludit in humanis, divina potentia rebus.

5 Proeſe.

It was an eaſie matter for Gods power, to deale with all Creatures as he liſted; and

How the very divels have confeſt the Power of God

Fiftly, the very Divels doe acknowledge, and confeſſe, and obey the power of God; For, Apollo, being demanded of one, by what meanes he might withdraw his wife from Chriſtianity, He anſwered, That he might eaſier flie through the Ayre, or write in the Sea, then plucke her away from Chriſt; becauſe God was ſo powerfull to preſerve her, and the divell ſo weake to ſtrive againſt him; and being requeſted by Auguſtus to informe him who ſhould ſucceede him in his Empire, he ſaid;

Heydelf. de Deoc 2

παῖς ἑβραῖος κέλεται με θεοῖς μακάρεσσιν ἀνάσσων, τὸν δὲ δόμον προλιπεῖν, &c.

Peucerus de Oraculo p. 251.

The Hebrew Childe hath injoyned mee to ſilence, and I muſt hence-forth obey his voice: And ſo the Scripture ſaith, That the uncleane Spirits were obedient unto Chriſt; and as the winde and the waves, ſo did they yeeld, and doe whatſoever Chriſt commanded them. Much more might be ſaid to confirme this point; but all is but to light a candle before the Sunne: And therefore ſeeing I am no waies able to ſpeake what I ought, to expreſſe this truth; I will proceed, to ſee what the ſonnes of darkeneſſe can ſay againſt this truth. And as I diſtributed the adverſaries into foure Claſſes, ſo I finde their objections to be foure-fold.

The objections of the adverſaries of this truth anſwered.

Quid ſatis eſt cui Roma parum?

Ob. Firſt, the Naturaliſts ſay, that Ex nihilo nihil fit, Of nothing nothing can bee made: And therefore God is not ſo powerfull, as to bee able to produce things of nothing, and to create this Vniverse out of no subsistent matter.

The objections of the firſt ſort of adverſaries.

That there bee three sorts of Agents.

Sol. To this I answer, that there be three sorts of workers;

1. The lowest.	or else	1. Artificers.
2. The middlemost.		2. Nature.
3. The highest.		3. God.

1 Sort.

First, Artificers can do nothing, but of some body composed of the first matter, and a substantiall forme, into which they doe induce an accidentall forme; as the Baker out of his Dowe makes Bread; or the Potter out of his tempered clay, makes his Potts.

2 Sort.

Secondly, Nature, or naturall Agents can likewise produce nothing into being, unlesse there be first some matter, or subject, whereunto it induceth a naturall forme; so from any naturall seede, is composed the fruit of each seede in his kinde, as, from the seede of man is ingendered man: and so of all other things whatsoever.

3 Sort. That God can produce any thing of nothing.

And in these two sorts of Agents, the axiome is most true, that of nothing nothing can be made; but of the third agent, that is, God, it is most false: for as he did create all things of nothing, so he can yet as easily of no being produce any being; as he can change any compleate being into another. And therefore, to argue from the creature unto the Creator, or from the faculty of the inferior agent unto the faculty of the superiour; (as the Artificer cannot doe it, therefore Nature cannot doe it, or Nature cannot doe it, therefore the God of Nature cannot do it) is most absurd and fooliſh: Every Child can perceive the weakeneſſe of this childiſh reaſoning.

The objection of the second sort of adversaries.

Ob. Secondly, the desperate men doe object againſt their owne ſoules, that Gods Iuſtice is ſo ſtrict, that it requires every ſinne, and the leaſt ſinne, to be puniſhed with eternall death; and their ſins are not onely few, and ſmall, but moſt infinite in number, even as Manaſſes ſaith, My ſinnes are more innumerable then the ſands of the Sea, and moſt hainous for quality, even as Caine ſaith, My ſinne is greater, Quam ut venia merear. Then I can deſerve pardon, or, they be greater then can be pardoned: And therefore ſay they, God cannot pardon our ſins; but we muſt die, and die eternally for our ſins.

Gen. 4. 13.

Sol. To this I anſwer, firſt, that it had beene very good for them they had reaſoned ſo before they had ſinned; for that perhaps might have preſerved them in the feare of Gods Iuſtice, and now from the deſpaire of his mercy: But ſeeing they did not, I ſay ſecondly, that it is moſt true, that the leaſt ſinne of man can never be pardoned without an intermedium, a meanes wrought, or interpoſition of ſatisfaction, betwixt the ſinne of man and the juſtice of God; therefore did the wiſdome of God deviſe and decree, that by the death of one righteous man, in whom there ſhould be no ſinne, and who for his worth ſhould be of that ineſtimable value, as to be infinitely more then countervailably ſufficient to pay for all ſinnes, the Iuſtice of God ſhould be ſatisfied, and every ſinner, that would lay hold upon his death, might thereby be freed from all his ſinnes, of what number, or nature ſoever they be: And to this end he ſent his onely begotten Sonne, made of a Woman, and made under the Law, to die for our ſinnes, and to redeeme us that were under the Law, from the eternall curſe of that Law: And his death is of that ineſtimable value, that Saint Cyprian ſaith, Modicam guttam ſanguinis Chriſti, propter unionem hypoſtaticam, pro redemptione totius mundi ſufficiſſe; The leaſt drop of his bloud, by reaſon of that hypoſtaticall union with the Godhead, had beene ſufficient to make ſatisfaction for all the ſinnes of the whole World: And yet we reade, that he ſhed his bloud, not once, but often, ſixe ſeverall times at leaſt; and that not ſparingly, but abundantly, it trickled downe to the ground; In which reſpect the Pſalmiſt ſaith, that with God there is Copioſa redemptio, Plenteous redemption, or ſatisfaction enough in ſtore, to pay for the ſins of any one, be they never ſo great, be they never ſo many: And therefore

That no ſin can bee pardoned without ſatisfaction.

Gal. 4. 4.

That the death of Chriſt is a ſufficient ſatisfaction for the greateſt ſinnes.

1 Circumciſione.
2 Oratione.
3 Flagellatione.
4 Coronatione.
5 Clavorum infixione.
6 Lancea.

Luk. 22. 44.
Pſal. 130. 7.

there

there is no sinne so great, no sins so many, but God can, and that without any impeachment of his Iustice, easily remit it, if we can but lay hold upon the death of Christ; and he can worke this faith in us, to beleeve in Christ, if we can but beleeve he can doe it, as our Saviour shewed unto him, that came, and said; Domine, si quid potes, Sir, if thou canst doe any thing, saying, Si potes credere, If thou canst beleeve, thou mayest easily see that I can doe that which thou requirest, and all things else whatsoever they be; they be possible for me to do them; onely beleeve, and thou shalt see it. Mark. 9. 23.

Thirdly, the Vbiquitaries say, he that can doe all things whatsoever, can make the Body of Christ to be in every place wheresoever; but God can doe any thing whatsoever; Ergo, He can make the Body of Christ to be every where, and so invest the man-hood of Christ with Divine properties. The objections of the third sort of adversaries.

I answer to the minor proposition, that he can doe any thing, that is possible to be done, or that hath the possibility of being, but not all things whatsoever they be: For he that saith, God can doe all things simply and indefinitely; he comprehendeth not onely the good, but also all the contrary evill, which are properly belonging unto the Divell, and not to God, saith Theodoret: And therefore I say, that there bee two sorts of impossible things which God cannot doe. Nam qui indefinitè Deum omnia posse dicit, non tantum bona sed etiam horum contraria mala quæ diabolo conveniunt comprehendit Theod. Dialog 3.

First, some things, ex hypothesi, in respect of the constant truth of Gods decree, and the immutability of his will; and thus God could not conceale from Abraham, what he intended to doe unto the Sodomites, nor doe any thing unto Sodome, untill Lot was delivered from them: because God had decreed to reveale all that unto Abraham, and to preserve that righteous man from the destruction of the Sodomites; and thus all things are said to be impossible for God to doe, which doe contradict the Eternall purposes and decrees of God; because he is a God that changeth not, and that cannot alter the things that are gone out of his mouth. God can do nothing contrary to what hee hath decreed. Mal. 3.

Secondly, some things are simply impossible for him to doe, Propter constantem Dei naturam, By the reason of the constancy and immutability of Gods Nature; Thus God cannot be said to doe any humane Acts, because he is an Eternall Spirit; nor to sin, because he is the chiefest good, nor to do any contradictory, because he is Truth it selfe; As I shewed unto you before. God can doe nothing that is contrary to the nature of God.

Ob. 1. But against this, it may be objected: First, that God can doe any humane act; for he is said, to draw nigh unto us, and to depart from us; and so to performe many other such like humane acts. Ergo, these things are not impossible for God. Iames 4. 8.

Sol. To this some men doe answer, that humane acts are not to be ascribed to Gods Nature, because he is an incorporeall substance; and yet they are not to be secluded from his Power, but are all performed through it; because God worketh all things in all his creatures: for, in him we live, and in him we move, saith the Apostle. But indeed, when these, or the like things are spoken of God, they are to be understood metaphorically; as the Sunne is said to enter into the house, when his heate and beames doe shine therein; so God is said to draw neere unto us, when we doe perceive the influence of his grace and goodnesse: and so I say, that although humane acts are done of us through the Power of God; yet they cannot be done by the Essence of God. Act. 17. 28. All humane Acts are done by the power of God, not by the Essence of God.

Ob. 2. Secondly, they may object that God can doe evill; First, because the Philosopher saith, Potest Deus & studiosus prava facere; Secondly, because God commandeth many evills to be done; as Abraham to kill his sonne, the Israelites to robbe the Egyptians, Shemei to curse David, and such like; and Thirdly, because the Apostle saith, that hee worketh all in all. Ergo, He can doe evill. Arist. Topic. l. 4 c. 5 Gen. 22. 2. Gen. 11. 2. 2 Sam. 16. 10.

Sol. To these I answer; First, that the Philosopher saith this, not positively, but according to the opinion of the vulgar: or That whatsoever God doth or biddeth to be done, is no sin.

Secondly, I say, Quod potest Deus prava facere, sed minimè pravè; That God can can doe those acts, which done of us were evill, but done by him are no waies evill; for sin is the offending of his will; or, the not obeying of his command: and therefore whatsoever God willeth, is no sinne: and whatsoever God biddeth, or willeth to be done, is no sinne; nay, if Abraham had not done it, he had sinned; because hee had not obeyed Gods commaund. And thirdly, to the words of the Apostle I say, that in every sinne there is two things to bee considered,

1. The Act.
2. The deformity of the Act.

Acts 17. First, for the Act, we confesse, that to doe any naturall Act, wee doe receive power and ability from God; for, in him we live and move, as the Apostle saith.

Secondly, for the deformity of the Act, which is indeed formale peccati, that is, the sinne, we say, this is wholly from our selves: Quia peccare est deficere in agendo, vel aberrare à recto scopo: Because the sinne is a deficiency, and an erring from the scope or will of God: and God is the efficient cause, or the cause of the efficiency, and not of the deficiency of any thing; And therefore he cannot be said to worke the sinne, though he giveth the power to do the Act.

Ob. But you will say, that he can doe whatsoever he will, but he willeth the sinne, for if he were not willing, no sinne should be; Therefore he can doe the sinne.

A thing may be willed two waies. Sol. I answer, that we may be said to will a thing, two waies.

1. Properly, for it owne sake, because it is desireable; and thus, God onely willeth good.
2. Improperly, for some other good, that may arise from that thing that is willed; so a man willeth many times the losse of a limbe to save his life: And thus God may be said to will evill, not properly for it owne sake, but in respect of some other good, that may from that evill accrew; So he willed that Iudas should be elected Ad opus damnabile, ut per illud, opus venerabile (id est mors Christi) compleretur, To performe a damnable worke, that by the same a comfortable worke might be effected; and so he willed the death of his Sonne, that he might be the Saviour of all his servants: and this is rather to be called a voluntary permission, then an effectuall willing of sin.

Aug. de cor. & grat. c. 7.

Ob. 3. Thirdly, they may object, that he can work contradictories; because he can make, that those things which have beene, and are, should not have beene; for he that can doe that which is impossible of it selfe, can more easily do that which is impossible by accident: but to make those things which have beene, not to have beene; is onely impossible by accident: and therefore, God can make them, not to have beene; and if he can make those things which have beene, not to have beene, he can worke contradictories.

That it is simply impossible to make those things which have beene made, not to have beene made. Quod factum est infectum fieri non potest. Sol. To this I answer, that he can reduce all things into nothing, as he hath created all things of nothing, and that he could, not to have made any thing of those things that he hath made; because he is liberrimus agens, so free an agent, as that hee might have chosen, whether he would have done any thing or nothing; but now being done, I say that he cannot doe, but that they have beene done; for as it is most true, that Quædam habuerunt rationem possibilium, dum erant fienda, jam autem deficiunt à ratione possibilium, dum sunt facta; As some things have had the possibility of being done, while they were to be done, and have now lost the possibility of being done, being already done; So it is as true, that God had the possibility of not doing them, before they were done: but now he hath not the possibility of causing those things, which have beene done, not to have beene done: and therefore though for that which hath beene, not to have beene, may in some respect be said, to be impossible by accident; Yet, if we consider a thing past, in respect of its being past, and not to have beene past; it is not onely impossible of it selfe, but absolutely impossible; yea, Magis impossibile quam mortuos suscitare; A great deale more impossible to doe, then to raise all the dead, saith a Father.

And

And therefore S. Auguſtine ſaith excellently well, that if any man would ſay, If God be omnipotent, let him make thoſe things not to have beene done, which have been already done; He ſhould conſider that this is all one, as if he ſhould ſay, if he be omnipotent, let him bring to paſſe that thoſe things which are true, may be falſe, even in the ſame reſpect for which they are true, which is impoſſible for God to do.

Aug. cont. Fauſtum Manic. l. 26. c. 8.

And ſo you ſee, that notwithſtanding all that can be ſaid, it is moſt apparently true, that although God can do omnia poſſibilia, that is, not all that are poſſible for him to do, as a man may be ſaid to be able to do, what is poſſible for a man to do; for this were but a circulation, to ſay God can do all things that he can do, or that are poſſible for him to do; but ſimply and abſolutely all things that are poſſible to be done; yet, that he cannot ſimply and abſolutely do all things whatſoever; as eſpecially thoſe things which are repugnant to his Nature, or do imply a contradiction.

Obiect. But then the Vbiquitaries will obiect, that for the Body of Chriſt to be in every place, is no contradiction; for they do not ſay, that it is circumſcribed in one place, and uncircumſcribed in every place, which indeed is contradictory; but they ſay, that as the Deity is limited to no place, but is unlimited in every place; ſo is the body of Chriſt, by reaſon of the hypoſtaticall union, (the word being made fleſh) not bounded to any one place, but every where, in every place whereſoever the Godhead is; and herein (ſay they) there is no contradiction, no more than to ſay that God is every where, which is none at all.

Iohn 1. 14.

Sol. To this I anſwer, firſt, that to prove their Vbiquity, from the union of the word with the fleſh, is, Fallacia non cauſæ ut cauſa, a fallacie, when that is alledged for a cauſe, which is indeed no cauſe; for that hypoſtaticall union doth not make that one nature ſhould be the other, nor that one nature ſhould be as the other: but that each one of them ſhould entirely preſerve their owne properties; elſe had the divine nature been paſſible, and the humane nature impaſſible, which is moſt abſurd.

Secondly, I ſay, that a thing may be ſaid to doe, and to be every where, either,

How, and in what ſenſe the body of Chriſt may be ſaid to be every where.

1 Per ſe, by it ſelfe.
2 Per accidens, in reſpect of ſome other thing: } For

1 That is ſaid to be of it ſelfe, which doth whatſoever it doth, by his owne proper forme and quality, as a man doth reaſon of himſelfe, becauſe he hath this of his reaſonable ſoule; and he laugheth of himſelfe, becauſe it is onely proper unto man to laugh; and the fire warmeth of it ſelfe, and the water moiſteneth of it ſelfe, becauſe theſe things are the prime naturall qualities of theſe elements; and thus God alone is ſaid to be of himſelfe every where, becauſe this comes not to him accidentally from another, but he hath it properly of himſelfe, as being by nature infinite and immeaſurable.

2 That is ſaid to do, and to be by accident, which is, or doth any thing in reſpect of ſome other thing, as the body walketh in reſpect of the ſoule which moveth the ſame; and thus the body of Chriſt, in ſome ſenſe, may be ſaid to bee every where; becauſe it is united to that Deity which is every where.

But that you may know in what ſenſe, I ſay further, that a thing may be ſaid to do, or to be by accident two wayes.

A thing may do or be by accident two wayes.

1 ἁπλῶς, properly.
2 κατα χρησικῶς, improperly. } And

Firſt, that is ſaid to be, or to do properly by accident, which hath anothers vertue, properly communicated unto it, as water made hot, hath the heat of the fire communicated unto it, and therefore is hot, and doth give heat unto other things.

Secondly, that is ſaid to be, or to do improperly by accident, which is not ſuch in truth, neither in it ſelfe nor by any other, but is only joyned unto that, which is

is of it selfe, as a mans head is called a wise head, or is said to do wisely; because it is joyned to that faculty of the reasonable soule, which is, and doth that, which is wise, and which useth the head to accomplish all such actions: and in this sense we find the company of Gods children, by reason of their union with God, and conjunction with Christ, to be called Iehova by the Prophet Ieremie, and to be called Christ, by Christ himselfe, where he saith, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And we find them to be said, to have risen with Christ, and to sit with Christ in heavenly places; because we are in him which is risen and ascended: so we find the sacramentall bread called the body of Christ, by reason of that sacramentall union and mysticall relation that is betwixt the one and the other; and thus, as we confesse the soule of Christ to be omniscient, to know all things, truly and simply, yet not in it selfe, but in the word; so we do yeeld the humanity of Christ to be omnipotent, to be able to do all things, and his body to be omnipresent, in every place, not in it selfe, but in the Word, to which it is united, and no otherwise; for if you say that Christ his body is really in all places, as that water is really hot, because the fire hath bestowed a reall heat upon it, then must it follow that the Deity hath communicated infinitude unto the substance of the body; for as the water cannot warme, no not by accident, unlesse that quality be communicated unto it by the Sun or the fire, which have heat in themselves; so the body of Christ cannot, no not by accident, be every where, unlesse the Deity hath imparted such an infinitude of nature unto it, as we say, a finite nature is not capable of.

Act. 9.4. Eph. 2.6.

A thing may be in a place three wayes.

Therefore, seeing that whatsoever is, either in one place, or every where, must be so either

1 In substance, without quantity, as the Angels.
2 In quantity, as all corporall things Or
3 In vertue and quality, as the Sun, by his vertue, and powerfull operations, may be said, after a sort, to be every where; we confesse that the Body of Christ, in respect of the Hypostaticall union, propter virtutem servatricem, by reason of the Salvation that it worketh every where, may be said to be every where; but to say, that the Body of Christ, as it is a body quantitive, or limited with the bounds of quantity, is every where, I say it is impossible; because nothing, that is quantitive, can be infinite, but is measured and bounded by place alone; Quia numerica unitas corporis finiti non potest consistere sine continuitate, because (as Iulius Scaliger saith) the numericall unity of a finite body cannot consist without continuity, that is, except it be alwaies contained in some place: and we find all the Fathers of this judgement, as Cyrillus Alexandrinus in Dialog: de Trin: l. 2. Tertull: de Trinit. p. 610. Ambros. in Luc. l. 10. c. 14. Vigilius l. 4. contra Eutychet: Fulgentius l 2. ad Trasimundum, and many others, which that thrice worthy Zanchius, together with their sayings and arguments, doth set down at large, and which a little before I have a little touched.

Scal. exerc: in Card.

Zanch. l. 2. c. 6. de nat. Dei. p. 107. &c.

And therefore, though to say, that that which is no quantity, nor circumscriptively locall in one place, (which is onely proper unto the God-head) is in every place, is no contradiction; yet seeing the Body of Christ is a true naturall body, and that every true body, whiles it remaines a body, must consist of his certaine and limited dimensions, and therefore of necessity must be locall in one place, and cannot possibly be in every place; to say that this is every where, is the greatest contradiction that may be: for to say that that thing which is, and must be in one place, is in every place, is such a contradiction, as I know nothing more; and therefore if they will prove him to be every where, they must first disprove him to be a true and a naturall body, and so prove the Body of Christ to be truly and really made a God: And indeed so they seek to do; For

Object. They say, that although he assumed a true body, yet it followeth not, that it must still retaine his true dimensions, but that now, by reason of its glorification, it is freed from those necessary conditions of a Mortall body, and really indued with these divine properties; and this is no more contradiction, to say that God

God can disrobe a body of its naturall properties, and to indue it with supernaturall faculties, then it is to say that God, at the day of Iudgement, will change our Mortall bodies to bee Immortall, and cause this corruption to put on incorruption, as the Apostle speaketh: and therfore God can make the body of Christ to be every where. 1 Cor. 15.

That the glorification of a body doth not take away the dimensions of a body.

Sol. To this I answer, first, that the glorification of any body doth no waies disrobe him, or free him from the essentiall properties of that body, in respect of its quantitie or substance; for that were, to make a body to bee no body, but onely in respect of the qualities, whereof those that are ill, shall bee quite abolished, and those that are good, shall bee more fully pefected: and therefore I say that the bodies of the Saints glorified, or clarified, shall be but changed in qualities, as indued with agility, subtilitie, perfection, and immortality, and shall no waies bee changed in substance, but shall still remaine the same quantitive bodies, bounded and limited with their naturall dimensions; for otherwise, how should Iob see God with the same eyes that hee had, while hee lived? or how should wee beleeve the happinesse and felicity of our bodies, if our bodies be so changed, as to bee no bodies at all? they shall therefore bee indued with most unspeakeable perfections, and most perfectly clarified from all imperfections, but they shall not bee disrobed of their naturall proprieties. Iob 19.27.

That the body of Christ was a glorified body from the first moment of his conception.

Secondly, I say that the Body of Christ, though in some things it is otherwise now then it was before his Returrection, and Ascension, as to be impassible, for now, Christ being dead dieth no more, saith the Apostle, and to be more apparantly glorified, being then as it were vayled from our eyes, that we could not see the true glory which indeed it had; yet was it truely a most clarified and glorified body from the first moment of his conception; for it was freed from all corruptions, and indued with all possible perfections; and as the Apostle saith, The fullnesse of the God-head dwelt in Christ bodily: And therefore how could it be, but that a body united to the God-head, should be a body glorified from the first moment of that Hypostaticall union? and so it appeared at his transfiguration on mount Tabor, which was not an imposition, or donation of more glory unto the body of Christ, then it had before, but a translation of the vayle, which covered his Glory, by reason of their inability to behold it, and a revealing of his glory unto them; and yet we must needs confesse, (unlesse we will fall into damnable heresie) that this glorified body of Christ, was then quantitive and limited, with the bounds of his dimensions; else how could the Prophet say, that a Woman should compasse a Man? or how could the Evangelist say, that he was layd in a manger, that hee walked from one place to another, that he was nailed to the Crosse, that he was laid in his grave, and so forth, if his body was not limited in any one place, but incircumscriptively in every place? Coloss. 2.9. Mat. 17.2. Luke 12.16. Iohn 19.18. Mat. 27.60.

Ob. Yet still our adversaries will object against us, that our Saviour saith, This is my body; therefore if his words be true, whersoever the Lords Supper is celebrated, and the bread consecrated, there is the body of Christ, and so consequently not circumscribed in any one place but indefinitely in every place.

That the words of Christ are figurative.

Sol. I answer, that these words of Christ are not litterally and properly, but tropically or figuratively to be understood; for

1 Reason.

First, if we compare this action of the Eucharist now instituted, with the other of the Passeover at the same time abolished, we shall finde the same figure in them both; for he saith, I have greatly desired to eate the Passeover, that is, the Lambe, which was the Sacrament of the Passeover; therefore This is my body signifieth, the Sacrament of his body.

2 Reason. Luke 22.20. 1 Cor. 11.25.

Secondly, the phrase used by Saint Luke, and S. Paul, when they speake of the Wine, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood, is not properly to bee understood; because that neither the cup, nor the wine which was in the cup, was the New Testament; therefore the other phrase concerning the bread is not litterally to bee understood.

3 Reason. Thirdly, when Christ tooke the bread and said, This, either hee did call the bread alone his body, or the accidents alone his body, or both the bread and the accidents, or some thing else, that was neither the bread nor the accidents

If the first, then is the speech figurative; because he calleth that his body which is not his body.

If the second, the speech in like manner, for the same cause, must needs be figurative.

If the third, then must it also be figurative, because that if the substance of the bread could not be the body of Christ, then much lesse can the accidents be either with the bread or without the bread, or the bread with his accidents, which add nothing unto the substance of the bread, and therefore nothing to further any perfection of his body.

If the last, then out of all question must the speech be figurative, while shewing one thing, and calling it his body, hee would have us to understand another thing, farre different from that, which he calleth by the name of his body; and so Saint Augustine confesseth the same to be a figurative speech, and Aquinas saith, that as Esayas said, hee saw the Lord, when he saw onely a shape, so to call the bread of the Eucharist, the body of our Lord, is a plaine figure. And if the words be tropicall, as you see they must needs be, then can you not possibly prove either a carnall presence, or any vbiquitarie presence of the body of Christ, by these words; because Symbolica locutio nihil ponit in esse; figures, similes, & Symboles, cannot sufficiently prove any categoricall point; they may somtimes serve for illustration, but never for any solid probation of any thing.

The Fathers confesse it figurative.

But admit that these words were litterall, yet will this make nothing for the vbiquity of the body of Christ; for, though the Schoolemen say, that the particle, this, noting, in the beginning of the sentence, the bread, because it is not yet converted into the body of Christ, doth at last, when the whole sentence is ended, note the body of Christ, because that which was bread before, is no more bread, but is now converted, by the vertue of the words of consecration, into the body of Christ; yet doe they constantly averre, that the word, This, neither in the beginning, nor in the ending of the said sentence, is of any vertue, either to take away the accidents of the bread, but that they must needs remaine in materia subjecta, in the subject matter, or to prove the vbiquity of the body of Christ, which (say they) cannot be otherwise in the Church, but onely under these accidents of Bread and Wine; and therefore they do bow their knees, and adore none other thing but onely these. And for the vbiquitists themselves.

What the particle, This, doth note.

The absurdities of the Vbiquitists.

1 Absurd. 1. They are driven to denie that the bread is properly and truly the body of Christ; because the bread was not crucified for us, nor the wine shed for the remission of our sinnes; and therefore to the particle, This, they are inforced to add some one of these words, in, cum, sub; in, with, under; as to say, in this bread, or, with this bread, or under this bread, is the body of Christ; and so they depart from the words of the institution, and deprave the Text as much as if I should interpret, Christ is God, to signifie, in this Christ, or with this Christ, or under this Christ is God; which is most absurd.

2 Absurd. 2. Their exposition saith, Christ is in, with, or under the bread; therefore not in all places; unlesse (which will be as great, or greater absurdity) they doe add out from, to signifie that he is not onely in the bread, but also out of the bread, in all other places, or els prove that these words in, with, under, may also signifie out of, or without; and if they yeeld it signifieth as well out of the bread, as in the bread, then would many men content themselves to eate him at home in a peece of bread in their kitchin, as well as in the Church, on the Lords Table: and if they say that the vbiquity of his being, or being in the bread, depends upon the words of institution, that Christ his body is in the bread and every where; then it must needs follow that before these words are uttered it is not every where; where; and so all other arguments for this vbiquity, must needs vanish to nothing.

Therefore, notwithstanding all that these men can say, it is most manifest, that the Body of Christ, though glorified in Heaven, is still a true Physicall body, limited with his dimensions, and locally seated in his appointed place: and therefore also, seeing to be in one place, and to be in every place at the same time, and in the same respect, is such a palpable and grosse contradiction, I conclude that it is unpossible, that God should be able, to make the Body of Christ to be every where, in Heaven and in earth both at once.

The object of the fourth sort of adversaries.

Fourthly, The pontificialls and Iesuites doe object, that to transubstantiate bread into flesh, or to make the Body of Christ, to be in all those places where the Masse is celebrated, and received of all those that doe communicate, doth no waies imply a contradiction, Quia ad esse circumscriptivè in loco nihil requiritur nisi ut locatum sit commensuratum suo loco, & non ut sit alibi in alio loco, For that it is inough to shew the verity of a body, that it be circumscribed, and limited with its place and time; and not that it cannot bee in many places, so it bee circumscribed in every place where it is, saith Cardinall Bellarmine: and therefore God can make the body of Christ, to be in many places, though not to be in all places; for to be in many places, doth include that he must be prescribed and limited in all those places where he is, which is agreeable to the definition of a true Phisicall body, but to be in all places, doth necessarily conclude, that hee must bee unlimited and indefinite, which is altogether contrarie to the definition of a true body: and thus, Clodius accusat Machum, Catilina Catheguum, Ephraim will be against Manasses, and Manasses against Ephraim, and both against Iuda.

What the Iesuites say to prove Transubstantiation. Bellar. de Euch. l. 3 c. 4. p. 7. 897. in 8.

That we must not argue from the power of God, unlesse we can proove it from the will of God.

Sol. But to this I answer, First, That to prove the vbiquity of the body of Christ, or the transubstantiating of the bread into the flesh of Christ, or any other point of Divinity, Non licet theologicè, & positivè argumentari ab omnipotentia Dei, nisi præcedat voluntas Dei, It is no waies sufficient to argue Theologically and positively from the power of God, that hee can doe such a thing, unlesse we have some testimony of the Will of God, that he hath done, or will doe, such a thing; for the secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but those things which are revealed, belong to us, and to our Children for ever.

Deut. 29. 29.

That there is a double contradiction in the doctrine of Transubstantiation.

Secondly, I say, that in this their assertion of Transubstantiation, there is a double contradiction, which is unpossible by all the wit of man to be reconciled.

First, that Bread still remaining Bread, should be notwithstanding transubstantiated into Flesh.

Secondly, that the Body of Christ numerically one, and locally in Heaven, should be notwithstanding many thousand complete bodies, and in many thousand places all at once: and what greater contradictories can there be then these? for God can change any substance into another substance Gen. 19. 26. Iohn 2. 9. Mat. 4. 3.

First, wee confesse God can produce any thing of nothing, and reduce any thing into nothing; and he can change any thing into any thing; as to make stones Bread; Bread flesh; Lots wife, a pillar of salt, or any such like thing; for we see God hath done it, and Christ changed the Water into Wine; and the very divell knew he could doe it, when hee said unto our Saviour, If thou beest the Sonne of God, command that these stones bee made bread. But that God should change one substance into another; and yet, that this thing, which is said to bee changed, should remaine still the same thing which it was, before it was changed, and be also the substance of the thing, into which it was changed; it is so impossible, as that there can be nothing more: for when the Lord changed one substance into another, as Moses his rod into a Serpents, or Lots wife into a pillar of Salt, or the Water into Wine, Neither of these, were both the things at the same time: but when Moses rod was a rod, it was no Serpent; and when it was a Serpent, it was no rod; so when Lots wife was a Woman and Lots wife, she was no pillar of Salt; and when she was a pillar of Salt, she was no more a Woman, nor Lots

Exod 4. 3.

That the substance changed cannot be what it was, & what it is both at once.

wise; and so when the Water was Water, it was no Wine, and when it was Wine, it was no Water: and therefore to say that the bread remaining bread, should be transubstantiated or changed into Flesh, and so for the same substance at the selfe-same time, to be two severall and distinct things, Bread and Flesh, I say that, as it is incredible for us to beleeve it, so it is unpossible for God to effect it; For if these things be not direct contradictories, I know not how any man can name any contradictories in the world.

But to this they answer, that they doe not say that the same thing is both Bread and Flesh, for they all know that this is unpossible to bee done: but they say that the substance of the bread is vanished and reduced into nothing, which God can doe, as we all confesse; and that the sole substance of the Flesh is there remaining, to bee received of the beleever, of the Communicant, bee hee faithfull or Infidell; yea, of Rattes, Kattes, Dogges, and Serpents, if they can come by it.

I answer, that I doe admire the subtiltie of Satan, to sow such seed of strong delusions, to deceive simple soules: and the more I follow these sophisticall shifts, the more I do abhorre these vile deceits; for I beseech you marke what absurdities, what contradictions, what impossibilities doe still more and more accrew; for

The most ridiculous absurdities that must follow the doctrine of Transubstantiation.

First, the substance of the Bread is gone, Nihil est, it is reduced to nothing; and yet behold, the colour of it is there, the forme of it is there, the taste of it is there; thine eye sees it Bread, and thy hand feeles it Bread, thy mouth findes it Bread, and yet it is no Bread. I would faine know what Aristotle, or al the Schoole of Phylosophers would define this to be; Bread, and no Bread; Bread in the judgement of all the world; and no Bread in the judgement of all the Iesuites of the world: a strange thing that God should worke such strong delusions. I find that Satan did them often, but never that God did ever the like: and yet this is not all; for here must be Flesh too, though neither seene, felt, heard nor understood: If it be so, let all men judge; For I blush to say more in a point so cleere.

Mat.14 17.

Mar 6.36.

Iohn 6.5.

How Christ multiplied the loaves of Bread.

Secondly, we confesse, that as God can produce any substance of nothing, so he can multiply any one thing into a thousand things; as he did the five loaves to feed five thousand men, besides women and children: but that he should make that, which is numerically one, to be five thousand things, and yet to be but one thing, at the very same time that it is five thousand things; and that that one thing should be, but in one place, and yet at the same time should be in five thousand places; we doe say there cannot be a greater contradiction; for as when the loaves were multiplied, if he multiplied them in number, he did not multiply them to be more then five, and yet to remaine but five; or if he multiplyed them in quantity (which I rather thinke) he did not make them to be of a greater quantity, and yet to remaine of the same lesser quantity that they were before; for this is meerely contradictory; to be more in number then five, and yet to be but five, or to bee augmented in quantity, and yet to bee but the same in quantity; but when any part thereof was diminished, hee still multiplyed the remaining quantity into the same quantity as it was before, or greater; as he did the meale in the barrell, and the oyle in the cruse of the Widdow of Sarepta, in the daies of Elias. And herein indeed is no contradiction; even so, if God should multiply that one body of his Soune, to bee five thousand bodies, it cannot bee, that it should be one and five thousand both at once, or if he should cause that body which is in one place, to be in five thousand places all at once, it cannot be, that it should be in five thousand places, and yet but in one place; as every child almost may easily perceive.

1 King.17.16. That it cannot be, that one body should be but in one place, and yet to bee in a hundred places at the same time.

And therefore seeing it is apparant, that Christ hath but one true, naturall, and Phisicall body, else we shall make Christ to be no Christ, and that it cannot be, that that one should still remaine one, and yet be five thousand millions of bodies, and that that one must still remaine in one place, as Saint Peter sheweth, and yet should be at the same time, in many millions of places; I hope it is as plaine, that these things are meerely contradictory, and so simply impossible to be done, as that the Sun doth shine at noone-day.

Act.3.21.

But

But they instance, that one Xavier (as Tursellian reports it) was at the same time seene, both in a Ship, and in a Boat; and I read it alleadged out of Bellarmine, that he relates the like of Saint Antony of Padua, that he was seene Preaching in a towne of Italy, and at the same time was seene in another place; and therefore a body may bee commeasured to its place, and yet be in other places at the same time.

D. Hall relates it. How they relate lies to boulster up their errors.

To these Instances I say, not onely with Plautus, Tun' id dicere audes, quod nemo unquam homo vidit, nec potest fieri, tempore uno, homo idem duobus ut locis simul sit? How dares any man say, that which never any man did see, nor can be; that at the same time, one man should be in two severall places? but I say also with Aquinas of the locality of Angels, that by the same reason, that he might be in two places, he may be in a thousand places at once; and therefore if Xavier or Antony was in one place, it must needs be the divell that was in the other place, to teach such lies to delude the credulous.

Plaut. Amphyt.

Thom. in Mag. l. 1. d 32. q. 1. art. 1.

But yet still they will reply, that we must not conceive of Divine things, and especially of Gods Power, by the rule of humane reason; For subtill Philosophy doth many times obscure pure Divinity, and Aristotles Books of Nature have caused many a Doctor to corrupt the Scripture; for he made Ætius to follow Arrius, saith Socrates: and therefore we must attaine unto the knowledge of these things, not by the reason of man, but by the rule of Faith, which Philo calleth Fidem oculatam, so well-eyed, and so sharpe-sighted, that as the Eagles eye, being aloft in the cloudes, can notwithstanding espie, Sub frutice leporem, & sub fluctibus piscem, Vnder the waves a Fish, and under the shrubs a Hare; so Faith, here in earth, can notwithstanding search into the deepe things of God in Heaven, and can most perfectly see those things, which humane sence can no way perceive.

Socrat. l. 2. c. 38. Eccles. hist.

That Faith seeth what Reason cannot conceive.

To this I answer with Saint Augustine, that we confesse God is able to doe, as he hath done, many things which we are not able to understand; in all which we beleeve them, without searching the reason of them; because in such things (as Saint Augustine saith) Ratio facti est potentia facientis; The whole reason of the deede, is the Power of the doer; but, as for the joyes of Heaven, though it passeth all understanding to know positively, what excellent things are there, yet negatively we doe certainely know what is not there; for there is no sorrow, no sickenesse, no evill; and as wee know not perfectly what God is, yet we doe certainely know what he is not, for hee is not the Sunne, the Moone, nor any other creature whatsoever; Even so, though we know not the height or greatnesse of Gods Power, what infinite things he can doe, above what we can speake or thinke; yet we know many things that he cannot doe; which I have shewed unto you before: And therefore that bread should be transubstantiated into flesh, and yet remaine bread; that accidents should subsist without their subjects; that Christ should sit in Heaven, and lie in the Bread which we do eate; that he should be visibly there, and invisibly there; and that he should be one, and many; continued, and discontinued; intire in one place, and at the same time intire in a thousand places; and such like assertions, which do overthrow, not only the humanity of our Saviour Christ, but also the order of things, and the very principles of Nature, and doe exceede the bounds of all sence and reason, and repugne indeed the very truth of God, we can in no waies beleeve them; not because we know no reason how they may be done, for so we beleeve many things, as all the mysteries of our Faith; but because we have many reasons, even out of the Word of God, to assure us, that these things cannot be done: And so much for the chiefest objections that are usually made against the truth of this Doctrine of Gods Power.

Aug. ep. 3. ad Volusian.

Damen. Jsagog. de Deo.

We beleeve not the assertions of the Iesuites, not because we know not how they may be done, but because wee know they cannot bee done.

CHAP. IV.

Of the usefull application of this Doctrine of Gods Power.

4 Of the use and application of the former doctrine. 1 Lesson.

YOu have seene the truth of this Doctrine of the Power of God; it may serve for many especiall ends; As first, for the confutation of a world of errors, and the cutting downe of many infinite heresies, especially those whereof I have already spoken; and therefore I need not say any more of them in this place.

2 A great comfort to the godly, that God is able to deliver them. Mat.10.16. Dan.3.17.

Secondly, this Doctrine of Gods Power, may serve for the consolation of the godly; for they are invironed with many enemies, they are sent as Sheepe into the middest of Wolves, and they are hated of all men for Christ his sake; but (as the three Children said,) We know that God is able to deliver us from the burning fiery Furnace, and from the hands of all that hate us, and to preserve us blamelesse untill the day of the comming of Christ: And therefore though we be set with enemies on every side, especially the World, Tanquam Syrena dulcis, Like the alluring Mermaides, The flesh, Tanquam Dalila blandiens, Like a false flattering Dalila, and the Divell, Tanquam Leo rugiens, Like a roaring Lyon, that doe seek by all meanes to destroy us;

Bosquier. de sacrament. victor. Christi. p.367.

Virgil. Æneid. L.1

Præsentemq́ viris intendunt omnia mortem:

Revel.2.10.

Yet, we need not feare any of those things, that we shall suffer: Quia non plus valet ad deijciendum terrena pœna, quam ad erigendum divina tutela; Because all the power of darkenesse is not so able to suppresse us, as our gracious God is to support us; for otherwise, Si Diabolus nocere posset, quantum vellet, aliquis justorum non remaneret; If either Satans malice, or the hatred of wicked men, or the fury of bloud-thirsty Tyrants, might prevaile against the godly servants of Christ, so much as they would, then not a righteous man could remaine upon the face of the Earth; but God can put a hook in their nostrils, and say unto them, as he sayes unto the Sea, Hitherto shalt thou go, and no further: And therefore, If God bee with us, we need not feare who be against us; Quia major est, qui est in nobis, quam qui est in mundo, Because (as S. John saith) He is greater and stronger, which is in us, then he that is in the World.

Rom.8.31.

1 Iohn 4.4.

1 Pet.3.11.

Even so we have the lusts of our owne flesh, the messengers of Satan, that doe buffet us, and fight against our soules, and make us many times, when they compell us to do the evill that we would not do, and to leave undone the good that we would doe, to crie out with the Apostle, O wretched men that we are, who shall deliver us from the body of this death? or who shall preserve us unto eternall life? And to say with the Poet,

Rom.7.19.

O terq́ quaterq́ beati, queis ante ora patrum contigit oppetere;

O happy had wee beene, had wee died before we had sinned; but if we cast our eyes to looke upon Gods Power, we may be presently comforted; because the Saints of God, though they bee shaken, and sifted, and winnowed like wheate, yet are they kept, not by their owne strength, for so they should soone faile, but by the Power of God (saith Saint Peter) through faith unto salvation: And this indeed is the sole comfort of all Christians, that we shall never perish; because our Father, which gave us unto Christ, is greater then all, and none is able to take us out of our Fathers hands. This is that Foundation which remaineth sure; and therefore happy is that man, which builds upon this Foundation; for the Lord is called strong, and Christ is said to be the Mighty God, not only because he is Almighty in his owne nature, but especially, because hee hath this might to use for our salvation, and the destruction of our enemies; in regard whereof it is said, that he walketh in the midst of the seven golden Candlesticks, that is, in the mids of his Church, and to have his feet of burning brasse; not onely to tread upon his enemies, but also to consume them, when they are trampled under

1 Pet.1.5.

Ioh.10.28,29.

Esay 9.6.

under feet; becauſe the wicked, like evill weeds, will quickly ſpring againe, if the roots be left behind; and truly this is a mighty comfort to all Gods children, in all their trials and afflictions, to think of the all-ſufficient power of the Almighty God; becauſe the leaſt temptation will be too ſtrong for us, if God do not ſupport us; but the greateſt can no waies hurt us, if this mighty God be on our ſide.

And therefore Abraham, conſidering that God was El Shaddai, a God all-ſufficient, as the Lord had expreſt himſelfe unto him, did aſſure himſelfe, that although Sarahs wombe was dead, yet God was not dead, but was as able to raiſe him a living ſonne out of her dead wombe, as he is to raiſe our dead bodies out of the ſenſleſſe earth: So Moſes, when he had ſix hundred thouſand people and upward to be provided for in a ſandy deſart, which yeelded them neither bread nor water, conſidering the power of God, did believe, that he could bring drink out of the rocke as out of a river, and meat out of the clouds as out of a cupboard; for he knew, that Egypt did not, and Canaan could not ſuſtaine them, without Gods bleſſing, and the moſt barren wilderneſſe was able enough to do it, when God would bleſſe it; becauſe, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, A fruitfull land maketh he barren for the wickedneſſe of them that dwell therein; and for the love he beareth unto his ſervants, He maketh the wilderneſſe a ſtanding water, and water ſprings of a drie ground: So Ionathan, when he went againſt the Philiſtims that were thouſands, had this reſolution for his encouragement, that God could deliver with few as well as with many: And ſo Aſa went as farre as he, when he had a huge army of Ethiopians conſiſting of a thouſand thouſands, and three hundred chariots, the greateſt army that ever I read of, to come againſt him, Aſa cried unto the Lord his God, and ſaid; Lord, it is nothing with thee to helpe, whether with many, or with them that have no power; helpe us, O Lord our God, for we reſt on thee, and in thy name we go againſt this multitude; O Lord, thou art our God, and let not man prevaile againſt thee. And ſo every man ſhould depend upon his God, who can helpe us with few friends, or no friends, with ſmall meanes, or no meanes, as well as if we had all the meanes or all the friends in the world; and therfore let us never be diſmaid in our afflictions, let us never faint in our temptations; but if our troubles be great, let us remember that our God is greater; if our enemies be mighty, let us know that our God is mightier; his hand is of iron, and his feet of burning braſſe.

Gen. 17. 1. Rom. 4. 19, 20, 21.

Exod. 16. 17.

Pſal. 107. 35, 37.

1 Sam. 14. 6.

2 Chron. 14. 11.

Rev. 1. 15.

Thirdly, this Doctrine of Gods Power may ſerve for the reprehenſion of the wicked; for he can deſtroy all the workers of iniquity, and caſt both body and ſoule into hell fire; And therefore will ye not feare to offend ſo great a God? Remember, I beſeech you, what he hath done to the old world, to Sodome and Gomorrah, to Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, to Pharoah, Iudas, and many more; remember that he can do whatſoever he will do; and remember what he ſaith, He will do unto them, that heare the words of the curſe of the Law, and yet will bleſſe themſelves in their hearts, ſaying, We ſhall have peace: And let theſe things move you to be humbled before the mighty hand of God; and to cauſe you here to feare his power, that hereafter you may not feele his anger; For, it is a fearfull thing to fall into the hands of the living God; and they that now go on in ſin, and make but a ſport of iniquity, without either believing his truth, that he will puniſh ſin, or fearing his power, that he can puniſh them, ſhall then find and feele, that it had been better for them never to have been borne, or to have had a mill-ſtone hanged about their neckes, and to have been caſt into the middeſt of the ſea, than to have broken the leaſt commandement of this powerfull and Almighty God.

Mat. 10. 28.

3 That the wicked ſhould feare to offend this powerfull God.

Deut. 29. 19.

1 Pet 5. 6.

Heb. 10. 31.

And ſo much for the firſt attribute of God here expreſſed, that is, his Power: And now followeth the ſecond attribute, which is, Gods Goodneſſe.

CHAP. V.

Of the Mercy of GOD, and wherein the ſame chiefly conſiſteth.

2 Attribute, that is, Gods goodneſſe. Exod. 33 9.

YOu have heard of the Power of God, we are now to ſee how God proclaimeth his Goodneſſe, according as he had promiſed before, I will make all my goodneſſe to paſſe before thy face: A Doctrine farre more comfortable than the former; for not he that can, but he that will help us, is beſt unto us; and he that is willing to do what he can, though it be but little, is farre more deare unto us, than he that can do much, but will do nothing: but the power of God ſheweth that he is able, and this goodneſſe of God proveth that he is willing to relieve us; and therefore the goodneſſe of God is the anchor of our hope, and the foundation of all our comfort; and it is well coupled with the former attribute; for in vaine were his willingneſſe to help us, unleſſe he were able, and in vaine were his ability to help us, unleſſe he were willing; the former being but a fruitleſſe wiſh, and the latter but a graceleſſe power: but both joyned together, are like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver; and therefore, as before he had ſhewed his power, that he was able to helpe us, ſo now he ſheweth his goodneſſe, that he is moſt willing to relieve us: And to ſhew how plenteous his goodneſſe is, he expreſſeth the ſame by ſeven ſpeciall and ſeverall particles: I will handle them by Gods helpe, as they lie in order, and as briefly as I can.

Prov. 25. 11.

Seven particles of Gods goodneſſe, 1 Mercifull.

The firſt particle of Gods goodneſſe here expreſſed, is, that he is Mercifull: touching which, we muſt underſtand, that Mercy in God is no paſſion, nor any griefe of mind, conceived through the miſery of another; (as mercy is commonly defined to be) unleſſe you underſtand it, per ἀνθρωποπάθειαν, improperly ſpoken, only for our better apprehenſion; as when he ſaith, My bowels are troubled for Ephraim: Or as it is aſcribed to the Sonne of God Chriſt Ieſus, who doth indeed condole our miſeries, and ſympathize in our afflictions; becauſe he is man as we are, and ſubject to all like paſſions as we be, ſin onely excepted: But mercy in God ſignifieth a propenſity, and a readineſſe of mind, to helpe, not only the miſery, but alſo the wants, and all the defects of man; Movet enim pium judicem, fragilitas conſiderata peccantium; For he remembreth that we are but duſt; and therefore he pitieth our frailties, and he helpeth our infirmities; yea, he crieth and calleth, and ſeeketh after us, when we by our ſins do run away, and flie apace from him: For Cicero in 4. Tuſc. Senec de clem. Aug. de Civit. Dei. l. 9. c. 5. Ier. 31. 20. Heb. 2. 17.

What mercy in God ſignifieth. Caſſiod. in Pſal.

When Adam, by the wiſdome that he got by the Serpent, had found him a way to run away from God, and ſo to fall into the depth of deſpaire, and as a man without helpe, without hope, void of grace, and full of ſinne, to become free amongſt the dead, excluded from God, and exiled from the land of the living, a ſlave of Satan, which makes me abhorre to think of it, and a fire-brand of eternall deſtruction, which makes me tremble for feare of it; yet then behold the never-dying mercy of the God of all mercy, did preſently find the means to bring him backe againe by repentance, and to make him an example of his mercy, to many babes that were as then unborne; for he that doth neither ſlumber nor ſleepe, would not ſuffer him to lie and ſleepe in ſin; but he preſently runs after him, that was running from him, and cries, Adam where art thou? and what is become of thee? And he did this, not becauſe he knew not where Adam was, which knoweth every thing; but becauſe he would have Adam to know where himſelfe was, in a ſtate, deſtitute of all grace, and repleniſhed with all miſeries; that ſo, finding himſelfe in the depth of ſuch miſeries, he might the more earneſtly ſeeke unto God for mercy.

Gen. 3. 9.

Examples of Gods infinite mercies, in the ſpeedy ſeeking after his Saints when they had ſinned againſt him. 2 Sam. 24. 10. Ionas 1. 4.

So he did to David, when David had offended him in numbring Iſrael; he ſtirred up his heart, that it preſently ſmote him, that he might not be ſmitten of God; ſo to Ionas, when he began his journey to flie from God, he ſent the winds to flie after after him, and as a purſevant to arreſt him, and to bring him back againe to him, who otherwiſe would have poſted to hell; ſo to Peter, when he denied his Maſter, and ſwore that he knew him not, to whom a little before he had ſworne that he would die with him, he looked backe upon him, to bring him backe againe to repentance, and he cauſed the Cocke to crow, the dumbe beaſt to crie unto him, to ſend him out, to crie unto God for mercy, and to weepe ſo bitterly for his ſins, Ut lachrymæ lavarent delictum, that God ſeeing his ſorrow and teares, might be inclined to heare his prayers; and ſo he doth unto us all, when we do fall, and ſinne, and ſleepe in ſinne, he ſends his Preachers ſtill to call us, and his owne ſpirit into our hearts, to move us to repentance, not to be repented of, and to promiſe to ſhew compaſſion on us, and to receive us unto his grace, if we would ſhew our contrition, and promiſe to leave and to forſake our ſinnes. Matth 26.74.

O then, that this mercifull ſeeking of us, would make us to ſeeke unto him, while he may be found; and that this calling after us, to recall us from our miſeries, would make us call unto him for mercy; for if we do ſeeke and pray for grace, we may aſſure our ſelves, that our Salvation is nearer than we think; but if we ſtill continue in ſinne, we may be ſure our damnation is nearer than we feare; for the day of grace paſſeth away, and the night of death commeth, when no man can worke: and therefore while it is to day, let us heare his voice, ſo lovingly calling us, ſo carefully ſeeking us, and ſo mercifully offering to receive us, to kiſſe us with the kiſſes of his mouth, to deliver us from the ſhadow of death, and to bring us unto the land of everlaſting life; ſuch is the never-dying ſtreams of the mercy of God; it is like a boundleſſe Ocean, there is no end of his goodneſſe: and therfore S. Bernard in admiration thereof, crieth out unto God, ſaying, Quam dives es in miſericordia, & magnificus in juſtitia, & munificus in gratia, Domine Deus noſter? O how rich art thou in mercy, how magnificent in Iuſtice, and how bountifull in grace, O Lord our God? For thou art a moſt liberall beſtower of heavenly gifts, thou art a moſt righteous rewarder of humane works, and thou art a moſt gracious deliverer of all that truſt in thee; yea, and beſides all this, Tu gratis reſpicis humiles, tu juſtè judicas innocentes, & tu miſericorditer ſalvas peccatores; thou doſt freely exalt the lowly, thou doſt juſtly deliver the innocent, and thou doſt moſt mercifully ſave thoſe ſinners that do put their truſt in thy ſufferings: and therefore, Quis ſimilis tibi? O Lord our God, who is like unto thee, that when there was not a righteous man upon the face of the earth, not one that did good, no not one, thou ſenteſt one from heaven, that by him we might be all brought unto Heaven? So great is the Mercy of God to us poore wretched Men. That the goodnes of God ſeeking after us, ſhould move us to ſeek unto God. Ioh. 9.4. Nam tu munerator copioſiſſimus, remunerator aquiſſimus, & liberator pijſſimus. Bernard. Aug. in Pſal. 48.

The Prophet Eſay is elegant in the expreſſion hereof, ſaying, Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſonne of her womb? Yea, they may forget; they may prove Medea's or Pragne's, or ſuch as the Poet ſpeaketh of, Eſa. 49 15.

Sævus amor docuit natorum ſanguine matrem
Commaculare manus ——— Virgil. in Eglog.

Yet will not I forget thee, ſaith the Lord; for behold, I have ingraven thee upon the palmes of my hands; and if you put all the kindneſſe of all the fathers and all the mothers in the world together, yet is it but as the drop of a bucket in compariſon of that ocean of mercy which is in our mercifull God; and therefore the Prophet Hoſea ſaith, In thee the fatherleſſe findeth mercy, and he is a helper to the helpleſſe. Hoſ 14.4.

And it is obſerved by Divines, that the Mercy of God conſiſteth chiefly in theſe three things, viz. Wherein the mercy of God doth chiefly conſiſt.

In { 1 Giving of Graces. 2 Forgiving of ſinnes. 3 Qualifying of puniſhments. } And

The firſt extendeth it ſelf unto all creatures; the ſecond unto his Saints; and the third both to Saints and ſinners; both to the beſt of Men, and to the worſt both of Men and Angels. 1 In giving of graces to all creatures.

For

For the first, the Prophet David saith, the earth is full of his mercy, quoniam bonus est universis; because all creatures taste of his goodnesse.

1 Making them.

1 In that they be; because in him they live, and moove, and have their being; for whatsoever is, is from him; and whatsoever they have, they have from him; life, motion, sense and all; all is from him, whose mercy is over all.

2 Preserving them Psal. 147.9.

2 In that they are preserved in their being, and he hath given to each one his severall place, as he gave the seas to the fishes, the field for the beasts, the ayre for the fowles, the earth for the children of men; and to all these He openeth his hands, and filleth all things living with plenteousnesse, and he feedeth the young Ravens that call upon him: and therefore, Omnia in te sperant Domine, the eyes of all things do looke on thee O Lord, and thou givest them their meat in due season.

Aug. de hæresibus. hæres 31. Epiphan. hæres. 60.

And in this respect, the reprobates and the damned Divels are in debt unto the mercy of God; for, though there were certaine hereticks called Angelici, which thought the Angels to be independent, and therefore adored them as gods, as Saint Augustine and Epiphanius do relate, yet is it most apparent in the first words of Moses, that they were all created by God; for when he saith, God created heaven and earth, he meaneth these, and all things that are in these, as Moses doth expound himselfe in Exod. 20. 11. and Saint Paul doth more fully explane him in Col. 1. 16. and he created them of most excellent beauty, making them

Properties of the Angels.

1 Spirits, without any mixture of bodies.
2 Immortall, without any feare of corruption.
3 Intellectuall, with a most piercing apprehension of wit.
4 Free, that nothing could force or compell their wills.
5 Wise, with the fulnesse of understanding in all naturall sciences.
6 Powerfull, above all the strength of any sublunary creature.
7 Holy, with the endowments of most admirable vertues.
8 Celestiall, to be the inhabitants of the highest Empyrean heaven.
9 Capable, of the most happy vision of the beatitude of God, with the perpetuity of that incomprehensible felicity, if they would persevere in his service.

And are not these mercies without measure, to be bestowed on these unworthy creatures, that turned all these graces into wantonnesse, and because they were made so excellent by God, would needs be as excellent as God?

So God did not onely make the reprobates and wicked men, but he doth also heape his blessings and benefits upon them, both in temporall and in spirituall things. For

Mat. 5 45.

1 In temporall things, he maketh the raine to fall and the Sun to shine, both upon the just and unjust; he giveth them breath, and life, and health, and all that they have, filling their hearts with food and gladnesse; so full, that the godly are sometimes grieved to see the wicked in such prosperity.

Psal. 37. & 73.

Ezek. 18. 1 Tim. 2. 4. Mat. 11. 28.

2 In spirituall things, he sends his servants to them, he sheweth his will unto them, he tels them plainly he desireth not the death of a sinner, but would have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of his truth; and therefore he calleth all to come unto him, and pitieth those that will not come, saying, why will ye die, why will ye die? So the wicked cannot say but they have abundantly tasted of the goodnesse of God, and his mercy hath been plentifully shewed to them.

2 Forgiving sins.

For the second, that is, the forgiving of sinnes, we shall the better understand it, if we do, though but briefly, consider these few particulars; as Many particular points to be considered in the forgiving of sinnes. Aug. in Psal.

1 Who forgiveth.

First, who forgiveth, God omnipotent, who hath no need of sinners, Et quinec melior si laudaveris, nec deterior si vituperaveris, and which is so eminently good, and so immutably blessed, as that all which thou canst do, cannot better him; Quia summè & perfectissimè bonus; because he is so good, that he cannot be better; better; nor any thing that thou canſt ſay or do, can make him one jot the worſe, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh. For

He is infinite in greatneſſe, infinite in goodneſſe, and infinite in all the reſpects that we can imagine; and therefore that ſinne, which is committed againſt ſuch an infinite God, muſt needs be in ſome ſort an infinite injury, as Aquinas noteth: and yet every ſin we do is darted forth againſt God; for albeit in murder, or adultery, or the like, we do wrong our neighbours; and in drunkenneſſe, gluttony, or the like riotous living, we do offend our ſelves; yet in all theſe we do chiefly ſinne againſt God; becauſe in every one of theſe we breake his commandement, which hath commanded us to live, not onely religiouſly towards God, but alſo righteouſly towards our neighbours, and likewiſe ſoberly towards our ſelves: and therefore when David had abuſed Bathſheba, and killed Uriah, he ſaith not, I have offended man and wronged this woman, therefore I will ask them pardon, but he ſaith, Againſt thee O God, have I ſinned, and done this evill in thy ſight; becauſe in all theſe things he had tranſgreſſed the commandement of God, which had ſaid, Thou ſhalt do no murther, thou ſhalt not commit adultery; and ſo Nathan told him; Wherefore haſt thou deſpiſed the commandement of the Lord, in killing Uriah, and taking away his wife: And therefore in every ſinne God is principally offended, and God is he that muſt forgive it, or els in vaine is all the forgiveneſſe of men.

Thom.p 3.q.1.art.2 ad.2. God chiefly offended in every ſin.

Tit.3.12.

Bucerus in Pſal.51

2 Sam.12.9.

Secondly, what he doth forgive; crimen læſæ majeſtatis, ſin, horrible ſinne, and high treaſon againſt himſelfe; a thing ſo hainous, that it would require a whole Treatiſe to expreſſe it: you ſhall a little behold the uglineſſe of it, if you will but conſider theſe few of many miſchiefs that it brings unto us.

2 What God forgiveth.

The miſchiefes that ſin brings to every ſinner. Gildas de excidio Britanniæ. Polydor Virgil. Hiſt. Angl. l.2. p.16.

1 In this life, it waſteth our wealth, and depriveth us of our goods, eſtates, and countreyes, which are given from us, becauſe we have abuſed them; ſo Gildas Cambrenſis tels us, this our owne land was given into the hands of our enemies, by reaſon of the ſinnes of the inhabitants, even as the Iebuſites and Canaanites, and the reſt of thoſe ſeven nations were rooted out of their countreyes, becauſe of their abominable impieties; and as our ſinnes do waſt our wealth, ſo they take away our honour and eſteeme, not only with God, but alſo in the ſight of men, and they make us to be accounted baſe and vile whitherſoever we come; for they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be deſpiſed; and reaſon good, that he ſhould loſe his own honour, which cares not for the honour of his God: and therefore, as Nebuchadnezzar was turned from the honour of his kingdome to the baſeneſſe of a beaſt, becauſe he had ſinned againſt his God, ſo whenſoever or whereſoever I ſee a ſinfull, prophane, laſcivious, ungodly man, I hold him but a vile and a baſe perſon, were he the greateſt Lord in this land; and ſo all mens hearts do loath wicked men, though they ſeem to have a little honour from their knees; becauſe, as S. Bernard ſaith, Ipſis beſtijs beſtialior eſt homo, ratione vigens, & ratione non vivens; that man, which is indued with reaſon, and lives without reaſon, is more beaſtly than a very beaſt; and beſides all this, ſin cauſeth a deadneſſe of Spirit, a ſadneſſe of heart, drieth the bones, deſtroyeth our health, and bringeth all miſeries upon us, and at laſt death it ſelfe; and then

1 Sam.2.30.

Bern.ſerm.33 ſup. Cant.

2 In the next life, it faſteneth us to the wrath of God, and bindeth us to eternall paines in that lake, which burneth with fire and brimſtone for evermore; a moſt fearfull thing, and able to make our hearts to tremble to think of it; and yet Anſelmus ſaith, if he ſhould behold all the paines and puniſhments of hell devoid of ſin on the one ſide, and the horrour, uglineſſe, and deformity of one deadly ſin, void of puniſhment on the other ſide; and that he muſt of neceſſity chuſe one of them, hell or ſinne, he would rather throw himſelfe into the eternall flames, than to commit that enormious fault; and Eleazar choſe to ſuffer any torment that malice could invent, rather than he would breake the commandement of God; and ſo Daniel and the three children were of the ſame mind; ſo odious and ſo hatefull a thing is ſin to any godly man.

Anſelm. in ſimilitud.c.190. inter opuſcul. Anſelm. p.81.

2 Mach.6.23.

Thirdly, to whom he doth forgive this; to his owne creatures, and ſervants, that do

3 To whom he forgiveth.

doe στομαχειν, rebell and make warre, like those slaves (whereof Iustine speaketh) that made war against their Masters, against him that made them, that feeds them, and that blesseth them, even then when they curse him; the Prophet David considering the vilenesse of this sinner, saith, he is like a thing of naught, his body dirt, his end dust, his flesh grasse, and his whole life but a shadow, but a vapour that soone passeth away, as the Apostle speaketh; and yet this needy worme, this naked wretch must needs fight against him, who, with the breath of his mouth, can reduce all nations into nothing.

Psal. 18. 3. Psal. 144. 4. Gen. 2. 7. & c. 3. 19. Esay 40. 6. Iac 4. 14.

4 How he forgiveth.

Fourthly, How he doth forgive all this; by laying all upon his Sonne, The rebukes of them that rebuked thee, are fallen upon me, saith Christ; yea by slaying his innocent Sonne, to save us his wicked servants; for the Scripture sheweth, that the Sonne of God was made the Sonne of Man, that the sonnes of sinne, might be made the sonnes of God; the Lord of glory was vilified, that the sonnes of shame might be glorified, and the Lord of life was delivered unto death, that the sonnes of death might bee restored to life: and thus, as the Christian Poet saith,

——Deus emit sanguine servos,
Mercari exiguo nos piget ære Deum.
God shed his bloud, to purchase those,
That for his love give not a rose.

So strange is mans ungratitude unto this most mercifull God.

5 How often hee forgiveth. Pro. 24. 16.

Fiftly, How often he doth forgive us; every day, and that many a time, God knoweth, and none knoweth but God; for who can tell how oft he offendeth? Septies in die cadit justus, the just man falleth seaven times a day, saith Salomon; and if the just man falleth seaven times, then certainely the wicked falle seaventy times seaven times, by their lewd thoughts, wanton lookes, idle words, cursed oathes, wicked lies, and sinnefull workes.

6 After what manner he forgiveth.

Sixtly, After what manner he forgiveth all this; so, as that he forgiveth all, never to recall them, never to remember them; for as the Distich saith,

Larga Dei bonitas veniam non dimidiabit,
Aut nihil aut totum, te lachrymante, dabit.

Mal. 3. 6. Ier. 30. 20.

He forgiveth all, or none at all: Et semel remissa nunquam redeunt, and sins once remitted are never after questioned; for I the Lord change not, and my gifts are ἀμεταμελητα, without repentance; and therefore sins once remitted are never after to be found; for the iniquities of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none, and the sinnes of Iuda, and they shall not be found; but they shall ever bee forgotten; for I will doe away thy transgressions as a cloude, and thy sinnes as a mysie, and I will put away all thy wickednesse out of my remembrance, saith the Lord; that is, they shall be cleane forgotten, as a dead man, out of minde, or as the thing that had never beene.

Esay 44. 22. Ezech. 18. 21.

Psal. 77. 10.

And yet the Prophet David saith, quod non obliviscetur misereri Deus, that God cannot forget to be mercifull; for though the wrath of the Lord endureth but the twinckling of an eye, yet as the same Prophet saith, (and that seven and twenty times in the same Psalme) the mercy of God endureth for ever; and so it is everlasting; and that (as the Schooles observe) two manner of waies:

Psal. 136.

The mercy of God is everlasting two waies. Gab. Biel. in sent. dist. 1. q. 5.

First, Essentially, For God is mercy; quia in Deo nihil est quod non sit ipse Deus, because the Divine essence identificat sibi omnia quæ sunt in divinis, doth identifie to it selfe all things that are in the Deity, and so God hath not things as qualities, but is the things that are spoken of him, as his essence; and therefore mercy being of himselfe, and ever himselfe, it must needs bee eternitie it selfe.

Aug. sup. Gen. l. 5.

Secondly, Relatively, as it respects the creatures, and makes impression on them, Quia omnia, priusquam fierent, in notitia facientis erant, because the creatures had their being in God, according to his eternall purpose (as the Apostle saith) from all eternity; quia nihil novi accidit Deo, because no new thought can

Ephes 1. 4. 9. 11.

happen

happen to the minde of God, and so ever they needed mercy, to continue and to accomplish that their intended being; and therefore thus ex parte ante, the mercy of God is everlasting, because it is from all eternity: and now since they had their being, and so long as they shall have their existence, in their naturall causes, they doe and ever shall need his mercy; and therefore also thus, ex parte post, his mercy is everlasting, because endlesse. And therefore, Let the house of Aaron now confesse, that his mercy endureth for ever, and therefore also, let us all confesse, that (as the Prophet saith) he cannot forget to be mercifull. Psal.119.3.

O most excellent argument of exceeding comfort, he can forget our sinnes, (as I shewed you before,) but he cannot forget to be mercifull; Can a Woman forget her owne childe? Improbus ille puer, crudelis tu quoque Mater: Virgil in Ecl.

If she should, that child were very unhappy, and that Mother full of cruelty, yet because some Progne-like have done it; therefore, Though a Woman should forget her owne child, yet will not I forget you saith the Lord. Esay 49.15.

Well then, here is a comfort unto us all; for if thou beest a man full of sinnes, here is a God full of mercy; and in very deed, this is our chiefest comfort; for be we Kings, Nobles, rich or poore; yet after all our pompe and power, when we see our selves, and consider our owne sinnes; when death approacheth and sicknesse seizeth upon us, we must all say with King David. Miserere mei Deus; have mercy on me O God according to the multitude of thy mercies, or with poore Bartimæus; have mercy on me, O Iesus thou son of David. Et hoc tutissimum est, and this is the safest course for all sinners, as Bellarmine wisely acknowledgeth, totam spem, totamque fiduciam in sola misericordia Dei reponere: to place all our trust and confidence in the sole mercy of our most mercifull God: for otherwise, who dares present his best workes to be judged without mercie; because (as Saint Augustine saith) Væ laudabili vitæ hominum, si remota misericordia discutiat eam Deus, Woe to the purest life of the holiest Saint, if God should discusse the same without mercy? And therefore after wee have gone with the Prodigall childe, into a farre countrey of wickednesse; after we have wasted all our goods, our graces, and have committed all our sinnes; yet let us not despaire and say with Caine, My sinnes are greater then can be pardoned, but let us rather returne unto our Father; and say with the Prodigall childe, Father I have sinned against Heaven, and against thee, and I am no more worthy to bee called thy Sonne; Yet I pray thee make me as one of thy hired servants: or else let us cry with Saint Augustine, saying, O bone Domine, noli attendere malum meum, ne obliviscaris bonum tuum; O good Lord, doe not remember my wickednesse, lest thou shouldest forget thine own goodnesse; but consider, O my God, that although, Ego admisi unde me damnare potes, tu non amisisti unde me servare soles, I have committed that for which thou canst damne me, yet thou hast not forgotten that whereby thou art wont to save me; and though my sins be many, yet thy mercies are more; and the more thou forgivest unto me, the more it will expresse thy goodnesse, and the more bound I shall be, to be thankefull unto thee: For he loveth much, to whom much is forgiven, saith our Saviour Christ. That the chiefest and the surest comfort of every man is to relie upon the mercy of God. Mat.10.48. Luk.15.13. Gen.4.13. Luk.15.21. Aug. Meditat. Luk.7.47.

For the third, that is, the qualifying of punishments, we finde that in his greatest anger against sin, mercy rejoyceth against judgement, and that (as Nicephorus saith) Vindicta gladium misericordiæ oleo semper acuit, He steepeth his sword of vengeance, in the oyle of mercy; and he doth alwaies punish, lesse then our iniquities deserve: as Ezra saith. And this hee doth not onely unto the elected Saints, but also to the reprobates, and to the divels themselves. For 3 In qualifying punishments. How God qualifieth punishments. Iames 2.13. Niceph. l.17.c.3. Ezra 9.13

First, Touching the Saints, it is apparant that their punishments doe proceed from mercy; for when they are afflicted in this life, they are chastened of the Lord that they should not be condemned of the world. 1 Touching the Saints. 1 Cor.11.

Secondly, touching the reprobates, both men and Angels, both here and hereafter, the mercy of God abateth much of that punishment, which they have most justly deserved. For 2 Touching the reprobates.

First, Here God being not like unto Theodosius, that put all the Thessalonians 1 Here. Ruffin eccl. hist.

to the ſword, for the offence of few; nor like that angry goddeſſe Pallas,

Virgil, Æneid. l. 1.

——Quæ exurere claſſem
Argiuum, atq; ipſos voluit ſubmergere ponto,
Vnius ob noxam——

That would deſtroy the whole Navie of the Argives, for the onely offence of one onely Ajax; but (if it be lawfull to uſe the compariſon) as the Perſian Generall ſpared Delos for Apollo's ſake; So God in this life, ſpareth whole multitudes of wicked men, for a few good mens ſake; as he ſpared the lives of all the people that were in the ſhip with Saint Paul, for the love that he bare unto this bleſſed Apoſtle, and, as he would have ſpared five wicked Cities, if but ten good men had beene found therein; and ſometimes he ſpareth the ſins of the wicked, for the very love he beareth to the perſons of the ungodly: and though they ſtill ſin againſt him, yet doth he ſtill ſpare them, to ſee if his patience and long ſufferance will at any time leade them to repentance.

Act. 27. 24.

Gen. 18. 32.

Rom. 2. 4.

Aug. in Enchirid. cap. 12, 13.

Secondly, hereafter, Quia non datur ſummum malum, quoniam malum non inhæret niſi in ſubjecto bono; Becauſe the being both of reprobates and divels is ever good; therefore the mercy of God pittieth that good, and cannot be ſevered from it, but ſtill loveth the ſame, even in its greateſt torments; and in that reſpect, doth ever mitigate ſome part of that torment, which the ſinner juſtly deſerved, and which God in the rigor of his Iuſtice might rightly have inflicted on him.

2 Hereafter. That God in the ſtrictneſſe of his Iuſtice might inflict more puniſhment upon the damned ſoules then he doth.

And therefore, though the torments of the damned in hell bee very grievous, yet is it not ſo great, as their unthankefullnes for Gods bleſſings and their ungratiouſneſſe in abuſing of Gods goodneſſe have deſerved, but the Lord in reſpect of the mitigation of their paine, not the termination of time, may be rightly ſaid to ſhew mercy to theſe tortured ſoules, in that unquenchable fire: yea the very divels, whoſe hainous ſin hath deſerved not one hell alone but a thouſand hells, becauſe they ſinned not as Adam, that was ſeduced, but were the firſt authors and free actors of their owne fall, as Albinus noteth, might have a great deale more puniſhment, though not longer, laid upon them, if it were not for the pittie and the mercy of God, which doth extend it ſelfe unto theſe damned ſpirits.

Albin quæſt. in Gen.

But you will ſay the Scripture teacheth, that they ſhall be puniſhed in meaſure, and that they ſhall have judgement without mercy; And therefore how can they be ſaid then, to have the leaſt jot of the mercy of God; Dives being denyed one drop of water to coole his tongue?

Luk. 16. 24, 25.

I anſwer, that they ſhall neuer be eaſed of the leaſt jot of that puniſhment that is once inflicted upon them; but I ſay, that God never impoſeth ſo much torment on the damned, as in the ſtrictneſſe of his Iuſtice he might juſtly doe; and yet are they ſaid, to have judgement without mercy, becauſe the greatneſſe of their iuſufferable paines, doth ſwallow up all ſenſe, and perſeverance of mercy, and makes them thinke that God could not poſſibly inflict greater torments on them then they endure. Whereas indeed, (if they perceived it) it is moſt certaine that they are not puniſhed, according to the height of that meaſure of puniſhment which their ſinnes deſerved, and which God juſtly could inflict upon them; but that in them alſo the Apoſtles words muſt take place, that mercy rejoyceth againſt judgement.

Zanch. de nat. Dei. l. 4. c. 4. p. 378.

And therefore, well might the Prophet David ſay, that all Gods paths are mercy, and that his mercy is over all his workes; becauſe there is no place which can be imagined, wherein there is not ſome impreſſion of Gods mercy, nor any Creature, that can be named, which can ſay, that he doth no way taſte of the mercy of God; for God pittieth his own workes, even then when he puniſheth our workes, that is, our ſins.

Pſal. 25. 10.

Pſal. 145. 9.

And yet here we muſt obſerve, that the mercy of God is twofold:

Mercy of God twofold.

1. Generall.
2. Speciall.

} For

1 Generall.

Firſt, the generall mercy of God is that, which extends it ſelfe towards all, and over all Gods works; but

Secondly,

Secondly, the ſpeciall mercy of God, is onely extended unto the godly, and wholly denyed unto the wicked; for ſo the Lord himſelfe ſaith, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy; that is, not upon all, but upon ſome, whom I will; and who are thoſe? the Scripture ſheweth: for Moſes ſaith, Miſeretur Iehova ſervorum ſuorum, The Lord will repent himſelfe, or be mercifull unto his ſervants; and the Prophet David ſaith, that as a father pittieth his owne children, ſo will the Lord be mercifull to them that feare him; and ſo God himſelfe ſaith, I will ſhew mercy on them that love me; but they that feare him not, that ſerve him not, that love him not, he will deale with them in his fury; and his eye ſhall not ſpare them, neither will hee be mercifull unto them.

2 Speci all. That God is only mercifull to them that love him. Exod. 33. 36.

Deut. 32. 36. Pſal. 103. 8.

Exod. 20. 6.

Ezek. 8. 18.

And therefore, though God be mercifull unto the wicked, and ſheweth many ſingular effects of his mercy unto them; as to create them, and to preſerve them from many evils; yea, from many ſinnes, which otherwiſe they would fall into; and to beſtow many gifts and graces upon them; yet have they no part, nor portion in this ſpeciall mercy of God; becauſe (as the Lord himſelfe ſaith of the wicked;) Non eſt mihi voluntas in vobis, God hath no pleaſure, he hath no delight in them.

That the wicked have no part in the ſpeciall mercy of God.

Mal. 1. 10.

And no marvell; for ſeeing the mercy of God ſpringeth from the love of God, as may bee collected from the words of thoſe Iewes, who ſeeing how Chriſt ſighed, and mourned, and wept over Lazarus, ſaid preſently, Behold how he loved him, and as the Apoſtle plainely ſheweth in the 3. of Titus, and the 4. verſ. and 1 Tim. 1. 2. It is moſt apparant that where there is no ſpeciall love of God, there can be no ſpeciall mercy of God, but the ſpeciall love of God, is onely extended unto the Saints, and choſen children of God; and not unto the wicked reprobates; as might be eaſily ſhewed from thoſe eſpeciall effects of this ſpeciall love of God; ſuch as are their eternall election, their effectuall vocation, their ſingular preſervation, and the bountifull donation of many heavenly gifts and graces, which he giveth not unto the reprobates; (as I purpoſe by Gods helpe more fully to declare in ſome other place:) and therefore the ſpeciall mercy of God is onely ſhewed unto Gods Elect, and none elſe; for, he will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.

Iohn 11. 36.

That God loveth not the wicked.

Rom. 9 18.

Well then beloved Brethren (ſeeing the ſpeciall mercy of God pertaineth onely unto the Saints,) let us all examine our ſelves, and if we find we feare not God, we ſerve not God, we may aſſure our ſelves, that although wee daily feele many infallible arguments of Gods generall mercy and favour towards us; yet are we deſtitute of the leaſt aſſurance of this ſpeciall mercy of God; I know many deceive themſelves herein, and make thoſe things, which ſhould be for their advantage, to be unto them an occaſion of falling, when as continuing in ſinne, they notwithſtanding, doe appropriate unto themſelves, this ſpeciall mercy of God, which indeed is onely proper unto thoſe Saints that feare him; for though after a generall manner, he is mercifull unto all, to make them, and to preſerve them, and to beſtow many bleſſings upon them; yet after this ſpeciall manner, to forgive their ſins, and to bring them to eternall life, he is onely mercifull to them that feare him; to them that love him; to them that ſerve him; as the Scriptures doe moſt plainely ſhew unto us:

That we ſhould carefully examine whether wee love and ſerve God or not.

Pſal. 69. 23.

And therefore I would adviſe all wicked men, either to ſerve the Lord, or not to thinke that they have any part in this mercy of God; for I do here confidently aſſure them, that if they doe ſtill continue in ſinne, they ſhall not taſte of this Cup of mercy; but ſhall be forced to wring out even the dregs of that red Wine of the wrath and indignation of God. And ſo much of the firſt Particle of Gods goodneſſe: Mercifull.

Pſal. 75. 8.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Grace of God: and what the ſame chiefely ſignifieth.

2 Particle.

THe ſecond Particle of Gods Goodneſſe, here expreſſed, is, that he is Gracious: a word very large and ample in ſignification; and it is diverſly taken, but chiefly it ſignifieth one that is,

{ 1. Amiable. 2. Placable. 3. Liberall. }

What is meant by the word Gracious.

First, he that is lovely is gracious.

Luk. 2. 52.

First, it ſignifieth that affability and lovelineſſe of perſon, whereby the beholders are inflamed with the love and ſweetneſſe thereof; for when Chriſt is ſaid to have increaſed in wiſedome, and ſtature, and in favour, or in grace (as the originall hath it) with God and man; the meaning is, that he grew to be more and more amiable, and beloved both of God and men; and therefore wee may ſay that a ſweet, affable, amiable man, is a gracious man.

Secondly, he that eaſily remitteth offences is gracious.

Gen. 6. 8. Luke 1. 30.

Secondly, it ſignifieth that readineſſe of minde, to forgive all the offences done againſt one, and to receive the offender into his favour againe; for when Noah, Mary, and other are ſaid, inveniſſe χάριν apud Deum; to have found grace with God; it ſignifieth that they found him favourable unto them; both in remitting of their offences, and in receiving them into his favourable countenance; and therefore, we may rightly ſay, that he which eaſily receiveth offenders into his favour, is a gracious man.

Thirdly, he that is a bountifull man is gracious. Gen. 33. 5.

Act. 11. 23.

Thirdly, It ſignifieth a bountifull giving, and beſtowing of any gifts; for ſo the Scripture ſheweth, all the gifts of God, whether temporall or ſpirituall, to be the graces of God; as Iacob ſaid unto his brother, theſe be the children, Quos Deus gratificatus eſt mihi, which God of his free grace, and favour gave unto me; and ſo it is ſaid of Barnabas that when he ſaw τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ the grace of God, that is, the gift of God beſtowed upon the beleevers, he rejoyced; and therfore a liberall and a bountifull man, may be truly ſaid, to be a gracious man.

Now in all theſe reſpects, we find God to be moſt gracious. For

That God is gracious in all reſpects. Pſal. 45. 3.

Eſay 52. 3.

First, It is ſaid of Chriſt, that he was fairer then the ſonnes of men, and that his lips were full of grace; yea, ſo full of grace, that all men wondred at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth: And indeed, howſoever he was contented to become Sanguinolentus propter te; without forme or beauty for our ſake; Quando velaverunt faciem ejus, when the accurſed Iewes, buffeted, and beſpitted his glorious face; yet was he alwaies glorioſiſſimus in ſe, moſt gracious, and glorious in himſelfe: and ſo the Apoſtles teſtifie, that they ſaw his glory, as the glory of the onely begotten Son of God, full of grace and truth: And yet they ſaw the ſame but in part; becauſe of the infirmity of their fleſh, while they lived here in this life.

Iohn 1. 14.

Heb. 1. 3.

1 That God is of an incomprehenſible beauty.

But Chriſt is the image of the Father, and the ingraved forme of his perſon; and therefore God muſt needs be gracious, and amiable, yea, ſo amiable, ſo lovely, that it is no marvell, the very Saints and Angels do ſo vehemently deſire to ſee the face of God in Ieſus Chriſt, and do eſteeme it their chiefeſt happineſſe to be alwaies contemplating upon the ſame. And the reaſon why all men are not inflamed with the love of his excellent Majeſty is; becauſe they know him not, they have not taſted how ſweet the Lord is; Quia ignoti nulla cupido; for if men did know how gracious and how amiable the Lord is, they would with S. Paul, long to be diſſolved that they might but ſee him.

2 That God is eaſie to be reconciled.

Secondly, God is not onely gracious in himſelfe, but hee is alſo placable and reconcileable unto us; for though God be provoked every day, yet doth his wrath indure but the twinckling of an eye, and hee is ready to receive us into his fatherly fatherly favour, if wee would but bee willing to bee reconciled unto his Majeſty: and therefore the Prophet David examining this point, and ſaying, Will the Lord abſent himſelfe for ever, and will hee bee no more intreated? Is his mercy cleane gone for ever, and is his promiſe come utterly to an end for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious, and will he ſhut up his loving kindneſſe in diſpleaſure? At laſt hee concludeth, that it was his owne infirmity, that is, his unableneſſe to returne to God, and not Gods unwillingneſſe to be reconciled unto him; for the Lord is ever gracious and ready to forgive us, if we were ready to receive his grace; yea, he beſeecheth us to be reconciled unto himſelfe, and not wilfully to refuſe his grace and favour, which he ſo lovingly offereth unto us: And therefore, I wiſh to God that we had but that grace, to accept his grace, when it is ſo graciouſly offered unto us.

Pſal 77.7,8,9.

Pſal 77.10.

Thirdly, hee is not onely ready to receive us into his favour, but he is alſo willing to inrich us with all kinde of graces; for though wee be polluted in our owne bloud; that is, Loathſome in our ſelves, and odious in his ſight; yet doth he waſh us in the bloud of Chriſt, and then indue us with his moſt excellent graces, faith, hope, and charity, and all the other vertues and good things that are in us: And though we be come naked into this World, yet doth he clothe us, and feede us, inrich us, and raiſe us to all that we have. And in this kind hee is not onely gracious unto the godly, but alſo unto the wicked; for what hath any of them, which he hath not received of the Lord? It is he that filleth the Barnes of Dives, as well as the Pallace of David: And therefore Saint Iames ſaith, That πᾶσα δόσις, Every good giving, that is, Every temporall gift, καὶ πᾶν δώρημα τέλειον and every perfect gift, that is, Every ſpirituall grace, that is given to bring us to perfection, is from above, and commeth downe from the Father of Lights.

3 That God is moſt bountifull unto all his people.

Ezech. 16.7.

Iob 1.21.

Iames 1.17. δόσεις ἀγαθαι. δωρήματα τελεια.

But herein is the difference, he beſtoweth temporall graces upon the wicked; yea, many times more plentifully then to the godly; for he ſeeth their deſire is onely ſet on worldly things: Therefore, as he ſaid of hypocriticall Faſters, They have received their reward; that is, Acceperunt ſuam, ſed amiſerunt meam, They have what they would have, though they leeſe thereby what I would have given them; which is a loſſe not countervailed with any gaine: So he dealeth with the Worldlings; Hee filleth their hearts with his hidden treaſure, and hee gives them often times, (eſpecially to moſt of them) their hearts deſire; that is, the riches, and the vanities of this life; So fooliſh are they and ignorant, even as it were a beaſt before him: But to the godly, who love not this World, nor the things of this World, hee ſhewes himſelfe gracious, after a more ſpeciall manner, in giving them his heavenly graces, that is, graces which will bring them unto Heaven; and in giving them worldly bleſſings too, ſo much as he ſees needfull and convenient for them; Becauſe, Godlineſſe hath the promiſe of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

The difference betwixt the gifts that God giveth to the godly, and to the wicked. Mat. 6.16.

God giveth temporall riches unto the worldlings.

1 Tim 4.8.

And ſo you ſee, how God is gracious in all reſpects; amiable in himſelfe, placable unto men, and liberall unto all his Creatures; and in all theſe reſpects, gracious, after a ſpeciall manner unto his elected Saints, and Servants. O that men would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and declare the wonders that he doth for the Children of men; And that (as the Apoſtle ſaith) Wee would not receive the grace of God in vaine, that is, That wee would not vainely abuſe the good gifts and graces, which our moſt gracious God doth ſo freely and ſo graciouſly beſtow upon us. And ſo much for the ſecond particle of Gods goodneſſe, Gracious.

Pſal 107.8,15.

CHAP. VII.

Of the patience and long ſufferance of God.

How ſlow the Lord is to revenge our ſins.

THe third Particle of Gods goodneſſe here expreſſed, is, that he is ſlow to anger; that is, that he is ſuch a one, that although we by our daily ſins, do give moſt juſt occaſions to provoke his wrath and indignation againſt us, to deſtroy us, and to conſume us from off the face of the earth; yet the fire of his wrath is not ſuddenly kindled, and his furious vengeance is not ſpeedily executed: But he is ſlow to anger, full of patience, long ſuffering, and in a word, ſuch a one as rejoyceth not to ſee the ſin committed, that he may puniſh, but ſtill expecteth if the ſinner will at any time repent and amend, that he may ſpare him: For ſo the Prophet ſaith, The Lord will waite, that he may be gracious unto us; that is, He doth tary and ſtay, and looke if at any time, or by any meanes, we will forſake our ſins, that he may ſtay his judgements, and be gracious unto us. O moſt ſweet and excellent ſaying: and therfore the Prophet addeth; Bleſſed are all they that waite for him. And the teſtimonies of Scripture that do confirme this point, are almoſt infinite; for Ionas ſaith, That he knew God was a gracious God, and mercifull, ſlow to anger, and of great kindneſſe, & repenteth him of the evill: Therefore he would not go to threaten deſtruction, becauſe he knew God was ſo ready to ſpare: And the Prophet David, in the 78. Pſalme, and in the 106 Pſalme, and in many other places, doth moſt fully and plainely ſet downe this truth.

Eſay 30.18.

Ionas 4.2.

Pſal.78. Pſal.106.

Examples of Gods ſlowneſſe to puniſh ſin.

But the examples of Gods patience, and long ſufferance, make it more plaine; For when Adam ſinned, he came not preſently, but ſtaid to the coole of the day, before he would call him to account; and when Adam was called, Gods wrath did not appeare to be kindled; for he ſaid no more, but, Adam where art thou? And when he appeared, he ſaid, but, haſt thou eaten of the tree, whereof I ſaid unto thee, that thou ſhouldeſt not eate therof, leſt thou dieſt? So when Ionas was angry unto death, for the gourd that ſprung in a night, and withered in another; the Lord ſaid no more, but Ionas, doeſt thou well to be angry? So, when Iudas betrayed the Sonne of God into the hands of ſinners, he ſaid no more, but, Iudas betrayeſt thou the Sonne of man with a kiſſe? So when the old World had ſo defiled it ſelfe, that it made God ſorry in his heart that ever he made man; yet would he not ſuddenly deſtroy this Augeum ſtabulum, but gave it 120. yeeres to repent: So hee gave to the Ninivites forty daies, and to the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſſe forty yeeres; throughout all which time, he was ſo mercifull, that hee forgave their miſdeeds, and deſtroyed them not, nor would ſuffer his whole diſpleaſure to ariſe: So for Iericho, there were more dayes ſpent in the deſtruction of the ſame, then in the creation of the whole World; for the World was made in ſixe daies, but Iericho was to bee compaſſed ſeaven daies before it ſhould fall: And ſo for this whole World, notwithſtanding the wickedneſſe of ſo many generations of men, it ſtands unpuniſhed to this very day; as if judgement were forgotten, or God were loath to be moved to be angry: And for our ſelves, alas, how many times do we offend our God, neglect his Sabbath, blaſpheme his name, contemne his Word, and abuſe his ſervants; and yet ſtill God ſtayeth his anger from us, and ſpareth us, when we ſpare not him: And whence comes this? but onely hence, that our God is ſlow to anger; for, Si quoties peccant homines, ſua fulmina mittat Iupiter; If God ſhould puniſh us as often as we offend him, we ſhould all periſh, and ſoone come to a fearefull end.

Gen.3.9,11.

Ionas 4.8.

Gen.6.6.

Verſe 3.

Pſal.78.38,39.

How God ſpared the whole World, and ſo ſpareth us, notwithſtanding all our wickedneſſe, to this very day.

But it is obſerved by many Divines, (writing upon thoſe words of the Prophet, that God ſhould riſe as in Mount Perazim, and ſhould be wrath as in the vallie of Gibeon, that he might doe his worke, and bring to paſſe his act, his ſtrange act;) that the act of puniſhing is the furtheſt from God, and leaſt agreeable to the nature of ſuch a ſoveraigne goodneſſe; for as the motive of ſhewing mercy is within within him; and therefore is hee called πατὴρ οἰκτιρμῶν; The Father of mercies; as if mercy did as naturally proceed from him, as the Childe doth iſſue from the Father; So the motive of executing judgement, and revenge, is without him, in our ſinnes; and therefore is he never called, the Father of vengeance, but is as it were compelled either to puniſh us, or to bee unjuſt in himſelfe, Quia abyſſus abyſſum invocat; becauſe the greatneſſe of our ſins doth ſtill cry for vengeance againſt the ſinners: And therefore many times when the Sword is drawne, and the hand ready to ſtrike, yet mercy ſteps in, and as the Angell cryed to the foure Angels, to whom power was given to hurt the Earth, and the Sea, ſaying, Hurt not the Earth, nor the Seas, nor the Trees, till wee have ſealed the ſervants of God in their fore-heads. Or, as the Angell ſaid unto Abraham, Lay not thine hand upon the Lad, neither doe thou any thing unto him: So doth mercy ſay to God, ſtay yet a while, O Iuſtice, and deſtroy them not, untill I have tried them one yeere more, whether they will bring forth any fruits of repentance or not; for how ſhall I deliver up Iſrael? or why ſhould Ephraim be deſtroyed? My heart is turned within me, and my repentings are kindled together; And therefore, O doe not execute the fierceneſſe of thine anger, but ſtay a while, to ſee what they will do; and ſo mercy ſtayes the hand of Iuſtice, and many times gets the victory: and when it can move us to turne to God, it turnes all the weapons in the Armory of Heaven, like the Raine-bow, which is a Bow indeed, but without an Arrow, with a full bent, but without a ſtring, and with the wrong ſide towards us; as if now he meant to ſhoote at Chriſt for our ſinnes, and not at us, which are the ſinners.

The act of puniſhing is leaſt agreeable to Gods Nature.

Mercy proceedeth naturally from God.

God is compelled to puniſh.

Apoc 7.2,3.

Gen.22.12.

Hoſea 11.8,9.

Our turning from our ſins, doth perfectly turne away Gods wrath from us.

And thus, God which is ever ready and willing to ſhew mercy and compaſſion, is ſtill loth and ſlow to ſuffer his anger to be kindled, to worke our woe and deſtruction: And both theſe are excellently repreſented unto us, in a twofold paſſage of the Scripture; the one, in the Father of the Prodigall Childe, who runnes to meete his returning wandring ſonne; to ſhew unto us, Quod non ſit lenta neq; tarda divina miſericordia, ad ſubveniendum compunctis corde; That the mercy of God is neither ſlow, nor ſlacke, to helpe and releeve repenting ſoules, but is alwaies ready and willing to receive them into his favour; and therefore, cucurrit, he ranne, when he ſaw an occaſion to ſhew mercy: the other in God, ſeeking Adam in Paradice, who walked with a ſlow pace, (as the originall word imports) to ſhew how loth he was to be too quicke in indignation; and therefore ambulavit, He did but walke, and come with a ſlow pace; becauſe he is ſlow to wrath; yea, when nothing will prevaile to recall us from our ſins, but that he muſt puniſh us; yet as a compaſſionate Iudge pronounceth ſentence againſt a malefactor with weeping eyes, and a melting heart, even ſo God is grieved, and his bowels yearneth when we are puniſhed. And ſurely, this unwillingneſſe of God, to puniſh us, ſhould make us all to be unwilling to offend him; and this his ſlowneſſe to anger, ſhould make us quickely to repent: For, the patience and long ſufferance of God, is uſed to leade us to repentance, ſaith the Apoſtle. And ſo much for the third particle of Gods goodneſſe, Slow to anger.

Luke 15.20.

Didacus ſtella in Luc.15.

Gen.3.8 God is quicke to ſhew mercy, ſlow to puniſh.

Qui fruitur pœna ferus eſt, legumq; videtur violentiam præſtare ſibi.

Chap. VIII.

Of the ſuperabundant Goodneſſe of God.

THe fourth particle of Gods goodneſſe here expreſſed, is, that he is, Abundant in goodneſſe; Touching which we muſt note, that Goodneſſe is the perfection of things, for which they are deſireable; and we have learned of the Prince of Philoſophers, Perfectum id eſſe cui nihil deeſt; That perfection imports freedome from all defects, and a fullneſſe of all excellencies: but what is more perfect, or more deſireable then God? the very divels knew this, when perſwading our forefathers to offend God, they told them, they ſhould become as God: and therefore God muſt needs be good.

What goodnes is.

Bonũ id eſſe quod omnia appetunt. Ariſtotelis. l.1.c.1

Arist. l. 7. Æthic.

That there is a twofold good.

But Aristotle distinguisheth good to be twofold, as

{1 That which is good in it selfe.
{2 That which is good unto others. } For

There be many things, which are good in themselves, which are not good to others; as all the creatures, which God hath made, are good in themselves; for God beheld all that he had made, and loe, they were exceeding good; and therefore the very divels, in respect of their nature and being, as they are the workes of God, must needs be good: but they are not good for others; so (as the same Aristotle saith) a man may be good in himselfe, and good to himselfe, and yet not good to others, as he that is bonus vir & malus civis, a good man, but an evill Governour: but God is good both wayes; For

Gen. 1. 31.

That the nature or being of all things is good.

God is good

1 In himselfe.

First, He is good in himselfe; because his essence is most perfect, wherein nothing is wanting that can be desired, and than which, nothing can be more desireable: and 2 God is good unto all things, Psal. 73.

Secondly, he is good to all things els; the whole earth is full of his goodnesse; and so, the very creation of all things, so admirably good, the sustentation and gubernation of them, so exceedingly well, and the donation of so many excellent gifts upon them, especially the sending of his deerest Sonne to die for us men, do sufficiently shew the goodnesse of God. Nam si ista bona dulcia & pulchra videntur, &c. For if God were not good unto them, from whence have they received all the goodnesse that they have, saith S. Bernard? And therefore I do wonder how Marcion could say, that this God, which made all things, and preserveth all things, and which had made him a man, and not a beast, was not good: for reason it selfe will tell us, that bonum est sui diffusivum; it is the property of good to diffuse it selfe unto others, & eo melius est, quo latius se alijs communicat; and that good is ever best, which communicates it selfe farthest unto others; as the Sun is therefore said to be the best Planet, because it yeelds most light unto all sublunary creatures: but God doth so largely communicate himselfe unto all things; as that, whatsoever strength, sense, life, moving, or being they have, they have them all communicated, and conferred upon them, from this goodnesse of God.

That thing is ever best which communicates most goodnesse unto others.

God is

1 Perfectly good. 1 Ioh. 1. 5.

Gen. 1. 31.

And therefore we say that God must needs be good, yea, so good, that he is justly said to be abundantly good, that is, perfectly and absolutely good.

First, perfectly good, because that, as he is that light, in whom there is no darkenesse at all; so he is that goodnesse, in whom, and from whom, as from an efficient cause, there can be no evill at all; and therefore it is rightly said, that whatsoever things he did, they were exceeding good.

2 Absolutely good

1 Cor. 3. 8. Iames 1. 17.

Mar. 10. 18.

Secondly, he is absolutely good, that is, good in all respects; bonum universale, non contractum, universally good, for all things, and unto all things; and that by an inbred goodnesse in himselfe, and from himselfe: whereas the goodnes of all other things is but bonum particulare, good for some speciall end, and not simply in all respects, and a goodnesse not inbred in themselves, but by participation of the goodnesse of God, that is, received from him; as both S. Paul and S. Iames do shew.

And therefore well might our Saviour say, that there is none good but God, no not himselfe, as he was Man; because the goodnesse of his Man-hood was communicated unto him from the Deity, and was no more than his humanity was capable of: and therefore much lesse is any other creature good, that is, simply and absolutely good; but God is eternally good in himselfe, and universally good to all things else.

Now this goodnesse of God, which is, extra se, extended from God unto his creatures, is either

That the goodnes of God is twofold.

{1 Generall.
{2 Speciall. } And

1 The generall goodnesse of God is seen in two things.

First, the generall goodnesse of God, is chiefly seen in two things.

1 In

{1 In the creating / 2 In the sustaining} of his creatures. And

1 In the creation of things he made all things doubly good.

1 In creating things

First, simply good, in respect of their being; for he beheld every thing that he had made, and loe, it was very good, that is, so perfectly good, as that nothing more can be desired, for the perfecting of the essence of any thing, nor the least jot can be subtracted from any thing without some want or missing of the same; and so Galenus did ingeniously confesse, when he considered the most admirable fabrick and composition of mans body: and therefore though we confesse that God could, if it had pleased him, have indued all creatures with farre more excellent gifts, than he did, in respect of their accidentall good; for he might have made Man so, that he could not have fallen; yet we say that, Nihil in sua specie perfectius esse potuit, quam à Deo creatum sit, nothing in the world could be made more perfect, in respect of their essentiall good, than God created them.

1 Simply good. Gen. 1. 31.

Galenus de usu partium.

1 That God made every thing perfectly good in his kind.

Secondly, He made all things relatively good; that is, good and usefull in respect of some other things; as the Earth, the Sun, the Moone, and the Starres, they are not only essentially good in themselves, but they are also relatively good, for other creatures.

2 That God made all things relatively good for some use.

And thus we say, that although God made not every thing universally good, that is, good for all things; because though God be good to every thing, yet non communicavit omnibus omne bonum, he made not every thing good for every purpose; as we see the fire, which is good to heat, is not good to coole any thing; yet God made every thing good in some respect, and for some use: And this is the reason why many things, which are good in themselves, and good to some things, may notwithstanding be evill and hurtfull unto other things, as we see many times, that feedeth and nourisheth one creature, which is poyson and death unto another: And therefore, if we see some men abstaine from some things, which are good in themselves, and good to many others; yet let us not presently condemne them for superstitious, because that thing may be good for one, which is not good for another, and if we see things not good for us, or whose goodnesse we know not; let us not by and by, with the Manichees, say, God made them not; because we know not to what end they are good: but rather, let us confesse with S. Augustine, Omnia esse pulchra in suo genere, that all things are good in their kind, although many things become hurtfull unto us for our sinnes, and we know not to what end many things were created, by reason of that ignorance which is in us.

Hieron. de Medicis in Thom. p. 1. q. 23. Art. 3.

Aug. de Civit. Dei. l. 11. c. 18.

Idem de Gen. cont. Man.

Secondly, God sheweth and extendeth his goodnesse unto his creatures by their continuall sustentation: and this also he doth two wayes.

2 In sustaining them.

{1 Liberando à malo, by freeing them from evill. / 2 Largiendo bona, by inriching them with good.}

For the first, {1 Of sinne. / 2 Of punishment.} Evill is either {And God delivereth them from both; for}

1 By delivering them

First, though God suffered Adam to fall into sinne; yet had not God withheld and upheld him, even in that very time of his sinning, no doubt but he had with Satan, irrecoverably fallen away from God; and so ever since, did not God with-hold the sonnes of men, they would become more abominably sinfull, than the divels; and all their sinnes would prove to be peccata clamantia, such horrible and hideous sinnes, that the earth would not be able to beare them: but God puts a bridle in their jawes, and a hook in their nostrils, and saith unto sinners, as he doth unto the sea; Hitherto shalt thou go, and no further, here shalt thou stay thy proud waves: and this we see in Saul, when he went, breathing out slaughters against the Church, God laid a block in his way, and hindered him from running into the height of iniquity; and so he did to Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, and to many other wicked men, that would have become most intolerably wicked, had they not been hindered by this goodnesse of God.

1 From sin. How the goodnes of God withholdeth all men from falling into many sinnes.

Acts 9. 1.

1 King. 13. 4.

Secondly,

Gen. 3. 17

a From punishments. How God suspendeth the punishments that we have most justly deserved.

Secondly, though God hath cursed the earth for the sinne of Man, and hath most justly inflicted punishments, and miseries upon us all, and upon all other creatures for our sakes; yet is there not any creature but had been swallowed up by his deserved miseries, were it not preserved, and the just punishment thereof suspended by this goodnesse of God. I know men slightly deem of their deliverances, and do seldome think of their preservations; but if they truly weighed the same in the ballance of good consideration, they should herein find abundant testimonies of Gods goodnesse towards them; for if we would seriously observe those abominable sinnes, and Luciferian pride, that raigneth every where in the world, we should not only adore with reverence, that infinite patience and long-suffering of God, that still gives them leave to walk after the lusts of their owne hearts; but we should also admire with all humility this unspeakable goodnesse of God, that not only hindereth the wrath of God to consume us, but also withholdeth those plagues and punishments from us, which, otherwise, our sinnes would soon pull downe upon us.

a How God inricheth his creatures with all good things.

For the second, that is, the good things which we receive from our God, Non est dignus peccator pane quo vescitur, neq; lumine cœli quo illuminatur; the best of us is worthy of nothing; and yet God heapeth upon us beneficia nimis copiosa, multa & magna, privata & positiva; innumerable, admirable blessings; and his abundant goodnesse,

——fluit acrius amne perenni, doth most plentifully flow over all the world; and none can say, he hath not tasted of it; for the eyes of all do wait upon thee, O Lord, and thou givest them their meat in due season: thou openest thy hand, and fillest all things living with plenteousnesse; and as Saint Paul saith, In him we live, and move, and have our being.

Psal. 145. 15, 16.

Acts 17.

Acts 14. 17.

In this respect S. Paul saith unto the Lyconians, that God left not himselfe without witnesse, in that he did good, and gave us raine from heaven, and fruitfull seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladnesse: and yet such is the stupidity and sensletnesse of men, that although God should, as he doth every day, showre down his goodnesse in plenty upon them; yet if they have not wealth, and promotion, and every thing els that they would have, they are ready to quarrell with Gods Goodnesse: but alas, if we would but looke within our selves, there is not one of us all, but he should easily find a plentifull theame of Gods Goodnesse; for be it, we have not such plenty of wealth as we desire, yet we have our health, our limbs, our sight, our senses; and are these nothing? An divitias bonitatis contemnis? What, shall we contemne these things, that are better than all wealth? Oh that we would therefore praise the Lord for his goodnesse, and shew the wonders that he doth for the children of men!

Rom. 2.

Neither doth he only confine his goodnesse unto these temporall blessings; but he doth many times bestow upon many of the children of this world, many excellent gifts and graces of his spirit, as not only the calling of them from their sins, and the shewing unto them the way of righteousnesse, by the Preachers of the Word, but also the working in them of some joy at the hearing of the same, and some faith to believe the same, and to bring forth some fruits of repentance, and diverse other graces, which are common to some of the wicked with the godly, and which are rightly termed by Bucer, initia fidei, the beginnings of saving faith.

Mat. 13. 20.

Heb. 6. 4. 6.

All which are sufficient arguments of Gods goodnesse, and might be the meanes to bring them unto happinesse, but that, through their contempt, and diffidence, and abuse of Gods goodnesse, by turning the graces of God into wantonnesse, they make them all, like the untimely fruit of a woman, which perisheth before it seeth the Sun, or like the grasse upon the house top, that withereth before it be plucked up.

Zanch. de nat. Dei. l. 4. c. 1. q. 3. thes. 1.

a How God is not alike good unto all men.

Secondly, though it is most certaine, that God is good unto all, yet is it as certaine, that he is not alike good unto all; but, as the master of a house is good unto all all that are under him; and ſo provideth for them all, men and beaſts; yet is there a gradation of his love and goodneſſe towards them; in as much as he loves his wife and children, better than he doth the reſt of his family; ſo God is good unto all, but in a more ſpeciall manner, he is good to ſome, rather than unto others: ſo among the Angels, he was good unto them all, in that he made them, and indued them with moſt admirable gifts of nature; but he ſhewed more goodneſſe unto them which he preſerved by his grace, that they ſhould not fall into condemnation, than he did unto thoſe which he ſuffered to run into deſtruction; and ſo among men, though he be the Saviour of all men, and doth good unto all men; yet is he ſpecially good to them that believe, or, as the Prophet David ſaith, to them that are of a right converſation: And therefore (ſpeaking of Gods goodnes towards men) we ſay, that although God be good unto all, in reſpect of his generall goodneſſe, yet in reſpect of his ſpeciall goodneſſe, he is onely good unto his Church, unto his Saints, and choſen children: he is good, to them that feare him, and put their truſt in his mercy.

1 Tim. 4. 3.

Pſal. 73. 1.

And this ſpeciall goodneſſe of God towards his Saints, is chiefly ſeene in theſe two things; which he extendeth and exhibiteth unto them and not to others.

1 In the decreeing of our eternall election.
2 In the executing of this decree for our ſalvation.

Gods ſpeciall goodneſſe towards his Saints, is ſeene in two things.

1 God fore ſeeing all the whole race of Adam, in the ſtate of ſin wherein they had fallen, did (before the foundation of the world) intend and purpoſe to aſſume into his favour, a certaine number of men, out of all that maſſe of corruption, on whom he would confer more ſpeciall fruits of his goodnes, than he meant to do on all the reſt; that they might be the ſpeciall veſſels of his mercy and goodneſſe, and made fit to follow the Lamb whereſoever he goeth. And this election of ſome, and not of all, is ſufficiently ſhewed in many paſſages of the holy Scriptures: as in Eph. 1. 4 Mat. 20. 16. where our Saviour ſaith, Many are called but few are choſen; and Ioh. 13. 18. I know whom I have choſen, and ſo the Fathers, Schoole-men, and all are all of the ſame judgement, that God decreed to glorifie ſome, and not all.

1 In our election. Aug. de fide ad Pet. c. 35. & cont. Iul. Pelag. l. 5. c. 3. &c.

God electeth ſome men, and not all.

2 As he ſhewed his goodneſſe towards them, more plentifully than the reſt, in thus purpoſing to ſave them, rather than the reſt; ſo he doth farre more plentifully ſhew the ſame unto them, in the executing of this decree of election; and in bringing of them unto eternall ſalvation. And this he doth two wayes.

1 By effectually calling them.
2 By giving and conferring many ſingular graces upon them.

2 In the execution of the decree of our election.

1 Though God ſent his Son to die for all men, that whoſoever believed in him, ſhould not periſh, but have life everlaſting, and ſends his Preachers to call all men to believe in him; yet is all this ineffectuall, to all thoſe that are not inwardly called by Gods Spirit; Quia inanis eſt ſermo docentis, niſi intus ſit qui docet, for we find many called, and often called by the Preachers of the Word, which yeeld not obedience unto the faith of Chriſt: becauſe (as our Saviour ſheweth) they are not choſen unto life. But whom God hath decreed to ſave, he doth inwardly and effectually call by his Spirit, and when we do outwardly Preach the Word, he doth graciouſly open their hearts, as he did the heart of Lydia, that they ſhould imbrace and believe the ſame. And this S. Paul ſheweth, when he ſaith, that whom God did fore-know and predeſtinate, them he called, that is, inwardly and effectually, and ſo powerfully, that when he doth ſo call them, they do preſently anſwer, loe, I come; or with Samuel, Speak on Lord, for thy ſervant heareth. And thus he calleth none, but thoſe whom he hath decreed to ſave: for ſo our Saviour ſaith, That no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son revealeth him, that is, thus effectually by his Spirit: And therfore God ſheweth more goodneſſe unto them than he doth unto all others, in that he doth more graciouſly call them, rather than all others.

1 By calling them. That God effectually calleth none but his elect.

Mat. 20. 16.

Acts 16. 14.

1 Sam. 3. 10.

2 When he hath thus effectually called them, he beſtoweth many ſpeciall and ſingular graces upon them, which he doth not upon all others, as chiefly,

2 By inriching them with graces.

1 The

Of certaine speciall graces that God bestoweth upon his Saints.

{1 The grace of preservation. 2 The grace of justification. 3 The grace of sanctification. 4 The grace of glorification.} And

First, the grace of preservation is that which keepeth and preserveth these chosen, and peculiarly beloved Saints of God, from many evils both of

{1 Sinne. 2 Punishment.} For

1 Grace of preservation.

1 From sin.

Psal. 73. 24.

How God preserveth the godly from many sinnes.

Gen. 6. 9.

Gen. 19. 7. Gen. 39. 8, 9.

Aug. Soliloq. l. 16.

To abstaine from sins, is from God.

1 Though (as I shewed you before) the goodnes of God preserveth the wicked many times from committing many horrible sinnes, which otherwise they would do; yet doth he after a more speciall manner, guide the godly with his counsell, (as the Psalmist saith) that they run not with the wicked into the same excesse of riot. For seeing by nature, we are all equally indifferent to all sinnes; how comes it to passe, that we abstaine from many abominations, and hainous impieties, that wicked men do practice? is it from our selves? or from the goodnesse of our Nature? or is it not rather from the goodnesse of God, that giveth his holy Spirit unto us; that as he preserved Noah from partaking with the wickednesse of the old world, and Lot from following after the abominations of the Sodomites, Ioseph from consenting to the lewd inticements of his Mistresse, Elias from the idolatry of Israel, and the like; so he might preserve us from those lewd actions that the wicked do? S. Augustine makes it plaine; for Tentator defuit (saith he) Satan was away, and time and place was wanting to do the deed; but this was thy goodnesse to preserve me; the tempter came in time and place convenient; but then thou with-heldest me from consenting; and so when I had will, I wanted ability; and when I had ability, I wanted opportunity, and all this was from thy blessed goodnesse that preserved me: And therefore if we do abstaine from drunkennesse, lewdnesse, or any other sin, let us not rob Gods grace, to ascribe it to the goodnesse of our natures, but let us truly acknowledge it to proceed from the goodnesse of God, that preserveth us rather than the rest; for had God preserved the wicked from their sins, they would have abstained from them, even as we do; and had he not preserved us, we should have run into the same excesse of riot, even as they do: our abstaining from sin is not from our selves.

Psal 34 16.

Psal. 91. 12.

2 He doth not onely preserve us from the evill of sin; but also from many plagues and punishments, that he suffereth other men to fall into: for so the Psalmist saith, that mis-fortune shall slay the ungodly, but God preserveth the righteous, that not one of his bones shall be broken: And againe he saith, that although Gods plague should be so great, and so hot against the wicked, as that a thousand of them should fall beside the righteous, and ten thousand on his right hand; yet it should not come nigh him: because God doth so command his Angels, to preserve them in all their wayes, that they dash not their foot against a stone.

How God preserveth the godly from many plagues and punishments. Wisd. 10. 4. 6.

How mercifully God delivered us in Anno 1588, and from the Gun-powder treason.

Thus he preserved Noah out of the floud, Lot out of Sodom, Moses and Aaron out of the hand of Pharoah, and the three children out of the fiery furnace; and thus at all times he preserveth his little flock and faithfull children, out of many miseries and dangers. And we have in a large measure tasted of this goodnes: for as Noah had been drowned in the floud, and Lot had beene consumed in Sodom, had they not been preserved by this speciall goodnesse of God: so except the same goodnesse had been on our side, when men rose up against us, in 88. and in the gun-powder Treason especially, it had not failed, but our soules had beene put to silence; and we should have been swallowed up of our miseries. I need not instance any particular deliverance of private men, each man doth best know that himselfe: and for mine owne part, I have so abundantly seene the goodnesse of God herein, that I can never think, how graciously God preserved me, so many times from so many and so mighty enemies, Qui oderunt me gratis, which hated me freely without a cause, (God he knoweth my simplenesse,) but exultavit cor meum, & eructavit verbum bonum, O how plentifull is thy goodnesse unto them that feare thee, and that put their trust in thy mercy?

Psal. 13. 21.

If any man hath found experience of the like, or any other preservation from any evill, let him never think it is from any chance or fortune, but solely from this goodnesse of God; for seeing we are all the sons of Adam, all sinners, and that no man hath a patterne of exemption, or a priviledge of immunity, to be free from common calamities; and yet we see, one break his leg, another his necke, one staine, another drowned, one diseased, another disgraced, one lose his estate, another his liberty, a third his life, and it may be unjustly too; and we our selves delivered from these, or the like miseries; how can we chuse but see the abundant goodnesse of God, in our deliverance from these calamities, which we daily see incident to other men?

No man priviledged from common calamities.

Ob. But here it may be some will object, how doth God shew more speciall goodnesse unto his Saints, by delivering them from plagues and punishments, rather than the wicked; when as we see they are more commonly plagued and scourged than the wicked be, as the Prophet David plainly sheweth unto us?

Sol. I answer, that although God many times preserveth his servants from the punishments of the wicked; yet doth he not alwaies deliver them from all afflictions; but doth often menace them, and sometime whip them too, with the rod of correction: And yet this goodnesse of God is no lesse seen to reflect upon them in these showers of adversity, than at any other time in the Sun-shine of prosperity; For, when the wicked in their afflictions do gnash with their teeth and consume away, through griefe and despaire, and so grow worse and worse, as Saul did, from Samuel unto the witch, and from the witch unto the divell, the godly in their afflictions are more humbled, more dejected in themselves, and more earnest suppliants unto God to help them, and to deliver them out of their distresse; for the righteous are therefore often pressed, that they might cry, and crying, might be heard, and heard, might glorifie God: and so (as Alexander was Semper bello quam post victoriam clarior; more famous in his warre, than in his peace) the Saints of God do euer grow better and better in their afflictions, and as the Poet saith,

The Saints in their afflictions do most of all perceive the goodnesse of God.

1 Sam. 18. 7.

Premuntur iussi, ut pressi clament, clamantes exaudiantur, exauditi glorificent Deum. Quint. Curt. l. 8.

Sæpe tulit lassis succus amarus apem;

They gather honey, not onely, with the drones, from the hive; but also, with the bee, from the thistles: and, as a pearle in the darke, they do shew more lustre, and more tokens of their goodnesse, faith, hope, charity, patience, and many other graces, in their afflictions, than ever they did or could have done in their exemption and freedome from all miseries.

And all this is not, because afflictions and punishments makes them better, but because God preserveth them, and delivereth them from all the hurts and evils that otherwise these afflictions would bring upon them, as well as upon other men, and gives them grace to make a right use of these their just deserved chastisements; for so the Propher saith, Many are the troubles of the righteous, there is his just deserts; but God delivereth him out of all, there is Gods goodnes towards him; yea, more a great deal in delivering him out of these troubles, than if he had preserved him from the having of any troubles at all; For, as that man is to be commended as most valiant, which hath been in wars, and receiving many wounds at the hands of great and many enemies, hath victoriously escaped them all, rather than he, which never fighting with any, hath kept himselfe safe and free from all danger; so he that delivereth me from the hands of mine enemies, and preserveth me from fire and water, from all troubles and afflictions, doth shew a great deale more love unto me, and more favour to deliver me from my misery, than only to remaine with me in my prosperity, &c. And therefore, if we be free from troubles, it is quia bonus Deus Israeli, from the goodnesse of God, that preserveth us; if we be punished and afflicted, repose thy trust in God, and be not dejected, to add griefe unto griefe; but think it is because it is good for us to be afflicted; and if we be delivered from our afflictions, and preserved from that poyson of despaire, and other evils, that they bring on others, it is from this goodnesse of God, which worketh all things together for the best for them that love him.

Psal 34. 18.

Forti animo mala ferre, nec bonis misere ossa dolere.

Rom. 8. 28.

2 What the grace of Iustification is.

Secondly, the grace of justification is that infused Faith, which he worketh in the hearts of his Elect, whereby they do lay hold, and apply unto themselves all the merits of Iesus Christ, and do by that imputative righteousnesse of him, stand justified in the sight of God.

3 What the grace of Sanctification is.

Thirdly, the grace of Sanctification is that, whereby we are heartily sorry for all our fore-passed sinnes, and do every day indeavour more and more to live in all holinesse and righteousnesse, to the praise and glory of God.

4 What the grace of Glorification is Fourthly, the grace of Glorification is that, whereby we live holily in this life, and shall live happily in the life to come; because (as Aquinas saith) God glorifieth his Saints, Per profectum virtutis & gratiæ, & per exaltationem gloriæ, by making them holy here on earth, and bringing them to the happinesse of heaven. All these graces, and what grace soever else is dependant upon any of these are wrought in the Saints by this speciall goodnesse of God; for, Whom God did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified: This is the golden way, and the royall degrees of Gods goodnesse, whereby the Saints of God are saved. And therefore if any of us do find these graces in our selves, let us not ascribe them to our selves, but to the grace and goodnesse of God; for This is the worke of God, that ye believe in him, whom he hath sent, saith our Saviour Christ; And it is given to believe, saith the Apostle. And herein let us admire with reverence, and acknowledge withall thankefulnesse, his speciall and his singular goodnesse towards us, more than towards others, which perhaps naturally are as well, if not better deserving than our selves; for had he bestowed faith and repentance upon them, they would have believed on him, and served him even as we do; and had he not bestowed these graces on us, we should have beene poore and naked of all goodnesse, even as they are.

Rom. 8. 30.

Phil. 1. 29.

That if there be any goodnesse in us, we should ascribe it all to God

Ob. But then here it may be objected, that if we do no good, but what God giveth us to do, and that the very reprobates would believe in God, and serve him, if God would bestow those effectuall and powerfull graces upon them, which he bestoweth upon his Saints, then it must needs follow, that the wicked are not altogether so culpable, for the omission of those required duties; because God gives them not the grace and ability to performe them; Quia nullus actus potest excedere potentiam agentis, because no act can exceed the power of the agent: and therefore, whosoever limiteth the power, is the cause of the intermission of the consequent act, and of the event that floweth thereby; and therefore God circumscribing our ability, must needs be the cause of our deficiency.

Sol. To this I answer, that we ascribe all the goodnesse of the Saints unto the grace and goodnesse of God, to magnifie Gods goodnesse, and to vilifie our owne baseneſse; to shew that we have nothing in the world whereof to boast: and we thinke our Saviours words are sufficient to confirm this truth, where he saith, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from above: And againe, Without me ye can do nothing: And we say that the wicked would do these things, if God would give them, I say, not sufficient, but effectuall grace to do them; because it is impossible, but the same measure of effectuall grace should produce the same measure of effects; for if God would work in them that sanctity which he doth in his Saints, how could they resist his will? Or is it possible that this will of man should withstand the will of God? no wayes.

John 15. 5. That of our selves we can do nothing that is good.

What the Semi-Pelagians feare.

And I see no reason, why any man should except against this truth, but that hereby they fear that imputation of injustice, which (as they think) must needs light on God, if he should condemne them, for not serving him, and yet not give them the grace or ability to serve him, or at least wise of partiality, if he, without any manner of desert of the one more than the other, should notwithstanding choose the one sort, and inrich them, and leave the other sort, and condemne them.

But to this I answer, that if God should require such duties, as are not due to him, or command them to do that, which they never received power from him to fulfill, we might perhaps think him no just in his demands; For δυνάτον τὰς νομὰς τετεθῆναι Lawes must be made according to the rule of mens ability to perform them; or if God did take away this power againe from the Agent, then might he likewise be said to be the cause of the deficiency of the subsequent act: but if God requires nothing at our hands, but that which is our duty to do, and what he made us able to performe, and we through our own default and wilfulnesse, Male utentes potestate, abusing the power which God hath given us, like those that spend their wealth on whores, which they should imploy to maintaine their wives and children, have lost this power, that we had received, and brought upon our selves an inevitable impotency, the very Law of humane reason will here take part with God against us, Non habere excusationem, &c. that he hath no excuse for himselfe, which is the cause of his owne impediment, as a Father saith: And therefore, seeing man lost the power of serving God, by his owne faults in offending God; and that God is not bound to restore it againe, God, in not giving it, is no efficient cause of their not serving him: but, as the Sun is the cause of darknesse, Non per se, sed per accidens, not because properly it effecteth darknes, but accidentally, by reason of its departure from us; So is God only the cause, why the wicked serve him not; not because he worketh any unwillingnesse in them to serve him; but because he denieth his grace unto them, whereby they might be inabled to serve him: and this deniall of his grace is no injustice in God; because their own sins have made this separation betwixt God and them, and makes every man like unto Turnus soule, ——Fugit indignata per umbras; to hide himselfe from this shining light: And God is a debter to no man, that he should inlighten any, but whom it pleaseth him.

Subaudi

God taketh not the power of serving him from any man.

God is not bound to give the wicked power to serve him.

Secondly, I say that this extending of his speciall goodnesse unto some, and not to others, is no accepting of persons in that sence, which the Scripture saith, God is no accepter of persons: For

First, Saint Augustine tels us, that ibi est acceptio personarum, ubi quæ æqualibus, ex æquo debentur, inæqualiter distribuuntur; there is the acception of persons, where those things which are equally due to all men, are unequally distributed to some men: but where those things, which are due to none, are freely given unto some, and unequally distributed unto those; yet herein is neither partiality, nor iniquity: because, as our Saviour saith, God may do with his owne what he will, and give the same to whom he please: And thereby, Huic facit misericordia, tibi non fit injuria; he doth but shew mercy unto the one, and he doth no injustice to the other.

What it is to be an accepter of persons.

Mat. 20. 15.

Secondly, the meaning of the Holy Ghost, in saying that God is no accepter of persons, is not, that he chuseth not one man rather than another; for so he chose Iacob, and hated Esau; but that he chuseth not any man in regard of the outward indowments, or naturall gifts, or any other thing, that is in that man rather than in other men; as not Achitophel for his wisdome; not Absolon for his beauty; not Sampson for his strength; not Dives for riches; nor Iacob for any thing that was in Iacob more than in Esau: for whom he chuseth, he chuseth meerely out of his meere grace and goodnesse towards the one, rather than the other, as he himselfe plainly sheweth, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy.

Mal. 1. 2.

God chuseth no man, for the love of any thing that is in man.

Exod. 33. 19.

And so you see, how abundantly God is good, eternally in himself, generally unto all, and more especially unto his Saints: Oh then let us not be like the Egyptians, that found out the streames of the river Nilus, but knew not the springs from whence they issued: Let us not be ignorant of that spring and fountaine from whence we receive so many benefits, and so many streames of goodnesse; for this were but (like the swine) to eat the acornes that fall on the ground, and never to behold the tree from whence they fall, or to beare the name of God written in our hearts, by the pen of nature, and yet to be like the Athenian Altar, wherein was in graven ἀγνώστῳ Θεῷ, to the unknown God: but rather in all things whatsoever we have, or injoy, health, wealth, or prosperity, spirituall, or temporall grace, let us, with S. Iames, acknowledge the same, to descend from above, and to proceed unto us from this abundant goodnesse of God: And for the same, let us ascribe unto

That we should acknowledge all our goodnesse to proceed from God.

Iames 1. 17.

God the honour due unto his name, to worship him with holy worship. And so much for the fourth particle, of the abundant goodnesse of God.

CHAP. IX.

Of the superabundant truth of God.

5 Particle.

THe fift particle of Gods goodnesse, is, that he is abundant in truth: Now truth (saith Anselmus) is as Time, or as Light, which though but one, yet is it diversly distinguished; so Truth (saith the Philosopher) is variously considered; and that either

{1 Morally. 2 Physically.} And

Arist. Æthic. l. 4. c. 7 Moral l. 1. c. 33. Truth considered two wayes

1 What morall truth is.

In the first sence, ἀλήθεια ἕξις μεταξὺ, τῆς εἰρωνείας καὶ ἀλαζονείας. Truth is a vertue, evenly placed betwixt arrogancy and simulation; or, as Cicero defines it, (and which S. Augustine holds to be the best definition of it) Veritas est per quam immutata quæ sunt, quæ fuerunt, & quæ futura sunt, dicuntur; Truth is that, (that is, that vertue,) whereby things past, things present, and things to come, are immutably related as they are. And this truth, though it be in God, or rather from God, because he alwaies saith and relateth things immutably as they be, yet is it not in him, as in us; because in us truth is a morall vertue, whereby, as by an habit, we are propense and inclined to shew forth the things as they be: but in God, it is not as a quality, but an essentiall property, whereby he is, what he is, and can no more leave to be, or to relate Truth, than he can leave to be a God.

2 What Physicall truth is.

Aug. Solil. l. 2. c. 5.

In the second sense, Veritas cujuslibet rei, est proprietas sui esse, quod stabilitum est ei; The truth of every thing is the propriety of his being, or (as S. Augustine saith) Verum est id quod est; that is true, which is: Illud enim omnes verum dicunt esse, quod tale revera est, quale esse videtur, &c. For all men (saith he) affirme that to be true, which is indeed as it seems to be; and that to be false, which is not as it seems to be; as the Image of a man in a glasse, seems to be a man, and is not; and therefore though it be a true image of a man, yet is it a false man: And so he is a false friend, which seems to be a true friend, and is not. A most heavy sentence against them, which say, They are Iewes, and are not, but are of the Synagogue of Satan; which say they are Christians, but serve not God; and which seem to be just, and honest men, but inwardly are ravening wolves; because they being not what they seem to be, do deceive themselves, and the truth is not in them: And therefore, Nihil prodest illis nomen usurpare alienum, & vocari quod non sunt; It will availe them nothing to usurpe a wrong name, and to be called what they are not; for though they may deceive the world, yet Christ which is truth it selfe, and knoweth all truth, will tell them at the last day, that he never knew them, that is, to be true Christians, which they seemed to be, but were not.

Rev. 2. 9.

1 Ioh. 1. 6.

Mat. 25. 12.

God truth two wayes.

And thus God is truth, and that two wayes.

{1 Essentially in himselfe. 2 Causally in all things.} For 1 Essentially.

Deut. 32. 4.

First, God is essentially true, yea truth it selfe, as Moses, and as our Saviour saith, quia est quod est, because he is that which he is, and that which he seems to be; and thus properly nothing can be said to be truth, but God; because nothing is or can be said to be of himselfe, but God.

2 Causally.

Ioh. 14. 6.

The manner how all truths do proceed from God.

1 Way.

Secondly, as God is essentially truth, so he is causually truth, that is, the fountaine of truth, from whence all other channels of truth do flow: for this is the order of all verity.

First, the truth of all things is conceived in the Idea and notion, or practicke knowledge and understanding of God, from all eternity; because all things had their being in the divine understanding, before they had their being in themselves: then

Secondly,

Secondly, this truth floweth to the things exiſting in themſelves, which are therefore true, becauſe they are adequated and conformable to that truth conceived in the mind of God, concerning them: then 2 Way.

Thirdly, This truth of things paſſeth to the underſtanding both of Men and Angels, when the underſtanding is adequated and conformable to the things conceived, as they are in themſelves, that is, when we truly underſtand things to be as they be: then 3 Way.

Fourthly, this truth conceived in the underſtanding, proceedeth unto expreſſion, either by words, or writings, when our expreſſion of things is agreeable to that conception, which we have of them in our underſtanding, that is, when we ſpeak, or write, as we think. 4 Way.

And therefore, whenſoever our words do any waies ſwerve from our minds, and underſtanding, they cannot be true; quia mendacium eſt contra mentem ire, becauſe a lie is to go againſt our own minds, or to ſay otherwiſe than we think, ſaith S. Auguſtine; and a truth of words is the adequation and conformity of the tongue with the mind and underſtanding; and whenſoever we underſtand any thing otherwiſe than it is, there can be no truth in that underſtanding; becauſe the truth of the underſtanding is the adequation of the ſame, to the things exiſting and being in their naturall cauſes, and whenſoever things do any waies ſwerve from that eternall notion and conception of them, in the mind and underſtanding of God, they cannot therein be true: becauſe the truth of all things conſiſteth in their adequation, and conformity to the truth, eternally conceived of them in the divine underſtanding.

But when our words are agreeable to our minds, our minds and underſtandings to the things conceived, and thoſe things to the mind of God; then are they true: becauſe (as the Schooles truly teach) Intellectus divinus eſt menſurans non menſuratus, &c. the divine conception of things is that which meaſureth the truth of all things, and is not meaſured it ſelfe by any thing; Et res naturalis eſt menſurata & menſurans, and every naturall thing, thus meaſured by the notion of God, doth meaſure the truth of our underſtanding, and our underſtanding meaſured by the truth of things conceived, doth meaſure the truth of our words. How the divine underſtanding is the rule that meaſureth all truths.

And ſo you ſee truth to be primatively in God, as the light in the body of the Sun; and thence to be derived in res exiſtentes, into the things wherein it reſteth ſubjectively, like unto the light of the Moone and the Stars, which they receive from the Sun; and ſo to paſſe into the underſtanding terminatively, like the reflection of the light of the Moone and the Stars, upon theſe lower orbs; and laſtly to our words or writings, expreſſively, like unto the manifeſtation of things, by that light which ſhineth upon them.

Now, this verum declarativum, this expreſſed truth is to be conſidered two wayes. Expreſſed truth twofold.

{1 Primarily. 2 Secondarily. } For

First, as it is directed by God, and guided by his Spirit, ſo as therein there can be no commixtion of errour; and in that reſpect it is called the divine truth, becauſe it is wholly truth, and expreſſed by the divine Spirit; for, as S. Peter ſaith, The holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt; this is, Theologicall truth, and it is wholly contained in the holy Scripture, which is therefore called, the Word of truth. 1 Primarily. 2 Pet. 1. 21. Col. 1. 5.

And this truth, though I might alledge many other reaſons, to prove the worth and the excellency thereof; yet is this ſufficient inſtead of all, that (beſides what Zerobabel ſaith of it) it is in many paſſages of the Scripture compared unto the light, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Send forth thy truth and thy light, and that eſpecially in three reſpects; for, as the light is

The excellency of the divine Truth.

1. The diſpeller of darkeneſſe.
2. The ſhewer of things.
3. The effecter of generable Creatures.

} So is Truth: for

1 Truth expelleth errours.

First, As the Light, when it ariſeth, chaſeth away all darkeneſſe, and ſuffereth not the ſame to adhere unto it; whereupon the Apoſtle ſaith, What agreement is there betweene light and darkeneſſe? Even ſo, this Truth, when it ſhineth, diſpelleth and driveth away all errors and ignorance from the mindes of all wherein it reſteth: And therefore Father Zachary ſaith, That Chriſt, which is Truth it ſelfe, when he came to preach this Word of Truth, came, to give light to them that ſit in darkeneſſe, and in the ſhaddow of death, that is, To diſperſe thoſe myſts of ignorance and errours, which had over-ſhadowed the whole face of the Earth.

2 Cor. 6. 14.

Luk. 1. 79.

2 Truth ſheweth what every thing is.

Ephe. 5. 13.

Secondly, as the Light when it ſhineth, diſplayeth it ſelfe, and pierceth every tranſparent body, though never ſo ſolid, and maketh all things manifeſt, what they are; for in the darke, there is no certainty of colours, white from blacke is ſcarce diſcerned; there is no certainty of things, Gold cannot be knowne from Copper: but when the Light ſhineth, it preſently ſheweth what every thing is: Even ſo, though while we are ignorant of Gods will, evill may be deemed good, and good evill; yet when this Truth of God ſhineth, that is, this Word of God is Preached, it maketh knowne every thing what it is; it ſheweth the true God from the falſe, the true ſervice of God, from the falſe ſuperſtition of men; the true Church of Chriſt, from the falſe Synagogue of Satan, and the true members of Chriſt, from the falſe hypocrites of the World. Hence it is, that the wicked cannot abide the Truth, Becauſe their workes are evill; and by the preaching of the ſame, their workes are manifeſted to be ſo: And therefore Saint Paul ſaith, That the Preachers of Gods Word, are oftentimes become enemies unto the wicked, becauſe they tell them the Truth.

Iohn 3. 19.

Gal. 4. 16.

3 Truth begets us unto God.

Thirdly, As the Light when it ariſeth, doth ſo heate, and hearten every thing, that it is moſt truly ſaid; Sol & homo generat hominem, The Sunne and Man begets a Man; Even ſo this Truth of God, and the Preaching of the ſame, is the onely meanes whereby we are regenerate, and begotten againe to be the Sonnes of God, as the Apoſtle ſheweth.

And this is that Truth, whereby God ſheweth himſelfe to be abundantly true; becauſe as Hugo ſaith, In ſacra Scriptura non ſolum bonitas eſt, quod præcipitur, & felicitas, quod promittitur, ſed etiam veritas eſt, quod dicitur; Whatſoever is ſaid in the holy Scripture, it is abſolutely true, without any errour; and the promiſes of God are as ſure, as if they were already performed; for he is yea, and Amen, that is, True in himſelfe, true in his workes, and true in all his words: And this Truth of the Lord indureth for ever: for, He will not alter the thing that is gone out of his mouth, neither will he ſuffer his Truth to faile: But when we forget both him and our ſelves, he will ſtill be mindfull of his promiſe, and remember his holy covenant.

2 Cor. 1. 20.

Luke 1. 72.

And therefore, ſeeing that as the Light is ſo excellent a thing, the firſt-borne of all viſible creatures, and the very comfort of every afflicted heart, that diſpelleth all darknes, diſcovereth all things, and is the procreative cauſe of all creatures; ſo is this Truth of God, of that tranſcendent excellency, as that it is the beſt guide of our lives, and the ſole meanes to ſave our ſoules, It ſhould teach us,

What wee ought to doe.

First, to ſpare no coſt to get that Truth.

Mat. 13. 44.

First, Comparare veritatem, To purchaſe this Truth, and to get the ſame unto our ſelves by any meanes: It is that Treaſure hid in the field, to gaine which the wiſe Merchant ſold all that ever he had: no labour is too great, no coſt is too deare, to gaine this Truth.

Horat.

Multa tulit fecitq; puer, ſudavit & alſit.

And as another ſaith;

——Ardua quamvis
ſit via, non metuit virtus invicta laborem.

If the Gentiles did toyle, and moyle, and ſweat, and ſpare no paines to get a little little measure of humane learning, which did almost nothing else but puffe them up with pride; what paines ought we to take, to search and seeke for this Divine Truth, which is onely able to save our soules?

Secondly, Retinere veritatem, to let passe this truth, when once we have attained unto the same, by no meanes; but to keepe it and to retaine it unto death: for so Salomon saith; Buy the truth, but sell it not, that is, when you have gotten it, part not from it: and this is no small taske: Non minor est virtus quam quærere parta tueri: But it is as difficult a thing to retaine it; as it is to finde it: for seeing the truth is like the light, and the light is many times obscured with cloudes and darkenesse; so the truth is opposed by errour and ignorance; it is envied and hated by the sonnes of men; and as Tertullian saith, it hath beene ever seene, Veritatem in terris peregrinam agere, & inter ignotos facile calumniatores invenire; That the truth was entertained on earth but as a Pilgrime, and a Stranger, that easily findeth enemies in every place, and scarce friends in any place: and so the Booke of God, and the story of times doth make it plaine; how the Professors of this Truth, were alwaies persecuted; and the Truth it selfe sought to be suppressed by the sonnes of darkenesse. Moses and Aaron were withstood by Pharaoh, and resisted by Iannes and Iambres, and the rest of the Sorcerers of Egypt. The Prophets were so vehemently and so generally persecuted by the Iewes, that Saint Stephen asketh them, Which of the Prophets have not your Fathers persecuted? and Christ himselfe, which was borne to this end, Vt testimonium perhiberet veritati, That he might beare witnesse unto the Truth, was resisted unto death; and so all the Martyrs and faithfull witnesses of this eternall Truth can beare witnesse what they suffered in the defence of Truth.

Secondly, to hazard all we have in defence of this Truth, Pro. 23. 23.

Tullius in Apol. ex Tertul. Apologet.

Acts 7. 52.

Iohn 18. 37.

And therefore, if wee would retaine the truth, we have need of Patience, wee have need of Courage, and of a constant Resolution, never to suffer this Heavenly Truth to be taken from us, untill our selves bee taken out of this wretched life. Let us lay before us the examples of the Patriarkes and Prophets, of Christ himselfe, of his holy Apostles, and of all his blessed Martyrs, which thought not their lives too deare to defend this Truth; and let us not be degenerate children of such worthy Progenitors, as transmitted this Truth unto us with the losse of their lives.

What is needfull for us, if we would retaine the Truth.

And though wee have need of Patience, to suffer much in the defence of Truth, yet we may be confident, that Truth will prevaile and get the victory; for as no darkenesse can so swallow up the light, but that in its appointed time, it will gloriously returne againe; so no power of darkenesse can so suppresse the Truth, but at last it will appeare as the cleare day; Because as the nature of errour is such, that although none be to withstand it, yet as the smoake, at last it will vanish of it selfe; so the nature of Truth is such, that although never so many doe oppugne it, yet at last it will prevaile, as Zerobabel saith; and as the Comicke saith, Ἄγει δὲ πρὸς φῶς τὴν ἀλήθειαν χρόνος; Time will bring out the Truth into Light at last: And therefore seeing the Truth is of that invincible power, that although it may bee obscured, yea, for a time with Christ himselfe be buried, yet it cannot be extinguished, nor remaine perpetually intombed, but that the time will come, wherein nothing is hid which shall not bee revealed, nothing is covered which shall not be manifested, We should arme our selves with confidence and sure trust in God, which according to his Truth, will at last bring all Truth to light, and save all them that put their trust in him.

That truth at last will ever prevaile.

Cokus de iure regis Ecclesiastico.

But here me thinkes I heare some saying, they would willingly spend their lives in defence of Truth, if they could tell what were Truth; for now there are so many Religions, so many Professions, and so many diversities of Opinions in the world, that it is farre easier for them to spend their life, then to find out what is Truth.

I answer, that as Claudian saith, Sæpe mihi dubiam traxit sententia mentem, curarent superi terras, an nullus inesset rector.—Hee was much distracted, and knew not well what to resolve, whether there was a Divine providence or not; becanse

Claud. l. 1. in Ruff.

——Rursus labefacta cadebat religio.

Rom 1.25.

Iohn 3.9.

Psal. 4.2.

Iohn 17.17.

6 Monachi vestri stomachi sunt amphora Bacchi; vos estis Deus est testis turpissima pestis.

Mat. 5.46.

Rom. 1.18.

Mat. 7.22.

Rom. 3.3.

Chap. 10.16.

because when he saw the most admirable course of things, he said, Tunc omnia rebar consilio firmata Dei; He thought it was unpossible, that that could proceed, but from a superiour cause: but on the other side, when (as the Prophet David saith) He saw the wicked in such prosperity, and the Righteous hang downe their heads like a Bull-rush; yea, and hanged many times like the wicked sonnes of evill doers; then he thought it could not bee, that there should bee any God; because he cared not (as he thought) for the righteous people: Even so I must needs confesse, that when I consider the sincerity of that Religion which wee teach, the summe of it plainely expressed in the Scriptures, and the end of it, tending onely to the glory of God, I doe assure my selfe, that we have amongst us the very Truth of God: but on the other side, when I consider Quomodo commutaverunt veritatem Dei in mendacium, How many of us do change this Truth of God into a lye, when they doe live cleane contrary to what they Professe; and some of the best of us, even of the Teachers of this Truth, doe leade our lives, not onely as they doe, whom we daily condemne for such intollerable corruptions, unbeseeming Christians; but also in many things, as Pagans who know not God; It makes me often muse, and Nicodemus-like to aske, how can these things be? to have the Truth amongst us, and yet to have such pleasure in vanity, and to seeke after leasing; For our Saviour prayeth for his servants, that God would sanctifie them through the Truth; and yet behold the fruits of our Sanctification. It was said of old,

Mos est prælatis præbendas non dare gratis;
Sed bene nummatis aut eorum sanguine natis.

And now the world saith of some of us; We sell our Churches, we purchase Lands, we raise our sonnes to worldly honours, wee suppresse whom wee list, though never so good, we raise our friends our kinsfolkes alliances, & servants too, though they be never so bad, and what not? What should I say any more? what (say they) can Rome doe more? or what more doe we then the Heathens doe? or as our Saviour saith, Doe not the Publicans and Sinners even the same? and if these things bee done in a greene tree? If this be the life of us that are as the light of the world, what shall we say of others, which by Profession are lay secular men? I take God to witnesse, before whom I stand, and by whom I shall bee judged, that I have admired, and often grieved at my heart, not onely to heare, what perhaps the adversaries of the Truth, or some lewd dissolute men, that neither love God, nor his Ministers, but are ever ready to speake the worst of all, for the offence of few, might falsely say against us; but also to see how dissolute, how worldly, and how conformable to the world, (boone companions, fashionable to all Companies,) a great many of us doe live, who as the Poet saith, Nec Iovis imperium, nec Phlegetonta timent.

And therefore I wonder not, that the simple are brought to their nonplus to see Truth and Wickednesse thus linked together in the same persons:

But when I consider what the Apostle saith, that the Gentiles did hold the Truth in unrighteousnesse; I must needs acknowledge that wicked men may have the theoricke knowledge of the Truth, and teach this Truth unto others, and yet be castawayes themselves; for so our Saviour saith, that many shall come in the last day, and say, Lord open unto us, for wee have propheſied in thy Name, and done many great workes through thy Name, to whom the Lord shall answer, I know you not; depart from me you workers of iniquity.

Besides, as the Apostle saith of the Iewes, What if some did not beleeve, shall their unbeleefe make the faith of God without effect? God forbid: or what If all did not obey the Gospell, or that some of the branches be broken off? Shall this hinder the salvation of the rest? God forbid; So I may say of us; What if some of us, what if many of us, even the greatest of us, should be, as the world saith we are? should that prejudice the rest, and especially the Truth of God? God forbid: I hope I may boldly say it, that the world cannot say, nor any man in the world deny it, unlesse he putteth on the face of the father of lies; but as we have had many Reverend and faithfull Bishops, many grave & painefull Preachers, that have spent their strength in the expressing, and sacrificed their deerest blond in defending this Truth; so we have still many worthy and godly Bishops, and many holy and heavenly Ministers, that doe most uprightly walke in the Truth of God; and shall these be condemned and reproached for the offence of others? Shall all be blamed for the offence of few? No, God forbid, let every horse beare his own burthen; for every man shall be judged according to his owne workes.

Parcite pancorum diffundere crimen in omnes Spectetur meritis qualibet apte suis.

And therefore though, as in the field of Gods Church, there are Tares as well as Wheat; so in our Priestly dignity there are many amongst us, that are not of us, (of whom I understand what I said before) that are like Statuæ Mercuriales, which shew the way to others, but walke not one steppe themselves; or like those skillfull Cookes that dresse good meate for others, but taste not a bit thereof themselves: or rather that feed not the flocke at all, but feed themselves upon the flocke of Christ, and gather wealth to themselves in steed of gaining soules to God; yet let God be true, and every man a lyar, and let not the wicked life of some men, scandalize this eternall Truth of God: wee have it now amongst us: It was purchased by paines, preserved by blood, and most gloriously continued to this very day: and I doe assure my selfe, that as there were seaven thousand men in Israel which bowed not their knees to Baal; so there be many thousands of men in England, that if they wanted Inke to defend that Divine Truth which we doe Professe, would maintaine the same with their deerest blood; and I boldly set it downe, that if Satan should be let loose to persecute the Saints of God; I doe unfainedly wish my burning bones might first give light unto all them that desire to walke in this Truth. But wee have more cause to pray to God to defend the Defendor of this Truth, not onely by his Royall Authority, whereby we doe injoy this Truth in a blessed peace, but also by his owne Divine Ponne and industry, whereby hee shewed himselfe, Esse quod est, to be of the Truth indeed, rather then any waies in the least manner to feare or suspect the disturbance of the same; for God, who is abundant in Truth, will preserve his owne Truth for evermore. And therefore, seeing that, though some of us bee wicked, yea, though all of us should be wicked and deprive our selves of happinesse, which I hope our greatest enemies will not dare to say, yet doth not that make the truth of God of none effect. Let us be Gens Sancta, custodiens veritatem, a Righteous and a holy Nation to hold fast this Truth of God; not shewing our selves like Rehoboam, that found shields of gold, but left behinde him shields of Brasse; to receive the cleere Truth, from our fathers, and to leave the same darkened unto our children.

1 King. 19. 18.

Esay 26.

Secondly, As the Word of God is the primary and most absolute declared Truth, wherein there is no possibility of errour, Quia dicta Iehovæ, dicta pura; Because the words of the Lord are pure words; So the words of men, agreeable to their understanding conformed to the Truth of things, are secondarily the Truth of God; because as every lye is from the divell, though it should be uttered from the tongue of a Saint, as our Saviour sheweth; so every truth is from God, though it were spoken from the mouth of a divell; because the Spirit of God is the Spirit of truth, Et omne verum, à quocunq; dicitur, à Spiritu Sancto est, And all Truth (whosoever speakes it) doth spring from the Spirit of God, saith Saint Ambrose.

2 Secondary.

Ioh. 8. 44.

A sufficient reproofe for them that will not heare the Word of God, but from the mouth of Saints; for we are not to respect who speake, or what they be that speake, but what is spoken: and therefore if Baalams Asse should preach mee Christ, I would willingly be his Disciple; for Saint Paul tels me, that none can say, that Iesus is Christ, but by the Spirit of God; and therefore he did not so much care, who preached, nor how they preached, so they preached Iesus Christ; because he knew that every truth must needs proceed from the Spirit of Truth.

Every Truth whatsoever, whosoever saith it, proceeds from God.

1 Cor. 12. 3.

And

That we ſhould ſay nothing but Truth.

And therefore this ſhould teach us to make much of truth, and not onely to beleeve the Truth whoſoever ſpeakes it; but alſo to ſpeake the truth, every man unto his neighbour, whatſoever comes of it; though it ſhould be like Caſſandra's Propheſie, not beleeved, or Odium parere, Beget hatred, as the Comicke ſpeaketh; Quia dilexit Deus veritatem, becauſe, as all Truth is from God, ſo God loveth all Truth whatſoever.

Corruit in platea veritas. Pſal. 12. 1.

Pſal. 15. 5.

And yet we ſee, Quod diminuta ſunt veritates à filijs hominum, The Truth is trodden downe in the ſtreet, and the faithfull are miniſhed from among the children of men; we are all like the Cretians, alwaies lyars; and though the godly man keepeth his promiſe unto his neighbour, though it were to his owne hinderance; yet, now we ſeldome thinke of any promiſe, unleſſe it be for our furtherance to attaine unto our owne deſires: ſo farre are we from Truth: But we muſt all love truth, and follow after truth, if we would be children unto him that is abundant in truth. And ſo much for the fift Particle of Gods goodneſſe, Of Gods abundant truth.

CHAP. X.

Of the large extent of Gods mercy, and of the remiſſion of all kinde of ſinnes, and the uſefull application of the whole Attribute of Gods goodneſſe.

6 Particle. God is merciſull to all men.

THe ſixt Particle of Gods Goodneſſe is, that he reſerveth mercy for thouſands, and that (as I underſtand it) two manner of waies;

1. Extenſively.
2. Succeſſively.

1 Extenſively.

Baſil in regulis contract. q. 15.

Firſt, he meaneth that his Mercy is not like a carnall Patrons love, which commonly reacheth no further then his kindred; he can preferre none elſe; Nor yet like great mens favours, which extend no further then their ſervants, their greatneſſe is no greater; but Miſerationum Dei multitudo numerari, & magnitudo menſurari non poteſt; The mercies of God are ſo many, that they cannot be numbred, and ſo great that they cannot be meaſured; ſo that he hath enough in ſtore, to helpe not onely a few, but alſo many multitudes of thouſands: hee hath enough for all: being not like Iſaac that had but one bleſſing; for he hath many bleſſings for every one.

Gen. 27. 38.

2 Succeſſively. Gods Mercy laſteth for al times, even for ever and ever.

Secondly, he meaneth that his Mercy is not for any ſet Period of time, which is the property of all other things, even of the greateſt Monarchs; they have but their time, and when that time is gone, they can do nothing, which a little before ſeemed to be able to doe all things: but Gods mercies are tyed to no time, but they continue from generation to generation; they are like a ſpringing well, that can never be dryed; or like the Lampe that is fed with the oyle of immortality: And this the Word, reſerving, doth moſt plainely ſhew, that he hath mercy enough in ſtore, not onely for the fathers that beleeve in him, but alſo for their children and for their childrens children, even unto a thouſand generations, of them that love him and keepe his Commandements: O then what a Patrimony doe good parents purchaſe unto their children, to have the Mercies of God reſerved and laid up in ſtore for thouſands of them; and (as the Apoſtle ſaith of the Iewes) to make them to be loved for their fathers ſake? Moſt happy are thoſe children, which have ſuch fathers as doe feare God, and keepe his Commandements. And ſo much for the ſixt Particle of Gods goodneſſe, Reſerving Mercy for thouſands.

Good Parents do leave the beſt patrimony unto their children. Rom 11. 28.

7 Particle Forgiveneſſe of ſins, our chiefeſt comfort. Rom 4. 7.

The ſeaventh Particle of Gods goodneſſe is, that hee forgiveth iniquity and tranſgreſſion and ſinne: Here is the laſt but not the leaſt act of Gods goodneſſe expreſſed; For herein conſiſteth all our happineſſe, Bleſſed is the man whoſe unrighteouſneſſe teousnesse is forgiven, and whose sinne is covered. And here by these three words God understandeth three sorts of evill.

What these three words signifie.

1. By Iniquity, is understood originall corruption.
2. By Transgression, is meant the outward and actuall commission.
3. By Sinne, is understood the height of all abhomination, The custome of sinning, and the greatest sinnes:

For God deprives not these from hope of Pardon, if they come to him with penitent hearts: and therefore, that none should despaire of his goodnesse, hee sheweth that hee can forgive all these, and forgiving these, hee forgiveth all.

No sinner excluded from hope of pardon.

But here I must have leave to take away the vaile from Moses his face, and to looke further then the Iewish Tabernacle; for as in Ezekiels vision, Rota erat in rota, Gospell was in the Law, and Law in the Gospell, (as Saint Gregory expounds it;) so here I finde all this to bee Gospell, and I see Iesus Christ in every word; for in Christ, wee have Redemption through his blood, the forgivenesse of our sinnes; and so of all the rest of these Graces, wee have them all by Christ; for though the Law came by Moses, yet (as Saint Iohn saith) Grace and Truth, yea, Mercy and Peace, and all the other good that we have, wee have them all through Iesus Christ our Lord.

Ezek. 10. 10.

Colos. 1. 14.

Iohn 1. 17.

And thus by the helpe of Gods Spirit, we have thus farre sayled through the boundlesse Ocean of Gods goodnesse, and in all this wee can shew you no more then little drops of raine, or small sparkes of fire, in comparison of the huge elements of fire and water; so great is his goodnesse, and so unable is our small understanding to apprehend the greatnesse of Gods goodnesse: it should teach us,

What wee should learne from this doctrine of Gods goodnesse.

First, to be afraid to sinne; for there is mercy with God that hee may be feared, or if we have sinned, to make us presently to forsake our sinnes and to be sorrowfull for our offences; for the mercy of God leadeth us to repentance, saith the Apostle. And herein is the difference betwixt the wicked and the godly mans application of Gods goodnesse.

First, to be afraid to sin.

First, the wicked considereth how gracious and how mercifull the Lord is, as well as the best; but he maketh the worst use of this that possible can be; for he saith unto himselfe, that the mercy of God is great, and he desireth not the death of a sinner, which is most true; but then he inferres a most damnable consequence, that therefore he may the more boldly goe on in sin, or at least with the lesse feare offend his God: and so he maketh the grace and goodnesse of God, to be as an horse to carry away his sins, or as his sole incouragement, to goe on in sinne; and thereby he heapeth unto himselfe wrath against the day of wrath; because (as the Wiseman saith) Mercy and wrath come from God, and his indignation falleth downe upon sinners. But

Ezek. 18. 32.

How the wicked doe abuse Gods goodnesse.

Rom. 2. 5.

Secondly, the godly considering the goodnesse of God, doe thereupon exceedingly feare to sinne; because they are loath to offend so good a God, that hath beene so gracious and so bountifull unto them; and if at any time through their infirmity, they doe offend him, they will presently returne to God, because they know God is ever ready to receive them; and so they make the consideration of Gods goodnesse, to be a hinderance of their sinning, and offending God, and to be a furtherance of their repenting, to returne to God. And I would to God wee would all make this use of the Mercy of God, and say with that Christian Poet,

The consideration of Gods goodnes is a meanes to preserve good men from sin.

Ah miser, an summi quoniam propensa parentis
Ad veniam est bonitas, in scelus omne ruis?

Ah wretched men that we are, shall we abound in sinne, because God abounds in goodnesse? God forbid; for that were to turne the grace of God into wantonnesse, and to abuse his goodnesse, for our destruction, and not to use it for our salvation. And therefore the better God hath beene to us, the more wee should bleed

bleed to offend that God: we ſhould call to minde, if we can, wherein God wronged our names, that we ſhould ſo often, at every word almoſt, abuſe the moſt ſacred name of God; or when he was hard to us, that we ſhould ſo hardly deale with him, as by our ſins we doe, to render him evill for good, and hatred for his good will.

Secondly, never to deſpaire of Gods Mercy. Rom.5.2.

Secondly, this Doctrine teacheth us, never to deſpaire of Gods Mercy; for where ſinne aboundeth grace ſuperaboundeth, that is, though thy ſinnes be never ſo great, never ſo many, yet the Mercy of God is greater; and therefore thou art deceived Caine, to ſay, Thy ſinne is greater then can bee forgiven thee; for though my ſinne were greater then ever hath beene committed, yet it is not greater then God can forgive me; or though I were never ſo full of ſinnes, yet is God more full of mercies; becauſe no ſinnes of man can exceede the Mercy of God, as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith: and therefore though my ſinnes were never ſo many, even as many as have beene committed in the world, ſince the beginning of the world; yet ſeeing the Lord can put them all away like a cloud, and though they were never ſo hainous, even as red as ſcarlet, yet ſeeing the Lord can make them as white as ſnow, I ought never to deſpaire of the grace and Mercy of God; Quia ſemper inveniam Deum benigniorem quam me culpabiliorem; Becauſe I ſhall be ſure to finde God more Mercifull, then I am ſinnefull, as Saint Bernard ſaith; Et quia uberior Dei gratia, quam precatio noſtra, ſemper plus tribuens, quam rogatur; And becauſe God is ever readier to forgive, then we are to crave pardon, and doth alwaies beſtow more then uſually wee deſire, as Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Et deſerentes ſe non deſerit, And doth not alwaies leave them which forſake him, as Saint Gregory ſaith; Sed & impios quærit, qui eum non quærebant, But doth oftentimes ſeeke for thoſe wicked men, that never ſought for him. And this is the chiefeſt end, and the righteſt uſe of the Mercy of God; for as Medicamentum propter vulnus, The ſalve is made for the wound, and not the wound, becauſe I have a ſalve; ſo the Mercy of God is taught to heale our wounded ſoules, and not to incourage us to wound our ſoules with ſin, ſaith S. Auguſtine.

Greg.lib.22. ſuper illud, Ecce caperiſo excuſare, &c.

Ambroſ. ſuper Luc. l.5.

Bernard. Ser.1.

Eſay 44.22.

Chryſoſt. hom.19. in Gen.

Gen.4.13.

Ob. But here it may be objected, that there is a ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which cannot be pardoned; and therefore all ſinners cannot from hence conceive hope of pardon.

What the ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt is. Beza lib.28. de paſſ. Dom.

Sol. I anſwer, firſt, that although we may partly know what this ſinne is, viz. A willing, witting, malicious, totall apoſtacie; yet I ſay we can never diſcerne where it is, Sine variſſimis inſpirationibus, Without ſome rare and ſpeciall inſpiration, (as Beza ſaith) which few or none can now ſay hee is ſure of.

That ſinne is called irremiſſible, three waies.

Secondly, I ſay that a ſin may be called irremiſſible three waies.

1 Privatively.

Firſt, Privatively, when the ſin by congruence of merit deſerves damnation, though by the congruence of Gods Mercies, it may be pardoned; and ſo are all ſins irremiſſible, if we conſider their juſt deſert.

2 Contrarily.

Secondly, Contrarily, when the ſin doth not only deſerve puniſhment, but alſo oppoſeth pardon, and refuſeth all the meanes of remiſſion; and ſo is the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt irremiſſible; becauſe it not only not ſeeketh, but alſo rejecteth and oppoſeth pardon.

3 Negatively. That there is no ſin in the world, but God can forgive it.

Thirdly, Negatively, when the ſin can no waies bee remitted, and ſo in my judgement is no ſinne unpardonable; For though in regard of our impenitency, and perpetuall obſtinacy, in reſiſting the Holy Ghoſt, as Saint Steven ſaid of the ſtiffe-necked Iewes, this ſinne ſhall never be forgiven, as our Saviour ſaith; yet in regard of Gods infinite Mercies, which both for number and greatneſſe, doe exceed all ſinnes, and in reſpect of Gods power, which is able to doe all things, and to ſubdue all things unto himſelfe, I ſay this ſinne, and all ſinnes are pardonable, and can be forgiven, if we could repent, and aske forgiveneſſe of the ſame; elſe ſhould our ſins be more infinite then Gods mercies, which is impoſſible: And therefore whatſoever thy ſinnes have beene, never ſo great, never ſo many; many ſins of darkeneſſe, ſins of Death, ſinnes more in number then the ſands of the Sea; yet if thou haſt but that grace, to wiſh for grace, (if thou doeſt it from the bottome of thy heart,) deſpaire not of the Mercy of God, but call, and cry, and ſay unto him, Lord be mercifull unto me a ſinner, and the bloud of Ieſus Chriſt ſhall cleanſe thee from all ſin; for a bruiſed reed he will not breake, and a ſmoaking flaxe he will not quench. O Lord who is a God like unto thee? 1 Iohn 1.7. Eſay 42. 3.

1 Cor.15.

It is ſaid of Iudas that he ſinned more in deſpairing of the mercy of God, then in betraying of his Saviour Chriſt; for the betraying of his Maſter, was but the corruption of man, but the deſpairing of Gods mercy, was a denyall of this goodneſſe of God, and ſo to make God cruell, at leaſt not ſo good, as he was evill, then which, a greater indignity cannot be imagined, againſt the Divine Majeſty: and therefore whatſoever our lives have beene, as bad as Salomon, or worſe then Manaſſes, yet let us not adde this unto all the reſt of our ſins, which alone will prove unto us worſe then all the reſt, to deſpaire of the grace and goodneſſe of God; but rather let us in the name of Chriſt, draw neare unto the Throne of Grace, and wee may be ſure, to finde mercy againſt the time of need. What a haynous ſinne it is to deſpaire of the Mercy and goodneſſe of God. 2 Chron. 33. 1, 2, &c. Heb. 4. 16.

Thirdly, This Doctrine teacheth us to Imitate God herein, in all theſe ſpeciall points of goodneſſe; For though there be many inimitable workes of God, wherein it is a ſin to a tempt to doe the like, as Mundos fabricare, mortuos ſuſcitare, & inter fluctus ambulare, To create worlds, to raiſe the dead, to walke among the waves, and the like, yet we are commanded to be holy as he is holy, and to imitate him in goodneſſe, that ſo we may be the Children of our Father which is in Heaven. And therefore, Thirdly, to imitate God in all theſe particulars of Gods goodneſſe.

First, we ſhould be mercifull, as he is mercifull, for as the Poet ſaith, First, to be Mercifull Luke 6. 36.

Regia (crede mihi) res eſt ſuccurrere laſſis.

And as another ſaith, Pulchrum eſt vitam donare petenti; It is a pleaſant thing to be pittifull: But the man of bloud, or the ſonne of cruelty, can never bee the Childe of the God of mercy; for, he that hath no mercy, hath caſt away the feare of the Lord, ſaith holy Iob. And yet alas, mercy is now gone out of our Countrey; The poore are ever with you (ſaith our Saviour) and never ſo many poore as now; for in Court and Country, in Church I am ſure, we are almoſt all beggars, and yet we may labour not only all night, with the Apoſtles, but all the daies of our life, and get nothing; becauſe we have nothing to give; ſuch is our time, that if ever that ſaying was true, it is now true; Si nihil attuleris, ibis Homere foras: Moſt is ſold, ſoules and all, little is given, either in Church or Common-wealth; and all is ſpent upon our ſelves, and upon our friends, and not upon the painefull ſervants, or poore members of Ieſus Chriſt. It is ſaid of Araunah, that being but a Subject, as a King he gave unto the King; but we goe like Princes, in ſoft rayments, and we fare like Kings, daintily every day; and we give like bankerouts, not a bit to the poore, not a penny to the painefull: But, O beloved, Mutemus vitam ſi volumus accipere vitam, We muſt change this courſe of life, if ever we looke for eternall life; And we muſt remember the afflictions of Ioſeph, and put on the bowels of mercy and compaſſion, if ever we be the Children of this God of mercy. Mat. 26. 11. That there is a great want of Mercy amongſt us, 2 Sam. 24. 23. Luke 16.

Secondly, we ſhould be gracious, that is, amiable, and affable, and courteous one to another, rather like Titus Veſpaſian, that was, Delicia generis humani, The delight of mankinde, delighting onely in doing good, then like Cinicke Diogenes, or carping Zoylus, that were unſociable, and unfit for any ſociety. 2 To be gracious.

Thirdly, wee ſhould bee ſlow to anger; for, Anger reſteth in the boſome of fooles: but, hee that is ſlow to wrath, is of great wiſedome; becauſe (as the Poet ſaith,) 3 To be ſlow to anger. Eccleſ. 7. 11. Pro. 14. 29.

——Furor iraq; mentem præcipitant.

Wrath and fury doe ſo blinde the minde and judgement of man, Ne poſſit cernere verum; That as Cato ſaith, He cannot diſcerne betwixt good and evill: And therefore Euripides ſaith, ὀργὴ γὰρ ὅστις ἐυθέως χαρίζεται

κακῶς τελευτᾷ, πλεῖστα γὰρ σφάλλει βροτούς;

Whosoever precipitately fostereth anger, must needs fall into an evill end, because nothing can more prejudice a man in the whole course of his life, then the poysonous weede of wrath, and the bitter fruits of hasty anger.

4 To abound in all goodnesse.

Fourthly, we should abound in all goodnesse; for the more good we doe, the more excellent, and the more god-like we shall be; for good cannot proceed but from God, and cannot tend any where but to God. And wee are all Trees in in Gods Vineyard, well planted, well feneed, and well watered; for our Land is good, our Law is good, our Service and our Sermons good: And therefore we should be good, and bring forth good fruits, meete for repentance; or else, we shall be hewen downe, and cast into the fire, for, though it be very true, that he is a good man, which doth no evill; yet is it as certainely true, Malum esse non fecisse bonum, That hee is an evill man, which doth not good; because there are privative sins, not to do good, as well as positive sins, to doe evill: And therefore the Iewish Rabbines, that have beene curious to account all the Commandements in Moses Law, have found 365. negative ones, just as many as there be daies in the yeere, and 248. affirmative ones, just as many as there bee limbes or bones in a mans body; not onely to teach us that all parts of man, at all times of the yeere, are to be imployed in Gods service, but also to shew unto us, that we are not onely to abstaine from evill, but also to doe good; because not onely the riotous, and wastfull Steward, that imbezelled his Masters goods, but also the idle, and thriftlesse servant, that did no good with his Masters goods, shall be bound hand and foote, and be cast out into utter darkenesse, where shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth. And so we reade of Dives, that he is tormented in flaming fire, Non quia tulit aliena, sed quia non dedit propria; Not because he did euill to any, but because he did not good to poore Lazarus; And therefore we should all strive, not only with the Pharisee, to be truly able to say, that we thanke God we are not Adulterers, Swearers, Extortioners, Drunkards, Raylers, Lyars, or such like; but also (as Saint Peter bids us) to adde unto our Faith, Vertue; and to our Vertue, Knowledge; and to Knowledge, Temperance; and to Temperance, Patience; and to Patience, Godlinesse; and to Godlinesse, Brotherly kindnesse; and to Brotherly kindnesse, Charity; and so to go on, from one grace unto another, untill at last we doe attaine unto the perfection of goodnesse: for assuredly to doe good will be our chiefest comfort, in life, in death, and after death; for, glory, and honour, and peace, shall be to every one that doth good; and God himselfe will say unto him, Euge serve bone; Well done thou good and faithfull servant, enter thou into thy Masters joy.

Mat. 3.10.

S. Chrysost. in Serm. de virt. & vit.

Negative precepts how many.

Maister in precep. aff. & neg.

Affirmative precepts how many.

Psal. 103.1. & 35. 10.

1 Cor. 15.58.

Mat. 22.13.

Luk. 16.19, 23.

Luke 18.11.

2 Pet. 1.5.

Rom. 2.7.

Mat. 25.23.

5 To accustome our selves to say the Truth.

Fiftly, we should love the Truth, and say the Truth, every man unto his neighbour; yea, and so accustome our selves to Truth, Vt mentiri lingua prorsus ignoret, That our tongues should not know how to lie; for, as God is Truth, so Truth makes us the Children of God: And therfore Pythagoras being demanded, wherein men become likest unto God, answered, Cum veritatem exercent; When they accustome themselves to say Truth; for this makes them gods on earth.

Stobæus Ser. 11.

I doe not know two more excellent things, and more comfortable for the life of man, while he lives here in this World, then Peace and Truth; Peace to keep us from all evill, and Truth to preserve us in all good. And yet I feare me, we may now take up the Prophet Esayes complaint, that Truth is fallen in the streete; yea, and (as Ieremy saith) It is perished and cleane gone; for though (as Euripides saith) ἁπλοῦς ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀληθείας ἔφυ, Truth is a simple speech, that requires neither welt nor guard, yet now we do so cunningly and craftily adorne lies and falshoods, that we make them passe currantly for Truth; and he that cannot dissemble, and deceive his neighbour, is accounted but a foole, that cannot live in the World: So that now it is growen into a common speech, to say, We know not whom we may trust; and we do verifie that ancient saying.

Zach. 8. Veritatem & pacem diligite.

Esay 59.4, 14. Ier. 7.28.

That there is a great want of practising to say the Truth amongst us.

Multis

Multis annis jam peractis, Many yeeres past and gone,
Nulla fides est in factis Faith in deeds there is none:
Mel in ore, verba lactis Hony in mouth, words sweete,
Fel in corde fraus in factis. Gall in heart, deceit in deede.

But if we will have any part in this God of Truth, wee must neither use to speake a lye, nor to conceale the Truth; for, Qui veritatem occultat, & qui mendacium prodit, uterq; reus est; ille quia prodesse non vult, iste quia nocere desiderat; He that conceales a Truth, and he that inventeth lies, are both a like culpable in the sight of God; the one because he will not do good, the other because he desireth to doe evill: And though Veritas odium parit; The Preachers of Truth shall find little grace with men (as S. Ambrose saith) yet must we not hide the Truth, for any feare; nor yet speake a falshood, for any gaine: but in all things we must hold fast the Truth, if we will be like unto this God of Truth. It is reported of one Idor an Abbat, that for three things he was most excellent.

Aug. in l. de Agō. Christiano.

Heraclid. in sua hist. Theat. Zwing.

First, that he never lyed at any time.

Idors praise.

Secondly, that he never spake evill of any man.

Thirdly, that he never spake any thing, without great necessity: And truly I doe wish from my heart that we were all like him herein.

Sixthly, we should reserve mercy for thousands, that is, to abound in the workes of mercy, and compassion; and that towards all men, either in action, or affection: for, where effecting meanes are wanting, God never rejects a charitable meaning; whereas the doing of good, without good will, or a large giving, with small charity, proves to be of no validity; because he gives but externally some things without himselfe, and not internally, De semetipso, From his heart: And thus our mercy should extend it selfe to thousands, because we have alwaies those before our eyes that have need of mercy; and that in a double respect.

6 To abound in the workes of mercy.

1. Of a corporall necessitie.
2. Of a spirituall miserie. } And

The Schooles avouch the first to consist chiefly in sixe points.

The outward workes of mercy, are principally sixe.

1. Visiting the sicke.
2. Feeding the hungry.
3. Clothing the naked.
4. Redeeming the Captive.
5. Intertaining the Stranger.
6. Burying of the Dead.

And for the second, I see not lesse formes of pitty, then there be deeds of Charity, or acts of iniquity: In the first respect, the rich may be mercifull, and shew pitty unto the poore; and in the second respect, the rich may be pittied by the poorest men in the World; because none are more lamentable, then those that are poore, and naked, and destitute of the true spirituall riches: And therefore in both respects, we ought ever to shew mercy and compassion, unto our distressed Brethren.

Now in mercy there are two speciall acts.

2 Acts of mercy

1. To see their miserie.
2. To helpe their infirmities.

1 Act.

1. To see with our eyes, and then to helpe with our hands, or at least to pitty with our hearts; Dives saw Lazarus full of sores, and we see men now full of sinnes; and yet he did not pitty him, and these will not be helped by us; for, if either by reprehension, or instruction, or by the mildest manner of advising them, yea, or by most humbly requesting, the Spirituall Lords, and temporall Potentates of this age, to looke into their miserable estate, we would seeme to pitty them, or make any attempt to helpe them, they would make us all to be pittied our selves: and therefore, onely lamenting that any of our Lords Spirituall should bee so much temporall, as in any thing to follow the steppes of this world, and our Lords temporall so little Spirituall, in seeking the Kingdome of Heaven as they use to doe, I will turne my speech to perswade all men, to remember the afflictions of Ioſeph, and to bee mercifull unto the poore diſtreſſed members of Ieſus Chriſt.

Sinners are the men that are chiefly to be pittied.

Motives to perſwade us to bee mercifull.

And although I might eaſily inſert many motives, to perſwade all men to bee mercifull, as, that it is a due debt, which we owe unto our brethren, as our Saviour ſheweth, oughteſt not thou to have had compaſſion on thy fellow, even as I had pitty on thee? and the great benefit, that we ſhall reape, by being mercifull; He that hath mercy on the poore lendeth unto the Lord, and the Lord will recompence him, that which he hath given, and many more forcible reaſons to perſwade all men to practiſe Mercy; yet I will chiefely commend this ſame, viz. that hereby we become moſt like unto our heavenly Father; for we ſay, that child, is moſt like his father, which doth neereſt repreſent him in his face, and countenance; and the mercy of God is called the face and countenance of God, as the Prophet David ſheweth, when he ſaith, God be mercifull unto us and bleſſe us, and ſhew us the light of his countenance and be mercifull unto us: and therfore in ſhewing mercy we become moſt like unto God, and thereby we doe beſt pleaſe our heavenly Father, which reſerveth mercy for thouſands.

Pro 19.17. Molliſſima corda humano generi dare ſe natura fatetur, quæ lachrymas dedit.

Pſal.67.1.

But now the mercifull and pittifull men are miniſhed from among the children of men: they are dead, and gone, and unmercifull Naballs are ſtept up in their ſtead, who thinke all too little for themſelves, and every little too much for the poore. It might be eaſily proved that the moſt powerfull men, are the leaſt pittifull unto the poore, and that they which have moſt money, have leaſt mercy: In former times they ſold their lands, and gave the money unto the poore, but now they ſell the poore, and begger many, to buy them lands and livings, and, as the Prophet ſaith, To joyne houſe to houſe, and land to land, untill there be no place for the poore to dwell among them; For behold the Stranger, the Fatherleſſe, and the Widdow, how unmercifully they are dealt withall; the Stranger is ſtrangely looked upon, the Orphans goods is unjuſtly detained, and the poore Widdowes wrongfully moleſted; It is with us, as with the fiſhes in the ſeas, whereof Alciat ſaith, Act 4.34,35. Iſa 5.8.

Piſciculos aurata rapit medio æquore ſardas:

That the little ſprats, being under the water, are chaſed and devoured by the great-ones; and if for feare they ſpring out of the ſea, they are preſently ſwallowed of the Sea-mues; even ſo the poore are oppreſſed at home by their rich neighbours, and if by Law, they ſeeke to be releeved, they are preſently conſumed by the greedy Lawyers; and ſo, pauper ubique jacet, they doe herein, but leape out of the frying-panne into the fire. But let theſe unmercifull men take heed; for the Lord is the avenger of all ſuch, and when their teares run downe their cheekes, they go up into Heaven, and the Lord will heare their crie, and will helpe them: And therfore it were well for us, if we would ſtrive, to imitate God herein, and to be mercifull as our heavenly Father is mercifull.

Eccleſ.35.15. Pſal.10.14. Luke 6.36.

And yet I muſt tell you, that although we muſt be mercifull unto all, we muſt know how to be mercifull unto every one; For, as there is an undeſerved miſery, wherein mercy is alwaies to be ſhewed, So there may be a juſt calamity wherein juſtice ſometimes muſt be executed, and therein as S. Ambroſe ſaith, eſt crudelitas parcens & miſericordia puniens, to ſpare is cruelty, and to pitty impietie, becauſe among godly men, to ſpare wicked and unparaleld varlets,

Ariſt.rhet.l.1.c.8.

Claudian de 6. conſul.honorij.

——Violentior armis
Omnibus, expugnat talis clementia gentem:

It would be the ruine of the righteous, and the cheriſhing of ſuch ſerpents, as would moſt malicioufly poyſon us: and therefore Mercy and Truth muſt goe together; and ſo ſhewing mercy, we ſhall be ſure to obtaine mercy.

Natura me clemẽtem, reſpublica ſeverum fecit.

7 To be moſt ready to forgive one another.

Seventhly, We ſhould be ready and willing, to forgive one another, even as God for Chriſt ſake hath forgiven us; For how ſhall we thinke, that God will write our ſins in the Sands, if we will write our brothers faults in marble? or that he will forgive us a thouſand pounds, that is, iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, if wee will Epheſ.4.32.

will not forgive our fellow ſervant an hundred pence, that is, ſome ſmall offence conceived, and conceited againſt us? And yet now;

——Scribit in marmore læſus.

It is ſtrange to ſee what memories we have, perpetually to keepe in minde, the leaſt conceived indignity, done unto us; O we can never forget it; we will forgive him, but we cannot forget him; he ſhall come into my Pater-Noſter, but not into my Creed; that is, into my Prayer, but not into my favour; a ſtrange diſtinction, which Ariſtotle never found in all the bookes of Nature, and I am ſure, cannot be found in all the book of God: It was invented in Hell, by that prince of ſubtle Sophiſters, to bring many a ſoule into Hell; for when God forgiveth our ſins, doth he not ſay, that he will blot them out of his booke? there is no reading of them any more; doth he not ſay, that hee will put them out of his remembrance? There is not the leaſt thinking of them, to be in the leaſt manner offended with us for them; and doth he not ſay, he will put them away as a cloud, and he will waſh us as white as ſnow, and then will talke together, and walke together with us, and be as loving, and as friendly unto us, as if we had never offended him; there is not the leaſt ſigne that ever he was offended with us; and when he threatneth the wicked abuſers of his moſt holy name, doth he ſay any more but that he will not hold them guiltleſſe? that is, he will not forget their abuſing of him, but he will remember it, when they think leaſt of it, and have perhaps quite forgot that ever they did it: and I think you will ſay, this is a fearefull ſaying: and therefore to ſay I will forgive him, but Ile thinke on him, is but a fruitleſſe forgiveneſſe of a revenging minde, or at leaſt of an unreconciled heart.

That we ſhould forget whatſoever we remit unto our neighbours.

Eſay 1.18.

Exod. 20.7.

And therefore, though I ſay not we ſhould repoſe truſt of ſtate or life in an adverſary, without good tokens of ſincere reconciliation, becauſe (as Salomon ſaith) we muſt not too haſtily, or unadviſedly truſt a reconciled enemy; yet I ſay that in our owne hearts, and ſoules we muſt ſo forgive him whatſoever is paſt, as never to remember it, never to thinke on it, as to be a meanes, in the leaſt manner, to diſturbe our charity towards him, to hinder him of any good, or to doe him the leaſt evill whatſoever; but, as we are towards all others, to be in as perfect love and charity towards him, as if he had never offended us; yea, and to be ſo ready, and ſo willing to imbrace his love and ſociety, as we are to imbrace the love of any other, if we thought his heart to be as upright towards us, as we know our owne, to be towards him, as Iehu ſaid unto Iehonadab. And thus if we be mercifull, and gracious, ſlow to anger, and abounding in all goodneſſe, and truth, reſerving mercy, to the uttermoſt of our ability for all men, and be ready, to forgive one another, even as God forgiveth us, then ſhall we be happy and bleſſed, and be the children of the moſt higheſt. And ſo much for the ſecond attribute of God here expreſſed, that is, his Goodneſſe.

A reconciled enemy not eaſily to be truſted.

2 King 10.15.

Chap. XI.

Of the Iuſtice of God, how juſt is God in all his workes, and eſpecially in the not abſolving or cleering of wicked unrepentant ſinners.

WE have ſeene ſome ſmall ſparks of Gods boundleſſe incomprehenſible goodneſſe, we are now to conſider the laſt part of his deſcription, that is, his Iuſtice, and ſeverity againſt ſin and ſinners; an act never uſed untill we abuſe his goodneſſe; and therefore left laſt to be expreſſed; to ſee if by the firſt, we will be reclaimed, if not, God will not be vanquiſhed, but not holding the wicked innocent, he will viſit the ſins of the Fathers upon the Children, and upon the childrens children, unto the third and fourth generation. And 2 Attribute, that is, Gods Iuſtice.

It is obſerved by Divines, that God ſheweth himſelfe to worke and to doe things in many reſpects, eſpecially, Zanchius de juſtitia Dei. l. 4 c. 5 q. 2 p. 398. God juſt foure waies.

1. As the abſolute Lord, and owner of all things.
2. As the God or maker, and preſerver of al things.
3. As the Father, and Husband of his Church.
4. As the Judge, and Juſt rewarder of all men.

And in all theſe waies, God is ſaid to be juſt & righteous: but his Juſtice, in all theſe manners of working, is not the ſame; for 1 Way. Mat. 20. 25. Rom. 9. 21. Whatſoever God doth is juſt, and all things that are juſt, are juſt becauſe he doth them.

First, As the abſolute Lord of all things, whereby he chooſeth or rejecteth, giveth or denieth his grace, to whom he will; the Juſtice of God herein is the Will of God, as our Saviour ſheweth, ſaying; May not I do what I will with mine owne? or as the Apoſtle ſaith, Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the ſame lumpe to make one veſſell unto honour, and another unto diſhonor? And in all theſe things there is no iniquity with God; but he is righteous in all his waies, and holy in all his workes; and his Will is the rule of juſtice, and muſt needs be juſt, becauſe he hath jus abſolutum, a moſt abſolute right over all things: and therefore all thoſe acts muſt needs be juſt, which are done by him, which is juſtice it ſelfe, and that pure fountaine, from whence all ſprings of juſtice do proceed; for it is a ſure rule, that God cannot be ſaid properly to do things, becauſe they are juſt, but that thoſe things are juſt, becauſe he doth them: therefore Abraham thought it a juſt thing to ſacrifice his ſon, becauſe it was Gods Will to require it: ſo that in this reſpect, the Will of God is the Juſtice of God.

2 Way. Eſay 46. 4. Secondly, As the God of all things; that is, the Creator, Preſerver, and guider of all things; the goodneſſe of God is ſaid to bee the Juſtice of God.

3 Way. 1 Tim. 4. 10. Thirdly, As he is the Husband of his Church, and the Father of his Elect; the mercy of God, in giving Chriſt, and the obedience of Chriſt in ſatisfying the Law for us, is ſaid to be the Juſtice of God.

4 Way. Fourthly, As a Juſt-Judge; the Juſtice of God is the diſtributing of rewards unto every man, according to his juſt deſart; and δικαιοσύνη Juſtitia, is quaſi δικαιοῦ bipartitio; a parting to every one his owne due deſerved portion; and it is called juſtitia diſtributiva, a diſtributive juſtice: And this is that which is meant in this place, when he ſaith, that by no meanes he will make the wicked innocent, but will viſit the ſinnes of the fathers upon the children; and it is here ſet downe two ſpeciall waies.

Gods diſtributive Juſtice is here expreſſed two waies

1. Negatively, by the negation of abſolution unto the wicked, not making the wicked innocent,
2. Poſitively, by the expreſſion of the greatneſſe of the puniſhment, which ſhall be inflicted upon them, but viſiting the ſinnes of the fathers upon the children.

1 Negatively. Pſal. 14. 2, 3. For the firſt, he ſaith that abſolving he will not abſolve the wicked; and alas, Wee are all gone aſtray, we are all become wicked, and there is none of us that doth good, no not one: and therfore what ſhall we do, if God will not do this fatherly favour, to abſolve us?

Nay, he ſaid even now, that he would do it; that he would forgive iniquity, and tranſgreſſion, and ſin: and therefore now with the ſame breath to ſay, he will by no meanes cleere the wicked, ſeemeth ſtrange.

Aug. de civitate Dei. l. 8. c. 3. I anſwer, that for the cleering of this point alij atque alij aliud atque aliud opinati ſunt, (as S. Auguſtine ſaith in another caſe) divers men have made divers anſwers.

Some ſay that ſins muſt be diſtinguiſhed; as into ſins of humane infirmity and ſimple ignorance; when we do the things we would not do, or many times we do the things we know not to be evill; and theſe ſins God is alwaies ready to forgive; becauſe he remembreth that we are but duſt, and cannot do the things we would do: or into ſins of wilfull ignorance, when men will not underſtand, that they may do well, but do make a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell it ſelfe, and do ſay unto God, depart from us, for we will not the knowledge of thy waies; and into ſins of obſtinate malice, from whence proceed, thoſe horrid and horrible fearfull ſins, that do exceedingly provoke the wrath of God: as Eſay 28. 15. Iob 21. 14.

First,

First, Idolatry, which is either the worshipping of the true God with false worship, in pictures, pixes, or idols, or the giving of the true worship only due to the true God, unto the creature, whether visible or invisible, whether inwardly conceited in our minds, or outwardly exposed to our senses; for so the Apostle saith, that because the Gentiles knowing God, glorified him not as God, but changed his glory into the image of birds, beasts and creeping things; therefore the wrath of God was revealed from heaven against their ungodlinesse, and he gave them up to vile affections, to do those things which were not convenient; for this sin of idolatry is so offensive unto God, that it is termed a service of the Divell, and therefore abominable and accursed by God, and most dangerous unto Man.

1 That idolatry is a most horrible sin

Rom. 1. 18. 24.

Deut. 32. 17. Deut. 7. 26.

And for this cause S. Paul bids us flie from the worshipping of idols; as if it were not enough for us to run away from them that are idolaters, but we should have wings to flie from them; and the Prophet David saith, He will not mention the names of idolaters within his lips. So the Christians of the Primitive Church were most wonderfull wary to have nothing to doe with Idolaters; for Nonna Nazianzens Mother would never eate salt with any of them; and her sonne Gregory saith, we should not tread the way with them twice for feare of infection, but we should passe by Idolaters, as men walke over the quicke-sands, swift and lightly, lest wee sinke into them, or as Ulysses sayled by the shores of the Syrens, either tied to the mast, that is, of Gods Word, or with our eares stopped, like the deaf adder, that we might not heare the inchantments of these Babylonish whores; for though you may think they are faire conditioned persons, good creatures, and honest men, but onely for their religion; yet in very deed is this all one, as to say, such a woman is a very good wife, but that she loves her friend better than her husband; or such a man is a very good Christian, but that he followeth Antichrist: and therefore, as false friends are the greatest enemies, and are then worst, when they seem best, like dissembling Chusay that did more mischiefe with his slie under-hand working, than open Achitophel could do with all his politique councell, though he was as wise as the oracle of God; so there can be no greater adversaries to our Church, than they that live amongst us, and yet perswade our people, that we are not in the truth, that pitie our ignorance, as they say, thereby indeed to bring us unto blindnesse, and shew us fine pictures, to delight our eyes, untill they blot our God quite out of our minds; and experience sheweth us, that as a land creature in Iapan, not much unlike unto a dog, by often using to swim and duck in the sea, is at length turned into a fish, so many of our people, by conversing with such faire-conditioned men, as they terme them, have been brought first to think their religion was not so dangerous, then to like it, at last to love it, and to forsake quite the truth of Christ, to imbrace the poyson of Antichrist, which they have insensibly sucked from their sweet-natured friends; and therefore, as God commanded his Prophet, that he sent to Bethel, not to eat bread, nor drinke water in that place of idolatry, nor to returne the way that he came, to teach us, saith S. Cyprian, how carefull we should be to shun the familiarity of them that may corrupt us, so we should be most wary to do as the Lord commandeth us, to have nothing to do with the stoole of wickednesse, to hate the garment defiled with sin, and to love the society of none which loves not my religion more than me; because I cannot love God, if I hate not them that hate him, yea and hate them right sore, even as though they were mine enemies; and they cannot love me, let them pretend what they will, if they hate my religion; because religion is that onely thing which ties and unites, as men with God, so men and men together.

Who most dangerous unto us.

Perrerius in Dan. l. 5. p. 83.

A most vehement perswasion to shun Popery.

Cyprian. l. 1. Ep. 6.

Psal. 139.

Religio dicitur a religando.

Secondly, a perfidious tempting of God, as whether he be with us, or whether he can or will do what he promised for us; for so the Psalmist saith, that the Israelites tempted God in their hearts, and spake against him saying, Shall God prepare a table in the wildernesse? He smote the stony rocke, so that the water gushed out, and the streams flowed withall; but can he give bread also, or provide flesh for his people? And therefore the Lord was so wrath, that the fire was kindled in Iacob, and 2 The doubting of Gods goodnes towards us, is a most horrible wickednesse. Psal. 78. &c. 1 Cor. 10. 9.

and there came up heavy diſpleaſure againſt Iſrael; becauſe they believed not in God, and put not their truſt in his helpe; for God is ſo able and ſo willing to helpe his owne ſervants, that none can doubt thereof, without horrible indignity offered him; and therefore we ſhould ever relie upon him, and never doubt of this infinite goodneſſe of God.

3 To murmure, or to be diſcontented with God, a heavy ſinne. Gen.4.5. 1 Cor.10.10.

Thirdly, a murmuring againſt God, and complaining ſecretly as it were in our hearts, that he doth either preſſe us ſore with heavy yokes and puniſhments, or that he dealeth not ſo gently and ſo lovingly with us, as he doth with others; for thus Cain murmured againſt God, that he accepted the oblation of Abel better than his; and thus the Apoſtle ſaith, The children of Iſrael murmured againſt God, that he had dealt hardly with them, in bringing them out of Egypt to ſuffer hunger and thirſt in the wilderneſſe; and therefore they were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer: and therefore we ſhould beware of murmuring, which is nothing worth, and take heed of this muttering againſt God: for there is no thought ſo ſecret, that it ſhall go for nought; but we ſhould with Iob in all eſtates put our truſt in him, though he kill us, knowing that he worketh all things for the beſt for them that love him.

Wiſd.1.11. Iob 13.15. Rom.8.28.

4 To refuſe to obey God, a fearfull ſin. Pſal.2.3,4,5.

Fourthly, an obſtinate contumacious rebelling againſt God, as when we refuſe to heare his Word, and will not be obedient unto his lawes, but will ſay with the Iewes, Let us breake his bonds aſunder, and caſt away his cords from us; for againſt theſe the Pſalmiſt ſaith, He that dwelleth in Heaven ſhall laugh them to ſcorne, the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion; and then ſhall he ſpeake unto them in his wrath, and vexe them in his ſore diſpleaſure: And therefore we ſhould take heed of rebelling, and refuſing to heare and to obey the Word of God, leaſt the wrath of God ſhould bee ſuddenly kindled againſt us, and conſume us.

5 To oppoſe the known truth, a moſt horrible ſin. Num.14 37.

Fiftly, Blaſphemy againſt God, and the ſlandering of the Truth of his Doctrine, eſpecially when we oppoſe it fully, though we know it to be Truth moſt certainly; as the ſpies that were ſent to view the Land of Canaan did; and therefore died by the plague, before the Lord; for this is a ſinne of a malicious wickedneſſe, and a branch of that unpardonable ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore we ſhould ever take heed of oppoſing the Truth againſt our conſciences.

6 Diſobedience to parents, a moſt fearfull ſin. Deut.27.

Sixtly, Diſobedience, and diſhonouring of our Parents; for ſo the Lord ſaith, Curſed be he that deſpiſeth his Father and his Mother, and let all the people ſay, Amen. And therefore we find heavy judgements inflicted upon Cham, Abſalon, and all other like children of diſobedience; and the Lord requiring, that upon the bare teſtimony of the parents, ſaying, This our child is diſobedient, and will not be ruled by us, They ſhould carie him out of the City, and ſtone him with ſtones till he died, doth ſufficiently ſhew the hainouſneſſe of this ſin.

7 The ſhedding of mans bloud, a moſt hainous ſin. Gen.4.10.

Seventhly, the ſhedding of innocent bloud, eſpecially of thoſe that are the ſonnes of God; for the voice of bloud, as may be ſeen in Abel, is ſuch a ſhrill, piercing, undeniable voice, that it will ſpeedily aſcend to heaven, and never depart, untill vengeance be powred out upon the ſinners.

8 Oppreſſing the poore, a moſt fearfull ſin.

Eighly, the oppreſſing of the poore, the fatherleſſe and the widowes; for if you hurt the poore, and they cry unto me, (ſaith the Lord) I will ſurely heare their cry, Et indignabitur furor meus, and my wrath ſhall waxe hot, and I will kill you with the ſword, and your Wives ſhall be widowes, and your children fatherleſſe.

9 Vntamed luſts, a moſt odious ſin. 1 Cor.10.8. Iudg.19.25.

Ninthly, unbridled wandring luſts, ſuch as were the luſts of the Citizens of Sodom, and of all thoſe that give themſelves to do adulteries, whoredomes, and following after ſtrange fleſh; for the Lord hateth all ſuch laſcivious livers; and therfore he deſtroyed of them three and twenty thouſand in one day, and wrought a moſt grievous ſlaughter upon the whole tribe of Benjamin, for that one foule abuſe offered unto the Levites wife.

10 Sacriledge a fearfull ſin. Mal.3.8.

Tenthly, Sacriledge and prophaning of holy things; for this is a robbing of God,

God, (as the Prophet ſheweth;) and ſuch a high tranſcendent ſinne, as that I could farre eaſier fill whole volumes of moſt fearefull examples of Gods vengeance, executed againſt ſacrilegious perſons, than find you any one man, either in divine or humane ſtories, that wronged and robbed the Church of God, and ſcap'd unpuniſhed, both in himſelfe and his poſterity, unto the third and fourth generation.

Eleventhly, Continuall ſwearing and prophaning of the bleſſed Name of God; for of all the ſinnes forbidden in the Commandements, this only, with Idolatry, is forbidden with ſub pœna, with a curſe, yea a grievous curſe denounced againſt us, if we will not ſhun it; for the Lord will not hold him guiltleſſe that taketh his name in vaine.

11 Continuall ſwearing a moſt dangerous ſin.

Theſe and ſuch like lewd and wicked ſinners, they ſay, God abſolving will not abſolve; becauſe the doers hereof have no love of goodneſſe, no care of godlineſſe, no ſenſe of ſin, no remorſe of conſcience; and therefore is the Wrath of God ſo exceedingly kindled againſt theſe ſinners, ſinners κατ' ἐξοχὴν, theſe grievous, huge, and horrible ſinners, that he will never forgive them, without exceeding great repentance. And

Indeed I confeſſe, that ſuch grievous ſinners are in a grievous caſe, and that it is not likely, God would have uſed ſuch fearefull threatnings, but againſt hainous ſinners; yet I told you before, that no ſinne was ſo great, but the Mercy of God is greater, and able to forgive, if they be able to repent. And therefore

Others ſay, that the former clauſe, forgiving iniquity, and tranſgreſſion, and ſinne, is to be underſtood of the ſinnes of Gods Elect, be they great, or be they ſmall, he forgives them all; and this latter clauſe, not making the wicked innocent, to be underſtood of the ſinnes of the reprobate, of what quality ſoever they be; for, he will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth, &c. Exod. 33.19.

And I yeeld this to be true in it ſelfe; but, becauſe God onely knoweth abſolutely, Ex priori, from the cauſes, infallibly, who are his, and we know it onely, Ex poſteriori, by the effects of Gods favour, and the fruits of his Spirit, if we would be aſſured of the remiſſion of our ſinnes, and would more certainly know how both theſe ſentences may be reconciled, I ſay briefly, that the firſt ſentence is to be underſtood, of the penitent and amending ſinners, of what quality ſoever their ſinnes have beene; and the latter clauſe, of continuall unrepentant tranſgreſſours: for God will pardon any ſinne if you be ſorrie for it, and forſake it; but no ſinne, if you continue in it; For God ſhall wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy ſcalpe of ſuch a one as goeth on ſtill in his wickedneſſe, ſaith the Prophet. And therefore if any of us have ſinned, yet let us not continue in ſinne; for mercy and wrath come from God, and if we continually ſinne in the time of grace, we ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed in the day of vengeance; Quia non delinquenti, ſed peccata relinquenti miſericors Deus eſt, becauſe God will not be mercifull unto them that offend of malicious wickedneſſe, and do ſtill go on in ſin, that grace may abound, whoſe damnation is juſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

How both ſentences are reconciled

Pſal. 68.21.

Rom. 3.8.

Obiect. But thou wilt ſay, thou hopeſt God will give thee grace to repent, and thou meaneſt to leave thy ſinnes, before thou beeſt compelled to leave the world.

Sol. It is true (beloved) that our ſinnes ſhall be pardoned, whenſoever we repent; but we cannot repent whenſoever we will, becauſe repentance is the gift of God; and we have not God at our command; but as a Father truly ſaith, Qui dat pœnitenti veniam, non ſemper dat peccanti pœnitentiam; God which alwaies pardoneth the repentant ſinner, doth not alwaies give repentance unto ſinners; but as they neglected him, ſo he rejecteth them, and ſuffereth them to heape unto themſelves wrath, againſt the day of wrath.

That men cannot repent when they will.

Rom. 2.5.

And therefore, though God be ſlow to anger, and ſuffereth long; yet he is full of juſtice, and will not ſuffer ever; but at laſt the fire of his fury will be kindled, and

and then, Furor arma miniſtrat, his wrath will quickly afford him weapons: and as Lactantius ſaith, Tarditatem iræ gravitate ſupplicij compenſabit, he will requite the ſlowneſſe of his wrath, with the ſeverity of his vengeance; for as the old diſtich ſaith,

Ad pœnas tardus Deus eſt, ad præmia velox,
Sed penſare ſolet vi graviore moram.

Serior eſſe ſolet vindicta ſeverior.

God uſeth to come to puniſh on leaden feet, but he payeth home with iron hands: he will reach them farre, and he will ſmite them full: And therefore, To day if ye will heare his voice, harden not your hearts, and deferre not your amendment till to morrow; for

Pſal 95.8.

Qui non eſt hodiè, cras minus aptus erit.

If thou wilt not do it to day, it will be farre harder for thee to do it to morrow; and if thou wilt not do it at all, thou art in a moſt fearfull caſe; for God abſolving will never abſolve thee; that is, he will never forgive thy ſins, becauſe thou wilt not forſake thy ſinnes.

And ſo much for the deniall of pardon and abſolution unto the wicked.

CHAP. XII.

Of a twofold viſitation of God, and the full opening of that point, how God doth, and that juſtly viſit the ſinnes of the Fathers upon the children, and yet puniſh none but for his owne ſinnes.

FOr the ſecond, God ſaith, not only, that he will not abſolve the wicked, but he addeth further, that he will viſit the ſinnes of the fathers upon the children; Touching which we muſt firſt obſerve, that viſitare eſt poſt longum tempus recordare; to viſit is, after a long time, to call to mind, to remember, and to ſee thoſe things againe, which we ſeemed to have quite forgotten: and we find a twofold viſitation of God.

That there is a twofold viſitation of God.

Firſt, when he ſeemeth to forget our miſeries, to ſleep in our afflictions, even ſomtimes, untill we be almoſt over-whelmed with the raging waves of this world, as the Diſciples were with the waves of the ſea; Yet at laſt, when he ſeeth his time, and not when we think it fit, he will awake, as a giant out of ſleepe, and he will aſſwage the winds, and rebuke the ſeas, and deliver his people out of all their miſeries: thus he remembred Noah, thus he viſited his people that were in Egypt, and thus when we ſeeme to be forſaken of God, becauſe we are deſpiſed among men, he will, when he ſeeth time, viſit us, and redeeme us out of our diſtreſſe.

Mat. 8.24.
First, God viſiteth the afflicted.

Gen. 8.1.
Exod. 3.7.

Luke 1.68.

Secondly, When God ſuffereth the wicked to go on in ſinne, and to paſſe from one wickedneſſe to another; and yet ſtill to flouriſh like a greene Bay-tree, to build them houſes, to inlarge their poſſeſſions, and to have all things at their deſire; he ſeemeth to forget their impieties, or to have taken no notice of their wickedneſſe; yet at laſt (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) when they leaſt think of it, He will viſit their iniquities with the rod, and their ſinnes with ſcourges; Yea, he will reprove them, and ſet before their faces the things that they have done: and then he will ſeverely puniſh all their ſins, and that two wayes.

Secondly, God viſiteth the wicked.

Pſal 89.32.
Pſal. 50.21.

1 In themſelves.
2 In their children.
} And

God puniſheth our ſinnes two wayes.
1 In our ſelves.
2 Pet. 2.4.

First, it is juſt with God, (and ſo it ſeemeth juſt with men) to render vengeance to them that feare not God; For this cauſe we find, He ſpared not the Angels that offended, nor any man that ſinned, but he thruſt Adam out of Paradiſe, deſtroyed the whole world by the deluge, Sodom and Gomorrha with fire and brimſtone, Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Saul, Nebuchadnezzar, Iudas, Herod, and many more he hath moſt ſeverely puniſhed for their ſinnes; and ſo in briefe he ſaith

God will puniſh ſinners.

of

of every one, The ſoule that ſinneth, that ſoule ſhall die: And therefore this ſhould teach us Ezek. 18.

Firſt, Not to frame unto our ſelves a God all of Mercy, and not to ſing of mercy alone, but of mercy and judgement together; that as we are to love his mercy, to be filled with grace; ſo we might feare his juſtice, to preſerve us from ſinne; For theſe be the two feet of God (ſaith S. Bernard) whereupon he walketh all his wayes, and theſe be the two wings of a Chriſtian, whereby he may flie up into heaven; therefore ſeeing the one, without the other, is unavailable to ſupport us, let us not ſeparate thoſe which God hath here and every where elſe joyned together; but let us imbrace Gods goodneſſe to keep us from deſpaire, and let us feare Gods juſtice to preſerve us from preſumption. That we ſhould as well feare Gods juſtice, as hope for his mercy.

Secondly, this teacheth us to expect a day of retribution; for ſeeing the juſtice of God requireth that wicked men ſhould be puniſhed, (as the Apoſtle ſheweth) and that here many of them do ſcarce taſt of Gods anger, it muſt needs be, that all men muſt appeare before the judgement-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad: and therefore what manner of men ought we to be in holy converſation and godlineſſe? That the juſtice of God requireth there ſhould be a day of retribution. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Rom. 2. 5. 2 Pet. 3. 11.

Secondly, God will not only puniſh wicked men in themſelves for their ſins, but he will alſo puniſh them in their children, Tanquam in carne ſua chariſſima, as in the deareſt things that they love; for he will viſit the ſinnes of the fathers upon the children; And ſo puniſhing their children, he plagueth them; becauſe every man herein is like the woman of Canaan, who ſaid unto our Saviour, Miſerere mei Domine, O Lord be mercifull unto me, my daughter is grievouſly vexed with a divell. ὁ δαίμων δυσατέρα κατ' ἐμὲ ἐνεδύσατο, ἡ ἐκείνης εἰς ἐμὲ τὰ τέκνα μεταφέρεται; For that the divels being in her daughter, was a torment, and a miſery unto her ſelfe; Quia amor natorum dolorem trajicit in parentes; becauſe the love which the parents beare unto their children, doth transferre the griefe of the children unto the parents: and therefore doth God puniſh a wicked man, both in himſelfe and in his children. That God puniſheth wicked men in their children. Mat. 15. 22. Baſil. ſel. ſer. 19. Simon de Caſſia in Evang. 45. c. 24.

But although it be juſt with God, to viſit the ſinnes of the fathers upon the children; yet this ſeemeth ſtrange with men, eſpecially conſidering the Prophet ſaith, Filius non portabit iniquitatem patris, the ſonne ſhall not beare the fathers ſinnes, neither ſhall it be ſaid any more, that the fathers have eaten ſowre grapes, and the childrens teeth are ſet on edge; but every man ſhall beare his owne ſinne, and the ſoule which ſinneth, that ſoule ſhall die: And therefore to reconcile this clauſe of the Law, with that of the Prophet, we muſt diſcuſſe this point more at large. Ezek. 18.

S. Auguſtine diſputes it, how the child ſhould beare his fathers ſins, but he doth not directly (as I find) conclude it. How it ſtands with Gods juſtice to puniſh the fathers ſinnes upon the children.

S. Gregory concludes it, that if a child follow the ſinnes of his father, he ſhall not only be puniſhed for his owne ſinnes, but alſo for his fathers ſinnes: but he did not ſufficiently diſpute it; And therefore, that we may rightly conclude upon ſure premiſes, I muſt, with the Schooles, diſtinguiſh

1 Of fathers.	3 Of children.
2 Of ſinnes.	4 Of puniſhments.

That we muſt diſtinguiſh

1 Of fathers.

Firſt, fathers are either proximiores, thoſe that beget us, or remotiores, thoſe from whence we are derived, as Adam: That the ſinne of Adam was not onely imputed, but alſo derived into his poſterity, experience it ſelfe makes it plaine; and the reaſon is (as Aquinas truly ſaith) becauſe Adam now ſtood, not as a perſonall man, but as a ſpecificall, that is, as one bearing in himſelfe (as the ſtocke of a tree doth beare all the branches) the whole ſpecies, or race of all mankind: and therefore, if this root had continued holy, the branches had been likewiſe holy: but he ſinning, he produced a moſt ſinfull of-ſpring like himſelfe: becauſe an evill tree cannot bring forth good fruit; but in every other man, there is onely the Rom. 11. 16. Mat. 7. 18.

perſon

Sinnes are not traduced from the parents unto the children.

person of this or that individuall man; and therefore the Schooles conclude, that no actuall sin can be traduced from the next fathers unto the children: not vertue from the good, nor vice from the bad; for so experience sheweth, that a good man doth not alwaies beget a vertuous child, nor a drunkard alwaies beget a drunkard, but somtimes the cleane contrary; as when the son of a miserable wretched niggard proves to be the most dissolute prodigall spend-thrift in the world; (els would they ingrosse the whole world to themselves and their posterity) or when an evill man begetteth a most vertuous and a godly child, which doth not unusually happen among men.

Two things that further the sinnes of the parents to continue in the children.

And yet we say, that seeing in every child there is the elementall seed of all vices, which we have naturally and originally traduced from Adam, there be two especiall things which doe commonly cherish and preserue the immediate and next fathers sinnes in their children, that is,

1. Inclination.
2. Imitation.

} For

1 Inclination.

Sæpe solet similis filius esse patri.

First, seeing we receive our whole substance from our parents, we are naturally inclined to follow either the vertues, or the vices; either the good qualities, or the bad qualities of the same substance from whence we are produced, as the child of a good father to be good, and the child of a vicious father to be evill.

2 Imitation. Children very apt to imitate their parents vices.

Secondly, seeing children are like apes, apt to imitate, and the examples of our parents are like Spurres to drive their children on, to follow what they see, the good carriage of a godly father is a great incitement and a most effectuall meanes to worke goodnesse in his children, and the bad example of wicked parents, is as a hammer to drive sinne and wickednesse into their children; for we see,

Quo semel est imbuta recens servabit odorem
Testa diu———

Whatsoever vertues or vices do take root in our bones, when we are children, will hardly be rooted out of our flesh when we are men.

Quis tulerit Gracchum de seditione loquentem?

And if to these two we add instruction, either in good or evill things, I know nothing more that can be said, to make a perfect man, or a perfect sinner. These be the inducements and the causes, why wicked men have commonly wicked children; (unlesse they be prevented by Gods speciall grace) and we daily see, that in these respects, not only families to be of like conditions with their Progenitors, as the Gracchi to be seditious, the Iulij ambitious, the Tarquins proud and lascivious, the children of idolaters to be idolatrous, and so of the rest; but also Nations and Countries, to be inclined and much addicted, and, as it were, indued with hereditary vices, and that not only in respect of the climate, which (I confesse) may somewhat move the same, but especially in respect of their inclination, and proneness of imitation, to do what their parents do. For so we see, how generally it is for men to say, My fathers were so, and therefore I will be so, And so the Psalmist saith, Erravimus cum patribus, men are apt to erre with their Fathers. But

2 Of sinnes. This threatning extendeth but to the great sinnes of grievous sinners.

Secondly, we must note, that God doth not threaten to visit all the sinnes of the fathers upon the children, but the great and grievous sinnes of hainous transgressours, as idolaters, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, sacrilegious persons, and despisers of godlinesse, and the like; for so the Lord himselfe here intimateth, saying, that he will visit the iniquity, not the iniquities; that is, Non quamvis iniquitatem, sed eam quæ spirituale conjugium dissolvitur; Not every kind of iniquity, but that whereby the spirituall marriage betwixt God and us is dissolved, and so makes all our children, tanquam meretricios partus, as the children of an harlot, which hath broken her faith with her husband: And so he expresseth himselfe more plainly in his Law, saying; That he will visit the sinnes of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate him; And therefore, not of all that do offend him, but of those that hate him; like the man that will not, with the Iewes, put away his wife for every cause, but for adultery, or some like grievous crime, whereby he is justly provoked to forsake her and all

all her brood: And ſo the Lord ſheweth the ſame at large in Hoſ. 1. 2. & c. 2. 2. & Ezek. 16. 22. &c. And yet,

Thirdly, We muſt obſerve that this holds not in all the children of thoſe that are exceedingly wicked, but as a man renouncing his wife and children, may notwithſtanding retaine ſome one, or more, which he liketh; ſo doth God, ſomtimes, accept ſome children of ſome wicked parents; for ſo we find Abraham was faithfull, though his father Terah was idolatrous; and King Ioſias was religious, though his father Amon was moſt impious: and therefore S Gregory and others have diſtinguiſhed, that this threatning only holdeth in thoſe children, which do naturally ſucke and willingly imitate their fathers vices: But I find this is too ſhort of the whole truth, becauſe God many times viſiteth the ſins of the fathers upon the children, which not only imitate their parents in the like ſins, but do perhaps follow after cleane contrary ſins, as I ſhewed you before: And ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that becauſe the gentiles became idolatrous, and regarded not to know God, but ran a whoring after other gods, and ſo committed ſpirituall fornication againſt him; therefore God gave them and their poſterity over, to become ſo horribly vicious, as to burne in luſt and vile affections one towards another, and ſo to commit carnall fornication and abomination among themſelves, and to do thoſe things that were not convenient.

3 Of the children. This threatning holds not againſt all the children of wicked men.

Rom. 1. 24.

And therefore I ſay, that this threatning holdeth not ſo much in thoſe which give themſelves to imitate their fathers vices, as in thoſe which God in juſtice thinketh good to puniſh for their Fathers offences; for, in that he ſaith, I will viſit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children; that is, I will puniſh the fathers ſins in his children, I ſee not how the child can any waies by declination from his fathers ſinnes, eſcape this inflиction laid on him by God; becauſe (as I collect it) this puniſhment is not ſo much attracted by the childrens imitation, as inflicted by God for the fathers tranſgreſſion, and is rather a puniſhment of the fathers ſinne laid upon the child, than a puniſhment of any ſin committed by the child: And therefore he doth not ſay, he will viſit thoſe that imitate their fathers ſins, but he will viſit the ſinnes of thoſe that hate him upon their children; and yet (as I ſaid before) this doth not hold in all; for we ſee often many godly children of wicked parents: neither doth this threatning paſſe at moſt, or in the worſe, but to the third or fourth generation; and ſomtimes he ſtayeth his hands at the firſt, and gives plentifull graces to the immediate children of moſt idolatrous and impious parents, as we ſee in Ioſias, and others before cited; for he will have mercy upon whom he will have mercy. And therefore this threatning can be underſtood of none els, but of thoſe fathers, which are ſo odious to God, as that he thinks juſt to puniſh their poſterity for their ſins, and of thoſe children of thoſe fathers, which God in his ſecret and unſearchable counſell thinks fit, thus to puniſh for their fathers faults.

This threatning is not only againſt thoſe that imitate their parents vices.

Exod. 33. 19.

And ſo we are come to conſider the puniſhment to be inflicted, or the manner how God doth this, and yet remaineth juſt; for

Fourthly, we are to underſtand, that all puniſhment, is (as ſome ſay) either { 1 Penall. 2 Criminall. } Or

To ſpeak more plainly; all puniſhment is either { 1 Corporall. 2 Spirituall. }

4 Of the puniſhments.

For the firſt, that for the Fathers ſinnes, the child ſhould be temporally or corporally puniſhed, there is no queſtion of it; for ſo we find David ſinned, and the child begot in adultery, ſuffered for it, and for Salomons ſinnes, Reboboam loſt ten Tribes of Iſrael. And thus not onely thoſe children, which imitate their parents ſinnes, but alſo thoſe that never actually offended, are many times unqueſtionably puniſhed for their fathers faults; yea, and many times, many other righteous men, are thus puniſhed in the puniſhment of the wicked, as thoſe children which periſhed in the deluge, and in the deſtruction of Sodome, and many other men and infants that died at the beſieging of Ieruſalem: And this ſeemes to be no injuſtice in God, becauſe otherwiſe we muſt take away all juſtice from men; For we find it uſuall in all Nations, for 1 Corporall.

The godly are many times corporally puniſhed, in the puniſhment of the wicked.

great offences; as, Crimen læsæ majestatis, treasons, murders, and such like, to deprive the children of their fathers goods or lands, by reason of their fathers evills; nay, not only the children, but even all the kindred of a traytor, were thereby tainted, and disparaged by the Macedonian Law: And therefore we must abridge God of that which we see just in man, or els we must yeeld it is just in God to visit and to punish the sinnes of the fathers upon the children. But Quint Curt. de rebus gestis Alexandri.

2 Spirituall.

For the second, that for the fathers sinnes the child should be spiritually punished, or inflicted with criminall punishments, it seemeth more than strange; and therefore Aquinas, and many others, thinking to reconcile this place of the Law, That God will visit the sinnes of the fathers upon the children, And that of Ezekiel, where God saith, The innocent child shall not beare the iniquity of his wicked father, doth say, that God here doth understand it of temporall punishment, or corporall castigation, which God oftentimes layeth upon the children for their Fathers sinnes: But in Ezekiel God meaneth that he will not spiritually punish, or eternally plague the child for the Fathers sin. And

Ezek 18.4.
A difference betwixt spirituall and eternall punishment.

I confesse, that that place of Ezekiel is to be understood, that God will not eternally punish the child, simply for the fathers sin; for God useth not to punish any one man for the sin of any other man: But as the Lord saith himselfe, The soule which sinneth, that soule shall die; yet I say, that in Ezekiel he denieth not what here he affirmeth, and that he meaneth the same thing in both places, if both be rightly understood; for I make a great difference between a spirituall and an eternall punishment; that God will eternally punish the child for the fathers sinne, I utterly denie; but that he will spiritually punish the child for the fathers sin, I see neither place denying it; For as here he doth not say, that he will eternally punish the child for his fathers sinnes; so there he doth not say, that he will no way spiritually punish the child for the parents faults: but, as here his meaning is not, that he will inflict any positive evill upon the sonnes of the wicked, for the wickednesse of their parents; but that for the iniquity of the parents, he will shut his hands, and with-hold his grace from their children, and so willingly and justly suffer them to commit the like, or worse sinnes, than their fathers did; because we being all naturally borne in sinne, inclined and prone to all evill, if God doth not by his sanctifying and preventing grace preserve us, we shall be sure enough of our selves, without any intrusion or infliction of any positive evill from God, to fall from one wickednesse to another, and to commit all sinnes even with greedinesse: So there his meaning is not, to deny the withholding of his grace from the children of the wicked, (which is all that here he threatneth) but that he will not inflict any positive punishment upon them, for their fathers sinnes.

Of a privative and a positive punishment.

And therefore, though God saith in Ezekiel, that he will not punish the children for their fathers faults, that is, by any positive punishment; yet doth he not deny, but that the privative punishment of denying his grace unto them, for their fathers sinnes, should be inflicted upon them: and that suffering of us to sin, or not hindering of us to sin, justly inflicted upon us for our fathers sins, is a most lamentable and a most fearefull thing; because such children, so justly refused to be helped by God, and so deservedly left in the counsell of their own hands, shall be sure of sins enough of their owne, to be plagued for, that they shall never need to say, The fathers have eaten sowre grapes, and the childrens teeth are set on edge, or that they are punished for their fathers sinnes. And so you see, how God visiteth the sins of the fathers upon the children, and yet punisheth every man but for his owne sinnes.

That God denieth his graces unto the children for the parents sinnes.

Ezek. 18.2.

The first he doth by a spirituall desertion and deniall of grace unto the children, for the fathers sins; and this is understood in the law.

The second he doth by a positive infliction of punishment upon every man, according to his owne sinnes; and this is understood in Ezekiel; for

As he promiseth to blesse the children of the godly, for the love that he beareth unto their parents; (as he saith unto Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy thy ſeed after thee.) So he denieth his grace many times unto the children of the wicked, for the very hatred that he beares againſt their fathers ſinnes, as moſt innumerable wofull examples do make it plaine: for you ſee the leaves forſaking God, to be forſaken of God, to this very day; and that bloud of Chriſt, which their fathers ſpilt, to remaine upon the children of ſo many generations: And we ſee ſo many Nations of men ſuffered, to ſit in darkneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death, as the ſeven Churches of Aſia, and many other famous places of Greece, and other countries; becauſe their fore-fathers have forſaken their firſt love, and through their negligence, have extinguiſhed the light of truth. And being thus left of God, and deprived of grace, what can be left in them, or derived from them, but the fruits of that naturall corruption which is ingraffed in all men?

Luk. 1. 79.

And therefore as it is truly ſaid of all the off-ſpring of Ieroboam, that being bereft of grace, and left unto themſelves, (even for their fathers ſins) They walked in the ways of Ieroboam, the ſon of Nebat, which made Iſrael to ſin; So we may ſay of the children of wicked parents, that being left as they were borne, in their pure naturals, for their fathers impieties, they do imitate the ſame works, and tread in the ſame ſteps, or worſe than their fathers did: And ſo it fals out true, that as an evill crow brings forth an evill egge, ſo evill parents do bring forth (for the moſt part) evill and wicked children, God in juſtice viſiting the iniquity of the parents upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation.

1 King. 15. 34.

ἐυσεβέων πατέρων τέκνα, δυσεβέων δ' οὔ.

And ſo you ſee, how God viſiteth the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, by with-holding his grace from them; and how juſt it is with God to do the ſame, becauſe he is a debtor to no man: and the reaſon why he dealeth thus with the ſonnes of men is,

Why God withholdeth his graces from the children of the wicked.

First, to ſhew the height of his hatred againſt ſin; fire is kindled in his wrath, and it ſhall burne to the bottome of hell; and if his wrath be kindled, yea, but a little, bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him.

Pſal. 2. 12.

Secondly, to puniſh the offenders, (as I ſaid before) in their deareſt fleſh; to ſee, if their love to their childrens welfare, will make them any wayes feare to ſin; for we ſee many men ſo obdurate, and ſo hard-hearted unto themſelves, as that they care not what is done, or what becomes of themſelves; but as David was much moved, when he ſaw the people ſmitten for his ſinnes, and as Iacob halted, when the Angell ſmote him on the thigh; ſo are we many times more grieved to ſee, and more affraid to heare, that our children, and the fruits of our loynes, ſhall be puniſhed than our ſelves. And therefore, ſeeing that fearefull curſe of the Prophet, Let the iniquity of his father be had in remembrance, and let not the ſinne of his mother be done away, doth light ſo heavily upon the children of the wicked, it ſhould teach all parents that love their children, to feare the Lord, and to ſtrive more to get Gods bleſſing, rather than the greateſt patrimony, unto our children: for they may aſſure themſelves, that (as the old verſe ſaith)

2 Sam. 24. 17. Gen. 32. 31.

To ſerve God, is the greateſt good that we can do unto our children.

De malè quæſitis vix gaudet tertius hæres.

If they have inlarged their ſubſtance by wicked means, it will be the only means to cut off all their poſterity, as may be ſeen in Saul, Ahab, Ieroboam, and the like: but the bleſſing of the Lord perpetuateth the ſame: and therfore, as ſome for love unto their children, will give themſelves unto the divell, by committing all ſinnes, in oppreſſing others, to inrich them; So let us, if we love our children, ceaſe to ſin: for this will free our ſelves from woe, and bring the beſt bleſſing unto them; and

Secondly, it ſhould teach all children to be humbled, and to pray to God with our lyturgy, ſaying, Remember not Lord our offences, nor the offences of our fore-fathers; but ſpare us good Lord, ſpare thy people, and give us thy grace, and forgive us all our ſins, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

And thus I have ſhewed thee, O man, Quid ſit optimum, what is the chiefeſt good, and what we may learne concerning God, that he is an omnipotent eternall being, good unto all, ſpecially unto his Saints, and juſt unto ſinners: And now, Quid niſi vota ſuperſunt, what remaineth, but to apply all this unto our ſoules, to believe in him, to love him, to feare him, and to praiſe his name, his bleſſed name for evermore; for it is a good thing to sing praises unto our God; yea, and it becommeth well the just to be thankefull: And therefore Praise thou the Lord, O my soule, and all that is within me praise his holy name; and let every thing that hath breath, praise the Lord, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen, Amen.

Psal. 147. 1.

Psal. 103. 1. Psal. 150. ult.

A Prayer.

O Eternall God, whom to know, as thou art, is impossible, as thou hast revealed in thy Word, eternall life; we most humbly beseech thee to open the eyes of our understanding, that we may see thee at all times, in all places, and in all our actions; and give us O Lord thy heavenly grace, that seeing thee, we may love thee with all our hearts, feare thy power, extoll thy goodnes, and admire thy justice, to preserve us from all sins, and to retaine us in all thy waies, to thine eternall glory, and to our endlesse comfort, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

This Treatise containeth,

1. An Introduction, of the excellency of the knowledge of Iesus Christ, where is shewed that
   1. His life is our chiefest direction.
   2. Himself our only consolation

2. An explication of that great mystery of the incarnation of the Word: where is handled,

   1. Who was made, λογος; where is shewed;

      And this is fully proved, all objections plainely answered, and from thence is shewed,
      1. The greatnesse of Gods love.
      2. The craftinesse of Satan.
      3. The perversenesse of heretick s.
      4. The unthankefullnesse of men.

      2. Three especiall things touching the word λογος, viz.
         1. What λογος signifieth, i.e. the Word.
         2. Why Christ is tearmed the Word.
         3. Why the Evãgelist useth this word,
            1. Because this name of Christ was best known to the Iewes and to the Gentiles.
            2. Because it was the fittest word that hee could use, to make way for his subsequent discourse.

      3. The impulsive & the finall causes of the Words Incarnation; and the reasons why the Word rather then the Father or the Holy Ghost was to be incarnate.

      1. That there can bee but one God, and yet that there are three persons in the unity of that one essence, & how these three persons are distinguished,
         1. By their personall actions,
            1. Outward, which are,
               1. Communicative.
               2. Transient.
               3. Voluntary.
            2. Inward, which are,
               1. Permanent.
               2. Necessary.
               3. Incommunicable.
         2. By their nominall relation, Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghost.

      And that the person made is the second person of the blessed Trinity.
      1. Co-eternall.
      2. Co-essentiall.
      3. Co-equall.
      To his Father.

   2. What hee was made, flesh; where is shewed,
      1. The manner of his conception, the reasons, and the end thereof.
      2. The matter that hee assumed
         1. All our humane nature, that is, body and soule.
         2. All our humane frailties both of body and soule, sin onely excepted.

   And here is shewed many excellent lessons that wee ought to learne in respect
   1. Of God.
   2. Of Christ.
   3. Of our selves.

A

A

3. How the Word was made flesh, or how the two natures, divine and humane, doe make but one person in Christ; where is shewed,

1. The distinction of the two natures, divine, and humane; that they doe still remaine intire, and inconfused, is fully proved; and the chiefest objections made to the contrary are plainely answered.

2. The union of the two natures in one person is explained, and

1. The confirmation of the truth of this point is shewed, and the greatest objections made against it are sufficiently answered.

2. The manner of this union, wherin it consisteth, is expressed, viz.

1. Not as the Arrians say, onely in respect of
   1. Cohabitation.
   2. Will and affection.
   3. Co-operation.
   4. Participation of his name and dignities unto the manhood.

2. But in the communicating of the subsistence of the Word with the subsistence of the man-hood; where is shewed that this union is,
   1. Inconvertible.
   2. Indivisible.
   3. Inconfused.
   4. Inseperable.
   5. Substantiall.
   6. Ineffable.

3. The chiefest benefits and effects of the said union is shewed, & that

1. In respect of Christ, which are,
   1. An exemption from all sinne.
   2. A collation of ineffable graces into the manhood Christ.
   3. A communication of the properties of each nature to the person of Christ; where the objection of the ubiquitists, indeavouring to prove the man-hood invested with Divine properties, are fully answered.

2. In respect of us, viz. our union and reconciliation with God, and all the happinesse we have in this life, or doe looke for in the life to come.

The

The third

Golden Candlesticke,

HOLDING

The third greatest Light of Christian

RELIGION.

Of the Incarnation of the WORD.

IOHN 1. 14.

Καὶ ὁ λόγος σὰρξ ἐγένετο.

And the Word was made Flesh.

I Have described in my formost Treatise, (O Theophilus, O dearely beloved of God) the miserable estate of that poore man, that was ejected out of Paradise, & left halfe dead, betweene Ierusalem and Iericho, betwixt Heaven and Hell; being already excluded out of Heaven; but not fully thrust and intruded into Hell: and in my next Treatise I have shewed unto thee a poole of Bethesda, and brought unto thee a good Samaritan, that is onely able and willing to heale all the maladies: but as yet thou wantest an Angel to stirre the Waters; and this good Samaritan hath not alighted: and therefore I must now shew you how to apply the salve unto the sore, and how the Angel of the Covenant, Iesus Christ, alighted and descended from the throne of his Majesty, which is his horse; for he rideth upon the Heavens, as upon an horse; to releeve this poore distressed and afflicted man. And this by Gods help I shall do out of these words; The Word was made flesh; for here is the παγχρηστον, the salve laid unto the sore; here is Emmanuel, God with us; the blessed God which I have described in my last Treatise, united and made one with us, which in my first Tract I have shewed to be so miserably afflicted: and therefore we may now rejoyce and be assured of our health and salvation, because the Word is made flesh.

The coherence of this Treatise, with the former Treatises.

Iohn 5.2.

Psal. 68.4.

Esay 7.14.

CHAP. I.

Of the excellency of the Knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt.

God hath fixed many impreſſions of his goodneſſe in the creatures.

WHoſoever will religiouſly and ſeriouſly obſerve thoſe manifold impreſſions of the Divine goodneſſe, which the Lord God hath not ſlightly planted in the nature of all living creatures, for a ſhort ſpace to be preached, but hath alſo indelibly fixed in the memory of all ages, moſt ſeriouſly to be conſidered; hee ſhall ſurely finde ſufficient matter of reverence, love and admiration; but he ſhall be never able ſufficiently to comprehend the excellencie of ſo huge an Ocean of goodneſſe, within the ſtraight and narrow compaſſe of his underſtanding. This were but with Saint Auguſtines Boy, to empty the Ocean Sea with an Oyſter-ſhell into an hole: and therefore the ſerious and continuall contemplation of ſuch plentifull and farre-ſpread goodneſſe of God, did ſo invade and fill the thoughts of that Kingly Prophet David; that being as it were raviſhed or wrapt in an extaſie, at the inexplicable expreſſion, and unconceiveable conſideration of the ſame, he breaketh forth into theſe heavenly acclamations, ſaying, O Iehovah, In cœlis eſt benignitas tua: O Lord our Governour, How excellent is thy Name in all the world, thou that haſt ſet thy glory above the Heavens? thy faithfullneſſe reacheth unto the cloudes; thy righteouſneſſe is like the ſtrong mountaines; thy judgements are like the great deepe, thou ſaveſt O Lord, both man and beaſt.

Pſal. 36. 5, 6, 7.

Pſal. 147.

Gods infinite goodneſſe.

But I will not ſuffer my ſpeech, at this time, to enter into that infinite Ocean of Gods goodneſſe, whereby he giveth food unto all fleſh, feeding the young Ravens that call upon him, and whereby he adorneth the fields with all kinde of fruitfull trees and pleaſant flowers, and all flowers with ſweet ſmels and delicate colours; neither will I enter into any part or parcell of his excellent providence, whereby he governeth the whole world by his wiſedome, ſuſtaineth all things by his power, and relieveth all things by his goodneſſe; for this is too large a field for me to poſt over in ſo ſhort a ſpace, as is now allotted me to ſpeake: and therefore I will rather bathe my ſelfe in thoſe fountaines of Gods admirable love, whereby he imbraced Mankinde, the Epytome of the whole world, and eſpecially the Church of Chriſt, the epytome of this epytome, before it was created, and pitied the ſame, when it was fallen, and promiſed to reſtore it and to revive it, when it was dead, and to ſhew his mercy unto it, when it was in miſery; for hee ſaid firſt in Paradiſe, that the ſeede of the woman ſhould breake the Serpents head; And afterwards to Abraham, that in his ſeed all the Nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; and then to David, that of the fruit of his body he would raiſe one to ſit upon his ſeate; And ſo more and more cleerely unto the reſt of the ſucceeding Prophets; and I will chiefely inſiſt upon that chiefeſt token of Gods love, and that greateſt argument of Gods goodneſſe towards us, the moſt merciſull fulfilling of theſe gracious promiſes ſo much deſired, and ſo long expected by all the bleſſed Patriarchs and Prophets, and all the reſt of the holy men of God; for when the fullneſſe of time came, God ſent his Sonne made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeeme them that were in bondage under the Law, that we might receive the adoption of children: And this my Text doth fully and plainely ſhew unto us, Καὶ ὁ λόγος σὰρξ ἐγένετο; And the Word was made fleſh, where obſerve, that Gods promiſe touching the Incarnation of the Word. Gen. 3. 15. Gen. 22. 18.

Pſal. 132. 12.

The chiefeſt token of Gods love.

Gal. 4. 4.

The moſt excellent ſpeech that can be uttered, is ever meaſured (ſaith Fulgentius) by theſe two properties, brevity, and ſuavity; and here is both in this Text: few words, full of matter, and the ſweeteſt matter that ever was heard ſince God made Man: and therefore I may ſay of theſe words, that they are all in all, and (as Saint Hierome ſaith of the Catholike Epiſtles of Saint Peter, Saint Iohn, Saint Iames, and Saint Iude) Breves eſſe, pariter & longas; That in theſe few words are contained all words, all things, all matters; For the ſumme of all knowledge is Divinity; this is the Lady and Miſtreſſe; all other Arts and Sciences, are but ſervants,

The properties of the beſt ſpeech.

Hieron ad Paulin.

servants, like Penelopes handmaides, helpes and meanes to bring us to the speech of this chaste mistresse; the summe of all Divinity, is the Scripture; for this is sufficient to make the man of God perfect, being instructed to all good workes; the summe of the Scripture is the Gospell; for the Gospell is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that beleeveth; and the summe of the Gospell is ὁ λόγος, This Word, that is made flesh; for these things, (that is, the Gospell) are written, That you might beleeve Iesus Christ to be the Sonne of God, and that in beleeving you might have eternall life.

2 Tim. 3. 17. Rom. 1. 16.

Iohn 20. 31.

This is Verbum abbreviatum, That contracted word, into which all words are reduced, as the Rivers into the Seas; from this Word they came, unto this Word they tend, and within this Word they are all *containe*d; for he is the First, he is the Last, he is a Legis, & ω Evangelij, The beginning of the Law, and the end of the Gospell; Velatus in veteri, revelatus in Novo Testamento; Veyled and shadowed in the Old, revealed and exhibited in the New Testament; promised in that, preached in this; there shewed unto the Fathers in Types, here manifested unto us in Truths; for the Tree of Life, the Arke of Noah, the Ladder of Iacob, the Mercy-seat, the Brazen Serpent, and all such mysticall Types, and typicall Figures, that we reade of in the Old Testament, what were they else but Christ obscurely shadowed before he was fully revealed? and so all the men of Note, Noah, Isaac, Ioseph, Moses, Aaron, Iohuah, Sampson, David, Salomon, Kings, Priests, Prophets, Titles of Dignities, Names of Honour, or whatsoever else was any waies ascribed to any of them to expresse their Soveraignty, they were onely used to expresse those transcendent excellencies, which these personall Types did adumbrate, and shew most properly to belong unto this King of Kings, This mighty Counsellor, and this Prince of Peace; For, as Saint Augustine tels us, that having gone through all creatures, and inquired of them for God, each one of them did answer, I am not he, Sed per ipsum sum, quem quaris in me, But I have my being from him, whom thou seekest in me; so if we would run over the whole classis of the Patriarchs and Prophets to inquire for Christ, wee should finde, that they would every one of them answer with Iohn Baptist, I am not the Christ, but doe looke and expect for him, and trust in him as well as you.

Quicquid est veteru Testamenti Christum sonat.

All the men of note, and all the names of dignity, were but Types of this eternall Word.

Omnia in figura contingebant illis, 1 Cor. 10. 11. Esay 9. 6. Aug. in Soliloq. c. 31.

Iohn 1. 20.

And to speake all in a word, the whole Word of God containeth nothing else but this Word God; for the world being not worthy, and our weakenesse being not able to behold the brightnesse of his comming all at once, and so God himselfe being not willing, suddenly in an instant, to shew wholly so rich a Iewell, he did at sundry times and in divers manners, sometimes in Types, sometimes in Prophesies, before his Incarnation, sometimes in Parables, sometimes by Similitudes, and sometimes by his Miracles, in the time of his Apostles, before his Ascention, and since that time, plainely with open face, revcale himselfe, and cause himselfe to be preached unto all people; so that in very deed, we might (if we had our spirituall eyes alwaies opened) Behold and find this Word God, either covertly shadowed, or else plainely expressed almost in every page, in every verse, in every line, in every word of the whole Word of God.

Christ would not reveale himselfe unto the World all at once.

But as no man can understand the writings of Saint Paul without the spirit of Saint Paul; so no man can see and perceive the truth of Gods Word without the helpe and light of this Word; for when Saint Iohn saw the Throne set up in heaven, and him that sate thereon with a booke in his hand, sealed with seven seales, which no man, in heaven or in earth or under the earth, was found worthy to open the booke, nor once to looke into it; then the holy man wept exceedingly, because none was found worthy to open and to reade the booke, neither to looke thereon; but one of the Elders said unto him, weepe not; for behold the Lion of the Tribe of Iuda, the roote of David, hath prevailed to open the booke and to loose the seven seales thereof: And this booke is the will of God revealed in his Word, which this Lyon of Iuda, Iesus Christ, did first reveale unto Moses, and afterwards explained the same by the Prophets, and last of all by himselfe and his Apostles; for no man saw God at any time but the onely begotten Sonne, which is in the bosome

How Saint Paul's writings are to be understood. Revel. 5. 1, 3.

Vers. 4.

Vers. 5.

Iohn 1. 18.

The ſeven ſeales what they are.

boſome of the Father, he hath declared him, ſaith the Evangeliſt; and the ſeven ſeales, which he hath unſealed, are

1. His Nativity, propheſied in Eſay Chap. 7. 14. and in Malach. 4. 2.
2. His Baptiſme, propheſied in Zach. 13. 1.
3. His Paſſion, not onely propheſied but alſo purtrayed and exemplified almoſt in each particular by Eſayas Chap. 53. throughout.
4. His Deſcention into hell, propheſied by Hoſeas 13. 14.
5. His Reſurrection, propheſied by King David, Pſal. 16. 10.
6. His Aſcention, propheſied by the ſame Prophet, Pſal. 68. 18.
7. His Effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt, propheſied by Ioel 2. 28.

How the ſeales are opened.

Theſe things were myſteries, ſecret and unknowne, to the wiſeſt men of the world, like a fountaine ſealed up; but Chriſt hath unſealed the ſame, and

By the firſt he hath redeemed us from the power of Satan, and made us againe the ſons of God, as S Auguſtine ſaith.

* This ſeale Clemens Alexandrinus calleth φαρμακον παιδνιον, that is, the remedy againſt all the venome of corruption.

By the ſecond * he gave us power to put him, that is, his righteouſneſſe upon our ſelves, as a man putteth on his garment; for as many as are baptized into Chriſt have put on Chriſt.

By the third wee are reconciled unto God and ſealed up to everlaſting life.

By the fourth he hath overcome death, hell and the grave, that neither the parting of our ſoules from our bodies, nor the darkeneſſe of the grave, nor yet the power of the divell and the feare of hell it ſelf might any wayes terrifie the Saints of God.

By the fift he hath aſſured us, that the bands of death are broken aſunder, and that the horror of the grave is now turned to a pleaſant reſt, but for a while; becauſe we ſhall riſe againe and have our corruption clothed with incorruption, as the Apoſtle ſheweth.

1 Cor. 15.

By the ſixt he hath opened to us an entrance into heaven, and is gone there, to provide a place for us, as himſelfe doth teſtifie.

Iohn 14.

By the ſeventh he hath furniſhed his Church with the manifold graces of his bleſſed ſpirit, as S. Paul teacheth.

Epheſ. 4 8, 9, &c.

And ſo this heavenly Word hath taught us all the myſteries of the kingdome of heaven, he hath opened the booke, and unſealed all the ſeales thereof unto his Diſciples.

To know Chriſt, is the onely thing that makes us happy.

And therefore unhappy is that man, which (though he knoweth all things elſe) knoweth not this Word; but happy and bleſſed is that man, which knoweth this Word, though he know none other words in the world; and he that knoweth this Word, and knoweth all other things together with this Word, is never a whit the happier for the knowledge of all other things; but he is only happy for the knowledge of this onely Word; for this is eternall life, to know thee, and whom thou haſt ſent Ieſus Chriſt: and as one truely ſaith, Hæc eſt nobiliſſima ſcientiarum, & ſcientia nobiliſſimorum, ſcire λόγον factum carnem; This is the nobleſt of all Sciences, and the fitteſt Science for the nobleſt men, to know that the Word was made fleſh; Nam omnia habemus in Chriſto, & omnia in nobis Chriſtus; Becauſe we have all things in Chriſt, and Chriſt is all things unto us, eſpecially,

Iohn 17. 3.

Hoc eſt neſcire ſine Chriſto plurima ſcire; Si Chriſtum bene ſcis, ſcis eſt ſi cætera neſcis.

Chriſt two waies beneficiall to us.

1. His life is our chiefeſt direction.
2. Himſelfe is our onely conſolation.

} For

1 Way. Aug. de vera religione.

Firſt, Tota vita Chriſti in terris, per hominem quem geſſit, diſciplina morum fuit; The whole life of Chriſt, which he ſpent here on earth, was, and is a patterne for all Chriſtians, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; Nam omnia bona mundi contempſit, For he deſpiſed all the pompe and vanity of this world; he was borne poore; his Inne was a Stable, his Cradle was a Manger, and his coverings were poore ſwadling clouts; he lived poore; for he had not an houſe to put his head in; and hee dyed poore; Saint Auguſtine, when he died, made no Will; becauſe he had no wealth, but his bookes which hee gave to the common Library, ſaith Poſſidonius; but Chriſt deſpiſed all worldly vanities.

S. Aug. Poverty.

Poſidon. in vita Auguſt.

Chriſt

Christ was poorer; for he had no goods, but his garments; this was all the Souldiers got by him; to teach us, in his mundanis felicitatem non reponere. That we should not greedily seeke, nor childishly place our delight, in these trifling and worldly toyes, but if riches increase, not to set our hearts upon them; Et omnia mala sustinuit, and he suffered all the sorrowes of this world, hunger, thirst, cold, and nakednesse, lyings, slanders, spittings, mockings, whippings, death it selfe; to teach us, Vt nec in illis quæreretur felicitas, ita nec in istis infelicitas timeretur; That as we should place no felicity in the vanities of this life, so we should not feare all the miseries of this world; but to say with Debora, March valiantly, O my soule, and with the Angell unto Gideon, Goe on thou mighty man of Warre, and passe through all the rankes of miseries; for

Poverie of Christ

Christ suffered all miseries.

Iudg 6.12,14.

——Dabit Deus his quoque finem;

Virgil. Æneid l.1

God will make an end of these things, and will bring his people unto rest, which shall continue without ending: and therfore Saint Bernard saith, Incassum laborat in acquisitione virtutum, qui eas alibi quam in Christo quærit; That there is no way in the world for us to attaine unto any goodnesse but onely through Christ, nor to learne any true vertue, but onely from the example of Christ. For Christ the most perfect patterne of all vertue.

If thou wouldest learne humility, Let the same minde be in thee, which was in Christ Iesus, who being in the forme of God, and thought it no robbery to be equall with God, yet did he make himselfe of no reputation, and tooke upon him the forme of a servant; If thou wouldest learne truth and uprightnesse, set the example of Christ before thy face; for in him there was no sinne, neither in his mouth was found no guile; and to be briefe, if thou dost seriously looke, thou shalt easily finde, that (as Saint Bernard saith,) True Wisedome is found in his Doctrine, Righteousnesse in his Mercy, Mercy in his Iustice, Temperance in his Life, Truth in his words, Fortitude in his sufferings, and all vertues in all his actions: All the Æthicks of Aristotle, all the morality of Seneca, and all the wisedome of Greece can no waies describe vertue neere so perfectly, as we see it expressely pourtrayed in the lively example of our Saviours life.

Phil 2.5,6,7.

1 Pet.2.22.

Bernard Ser.2. super Cantic. Prudentia vera in eius doctrina, iustitia in eius misericordia, temperantia in vita, & fortitudo in eius de passione reperiuntur.

And as there is no way for us to find true vertue, but onely in him, which is vertue it selfe; so there is nothing in the world, that is so availeable to suppresse all vice, as is the true knowledge of Iesus Christ; Nam hæc iræ impetum cohibet, superbiæ tumorem sedat; For this will refraine the violence of anger, when they consider how he suffered all violence and villanies, and yet as a Sheepe before his shearer was dumbe, so opened he not his mouth; This will allay the swellings of Pride, when they consider how hee was the noblest of all creatures, and the fairest among the sonnes of men; and yet was he meeke and lowly in heart; this will heale the wounds of envy, it will stoppe the streames of luxury, it will quench the flames of lust, it will temper the thirst of covetousnesse, and it will keepe thee from the itching desire of all filthinesse; when wee consider how much hee loathed these, how free he was from these, and how earnestly he dissuaded us from these and from all other vices whatsoever.

The knowledge of Christ the only meanes to suppresse all vices.

Esay 53.7.

Psal.45 3. Mat.11.29.

And therefore (saith he) Ne mundi gloriâ seu carnis voluptatibus abducaris, dulcescat tibi pro his sapientia Christus, Lest thou shouldest be with-drawne from God, through the pompous vanities of this world, or the lustfull and delightfull pleasures of thine owne flesh, let Christ, the true wisedome of God, waxe sweet unto thee; Lest thou shouldest be seduced by the spirit of lies and of errors, let Christ the true light shine unto thee; and lest thou shouldest be wearied and waxe faint under the burthen of adversities, let Christ the power of God refresh thee.

Ne spiritu mendacij & erroris seducaris, lucescat tibi veritas Christus, & ne adversitatibus fatigeris, confortet te virtus Dei Christus.

Secondly, As all Christs actions are our instructions, so is Christ himselfe all our consolation; Nam cum defecerit virtus mea, non conturbor; For if I see mine owne strength and goodnesse faile me, yet I need not bee disturbed, I need not bee dejected; Quia quod ex me mihi deest usurpo ex visceribus Domini,

2 Way.

Because

Whatsoever wee want, Christ alone is all sufficient to supply our neede.

Because whatsoever wanteth in my selfe, to helpe my selfe, I may freely and boldly assume it, to supply my wants, from my Lord and Master Iesus Christ; for as that servant need not want, that hath free leave to use his Masters full purse at his owne command; so need not they want any grace, that have the grace of Christ; because (as I told you before) Omnia habemus in Christo, & Christus omnia in nobis; Wee have all things in Christ, and Christ is all things unto us. For Ioh 6.35. If thou art sicke with sinne, and thy soule wounded, or poysoned unto death, and wouldest be healed, Christ is thy best, and alone Physician; onely he, and no one but he, can cure thee; If thy soule doth hunger, and thirst after righteousnesse, and wouldest be satisfied, he is the Bread of Life, and the Fountaine of living waters, Whosoever eateth him, shall never hunger, and whosoever drinketh of him, shall never thirst; for out of his belly shall flow rivers of waters of life; If thou art as naked of all goodnesse, as thou wert of all clothing, when thou camest out of thy Mothers wombe, and wouldest be adorned with the best robes of vertue, Christ is the garment of righteousnesse; And if thou doest put on the Lord Iesus Christ, (as S. Paul adviseth thee) then all thy garments will smell of Myrrh, Aloes and Cassia; it will be like the smell of a pleasant field, which the Lord hath blessed; or whatsoever thou wanteſt, and wouldest have, thou mayest fully and freely have the same from him; Vita ab errore, gratia à peccato, & mors à morte liberabit; for his life will preserve thee from error, if thou wilt follow it; his grace will free thee from sinne, if thou wilt receive it; and his death will deliver thee from eternall death, if thou wilt beleeve in it.

Chap.7.38.

Rom.13.14.

Gen.27.27.

And if thou be simple, he is thy wisedome; if thou be sinnefull, he is thy righteousnesse; if thou wouldest be holy, he is thy sanctification; if thou beest the slave of hell, and held captive by the Divell, he is thy redemption and thy Redeemer that hath ledde captivity captive; And, to comprehend all in a word, This word is All in all; Vt qui omnia propter Christum dimittit, unum inveniat pro omnibus Christum; That he, which forsaketh all for Christ his sake, might finde all in Christ, and Christ in stead of all, far better then all unto his soule; that so he might joyfully sing with the Psalmist, The Lord is my portion, and I have a goodly heritage; the Lord is my Shepheard, and therefore I can want nothing; For, (as Seneca said unto Polibius) Fas tibi non est, salvo Cæsare, de fortuna conqueri, quia hoc incolumi, nihil perdidisti; It is not fit for thee to complaine of Fortune, for want, or poverty, or any other adversity, so long as thou hast the favour of Cæsar, and him so friendly unto thee; for that having him, thou hast lost nothing, which thou canst not soone and easily recover againe; because he and his love is better then all things unto thee; and therefore thou shouldest more rejoyce in having him, then grieve for the leesing of all things else; Even so may I farre better say the same unto all Christians; What matter though we want, or leese all the things of this World, if we have, and enjoy Iesus Christ? for all the accessions and accumulations of all worldly things, can adde nothing unto the felicity of a Christian; and all the defects or wants of the same things, can detract nothing from the happinesse of him, that hath Iesus Christ; for whosoever hath him, hath all things, and whosoever wanteth him, hath nothing. For

Ephes.4.8.

Psal.23.1.

Nam in hoc pro omnibus, hic tibi omnia est, ideo non tantum ficeos sed & latos oculos esse oportet. Seneca ad Polib.

All our knowledge is but heathenish Science, able to make us proud, not to make us happy. If this word be not Objectum adequatum, The chiefest, yea, and the sole object of the same; all our faith in God is but ungrounded confidence, if it be not grounded upon this word; for, No man commeth unto the Father, but by me; All our righteousnesse is but as Pollutio panni, Menstruous clouts, if it be not washed in the bloud of this word; For, It is the bloud of Iesus Christ, which cleanseth us from all sinne; And all our patience, temperance, chastity, and all other vertues, that either Nature planted, or education effected in us, are but Splendida peccata, Glittering guilded sins, unacceptable unto God, and unprofitable unto our selves, able to make us prouder, not better, if they be not guided by the grace, and directed to the glory of this everlasting Word; For as the Bird cannot flie without

All the things of this World without Christ, will availe us nothing. Iohn 14.6.

1 Iohn 1.7.

without her wings, nor the body move without the soule; so no more can any man doe any thing that is good and acceptable unto God, without the helpe of this heavenly Word; For, Without mee you can doe nothing, saith our Saviour Christ; but in him God is well pleased, not onely with himselfe, but also with all us; and through him Wee can doe all things, as the Apostle saith. Iohn 15.5. Phil 4.13.

And therefore, as Duke Ioab, when hee had fought the field, and got the upper hand of his enemies, did send for David to carry away the credit of the victory; so the Prophets, the Apostles, and all the holy men of God, in all their heavenly words, miraculous workes, paines, and preachings, would never suffer any part or parcell of the credit to rest upon themselves, but did most forcibly repell it, and most faithfully acknowledge it all to belong unto this Omnipotent Word; So Saint Peter, after the healing of the poore lame Cripple, said unto the people (when hee saw them ready to adore them for so admirable a miracle) Why looke you so earnestly on us, as though by our owne power or holinesse wee had made this man to walke? No, no, it is not so; but it is The Name of Iesus Christ, and our faith in his Name, that made him perfectly whole; that is, Hee is the Author, wee are the Instruments, and our faith is the meanes whereby this man received strength; and therefore doe not you ascribe the honour of this worke unto any of us, which of our selves can doe nothing; but ascribe it unto the Name of that Almighty Word, which of himselfe can doe all things; So Saint Paul, after he had said, that hee had laboured more then all the rest of the Apostles, least any man should thinke that hee did assume the honour of that diligence unto himselfe, and not ascribe the same unto Christ, he presently addeth; and yet it was not I that did it, but the grace of God which was in mee; And so all the Saints of God, after all their voluminous and laborious workes, they conclude all with Laus Christo, Let all the praise be given to Christ. That if there be any goodnesse in us, we should ascribe the glory of it to Iesus Christ. Acts 3.12, 16. 1 Cor. 15.10.

And as they referred all the honour of their owne actions unto Christ, because they were all done by the grace and power of Christ; so did they desire nothing in the World but Christ; They forsooke all, and followed him; and still cryed unto him with Saint Augustine, Da mihi te Domine, Take away all from us, and spare not, so thou give thy selfe unto us; that leesing all, we may leese nothing at all; because we gaine thee, which art the greatest gaine in the World; So Saint Paul saith, Hee trampled his owne righteousnesse, and all his owne goodnesse under feete, that hee might finde the righteousnesse of Christ; hee deemed all the riches, and all the other things of this World, but as dung and drosse, and losse unto him, that he might gaine Iesus Christ; and he desired to understand nothing, to know nothing, to remember nothing, to have nothing, but Iesus Christ, and him crucified: And therefore well might Saint Augustine call him, the best Childe of grace, because as Saint Iohn, that best beloved Disciple, was the most loving unto his brethren, and did most of all expresse the love of God to men, and require the love of men to God; so did this chosen vessell of grace, best of all suppresse the pride of man, and extoll the grace of Christ: So did Saint Augustine in his time, that was, Strenuus defensor gratiæ, a most valiant Champion to fight for grace; so did that worthy Zanchius in these latter times, and so will all Christians doe, that doe love Iesus Christ, ascribe all good to him, and nothing to our selves; Quia nostrum nihil est, Because nothing that is good, is of our selves. The Saints desired nothing but Iesus Christ. Mat. 19.27. Phil 3.8. 1 Cor. 2.2. S. Paul the best child of grace. S Augustine the champion of grace.

I reade of one Iohannes Alexandrinus, a most excellent holy man, that when he had distributed all that ever he had unto the poore, he fell downe upon his knees, and thanked God, that now having nothing left, hee desired nothing else, but his Lord and Master Iesus Christ: Oh that it might be so with every one of us, that this word, which did all good unto us, tooke all infirmities from us, suffered all punishments for us, and finished all the workes of our redemption to us, might be all in all, within us all and to us all. Ioh. Alex. his praise. The Authors earnest and hearty wish both for the Clergy, and Laity.

1 For the Clergie.

That we ſhould not conteſt about trifles

First, That we which are the Preachers of Gods Word, would leave our jarring and our jangling about ſhaddowes, about things of nothing, An ater ſit contrarius albo, As, whether it be better to weare a white Surpleſſe or a blacke Gowne, in the adminiſtring of the Sacrament; Much like the contention in Rome, betwixt the Auguſtine Friars and the vulgar Canons, whether Saint Auguſtine did weare a blacke weede upon a white coate, or a white weede upon a blacke coate; for by this meanes, in ſtead of bread, we ſhall give our Children ſtones, to throw at one another; and in ſtead of fiſh, we ſhall give them Scorpions, to ſting one another: And therefore I wiſh, that we would all leave theſe things, and would be Pythagoricè mundo, & Ciceronicè Chriſto; Mute unto the World and mute unto all worldly vanities, and would uſe all our words, all our eloquence, and all our learning to expreſſe the excellency of this ſuper-excellent word; And ſo, by the helpe of this word, to preach of this word, and to write of this word, to the eternall praiſe and glory of this word, that is, to preach not our ſelves, but him; not for our owne gaine, but for his glory.

That we ſhould imploy all our ſtrength, to expreſſe the glory of Chriſt.

S. Bernards preaching.

It is reported of Saint Bernard, that having made, with great art and ſtudy, a moſt curious elegant Sermon, he paſſed home without any applauſe; and the next day, making a plaine, conſcionable, and comfortable Sermon unto his Auditors, he received many a bleſſing from thoſe well-edified hearers; And being demanded by one of his Colleagues, how it happened, that his moſt learned Sermon was ſo ſtrangely neglected, and his farre more plaine one ſo joyfully imbraced; hee moſt humbly anſwered; Heri prædicavi Bernardum, hodiè Ieſum Chriſtum; Yeſterday I preached my ſelfe, to ſhew my wit, and my learning; to day I preached Ieſus Chriſt, to ſhew his grace, and his goodneſſe; this is the cauſe of what thou ſeeſt: and therefore I wiſh that none would preach Saint Bernard, that is, preach a Sermon rare and ſeldome, filled with words and fine phraſes, to gaine unto themſelves credit, and thereby preferment, as the onely rare Schollars of our times; and ſo they are rare indeed; for they are but ſeldome ſeene to preach; like the Swallowes, that come but once a yeere; but that wee would preach Ieſus Chriſt, to gaine ſoules unto the Church of God: And I confeſſe, againſt my ſelfe, that when I tooke greateſt paines to make and compoſe a Scholler-like Sermon, (as I thought) and ſaw the ſame unregarded; and when, with leſſe diligence, but with good conſcience, I ſaw other of my poore labours moſt acceptably received; I deemed it was for want of judgement in mine Auditors, whereas now I perceive it was an error in my ſelfe, that I did not alwaies ſo, as might beſt tend for edification, and not ſo, as might any waies ſavour of ambition; Becauſe our chiefeſt care ſhould be, not to ſpinne a fine thred, but to winne a faire ſoule to Chriſt: And therefore that is an excellent rule, which Saint Auguſtine gives unto all Preachers, Non delectent verba veſtra, ſed proſint; quia ſapientes verum magis amant in verbis quam verba; That our words ſhould not ſo much delight the eares, as our matter edifie the ſoules of men; becauſe all wiſe Chriſtians do love the truth, and the excellencie of the matter, rather then the fluent elegancie of the words; though I deny not, but (as the Poet ſaith,) eſt aliqua gloria frondium, an excellent matter expreſt in fit and decent words, is like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver. And therefore, O my Soule, ſo preach thou the Word of God, that whatſoever men thinke or ſay of thee, this Word God, at laſt, may ſay unto thee, euge ſerve bone, well done thou good and faithfull ſervant, enter thou into thy Maſters joy.

A confeſſion of the Author.

That we ſhould preach Ieſus Chriſt, and not our ſelves.

A good rule for Preachers.

2 For the Laytie.

Cant. 2. 5.

Secondly, I wiſh that all hearers would thinke of nothing, ſpeake of nothing, heare of nothing, love and long for nothing, but for this onely one word, this one thing Ieſus Chriſt; that they would villifie and nullifie all things elſe, to magnifie and to omnifie the excellencie of this excellent Word; that we would prize and value him, above all things; that we would love him, and long after him, untill we languiſh, and be compelled to crie with the Spouſe; Stay me with flaggons, and comfort me with apples, for I am ſicke of love; and that we would ſo inquire after him, as men undone without him, and rather be contented to want all the world,

world, then to want this Word, which made the world of nothing, and still preserves the same, that it turne not to nothing; for I doe much feare, that if we could see the hearts of men, we should finde many of them, not as wee would, but rather (as Saint Bernard calls them) sine Christo Christianos; such as have this word Christ often in their mouthes, to sweare and blaspheme him, but not in their lives to yeeld any service to him; Mammon is their chiefest god; and this God, which is the first and the last, is the last and the least in all their thoughts; all their delight is in filthy communications, and leaude words, all words that may doe hurt; but they have no delight in this word God; The wise Merchant sold all that ever he had, to gaine this invaluable Pearle; but as many a foole will leese his best friend, rather then his basest jest, so will the foolish worldlings sell this, and leese all that belongs to this, rather then they will leese their vaine and wanton pleasure; So foolish are they and ignorant, even as it were beasts before him.

How few love Christ as they ought.

Mat. 13 46.

I have read of Honorius a Romane Emperour, that when one told him Rome was lost, he was exceedingly grieved, and cried, alas, alas; for hee supposed it was his henne, so called, which hee exceedingly loved; but when it was told him, it was his Imperiall Cittie, Rome, that was besieged by Alaricus, and was now taken and lost, then his spirits were revived, that his losse was not so great, as he imagined; we may well thinke this, to be a simple and a childish disposition; and yet our selves are worthy of the same condemnation; for if wee leese a little wealth, a little pleasure, a little vanity, things of themselves good for nothing, because of themselves they can make nothing good, and then (as the proverbe goeth) that is too deere of a farthing, which is good for nothing; yet for these trifles, we will vexe, and fret, weepe and waile, and our mourning will be, Like the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddo; but when wee leese our soules, in the desarts of sinne, and when we leese our God, for sin, then with the Israelites, we sit downe to eate and drinke, and rise up to play.

The weakenesse of Honorius.

Simplicity of men

Zach. 12. 11.

Exod. 32. 6.

But seeing (as the Emperour Severus said) though we bee all things, and have all things, that the world can affoord us; yet all things will availe us nothing, without this thing; because (as I said before) Christ is all things; and all things without Christ are nothing; seeing with Ixion they doe imbrace a cloud for Iuno, a shadow for the body, trash for treasure, and a short momentary dreame of pleasure, in stead of the true and eternall rest, which seeke their rest, but not in Christ; and seeing (as he saith himselfe) it is eternall life to know him with his Father, to be the true and eternall God; I will therefore crave your Christian patience, and desire your carefull attention to hearken unto the severall parts of this Text, and to retaine in your memories, those chiefest observations, that I shall collect from the same; all I cannot, and as I would I cannot, I must ingeniously confesse it; Nam mysterium singulariter mirabile, & mirabiliter singulare, for it is a mystery singularly wonderfull, and wonderfully singular; and indeed the mystery of all mysteries: and therefore, Si profundum in profundo non reperiam, humanam fragilitatem non divinam potentiam confundo; If I doe not handle the same, as I ought to doe, I shall but bewray mine owne humane frailty, and no waies impeach or disparage this divine verity: And because, as it is the first, the chiefest, and the comfortablest point of all Christian Religion; so it hath beene, and is, and (I feare) ever will be, most chiefely oppugned and depraved on all sides, by all sorts of enemies and wicked Heretickes: therefore, as this mine introduction is somewhat large, yet not too large, either preparation, or expectation, for so great a matter as followeth after; so you must give me leave to insist the longer about it; and not Myndus-like to suffer my porch to be greater then my towne: And if I shall seeme harsh in the prosecution, and not give full satisfaction unto your desires and expectations, you must know that they are points to informe the judgement and apprehension, and not so much to move or to inflame the affection, and therefore harder a great deale, and more painefull for us, to handle them, then to treat of any morall points of exhortation; and though they

Iohn 17. 3.

Greatnesse of this mystery.

Folly of Myndus.

Difficult points least delectable.

be leſſe delectable, for the preſent; yet are they farre more profitable, for the future time, eſpecially unto them, that will moſt ſeriouſly conſider them, and moſt carefully remember them, Καὶ ὁ λόγος σὰρξ ἐγένετο: And the Word was made fleſh.

The whole Treatiſe devided into two parts.

In which words (as you may eaſily ſee) the holy Evangeliſt ſetteth downe, the Incarnation of this eternall Word; and I for the fuller explanation of the ſame, muſt deſire you to conſider theſe two things.

1. The ſumme and ſubſtance of this Words Incarnation,
2. The chiefeſt circumſtances, requiſite for its explanation.

The 1. is here fully expreſſed.
The 2. is from the other Evangeliſts, plainely collected.
Touching the firſt, here are three eſpeciall things expreſſed.

The firſt part devided into three branches.

1. The thing that was made, λόγος, the Word,
2. The thing that it was made, σὰρξ, Fleſh.
3. The manner of his making, ἐγένετο, it was made.

Or plainer thus,
1. Who was made, } the Word
2. What it was made, } Fleſh.
3. How it was made, } ἐγένετο, that is,

Not created, not changed, but made; for the Word was made Fleſh: and of theſe by Gods helpe in order.

The

The first Part.

Chap. II.

Of the Trinity of Persons in the Vnity of the Divine Essence.

First, wee must consider who was made, λόγος, the Word was made; for the understanding of which point, wee must know that the divine Essence is onely one impartible and indivisible; For so the Scripture teacheth us, heare O Israel the Lord thy God is one God: and therefore know you that I am God alone, and besides me there is none other, saith the Lord himselfe, and so Saint Paul saith, wee know that there is none other God but one.

The first branch of the first part. God one and indivisible. Deut.6. Chap.32. 1 Proofe. 1 Cor.4.8.

Secondly, So the Fathers teach us; for though the Father is God, and the Sonne is God, and the Holy Ghost is God, yet are there not three Gods, but one God, saith Athanasius; and these three are one, if you consider the Divinity; and this one is three, if you consider the propriety, saith Saint Gregory Nazianzen; and so saith Saint Ambrose, Saint Augustine, Saint Hillarie and all the rest; this is the Catholique faith.

2 Proofe. Athanas. in Symbolo. Nazian. orat.3. de Theol. Amb. de fide. l.1. c.2.

Thirdly, So reason it selfe teacheth us; For God is summum ens, the first and chiefest being, as himselfe professeth, I am that I am; and we have learned that of the prince of Philosophers, that there cannot be, but one chiefest being; Quia ens & unum convertuntur, because that being, and one are all one: Secondly, God is infinite and therefore but one, because that which is infinite comprehendeth all things within the circle of it selfe: Thirdly, If there were more Gods then one; then they must be either all without beginning, or one must proceed from other, either by creation or generation: that they should be all without beginning, is impossible; for then it must needs follow, that there should be multa principia prima, disparata, in una voluntate non convenientia, many first causes, and unequall beginnings, that could never agree, and be of the same minde and will: and therefore, to say they should be all without beginnings, is most absurd: If one be from the other, by creation, then is the second a creature, and therefore but one God uncreated; and if one be from the other by generation, then the first gave the second, either a part or his whole substance; if a part, then is God partible, and may be divided, which cannot be said of such a spirituall indivisible substance; and if the first gave the rest his whole Essence, then have all the same Deitie, and so all must be the same God-head: And so Antisthenes saith, it was the opinion of the best Philosophers, Plures esse Deos populares, unum naturalem; That although the people worshipped many gods, yet indeed there was but one onely God by Nature.

3 Proofe. Exod.3.

Reason sheweth that there can be but one God.

An unanswerable argument, that there is but one God.

And therefore, against the Valentinians thirty couple of gods, and all others that professe many gods, it must needs follow, even from reason it selfe, that there can be no more gods but one not genericall, not specificall, but numericall, that is, so absolutely one, that he is one alone, besides whom there can bee none other, and is therefore called μονάδικος, onely one; for we deny all number in the Deity, unlesse you meane in the personall proprieties: and therefore Gregory Nyssen saith well, Quod in multitudinem extendere numerum Deitatum, eorum duntaxat est, qui laborant multitudinis deorum errore; That to extend the number of the Deities into a multitude, belongs onely unto them, which doe erroniously maintaine a Irenæus contra Valentin.

Tertul. l. contra Hermog. c.17.

Nyssen ad Eustach. de Trin.

multitude of gods; for the Catholicke faith is this, that wee should worship the Trinity in Vnity, and the Vnity in Trinity; that is, the Trinity of Persons, and the Vnity of Essence; because all number is to be rejected from the Essence of God, saith Saint Basil; For the Divine Essence is so simple, and so numerically one, that no diversity can be given, whereby the very persons doe differ, in regard of the Essence: and therefore in respect of this identity, and unity of Essence in the three persons of the God-head, our Saviour saith, I am in the Father, and the Father in me; Whereupon Saint Cyril addeth further, for the explanation of the same, that we may not say that, the Father is from the Sonne, nor contained in the Sonne, nor the Sonne to be in the Father, as we are said to be, and to live in God; for that we are onely by the effects of his grace, he in the unity of his Essence, that is, we are one with God by grace, but the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost are one, by Nature; so that whatsoever the Father essentially is, the Sonne is the same, and the holy Spirit is the same.

Basilius Ep. 141. ad Cæsarium.

Iohn 14.10.

How the Father and Son, and Holy Spirit are one.

And yet we must know, that this one onely one indivisible Essence is distinguished into three persons, which wee call the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost; for so the Scriptures plainely teach us; as, Let us make man in our image; and, behold the man is become like one of us, saith the Lord himselfe; to shew that in this unity of Essence, there is a plurality of persons; and againe, the Lord rained upon Sodome and upon Gomorrha, from the Lord out of Heaven; that is, the Sonne rained from the Father, as Iustin Martyr, Tertullian, Epiphanius, Cyprian, Irenæus, Eusebius, Cyrill, Sozomen, the Councell of Smyrna, held in the yeare of Christ 336. wherein Marcus Arethusius against the Heresie of Photinus, and many others, doe so expound that place: And so the three men that appeared unto Abraham, and that Heavenly harmony of Cherubims, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabboth, doe sufficiently declare the Trinity of persons in the Vnity of Gods Essence.

That the Essence of God is distinguished into three persons.

Gen.1.26.

Gen.19.24.

Socrates Eccl. hist. l.2.c.30.

Esay 6.3.

Ob. But then, it may be some will say, these and the like places are too obscure, to confirme the truth of so great a point.

Sol. I answer, that God at first would not shew this great mystery unto all, least that being so prone, as they were in the infancy of the Church, to fall into Idolatry, they should shake off the service of the true God, and thereby bee drawne to worship many gods; but the more his Church did increase in ability to understand, the more did God reveale unto it, both this mystery of the Trinity and also many other mysteries, of the Incarnation, Passion, Resurrection, and Ascention of Iesus Christ: And therefore what he obscurely shadowed in the time of the Patriarchs, hee did more cleerely shew unto his Prophets, and most plainely in the time of the Apostles, proclaime the same unto all people; For Christ bad them goe and baptize all men, in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghost: And so Saint Iohn saith, there be three that beare witnesse in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit: And yet as Anselmus saith, Trinitatis hæc complexio unitas potestatis est, quæ totius nostræ salutis perfectio est, this rehearsall of the Trinity sheweth but an unity of power, which is the perfection of our whole salvation; and so the Apostle tells us, these three are but one; and the Iewish Rabbins, as Galatinus saith, have observed this mystery out of the Hebrew names of God, that there are three in one, and but one in three; and so the divell himselfe, that knoweth God, though he loves him not, in the oracle of Serapis maketh this answer unto Thulis, King of Egypt, when he sent to know who should raigne after him.

Why God did not fully and plainely reveale the mysteries of the Trinity at the first.

Mat.28.19.

1 Iohn 5.7.

Anselm super. 2 Cor.13.

Galatin. de arcan. fidei, l.2.c.11.& 12.

Apud Suidam in Thulis.

πρῶτα Θεὸς, μετέπειτα λόγος, καὶ πνεῦμα σὺν αὐτοῖς,
πάντα δὲ συμφυτα ταυτα, καὶ ἓις ἐν ἔοντα τέτυκται, &c.

He that was, first God, then the Word, and then the Spirit with them, all three of one nature and compacted into one; For as in one Sunne there are, the body of the Sunne, the Sunne beames, and the heate; the beames are begotten of the Sunne, and the heate doth proceed both from the Sunne and the Sunne beames; but

Aug. de Trinit.

but the Sun it ſelfe proceeds from none; Even ſo, in the one Eſſence of God, there are the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt; the Sonne is begotten of the Father; the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from both; but the Father is of himſelfe alone: and as the fountaine begets the brook, and both the fountaine and brook do make the Poole, and yet all three is the ſame water; ſo the Father is the Fountaine which begets the Sonne, and from the Father and the Sonne proceeds the Holy Ghoſt; and yet is the Deity of all three, the ſame; in like manner, the fire hath motion, light and heat, and yet but one fire; and in the ſoule of man there are three faculties, the vegetative, the ſenſitive, and the rationall; and yet but one ſoule: and in all other creatures we may behold certaine glimps and ſimilitudes, that do after a ſort adumbrate and ſhadow out this ineffable and inexpreſſible myſtery; for by their greatneſſe, we may conſider the power of the Father; by their beauty, we may ſee the wiſdome of the Sonne; and by their ntility we may note the goodneſſe of the Holy Ghoſt; becauſe, as the Apoſtle ſaith, God left not himſelfe without witneſſe, no not wholly of the manner of his ſubſiſtence, if not to prove this bleſſed myſtery, yet at leaſt to illuſtrate it, and to prove, (as Aquinas ſaith) Non eſſe impoſſibile quo fides prædicat, that thoſe things are not impoſſible, which faith preacheth.

Idem de verbis Domini.

That there are certaine ſimilitudes of the Trinity, to be ſeene in the creatures.

Tho. p. 1 q. 32. art. 1.

And ſo the very Heathens did confeſſe; for Iamblicus, that was an Egyptian Prieſt, doth affirme, Tres deos a Pythagoreis celebrari, and Theodorus the Platoniſt, as it is in Proclus, affirmeth, that there are three chiefe workers, whereof he calleth the one a ſubſtantiall mind, the other a mentall ſubſtance, and the third the fountaine of all life; and Amelius the Platoniſt, and ſo Numenius and Platonus, and many others, are as full and as plaine in this point as may be, as any man may ſee, that will looke into Nancelius his Proem, which he confeſſeth to have taken out of Eugubinus.

Ac primum individuum, ſecundum per omnia diſtributum, tertium facientem per ſingula diſtributionem.

Nancel. in Proem.

Queſt. But it may be ſome will aſk (touching my former illuſtration) why is power aſcribed to the Father, wiſdome to the Sonne, and goodneſſe to the Holy Ghoſt, whereas all and each of the three perſons haue the ſame power, wiſdome and goodneſſe?

Reſp. S. Auguſtine anſwereth, and I have ſhewed the ſame before; that amongſt the creatures, it is wont to be obſerved, that in a Father is found a defect of power, by reaſon of his antiquity, in a Sonne is ſeen ignorance, by reaſon of his youth and inexperience of things, and in the name of a Spirit, there ſeemeth to be a kind of fearfull vehemency, as Quieſcite ab homine, cujus ſpiritus in naribus ejus, reſt not in man, whoſe ſpirit is in his noſtrils: and therefore, leaſt the like might be thought to be in theſe divine perſons, we find power aſcribed to the Father, wiſdome unto the Sonne, and goodneſſe unto the Holy Ghoſt; whereas indeed, each one of them is of the ſame power, wiſdome, and goodneſſe, as the others be: ſo we ſay, with Iuſtin Martyr, according as God hath revealed himſelfe unto us both in his Word and in his works, that μονὰς ἐν τριάδι νοεῖται, καὶ τριὰς ἐν μονάδι γνωίζεται: the Unity is underſtood in the Trinity, and the Trinity is acknowledged in the Unity.

Eſay 52.

Juſtin Martyr. in expoſ. fidei.

And although the Eſſence of God can neither be divided nor diſtinguiſhed; yet the three ſubſiſtences, or the three diverſe manners of being, in the divine eſſence, which we call the three perſons, Father, Sonne, and Holy Spirit, may be diſtinguiſhed two wayes:

The three perſons are diſtinguiſhed one from another two wayes.

Viz. { 1 By their perſonall actions. } And
{ 2 By their nominall relations. }

First, the actions of the perſons are either { 1 Outward, or
{ 2 Inward.

1 By their perſonall actions.

First, all outward actions are called communicable; becauſe although after a ſort, they are appropriated to each Perſon, as the Father to ſend the Sonne, and to create the world; the Sonne to be ſent, to be incarnate, and to redeeme mankind; and the Holy Ghoſt to appeare in the forme of a Dove, and like cloven tongues of fire, and to work in our hearts, for our conſolation and ſanctification; yet, Opera

1 The outward works of God are common to each perſon of the Trinity.

Trinitatis ad extra sunt indivisa, these outward workes of the Trinity are so indivisible, that we cannot so properly ascribe them to any one, but we find that they may be likewise ascribed to any other; for as Nazianzen truly affirmeth of the three persons themselves, Non possum tria discernere quin subitò ad unum referar, nec possum unum cogitare, quin trium fulgore confundar; so may we say of their outward operations, that although they be affirmed of one, yet may they presently be referred to all three; and so we find them in many passages of the holy Scriptures; as redemption and sanctification to the Father, Acts 20. 28. 1 Pet. 1. 2. Creation and sanctification to the Sonne, Ioh. 1. 3. 1 Cor. 1. 2. And creation and redemption to the Holy Ghost, Psal. 33. 6. Eph. 4. 30.

Ascribed to each person.

And besides, these outward operations are transient and voluntary; for that God in these things is Liberrimus Agens, a free Agent, so that he might have chosen, whether to do them, or not do them; and therefore in all these works, Election, Creation, Gubernation, Redemption, Sanctification, Glorification, there can be ascribed none other cause, but quia voluit, because he would; for whatsoever pleased the Lord, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the sea, and in all deepe places: And therefore these outward actions, and so likewise those names, which are given unto these Persons, in regard of these actions, as Creatour unto the Father, Redeemer unto the Sonne, Comforter and Sanctifier unto the Holy Ghost, are not altogether sufficient to expresse the differences of these persons.

Outward works voluntary.

Outward works how they difference the persons.

Chemnit. p. 1. loc. com p. 103. Ursinus Catechis. p. 1. q. 24. Bucan. loc. com. p. 30. q. 14 Ex Aug. 2. ad. contra Felician. c. 9 in Joh. 20.

Yet, as our Divines have well observed it out of S. Augustine, we must know, that these works ad extra, are indivisa, in respect of the persons considered absolutely, according to their essence, in which they are all one, & do work all together, and alike; but if we consider the persons relatively, according to the manner of their subsistence, then we find their outward workes, howsoever undivided in the things done, yet to come under a distinction of appropriation unto this or that Person of the Trinity; for as there is an order amongst them in the manner of their existence, as Athanasius sheweth, The Father is of none, the Sonne is begotten of the Father alone, and the Holy Ghost proceeding both of the Father and the Sonne; so there is an order in the manner of their working, as our Saviour sheweth, the Father worketh of himselfe, the Sonne from the Father, for the Sonne can do nothing of himselfe, but what he seeth the Father do, and the Holy Ghost from both; for all things that the Father hath are mine, therefore said I, he shall take of mine, and shew it unto you; and all this sheweth no subjection of any one person to the other, they being all one and all equall in nature, but it setteth down only a determination of the actions arising from the diverse manner of existence in the persons; and so the holy Scripture in very many pregnant places, doth expresse the same by such phrases and formes of speech, as doe most plainely shew such actions to proceed immediately from such a person; as, when any action is determined to the Father, according to the manner of his existence as Father, then do the Scriptures say, à quo vel ad quem, from whom, or for whom, or to whom, as you may see in Iames 1. 17. Every good giving, and every perfect gift is from above, and commeth downe from the Father of lights; and in Prov. 16. 5. The Lord hath made all things for himselfe; and Eph. 3. 21. Unto him be glory in the Church by Iesus Christ; and when any action is ascribed to the Sonne, according to the manner of his existence, as Sonne; then do the Scriptures say, Per quem, & in quo, by whom, or through whom, and in whom, as Ephes. 3. 21. To him be glory by or through Iesus Christ; and Eph. 1. 3. In whom God hath blessed us with all spirituall blessings; and when any action is assigned to the Holy Ghost, according to the manner of his existence, as Holy Ghost, then do the Scriptures say, quo & ex quo, by whom, and of whom, as Rom. 8. 14. As many as are led by the Spirit of God; and John 3. 6, That which is borne of the Spirit is Spirit: and in regard of these expressions of the works of God by such Phrases, S. Basil doth expound that place of the Apostle in Rom. 11. 36. Of him, and through him, and for him are all things, to be a plaine distinction of the three persons,

Danæus Isagog p. 1. l. 1. c. 22.

Iames 1. 17.

Pro. 16. 5. Eph. 3. 21.

Eph. 1. 3.

Rom 8. 14.

Ioh 3. 6.

Basil. de Spiritu. Sancto c. 14.

ſons, by the manner of their actions, as well as their exiſtence, becauſe all things are of the Holy Ghoſt, by the Son, for the Father, as the ſame Father ſpeaketh.

Secondly, the inward actions of theſe perſons are { 1 Permanent. 2 Neceſſary. 3 Incommunicable. } For 2 Three properties of Gods inward actions.

First, they are ſo permanent, that as the Sun doth alwaies beget his beames, and both Sun and beames do ſend forth the heat; ſo the Father from all eternity ever did, and now doth, and ever will beget his Sonne; and both Father and Sonne doſpire and breath forth the Holy Ghoſt: and therefore Origen ſaith excellent well, Salvator noſter ſplendor eſt gloriæ; ſplendor autem non ſemel naſcitur, & deinceps deſinit naſci, &c. Our bleſſed Saviour is the brightneſſe of Gods glory; but the brightneſſe of glory is not once begotten, and then afterwards ceaſing to be begotten: but as often as the light riſeth from whence the brightneſſe ſpringeth, ſo often doth the brightneſſe of glory ariſe: And our Saviour (ſaith he) is the wiſdome of God; but the wiſdome of God is the brightneſſe of that eternall light: Et ideo Salvator ſemper naſcitur, and therefore, as the Scripture ſaith, Ante colles generat me, before the mountaines were laid, he begetteth me; and not (as ſome do erroniouſly read it) Generavit me, he hath begotten me; ſo the truth is, that the Sonne of God is ever begotten, and the Holy Spirit ever proceeding.

1 The inward actions of God are ever in doing.

Origen. hom. 6. in Ierem. Sed quotieſcunq; ortium fuerit lumen ex quo ſplendor oritur, toties oritur ſplendor gloriæ. Luke 12.

The Father doth ever beget the Sonne.

Secondly, theſe inward actions are no voluntary operations, I meane ſuch, as that the Father might either beget the Sonne, or not beget him, and the Father and the Sonne might either ſpire forth the Holy Ghoſt, or not ſpire him forth; but they be ſo abſolutely neceſſary, that they cannot otherwiſe be; becauſe it is the property of the nature of God the Father, to beget God the Sonne, as it is for him to be a God; ſo that he can no more relinquiſh or leave to beget the Sonne, than he can leave to be a God, as S. Cyril ſheweth. And 2 The inward actions are neceſſary.

Cyrillus l. 1. c. 3. theſaur.

Thirdly, theſe inward actions are ſo incommunicable, that whatſoever is proper to the one, can no wayes be aſcribed to the other; Quia hoc eſt proprium Patris, quòd ſolus eſt Pater, & quòd ab alio non eſt niſi à ſe; for this is the property of the Father, that he alone is the Father, and that he is not from any other, but onely of himſelfe; and this is the property of the Sonne, that he alone is begotten of the Father alone, co-equall unto him and co-eſſentiall; and this is the property of the Holy Ghoſt, to be not made, not begotten, but from the Father and the Sonne equally proceeding: And therefore we ſay, that theſe incommunicable and proper operations of the Perſons do ſo make the true and reall diſtinction of the Perſons, that the Father cannot be the Sonne, nor the Holy Ghoſt; that the Son cannot be the Father, nor the Holy Ghoſt; and that the Holy Ghoſt cannot be the Father nor the Sonne; ſo that in a word all three is the ſame Eſſence, and yet neither of the three can be the perſon of the other.

3 The inward actions are incommunicable.

Et hoc eſt proprium Filij, quòd à Patre genitus eſt ſolus a ſolo, & hoc eſt proprium Spiritus Sancti, quòd nec genitus eſt, nec ingenitus eſt, ſed à Patre & Filio æqualiter procedit.

Secondly, from theſe inward operations of theſe perſons do proceed the nominall relations of the one unto the other; as Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt, which do likewiſe make a true and reall diſtinction of the perſons; for the Father is not a name of Eſſence, but of relation unto the Son; and the Son is not a name of Eſſence, but of relation unto the Father; and ſo the Holy Ghoſt proceeding, is not a name of Eſſence, but of relation to the Father and the Son; and therfore theſe names are ſo proper to each Perſõ, that the name of the one cannot be aſcribed to the other.

2 By their nominall relations.

Ob. But you will ſay, that the Sonne is called Father, as Eſay 9. 6. He is ſaid to be the Father of eternities.

Sol. I anſwer that the name of Father is taken two wayes. { 1 οὐσιαδῶς, Eſſentially. 2 ὑποστατικῶς, Perſonally. }

The name of Father is taken two wayes.

1 Eſſentially, and ſo in reſpect of the creatures, each Perſon of the Trinity may be rightly termed Father.

2 Perſonally, and ſo the firſt Perſon only is Father; becauſe he only doth beget his Sonne.

And thus you ſee, that although the divine Eſſence is only one, yet that there are three three persons in this one Essence; not that the Essence begets either Essence or Person; but because the Person of the Father begetteth the Person of the Sonne, and both Father and Sonne do eternally spire and send forth the Person of the Holy Ghost; as if it be lawfull to compare great things with small, in the reasonable faculty of mans soule, when the understanding considereth it selfe, it begetteth an image of it selfe, it being in that reflected action the proper object of it selfe; from the desire or appetite of which image, so produced, there ariseth a mutuall love and delight betwixt the understanding and his image; so in the eternall essence of the Godhead, the Father looking upon himselfe, begeteth the image of himselfe, which is his Sonne, and from the mutuall love and delight of both these persons one to another, the Holy Ghost proceedeth, as the common beame of these two incomprehensible Lights; and so these diverse manner of existence of the godhead in the persons, are distinctly and most truly three, but as Tertullian pithily saith, Non statu, sed gradu; non substantia, sed forma; non potestate, sed specie; Not in state, but in degree; not in substance, but in forme; not in power, but in shew; and these three are altogether one in their essence, wherein, as the Hebrewes teach, there is unus uniens & unitum, & omninò punctum unum; One, uniting, united, and all one point, each one contained in another, and all in one, as in a crowne or sphere incingible, whose center is every where, and circumference no where.

Athanas. 2. Dialog. de Trinit.

Thom. p. 1 q. 27. art. 1. & 3. Mornæus de verit. Christ. Relig. c. 5. Kecketm. System. Theol. l. 1. c. 3.

Tertull. in l. cont. Praxeam c. 2.

But if any shall further inquire of the manner, how the Father begetteth the Sonne, or how the Father and the Sonne do spire and send forth the Holy Spirit, I must answer, as Galenus did, in a point far inferiour to this, which is of infinite profundity; How this is done, if you enquire, you will be taken for one that hath no understanding, either of your owne infirmity, or of the power of the Creatour: And the Fathers do often dehort us from the curiosity of explaining the manner of divine mysteries; for that worthy Nazianzen saith, You heare the generation of the Sonne, be not curious to know the manner; You heare, The Holy Ghost proceedeth; be not busie, to enquire how; And in another place he saith, Let the generation of God be honoured with silence; it is much for thee to have learned, that he was begotten; as for the manner how, we grant it not to be understood by Angels, much lesse by thee: And if the Fathers of the Councell of Lateran had followed the counsell of this Father, they had never gone so farre to enquire how Christ is in the Sacrament, and so positively to conclude it to be, by that unheard, unknowne, incredible, and impossible way of transubstantiation: And therefore if we would not erre with them, or beyond them, in this point, farre more difficult than that, let us not be too curious to inquire how these things can be, but let us faithfully believe them to be a Trinity of Persons in the Unity of the Divine Essence, and each person to have the whole divine Essence so communicated unto it, as that all the three Persons must needs be co-eternall, co-essentiall, and co-equall.

Galenus l. 15. de usu partium. τὸ ὅπως.

τὸ ὑγιὲς. Nazian. Orat. 1. de Theolog. ἀκοὴς γεννηθὲν

That we should not inquire too farre into the manner of divine mysteries.

But because the second Person, which is the Sonne, and which the Evangelist here meaneth by the Word, (as hereafter I shall shew unto you) was incarnate, and made flesh, you must give me leave to insist chiefly upon that Person, and to discusse these three especiall points concerning the same.

Three points handled.

1 Touching this Person, how excellent he is.
2 Touching this Name here used, why he is called Λόγος, the Word.
3 Touching this worke, why he was incarnate, and made flesh.

For the first, that is, the excellency of this Person, I will onely shew these three things.

1 The excellency of the second person, where three things are handled touching the Person of the Son.

1 That for time, he is God, co-eternall
2 For nature, co-essentiall } unto his Father.
3 For dignity, co-equall.

And these are the chiefest points, that by Gods help and assistance, I do intend to speak of the second person of the godhead, which is the Sonne.

CHAP.

Chap. III.

Of the Co-eternity of the Word with his Father.

First, that this Word was, before he was made flesh, the words ἐγένετο, & γενόμενον, the first used here, and the second in the fourth Chapter to the Galathians, do make it plaine; for that they signifie one that first was, and afterwards was made, that which he was not: And therefore he doth not say, that the Word was made first, and then was made flesh, but that the Word, which in the beginning, and before all beginnings was, in the fulnesse of time, was made flesh: And this may be further proved by almost infinite arguments; as 1 That the Word was, before he was made flesh.

First, He is the Sonne of the Father, the wisdome and the power of God; and therefore either the Father was without a Sonne, (and then he could be no Father) and God was without his wisdome, and without his strength, or els he was never without his Sonne; but to say that God was without his wisdome, or without his strength, is most absurd: Ergo, non ex tempore genitus est, qui cuncta tempora condidit; and therfore he was not begotten in time, which created all times, saith S. Augustine.

1 Proofe.

Aug. Ep. 6. 6.

Secondly, he is God; for as the Christian Poet doth most rightly say,

Si deitas verbi non nostri est insita carni,
Tum Christus falsi corporis umbra fuit.

2 Proofe.

Either Christ is God, or he is no man, nor any Saviour of man: and he is no titular God, but by nature God; he is the true Iehovah, which was, which is, and which shall be; and therefore everlasting; for, thou art God from everlasting, and world without end.

That Christ is a true God, is proved,
1 From Scriptures.

But that the second person of the Godhead is a true God, both apparent Scriptures, and unanswerable reasons drawn from Scriptures do make it plaine. For

First, the Scriptures call him the true Iehovah, as we may see by the collation, and comparing of these places, viz. Exodus 3. 2. 13. 4. 14. 24. 20. 2. and Acts 7. 30. 32. 1 Cor. 10. 4. 9, &c. And so the Scriptures call him God, as Gen. 32. 28. Psal. 45. 7. Esay 7. 14. Matthew 3. 3. Heb. 1. 8. And therfore S. Iohn saith; καὶ Θεὸς ἦν ὁ λόγος, And the Word was God; and Christ himself saith, This is life eternall to know thee to be the onely true God, and whom thou hast sent, Iesus Christ; for these words are thus to be expounded, that they know thee and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ, to be the only true God; because these two persons are but the very selfe-same Essence: So Thomas saith unto Christ, My Lord and my God: And so we find the same truth expressed, Acts 20. 28, Rom. 8. 5. 1 Ioh. 3. 16. 1 Ioh. 5. 20. 1 Tim. 3. 16. Psal. 47. 6. and in many other places of the Scripture, which we may obviously meet, and would be here tedious to relate.

Ioh. 17. 3.

Ioh. 20. 28.

Secondly, we may shew the same by infallible and unanswerable reasons, drawn from Scriptures; as,

Secondly, by unanswerable reasons drawn from Scripture.
First, from the incommunicable properties of God

First, from those incommunicable properties of the Deity, which are properly ascribed unto him; as

First, to be omnipotent, Ioh. 3. 31. Heb. 1. 3 Phil. 3. 21. Apo. 1. 18.

Secondly, to remit sins; not only instrumentally, as the Ministers do, as we see in Mat. 16. 19. Ioh. 20. 23. But absolutely, by his own proper power and authority, as we see in Mat 9. 6. Mar. 2. 5, 7, 9. Luke 5. 20.

Thirdly, to be in many places at the same instant, as Mat. 18. 20. 28. 20.

Fourthly, to have the same equall power with the Father, Ioh. 5. 17. c. 16. 15.

Fiftly, to raise himselfe from the grave, Rom. 1. 4. Ioh. 10. 18.

Sixtly, to send forth, and to giue the Holy Ghost, Zach. 12. 10. Ioh. 16. 7.

Secondly from those relations that he hath with God, as to be μονογενὴς, the only begotten Sonne of God, Ioh. 1. 18. to be the brightnesse of his glory, and as the Poet saith,

Secondly, from the relations that he hath with God.

If

If God had once no Sonne, then once must he
Without the brightnesse of his glory be.

To be the arme of God, Esay 53. 1. Which the Fathers do expound of Christ.

And if God did in time his arme attaine,
A time there was, when God did maim'd remaine.

To be the Image of the Father. *Ioh.*14.7,8,9. 2 *Cor.*4.4. *Col.*1.15. And to be the very forme of God, for the Apostle saith, that he being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery to be equall with God: therfore he must needs be true God.

To be the forme of God is to be a very God.

1 Reason.

1 Because the forme of God is most simple and essentiall, and not compounded or accidentall; for that in God there is no composition, no accidents; Et nihil est in Deo, quod non sit ipse Deus; nor any other thing, which is not God; because the divine Essence Identificat sibi omnia quæ sunt in Diuinis, doth identifie, or deifie all things that are in the Deity.

Gabriel. Biel super 1. sentent. dist. 1. q. 5

2 Because the word ὑπαρχων, one existing and being in the forme of God, doth plainly signifie the very nature of God; for as his being in the forme of man, proveth that he was a very man; so his being in the forme of God, and his just and lawfull thinking, that it was no wrong, or robbery, to be equall with God, doth most substantially prove that he was a very God by nature, before he was incarnate and made man; for who can be in the forme of God, but very God? Or who can rightly be equall with God, but God? For to whom will ye liken God, or what likenesse will ye compare unto him, saith the Prophet? and therefore S. Basil saith, that to be in the forme of God, is as much as to exsist in the essence of God; for that, as to take upon him the forme of a servant, signifieth that our Lord was made partaker of the humane nature; so by saying, that he was in the forme of God, he ascribeth unto him the propriety of the nature of God: and so, discussing the words of the Apostle, which is the image of the invisible God, he saith, that this image was not made with hands, neither was it the work of any art or cogitation; but a living image, yea life it selfe, retaining the identity of the Godhead, not in the similitude of any figure, but in the substance of the same; and so S. Ambrose, S. Augustine, S. Hilarie, Pet. Lombard, and diverse others, do most truly interpret this being of him in the forme of God, to prove him to be the true and eternall God.

Esay 40.18.

Basil. l. 1 cont. Eunomium.

Col. 1.15.

Amb. l. 7. Ep. 47. Aug. l. de fide ad Pet. & l. 1. c. 1. de Trinit. Hilar. l. 12 de Trin. Lombard l. 3. dist. 5

Thirdly, from the Epithetes ascribed unto him.

3 From those Epithetes which are ascribed unto him, and are only agreeable to the divine nature, as

1 To be the Authour of our election, *Ioh.*13.18.
2 To know the secrets of our hearts, *Mat.*9.4,5. *Mar.*2.8 *Luk.*5.22.
3 To illuminate us, *Ioh.*1.9.
4 To heare the prayers of them that call upon him, *Ioh.*14.14.
5 To judge the quicke and the dead *Ioh.*5.22.
6 To give unto his servants everlasting life, *Ioh.*5.24.
7 To be truly rich, and so able to do, and to bestow these great rewards upon his servants; for he that is truly rich, must needs be the true and eternall God; but Christ (saith the Apostle) is rich; for he being rich, for our sakes became poore; therfore he must needs be the true God. That God is truly rich, it appeareth hence, that he only is El Shadai, a God of all sufficiency; and therefore he saith, If I be hungry, I will not tell thee; for all the world is mine, and all that therein is; and he only may most truly say,

2 Cor.8.9.

Psal.50.12.

Virg. Eglog. Mille meæ Siculis errant in montibus agnæ;

All the beasts of the forrest are mine, and so are all the cattell upon a thousand hils.

Rom.3.11.

Neither is he onely rich in temporall riches, but in spirituall gifts and graces also; for Saint Paul speaketh of the riches of the Benignity, and Lenity, and long-sufferance of God; and in *Eph.*1.18. he speaketh of the riches of his grace, where he calleth God rich in mercy, or rich in glory; and *Rom.*11.33. He crieth out, O the deepnesse of the riches both of the wisdome and knowledge of God! and therefore it is most plaine, that God is truly rich: and that none else is rich but God, it may be as easily confirmed; for that every man, if he doth but consider his his owne eſtate, may ſay with the Prophet David, I am poore and in miſery; and our wants are a great deale more than our wealth; and what we have we have not of our ſelves, but we have received them from God; for what haſt thou that thou haſt not received, ſaith the Apoſtle? And what thou haſt received, is properly none of thine: and therefore, as thou cameſt naked, and broughteſt nothing into the world, ſo thou ſhalt returne naked and carie nothing out of the world againe. 1 Cor 4 7. Iob 1.21.

Obiect. But againſt this you will obiect, that the Scripture ſaith, Abraham, Lot, Iob, and diverſe others were very rich; and yet no gods; and therefore, that every one which is rich is not a god.

Sol. I anſwer, firſt, that theſe men were not truly rich, but were ſo thought to be in the opinion of men; and therefore ſo called after the manner of men; for he onely is a rich man, qui nihil quærat, nihil appetat, nihil optet amplius, which neither doth, nor can ſeek, nor wiſh, nor deſire any more than he hath, as Cicero ſaith; but none of theſe were ſuch; for Abraham and the reſt of them did profeſſe, that they were pilgrims and ſtrangers here on earth, and therfore ſought their countrey above in heaven. No man in this world is truly rich. Heb. 11.14.

And ſecondly, I ſay that theſe worldly riches are no true riches, but onely vaine and imaginary riches; for they have made many proud, none better; if they had, why did the wiſeſt Philoſopher, ſo pronounced by the voice of the Oracle, caſt all his gold into the ſea, that he might be happy, and the wiſeſt among the ſonnes of men, ſo pronounced by the voice of God, pray aſwell againſt riches as poverty, and the beſt Kings in this Iland, and many other Princes in many other countries, beſides the Apoſtles that forſook all to follow Chriſt, change their princely thrones, for poore cells, and their kingly ſcepters for the divine Scriptures? And therfore he was a better husband than Philoſopher, that termed theſe riches, goods; but he mended the matter well that called them goods of fortune; falſe goods, aſcribed to a falſe patrone; for as there is no goodneſſe in them, ſo there is no fortune to give them; the meaning therefore (as I take it) is this, that it is a chance, if ever theſe riches prove good to any; for many times they hurt the owners, and diſquiet others, and as many times and oftner too, the worſe men have them, and the beſt men want them; and yet they are never the better for having them, nor the other never the worſe for wanting them; for I heare Saint Peter and Saint Iohn (the eldeſt and deareſt Apoſtles) ſay, gold and ſilver have I none, and I read that Iudas (the youngeſt and the worſt Apoſtle) bare the bag; and I read that the divell ſaid, All theſe things will I give thee, and they are mine to give; and that Dives was rich, and Lazarus poore; and yet now the poore is made rich, and caried up to heaven, and the rich is poore, and ſent down to hell: and therefore it is apparent, that theſe falſe goods can be no true riches, and ſo conſequently that none is truly rich, but only God. Prov. 30.8. Mat. 19.27. D. Hall now Biſhop of Exeter. Acts 3.6. Mat. 4.9. Luke 16.19.20.

Now to prove that Chriſt is rich, beſides the foreſaid teſtimony of the Apoſtle, our Saviour himſelfe ſaith, all that the Father hath, are mine; and of the Holy Ghoſt he ſaith, he ſhall receive of mine and declare unto you; and ſo the Evangeliſt ſaith, that of his fulneſſe we have all received, and grace for grace: and therefore Chriſt being truly rich, inriched with all the riches of the Deity, power, ſtrength, wiſdome, goodneſſe, mercy, and ſuch like, he muſt needs be the true and eternall God. Iohn 16. Iohn 1.16.

Fourthly, from the univerſall effects and proper works of God; for he that created, and preſerveth, and governeth all the things that are created, is the true and everlaſting God; but this word created all things, and doth ſtill ſuſtaine and governe all things; and therefore he muſt needs be the true God. Fourthly, from the proper works of God.

The major is cleare of it ſelfe, becauſe (as Moſes ſaith) In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth: And Gen. 1.1.

The minor is confirmed by the teſtimony of the holy Scriptures, which ſay, Thy throne O God is for ever and ever, the Scepter of thy kingdome is a right Scepter; and in another Pſalme he ſaith, And thou Lord in the beginning haſt laid That Chriſt created all things. Pſal. 45.7. Pſal. 102.25.

the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the workes of thy hands: so the Evangelist saith, that all things are made by this Word, and without this Word, was made nothing that was made; so Saint Paul saith, that all things were created by him, aswell those things which are in Heaven, as those things which are on the Earth: And so all the Orthodoxe Fathers do subscribe unto the same truth; for Ignatius speaking of Christ, useth the very words of the Evangelist, that he was in the world, and the world was made by him, and yet the world knew him not; and Iustin Martyr saith, that by this Word both Heaven and Earth, and all other creatures were created; and Irenæus lib.2.cap.2. against heresies, Athenagoras in his Apologie for the Christians, Clemens Alexandrinus lib.1. Pædagogi, Tertullian in his Apollogetico, Saint Cyprian in his second Booke against the Iewes, and many more, do largely and plainely prove by unanswerable arguments, that all things were created by this Word; and that Christ governeth all things, the Authour of the Epistle to the Hebrewes saith, that he beareth up all things with his mighty Word; and our Saviour saith unto the Iewes, my Father worketh yet, and I worke; and S. Paul saith, that he is before all things, and that by him all things do consist.

Iohn 1.2.

Col.1.16.

Ignatius in Ep. ad Tarsenses.
Iust. Mart Orat.1. ad Græcos.

That Christ governeth all things.
Heb.1.2 3.

Ioh.5.17.

Col.1.17.

5 From the prayers which all Saints have made, and that divine worship which they exhibited, and which indeed is due to him; for we are to pray to none but to God; because we believe in none, but in God; and because none but God can at all times heare us, and at any time helpe us; but prayers shall be ever made unto Christ, and daily shall he be praised, saith the Psalmist; and so the Saints do, and ever have prayed unto him, as unto the onely God, which can deliver them out of their distresse: and therefore this Word, that was made flesh, did make all flesh, and is indeed the true and eternall God, as we may see in *Pro.*8.12. *Ioh.*1.1. *Apo.*1.8. and as I have by these unanswerable arguments sufficiently proved unto you.

Fiftly, from the prayers of the Saints.

Iohn 5.23.
1 Iohn 2.22.23.

Rom.14 11.
Phil 2.10.

But against this eternall generation and everlasting Godhead of this Sonne of God, both the old Arrians and the new upstart Ministers of Transilvania, that, like evill weeds, did spring up out of Arrius his ashes, do object, and indeavour with the wit of hell to prove that this God of heaven was no God, before his incarnation, before he was made man; for

The objections of the Arrians against the eternall Godhead of Christ.

*Ob.*1. They do object that S. Luke saith he shall be called the Sonne of God; therefore he was not called before his incarnation; and so Esayas saith, that unto us a child is borne, and unto us a sonne is given, and he shall be called wonderfull, the mighty God, and the Prince of peace; and therefore, as Magistrates are not called Magistrates, before they are made Magistrates; so was not he called the mighty God, before he was borne and given unto us: this was the opinion of Arrius and Servetus, that the Sonne of God was nothing before his incarnation, but only a decree in the mind of God, to make this man Iesus Christ, and to repleniſh him with abundant gifts of the Deity.

Esay 9.6.

Sol. But to this Danæus briefly answereth, that these men say, he shall be called after the manner of the Hebrewes, pro verè manifestabitur; he shall be truly manifested and declared to be the Son of God; so that, he shall be called, doth not signifie that he should then begin to be, but that then he should begin to be manifested what he was before: besides, we may yeeld, that then he should begin to be, and to be called a God, subsisting in the humane nature; for this may apparently be collected out of the words, both of the Prophet and Evangelist. for in that the Prophet saith, unto us a child is born, this is to be understood of his humane nature; and in that he saith, unto us a Son is given, it is to be understood of his divine nature; Quia natus ex humanitate, datus ex divinitate; datus qui nesciret exordium, natus qui sentiret occasum; datus quo nec Pater esset antiquior, natus qui & matre esset junior; & sic qui erat datus est, & qui non erat natus est; because he is born in respect of his humanity, and given in respect of his Deity; for he was given, which had no beginning; and he was born, which should have ending; he was given, which was as ancient as his Father, and he was borne, that was younger than his mother; so Danæus Isagog. Christ was a God from eternity, but he began to be a God existing in the humanity, when he was made flesh.

Eusebius Emysse-nus.

so he that was, was given unto us, and he that was not, was borne unto us, as Eusebius Emyssenus saith; and therefore this Sonne, that ever was a God, in respect of his divine nature, could not be called nor said to be a God, existing in the humane nature, untill this Sonne was given to be incarnate, and till this child was borne unto us; and so I say of the words of S. Luke, that he, which was ever the Sonne of God, in respect of his Godhead, should now be called the Sonne of God, existing in the Manhood.

Object. 2. They object, that S. Iohn calleth him λόγος θεὸς, the Word of God; but God spake no words before the Creation, when first he said, Fiat Lux, Let there be light: and therefore this Word before then could not be.

Sol. To this I answer, first, that they do exceedingly corrupt the Text, in calling him, the Word of God; for S. Iohn doth not call him, the Word of God, but simply, the Word; to shew the difference betwixt that Word of the Lord, which came unto the Prophets and Apostles, and is left unto us in the Scriptures, or that was at any time spoken by God, at the Creation, or since the Creation, unto the Patriarchs, or to any other servant of God, and this everlasting Word, which ever was, and is, an eternall God; and therefore S. Cyril saith, that he is not λόγος προφορικὸς, seu ῥητὸς, any sound of the ayre, which is breathed out of the mouth of God, and is uttered by the help of the tongue; because God hath neither mouth, lips, nor tongue; neither is he λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, nec ἔμπνους nec φωνὴ σημαντική, any inward, or inbred word, or significative voice of any such conceived words; because none of these is any subsistent thing, but as it were, an accident in the subject, which cannot be said to be in God; but he is λόγος ἔνυπος, οὐσιώδης, ὑφεστὼς; the essentiall, substantiall, and subsistent word, as hereafter I shall more amply and plainly shew unto you, when I come to discusse the reasons, why he is called λόγος, the Word.

If that the Word in time from God did come, A time there was when God himselfe was dumbe.

Cyrill 1. Thesaur. That Christ is no accidentall, but an eternall essentiall Word.

Object. 3. They do object, that the wisdome of God saith, Dominus creavit me initium viarum suarum, ante secula fundavit me; which, according to the words, is thus in English; God created me the beginning of his wayes, before the Worlds he established me.

Prov. 8. 22.

Sol. I answer, that concerning this place of Salomon, I find diverse sorts of expositions.

1 The Iewes say, that by this Wisdome is understood the Law, which was created to be the beginning of Gods wayes; and, as they say, two thousand yeares before the world was made; because in the thirtieth verse they find two iom; that is, two dayes, which they interpret of two thousand yeares; because a day with God, is as a thousand yeares.

A Iewish fiction.

2 The Samosatenian Hereticks say, that this place is to be understood not of Christ, but of that vertue of God, whereby he hath wisely created, and discreetly governeth all those things that are created.

Psal. 90. 4.

3 The Arrians yeelding that it was spoken of the Sonne of God, do say, that it proveth him to be made and created by the Father, and therefore not eternally begotten of the Father.

But against the Iewes I say, that it cannot be spoken of the Law, because the Law is not created, but promulgated and shewed unto us; to teach us to know what is good and acceptable unto God; for if it were created, then it must be created of nothing, and must be either a substance or an accident, and the breach thereof would prove to be the offending of a creature, and not the Creatour, which is most absurd; and if it were created, yet that it should be created two thousand yeares before the world was made, is more absurd; for that it should be then created before any time; because time began when the world was made; (as Moses sheweth:) And therefore, if the Law was created two thousand yeares before the world was made, then Moses doth not well, to make time to have his beginning when the world began; and therefore the meaning of those words, I was Delicia ejus, die, die; (which is an Hebraisme, signifying quotidie, daily, or alwaies) is this, that Christ before all Worlds was ever and alwaies the onely joy

That the Law was not created.

If 2000 yeares, it might be two millions of yeares, because there was no measure of time, nor number of yeares before the creation.

and delight of God, in whom (as he saith himselfe) he was well pleased, he was fully satisfied and contented.

Mat. 4. ult.

Luke 11. 49.

Secondly, against the Samosatenians, I say, that whatsoever is spoken of any vertue, or any wisdome of God, must needs be spoken of Christ; because he is the vertue and wisdome of God, as S. Luke sheweth: and therefore the same things that are here ascribed unto that wisdome of God, are elsewhere ascribed unto Christ the Sonne of God, as you may see, Ioh. 1. 1. Heb. 1. 2. Col. 1. 17. and so Iustin Martyr and Clemens Alexandrinus do expound this place of Salomon, of the Sonne of God.

Iustin in Dialog. cum Tryph.

Thirdly, against the Arrians, I find diverse answers; as Whether the Arrians corrupted the Text.

First, some think the Arrians, as they used to do in other places, corrupted the Text, and writ ἔκτισε pro ἐκτήσατο; that is, created me, in stead of possessed me; but I think this could not be, because Iustin Martyr, that lived before the Arrians were hatched, and Athanasius himselfe doth read it, ἔκτισε, created me: and therefore,

Epiphan. haeres. 69 Basil. l. 1. cont. Eunom Hieron. in Ep. ad Cypr.

Secondly, Epiphanius, Saint Basil, Saint Hierome, and others, do think that the vulgar Edition is not well translated; for that the Hebrew word, which Salomon useth, shou'd not be translated ἔκτισε, with an iota, but ἐκτήσατο with an eta in the middest of the word; and the first is, he created me, but the other is, he possessed me; and therefore Aquila translates it thus, Κύριος ἐκτήσατο με ἀρχὴν ὁδῶν κατεργασμένων αὐτοῦ; And Tremellius, Iehova possidebat me principio viæ suæ, or, ab initio operum suorum, as others will have it; and so is the vulgar Latine, and our own last English Translation, The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way; and if this be true, then those ancient Fathers, S. Athanasius S. Basil, S. Cyril, and others, that were much troubled about this place, might have easily answered unto this objection of the Arrians, if they had corrected the Greeke Translation, out of the Hebrew Text.

Whether the Hebrew word be rightly translated ἔκτισε, created.

What the originall word signifieth.

But the Iewes contend, that the word in the Originall, doth as well signifie to create, as to possesse, as Rabbi Shelomo Iarchi, upon Gen. 14. 19. doth declare; for there Moses useth the same word, which Salomon useth here; and although our last English Translation reads it, Possessour of heaven and earth, yet the vulgar Latine and the Septuagint reads it, Creatour of heaven and earth: and therefore Fulgent. in resp. ad haer. ob. Arrian. That Salomon speaketh of a twofold generation of Christ.

Thirdly, Fulgentius answereth, that although Salomon should say, The Lord created me; yet could that make nothing against the eternall being of the Sonne of God; for that we may easily see Salomon speaketh here of a twofold generation of the Sonne of God.

1 Of his incarnation, in these words, The Lord created me the beginning of his wayes; and then

2 Lest we should with the Arrians imagine, that he was not, before he was incarnate, he sheweth, that Ante colles genitus erat, before the mountaines he was begotten, and brought forth, that is, in respect of his Divinity. And

1 Of his incarnation, to be made man.

That in the first place he speaketh of his incarnation, and this making of him to be flesh, there followeth none absurdity; for though he speaketh in the present tense, or preterperfect tense, after the Latines; yet is it set downe for the future tense, after the manner of the Hebrewes, who do oftentimes, especially in things pertaining to God, set down the future tense for the present; because they are as certaine to be done, as if they were already done, as Tertullian observeth; and the words immediately following, to be the beginning of his wayes, doth make this exposition the more apparently true; for what is it, to be the beginning of his waies? Nisi quod ipse via nobis est factus, but that he was made to be the way for us to walk in? for he was not made, that he should create new creatures, but that he might renew those that were lost; And therefore Saint Iames useth the like speech of the godly, saying, Of his owne will begat he us with the Word of truth, that we might be as the first fruits of his creatures; And the Prophet David useth the like speech of himselfe, when he saith, Create in me a new heart, O God: And therefore;

Iames 1. 18. Psal. 51. 10.

therefore, to be the beginning of the wayes of God, is to be the first fruits of those that are renewed, and not of those that are created; for if you look into the works of Creation, you shall heare him say, before the mountaines were setled, and before the hils, I was begotten. And then

That in the second place, he speaketh of his eternall generation, it is most manifest; for he changeth his phrase, and saith, Ante colles genita eram, before the mountaines was I begotten, as the Chalde Paraphrase hath it, or, Filiata eram, I was sonned his sonne, as some translate it; for we must note, that created and begotten, in the person of the Sonne of God, are to be distinguished; or otherwise, if we make created and begotten to be the same, we may say, that the world was begotten, which is most absurd: and therfore, seeing he saith, that this wisdome of God was both created and begotten, and that these two words do signifie two distinct and speciall things, we should consider in what respect he is said to be created, and in what respect he is said to be begotten; and then we should plainly see, that he is said to be created, as he is the Sonne of man; and that he is said to be begotten, as he is the eternall Sonne of God; for here Salomon sheweth, that he is said to be created, in respect of that nature, wherein he calleth his Father Lord; for the Lord (saith he) created me; but he calleth his Father Lord, in respect of his humane nature, and never calleth him Lord in respect of his divine nature; for, he that is borne a servant of his fathers hand-maid, according to the saying of the Psalmist, O Lord, I am thy servant, and the sonne of thine hand maid; is also begotten of his fathers essence, according to the saying of Christ, I and my Father are one: And therefore, though he calleth his Father Lord, in respect of his humanity, yet doth he never call him so, but alwaies Father, in respect of his Divinity; as, I came from the Father, and we saw his glory as the glory of the only begotten Sonne of the Father: And so you see that these words of Salomon, The Lord created me, are to be understood of his incarnation; and therefore they can prove nothing against his eternall generation: and this exposition of Fulgentius is confirmed by Nazianzen, Athanasius, S. Cyril, S. Augustine, and others: And yet

4 S. Hillary in l. de Synodis, Aquinas l. 4. c. 8. contra gentes, and Bellarmine, l. 1. c. 18. de Christo, do answer, that the eternall generation of the Sonne of God is sometimes called generation, and sometimes creation; because it is so ineffable, that it cannot be fully expressed by any one word; for generation signifieth a production in the same substance, but with a certaine mutation of the begetter; but creation signifieth a production of another substance, but without any mutation of the Creator; and the Sonne of God is so produced, as that he received the substance of the begetter: And therefore, in that respect he is said to be begotten; but he receiveth it without any mutation or alteration of the begetter; and therefore in that respect, he may be said to be created: and so he is sometimes said to be begotten, and sometimes said to be created, not that any man should thereby denie his eternity, and think him to be a creature; but that from both these words, we might receive what is fitting, and reject what seemeth to be unfit, for the declaration of this ineffable and inexplicable mystery.

Besides, it is to be noted that the generation of the Sonne of God is eternall and perpetuall; because the Sonne is continually begotten, even as the beame of the Sun doth continually rise and shine from the same; neither doth it follow from hence (as a certain bad fellow doth most maliciously write) that the generation of the Son of God is imperfect, & not fully formed; because it is alwaies in begetting; for this is but an ignorant cavill; because the generation of the Sonne by the Father, is not like the generation of one creature from another, but like to that, whereby the Sun doth beget his beames, which are alwaies begotten, and yet alwaies perfect.

Object. 4. They do object the words of David, Thou art my Sonne, this day have I begotten thee: And therefore, before that day wherein he was begotten his Sonne, he was not his Sonne.

Sol. I answer, that the words, Inquire of me, and I will give thee the Heathen

2 Of his eternall generation, as he is God.

Christ never calleth his Father Lord, in respect of his divine nature.

Psal. 116, 14.

Iohn 8.

Iohn 1.

Nazian Orat. 4. de Theolog. Athan ser. 3. con. Arr. Cyril. l. 5 c. 4, 5, 6, 7. Thesauri. Aug. l. 1. c. 12. de Trinit.

How the Word may be said to be both begotten and created.

That God doth perpetually beget his sonne.

A simile expressing the manner.

The words of David are ſpoken of Chriſt in reſpect of his man-hood.

for thine Inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the Earth for thy poſſeſſion, doe ſufficiently prove, that theſe words are ſpoken of his Incarnation, and not of his eternall generation; for how ſhould he, according to his Divinity, demand the ends of the Earth for his poſſeſſion, when as he giveth the Kingdome of Heaven, which is a thouſand times more then the Earth, to them that love him? And therefore he, which according to his God-head, poſſeſſeth all things with his Father, according to the forme of a ſervant, which hee aſſumed for our ſalvation, requireth of his Father, that he might have The Gentiles for his inheritance, and the uttermoſt parts of the Earth for his poſſeſſion: And thus the Apoſtle doth expound this place in the 13. Chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles.

Acts 13.33.

Col.1.15.

Ob. 5. Fiftly, They doe object the words of the Apoſtle, that hee is The firſt-borne of every Creature; and therefore created in the number of the Creatures.

That the words of the Apoſtle are to bee underſtood in reſpect of the humanity of Chriſt.

Sol. I anſwer, That this is alſo meant of his humanity; for that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh here of the Creatures reſtored, and not created; becauſe he is ſaid to be, Primogenitus ex mortuis, The firſt fruits of the dead; for if he were called, The firſt fruits of every Creature, according to his Deity, by what teſtimonies can it be ſhewed, that he is The firſt-borne of the dead before all Creatures, when as they could not be ſaid to be dead, which were not yet created? And therefore the Apoſtle ſaith; That whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate, to be conformed to the Image of his Sonne, that he might be the firſt-borne among many brethren; To ſhew, that he, which according to his Deity, is the onely begotten Sonne of God, without brethren, is according to his humanity, the firſt-borne among many brethren; for we muſt underſtand this difference betwixt the firſt-begotten Son of God, and the onely begotten Sonne of God; that the firſt ſheweth his humanity, whereby he became man, the firſt and chiefeſt among many brethren; and the ſecond his Divinity, whereby he is the eternall Sonne of God; for that hee gave power unto others, even as many as beleeve in him, to be made the Sonnes of God: and therefore if he be not his Sonne by nature, then without doubt he loſt the name and the truth, of being the onely begotten Sonne of God, after he began to have many brethren.

Rom.8.29.

Iohn 1.

And Chap.3.

Iohn 1.

Fulgen. in reſp. ad ob. Arrian.

But becauſe none of his ſonnes by adoption can be ſaid to be the onely begotten Sonne of God, nor to be the Sonne of God, rather then the reſt be; becauſe the ſame name of ſons, is accommodated unto them all, although divers rewards of retribution is promiſed unto them, according to the diverſity of their labours; therefore is Chriſt ſtill ſaid to be the only begotten Sonne of God; becauſe, though there be many ſonnes of God by grace; yet there is none but he alone his Sonne by Nature: And this difference doth our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe ſhew unto us, when he ſaith, I goe to my Father and to your Father, to my God and to your God; becauſe he is otherwiſe my Father and my God, then he is your Father and your God; for he is my Father eternally by nature, and he is yours in time by grace: and therefore he, that is firſt begotten in reſpect of his man-hood, among many brethren, is likewiſe ſtill the onely begotten Sonne of God, in reſpect of his God head, without any brethren. And ſo you ſee, that maugre all the ſpite of Hell, it is moſt apparantly true, that this Word is the true God, for time, coeternall unto his Father, a God from everlaſting, before all worlds.

Iohn 20.17.

Charles fitz Ieffery

And this co-eternity of the Sonne with the Father, one of our owne Engliſh Poets doth thus finely and fully expreſſe.

God alway was a Father, and was never Without his Sonne, who with him was ever;
So of himſelfe the glorious eye of heaven
Begets a beame, which with himſelfe is even
In time, in being; for the beame begun
In the ſame inſtant with his fire, the Sunne;
So from the ſpring a ſpringing ſtreame doth flow:
Which in it is, and yet doth from it goe.

So

So yeelds the incense a sweet smell, and this
Both of and with and in the incense is:
So doth the pregnant minde a word beget
Twixt whom and it, time doth no distance set;
The Sun, the spring, the incense, the minde afford
At once the beame, the streame, the smell, the word;
Can not the Father doe that in his Sonne,
Which in the creature we see daily done?
What they by him in time performe, could he
Not in himselfe doe from eternitie?
But this eternall Son-ship scornes compare;
For who can his generation declare? Esay 53.8.

And so much for the co-eternity of the Sonne with his Father.

Chap. IV.

Of the coessentiality of the Word with the Father, and the objections that are made against the same sufficiently answered.

2 That the word is co-essentiall with God.

Secondly, having heard of the eternall God-head of this Word, it followeth that I should shew unto you, how for nature he is co-essentiall unto his Father; touching which point Athanasius saith, Non res quapiam extrinsecus adinventa est Filij substantia, neque ex nihilo inducta est, sed ex Patris essentia nata est, The substance of the Sonne is no outward thing, either found or created, but begotten of the very Essence of his Father; even as you see the brightnesse springing from the light, or the vapour from the water; Neque enim splendor neque vapor est ipsa aqua, aut ipse sol, neque res alsena; For neither the light is the Sunne it selfe, nor the vapour the water it selfe; and yet they are none other things, of another kind then be the substances from whence they spring; even so the Sonne issueth from the substance of his Father; Et tamen Patris substantia non perpessa est partitionem; And yet the substance of the Father admits no partition; for as the Sunne remaineth still the same, and is no way lessened or diminished, in respect of those beames that flow from him, so the Father suffereth no mutation by having and begetting, Suam ipsius imaginem Filium, This his Sonne and eternall image; but remaining still the same, he begetteth his Sonne of the same Essence: and we finde not only all the Orthodoxe Fathers, but also the Scriptures are plaine enough, to confirme the same truth; for our Saviour saith, I and my Father are one; And so Saint Iohn having spoken of the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, saith, That these three are one: And reason it selfe must needs confirme the same thing; for seeing the Divine Essence is most simple, impartible, and indivisible, and that the Father is God, (as none denieth) and that the Sonne is God, (as I have already proved) and that the Holy Ghost is God, (as all the holy Fathers have as sufficiently confirmed) and yet that there are not three Gods but one God, (as Athanasius sheweth:) therefore it must needs follow, that all three have but one and the selfe-same Essence, and consequently, that the Sonne is ὁμοούσιος Patri, Consubstantiall or co-essentiall unto his Father: And therefore also hence it must needs follow, that (as that worthy man M. Calvin saith) our Saviour Christ is αὐτόθεος, A God of himselfe, independent, as absolute as the Father is.

Athanas. in ep. cons. Eusebium.

John 10.30.

1 John 5.7.

Athan. in Sym.

And yet for the better understanding of this point, how Christ may be said to be αὐτόθεος, God of himselfe, we must consider, that Aliud est habere essentiam Divinam à seipso, aliud habere essentiam divinam à seipsa existentem; It is one thing to have his Divine Essence from himselfe, and another thing to have his Divine Essence existing of it selfe; To say that the person of the Sonne, hath his Divine Essence, that is, his personall being from himselfe, we cannot; because it is from the Father, the Father communicating his whole Essence unto the Sonne;

Thom. p. 1 q. 33.

How Christ is God of himselfe.

and therefore wee say that the Sonne, Ratione πρόπε ὑπάρξεως, in respect of his personall being, is not αὐτόθεος, God of himselfe, but God of God, and Light of Light, (as the Nicen Councell hath it;) because the person of the Sonne existeth from the person of the Father; but to say that the Sonne hath his Divine Essence existing of it selfe, is most certaine; Quia remota relatione ad Patrem, sola restat essentia, quæ est à seipsa; for taking away the relation of the Sonne unto the Father, there remaineth but the Essence, which is of it selfe: and therefore wee say that the Sonne, Quoad essentiam absolutam, In respect of his absolute Essence, is αὐτόθεος, A God of himselfe, because the Essence of the Son is the very same that the Essence of the Father is: And so to this truth, set downe by Calvine, Bellarmine himselfe subscribeth.

Idem ibid.

Bellar. de Christo.

But the old and new Arrians cannot endure to yeeld him to bee ὁμοούσιος, of the same Essence with his Father, but rather ὁμοιούσιος, of some other such like Essence, but not of the same substance, as Athanasius sheweth: And therefore they doe object,

The object. of the Arrians.

Athan in l. de expositione fidei.

1 Against the words used by the Fathers.

First, Against the Word heere used by the Fathers, to expresse this truth.

Secondly, Against the truth and true meaning of the matter, contained and declared by this Word.

Idem in l. de decret. Con. Nicen.

Ob. First, for the word ὁμοούσιος, though it was first found out by themselves, yet of all other words the Arrians could not indure it, as Athanasius witnesseth; because (as they said) neither οὐσία, Essence, nor ὁμοούσιος, of the same Essence, can be found any where in all the Scriptures. But

That the word Essence is plainely derived out of Scriptures. Rom. 1. 20.

Sol. To this Epiphanius answereth, that although the name of Essence in plaine tearmes, is not found either in the Old or New Testament; yet the sense and signification thereof, the Synonomie and aquivalencie of the same, is obviously found in many places; for the Apostle speaketh of his eternall power, Καὶ θειότης, and God-head; and what is θειότης, his God-head, but οὐσία τοῦ Θεοῦ, the very Essence of God? and so he speaketh, μορφὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ, of the forme of God; but the forme of any thing is no lesse Philosophicall then the Essence of that thing; and Saint Peter saith, ἵνα διὰ τούτων ἡμεῖς γενώμεθα θείας κοινωνοὶ φύσεως, That wee might be made partakers of the Divine Nature; but the nature of God and the Essence of God, are both the same.

Philip. 2.

2 Pet. 1. 4.

Besides, Essence is derived of esse, to be; and it is the abstract of the name or Word, which in the concrete is called ens, being; but God is said to be both ens & esse, the chiefest being, and to bee, in the Scriptures; as ego sum ὁ ὤν, I am that I am; and he that is, hath sent me unto you: and therefore if the Scriptures call him ens, the being, why may not we call him Essence? for though it cannot be well said, that man is humanity, in the abstract; yet because God is most simple by nature, wee may as well speake of him in the abstract as in the concrete; nay the abstract names are more properly agreeable unto him, then the concrete, as to say that he is Truth, rather then true; Wisedome, rather then wise; justice, rather then just; and so essence or being, rather then to be, as Dionysius saith.

Exod. 3. 14.

That abstract names are most agreeable to God

Dionys. de Divin. nominibus.

And further, we finde the word Essence used in the Scripture; for where the Prodigall childe saith, πατερ δός μοι τὸ ἐπιβάλλον μέρος τῆς οὐσίας, Father give me the portion of thy substance, which pertaineth to me, he useth the word οὐσία, to expresse his Fathers substance; and what is the riches or the substance of God, but his Divinity? and therefore the word Essence is not improper, nor altogether invented without Scripture to expresse the Nature of God.

Luk. 15. 12.

And for the word ὁμοούσιος, co-essentiall, or of the same Essence, the Fathers answer, that it was not first invented by the Fathers of the Nicen Councell (as the Arrians falsely affirmed) for one of themselves denying the Deity of Christ, said, that if they should yeeld Christ to bee a true God, then must it follow, that he is ὁμοούσιος, of the same Essence with God; whereupon Hosius and the rest of the Orthodoxe Fathers concluded that he was ὁμοούσιος, of the same same Essence with God; and it was used long before that time, (though not controverted,) by Dionysius Romanus, Dionysius Alexandrinus, Origen, Theognostus, and others, as Athanasius affirmeth.

That the word ὁμοούσιος, of the same Essence, was not first used by the Fathers of Athanasius time.

Secondly, they say that it was not so farre fetcht, as the words ἑτερούσιος, of another essence, and ὁμοίουσιος of the like Essence, which themselves used to deny the co-essentiality of the Sonne of God with his Father; so free were they to devise what they would to maintaine errours, and so strict against the defenders of the truth.

Thirdly, they alleadge that the Scriptures used the like words, as τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν ἐπιούσιον, And Moses calleth the children of Israel, λαὸν περιούσιον; which we translate, a speciall people, or a peculiar choosen people unto himselfe; a people, as it were, of the like nature with God.

Luk. 6. Deut 7.6. 14.2.26 Ambros. l. 3. c. 7. de fid.

Fourthly, they affirme, that although the word it selfe is not found in the Scriptures; yet that the full sence and meaning of the word is plainely found, as Saint Augustine doth most excellently prove out of those words of our Saviour; I and my Father are one, Iohn 10. And that it is derived from the Scripture; for it is derived of οὐσία Essence, and οὐσία is derived of ὀντος, and the Lord saith of himselfe, Ego sum ὁ ὤν, I am he that is, or, I am that I am, Exod. 3. And therefore seeing this λογομαχία, their verball winde shakes no corne, nor cannot derogate any thing from the co-essentiality of this word with his Father, they proceed against the matter. And so

Aug. tract. 99. in Ioh. Cyrillus l. 1. de Trinit.

Secondly, they doe object against the truth of the matter declared by this Word. And 2 Against the truth of the matter.

Ob. 1. First, they argue thus: Whose wils are divers, their natures and Essences are divers; but the will of the Father, and of the Sonne, are divers; for the Sonne saith unto his Father, Father, if it bee possible, let this cup passe from me, nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt; therefore their Essence must needs be divers.

Mat. 26. 39.

Sol. I answer, that the proposition is to be distinguished; for whose wils are divers, having the same natures, their natures must be divers; but in Christ there are two natures, divine and humane; and therefore that his will is divers, or not the same will as his Fathers is, in respect of his humane nature (though it be alwaies subject and agreeable to the same) we easily grant; but that his will in respect of his divine nature, is any waies different, or divers from his Fathers will, we utterly deny; and we say not, that the whole person of Christ, but that Christ, in respect of his divine nature, as hee is the second person of the Trinity, is co-essentiall unto his Fathers; and therefore though the will of Christ, as he is the Sonne of man, be not the same, as his Fathers will is; yet that doth not prove the will of Christ, as he is the Son of God, to be not the same as his Fathers will is; because Christ hath a twofold will; the one as hee is the eternall Word, and the other as he is made Flesh; the one as God, and the other as man.

That Christ as he hath two Natures, so he hath a twofold Will.

Christ in what respect co-essentiall to his Father.

Ob. 2. Secondly, they say; he that is Mediator betwixt God and men, is not of the same essence with God; but Christ, is the Mediator betwixt God and men, saith the Apostle: therefore hee cannot be of the same Essence with God.

1 Tim. 2, 5.

Sol. I answer, that the proposition is to be distinguished; for it is true of such a Mediator, as Moses was, the Messenger of God to men; but it is false of such a Mediator, as reconcileth wicked men to God, by appeasing his wrath, and making satisfaction for their sinnes; for that no man can doe so, but hee that is God by nature: Now Saint Paul sheweth Christ to bee such a Mediator, as doth appease the wrath of God; and therefore hee sheweth even thereby, that Christ must needs be a God by nature, and of the same Essence with his Father.

That there are two sorts of Mediators.

Ob. 3. Thirdly, they say; Christ is a Mediator and an Advocate with God, but he is no Mediator nor Advocate with himselfe; therefore himselfe is not of the same Essence with God.

Sol. I answer, that the Name of God is to be taken two waies.

The name of God taken two waies.

First,

First, Essentially; and so Christ is a Mediator with God.

Secondly, Hypostatically, for any person of the God-head; and so Christ also is a Mediator with God, if you understand God for the person of the Father, not excluding the Sonne, or the Holy Ghost; for otherwise it is false; because hee is not onely Mediator with the person of the Father, but also with himselfe and the Holy Ghost: So likewise in the conclusion, if you take God ὑποστατικῶς, for the person of the Father, wee yeeld Christ is not God, because God the Son, is not, nor cannot be God the Father: And to the minor, I say, that Christ may be said to bee a Mediator with himselfe, if wee consider the office of Mediation; Nam sacrificij modum, non sicut unus quidam ex nobis, sacerdotibus assert servilitèr; For hee doth not servilely, like some of us, or any one of them under the Law, bring the substance of our sacrifice unto the Priests, which should first offer for themselves, and then for the sinnes of their people; because he hath nothing herein common with us, that he should receive it at our hands, to offer it for us; but as he is our sacrifice himselfe, Sic sibi ipsi conciliat, & per ipsum, & in ipso, Patri; So he reconcileth us unto himselfe, and through himselfe, and in himselfe, unto his Father, as Saint Cyrill saith.

That Christ reconcileth us to himselfe.

Cyrillus L. de recta fide ad reginas.

Fourthly, they say; If he be of the same Essence with the Father, then is hee essentially in the Father; but he is not essentially in the Father, for the Word was with God, and not in God, saith the Evangelist; but to be with God, signifieth not to bee in God, but without him, as a booke held in my hand, is with mee, though it be not in me: therefore Christ is not essentially in the Father, and consequently not of the same essence with the Father.

John 1.1.

To this Fulgentius answereth divers waies.

Fulgent. in resp. ad obiect. Arrianor.

1. If all that is said to be with God, be without God, and all that is said to bee in God, be within him; then are wee neerer unto God then the Sonne of God; for here you see he is said, but to be with God, and we are said to be in God; for there is but one God the Father, by whom are all things, and we in him, saith the Apostle; but this is most absurd, to say, that wee are neerer unto God then the Sonne of God; and therefore it is as absurd to say, that all which is with God, is without God, and all that are said to be in him, to be within him.

1 Cor. 8.

Secondly, He proveth, that to be with God, or with man, doth not alwaies signifie to be without God, or without man; for it is said, that the ungodly reasoned with themselves; but when a man reasoneth, he doth it within himselfe, and not without himselfe; and it is said, that the memoriall of vertue is immortall, because it is knowne with God, and with men; but it cannot be knowne with men, unlesse the memory therof be within men; and so our Saviour Christ saith, If any man love me and will keepe my saying, my Father will love him, and wee will come unto him, and make our abode with him; but to abide with us, doth not signifie to remaine without us, but to dwell within us, as the Apostle sheweth, when he prayeth, that the Saints might be strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man, and that Christ might dwell in their hearts by faith.

Wisd. 2.1.

Chap. 4.1.

Iohn 14.15.

Ephes. 3.16,17.

Thirdly, He proveth that to be with God, and to bee in God, is equivalent, and the very same in many things; for Moses saith, God is faithfull, in whom there is no iniquity, and David saith, the Lord is righteous, and there is no iniquity in him; and yet Saint Paul saith, numquid iniquitas apud Deum, is there iniquity with God? God forbid; and Saint Iames saith, with whom there is no variableness, nor shadow of turning, that is, in whom there is no mutability: and therefore as the Evangelist saith here, The Word was with God, so our Saviour saith else-where, I am in the Father, and the Father in me: And therefore it appeareth plainely, that Christ is not with God as one man is with another, as Saint Paul saith that he remained with Saint Peter fifteene daies; for so to bee with one, is to be without him, as a guest, by the affection of charity, and not to bee substantially in him, as the same, by the law of equity; but Christ is with God, as the word is within the minde, or the counsell is within the heart, or life it selfe within the soule; so that, as the soule cannot be without life, no more can God

That to be with God and to be in God is the same.

Iohn 10 38.

be

be without this Word: And therefore alſo, wee muſt obſerve, a great difference, betwixt our being with God, and in God; and Chriſt his being with God, and in God; for when it is ſpoken of us, our naturall union with God is no waies meant; but either the power of the Creator, or the pietie of the Redeemer, is alwaies underſtood; and therefore it is ſaid, that he gave us power to bee the ſonnes of God; but this Word is not made, but naturally, and eternally begotten the Sonne of God; and therefore though we be called ſonnes, and he called Sonne; we called gods, and he called God; we ſaid, to be begotten, and he ſaid to be begotten; yet herein is the difference, that he is ſo naturally, and eſſentially; wee ſo called by grace, whereby it is given unto us to be made the ſonnes of God, as the Evangeliſt ſpeaketh, Iohn 1.12. And ſo much for the co-eſſentiality of the Word, with his Father.

That we are not in God as Chriſt is in God.

CHAP. V.

Of the co-equality of the Word with his Father, and the chiefeſt objections made againſt the ſame, moſt cleerely and ſufficiently anſwered.

THirdly, Having ſeene that this Word is co-eternall and coeſſentiall with his Father; it followeth that I ſhould ſpeake of his co-equality with his Father: and this point is as cleere as the former; becauſe in an eſſence moſt ſimple, there cannot be ſo much as imagined, more or leſſe: and therefore Fulgentius ſaith moſt excellently, that ſeeing Chriſt is from everlaſting, becauſe he is the eternall Wiſedome and power of God, ſeeing hee is immeaſurable, becauſe hee is great and hath no end, and ſeeing he is moſt higheſt, as Zacharias ſheweth in his ſpeech of Iohn the Baptiſt, that he ſhould be called the Prophet of the moſt Higheſt, that is, of Chriſt, he muſt needs be in all reſpects equall unto his Father; Nam quid anterius ſempiterno, quid majus immenſo, quid ſuperius altiſſimo? For what can be before him, that hath beene before all things? what can bee greater then that, which is immeaſurable? or what can be higher, then that which is higheſt? and ſo Saint Iohn ſaith, that the Iewes ſought the rather to kill him, becauſe he did not onely breake the Sabbath, but alſo ſaid that God was his Father, making himſelfe equall to God.

3 That the Word is co-equall to the Father.

Baruch 3.35.

Luke 1.76.

Iohn 5.18.

*Ob.*1. But the Arrians doe object, that Chriſt did not teach himſelfe to bee equall with his Father, but that the Iewes miſtooke him, and thought hee did ſo.

Sol. I anſwer that this is falſe; for (as Saint Cyrill, Saint Chryſoſtome, S. Auguſtine and others doe affirme) the Iewes did rightly underſtand our Saviour; and the Evangeliſt ſheweth as much; for if they had either miſ-conceived his meaning, or miſconſtrued his words, then ſurely either Chriſt or the Evangeliſt, would have given us ſome notice thereof; that ſo we might not erre after them, eſpecially in ſo great a matter; for ſo we find, that, when the Capernaits underſtood his words of an Orall eating of his fleſh, our Saviour perceiving their error, how they miſ-underſtood his words, ſaid preſently, the fleſh profiteth nothing, and that the words, which he ſpake, were Spirit and Life; and ſo when he ſaid, Deſtroy this Temple and I will build it up againe in three daies, and the Iewes thought that he ſpake it of their ſtately, Materiall temple, that was forty ſixe yeeres a building, the Evangeliſt preſently tells us, that hee ſpake it of the temple of his Body; but neither Chriſt, nor the Evangeliſt, do here give us the leaſt intimation of their miſtaking of his meaning; but do rather approve their right apprehenſion of our Saviours words: and therefore it muſt needs follow, that Chriſt taught himſelfe to be equall unto his Father.

That the Iewes rightly underſtood, that Chriſt taught that hee was equall with God.

Iohn 6.63.

Iohn 2.20.

Ver.22.

*Ob.*2. Secondly, They doe object that Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, my Father is greater then I; and therefore, Chriſt is not equall to his Father.

Iohn 14.28.

Sol. To

Basil l.1. in Eunomium. Nazian. ora. 4. de Theol. Hilar. l. 9. de Trinit.

Sol. To this S. Basill answereth, that the Father is greater then the Son, ratione principij, in respect of his beginning; for that there is noted a certaine kinde of authority or majority in the Father, because he is the beginning of the Son, and doth communicate his whole Essence unto the Sonne, which the Sonne doth not unto the Father, that is, that the Father is the beginning of the person of the Sonne, but not of the Essence of the Sonne, as I said before.

Others would have the Father to be greater then the Son, ratione nominis, onely in respect of the name; because the name of a Father seemeth to be greater then the name of a Sonne.

How the Father is greater then Christ. Iohn 4.28.

But Athanasius (in my judgment) answereth best, that Christ is equall to the Father as touching his God-head, but inferiour to the Father, as touching his man-hood; for Christ saith, I goe to the Father, because the Father is greater then I; and therefore he is inferiour to the Father, in respect of that nature, wherein he goeth to the Father; but he cannot be said to goe to the Father, as he is a God; for so he is alwaies with the Father; but he goeth to the Father as he is a man; and therefore he is inferior to the Father, as he is a man; and thus Saint Cyrill, S. Chrysostome, S. Augustine and Gaudentius do expound it.

Iohn 6.38.

Ob. 3. Thirdly, they do object that our Saviour saith, I came downe from Heaven, not to do mine own will, but to doe the will of him that sent me; therefore hee that sent him, is greater then he that is sent.

That Christ hath two wils.

Sol. I answer first, that as I said before Christ hath two wills; the one as man, the other as God; and he came downe, not to do his own will, which he had, as he was man; but to do the will of his Father, that sent him, which was also his own will, as he was God; for having the same Essence, he must needs have the same will with his Father: and therefore as hee was inferiour to his Father in respect of his humane will, so he was equall to his Father in respect of his divine will.

That the Father sent not the Son by way of command, or superiority.

And secondly I say, that he was not sent, Per modum imperij, In respect of any superiority that the Father had, to command him; but by way of consent; the Father being willing, to let his Sonne goe, as the Sonne was willing to be gone; so that misit is no more then emisit, they were both willing, that the Word should bee made Flesh.

Ob. But they urge that he descended to doe the will of his Father; but he descended not as Man, but as God; therefore he was inferiour to the Father, not onely as Man, but also as God.

That the descending of Christ is the assuming of our flesh.

Sol. I answer, that the descending of Christ, is nothing else but his exinanition, his incarnation, and assuming the forme of a servant; for otherwise the God-head can neither bee said to ascend nor descend: and so his Sonne, thus humbled, thus incarnate, did obey his Father, and performe the Will of his Father; but not in respect of the forme which hee had in Heaven with his Father; but in respect of the forme of a servant, which he humbling himselfe, assumed in earth. And

1 Cor. 15.27,28.

Ob. 4. Fourthly, they doe object, that Saint Paul saith, that when Christ hath subdued all things, yet then, the Sonne shall be subject unto his Father, which hath subdued all things under him; and therefore the Sonne is inferiour to the Father.

Sol. To this some doe answer, that then the humane nature of Christ shall be swallowed up, and wholly converted into the Deity; but this cannot be; for that S. Paul in this very place sheweth the contrary; because the subjection argueth a distinction; whereas if it were quite swallowed up, there could be no distinction: and therefore seeing there must be still a subjection, there must be still that nature remaining, which shall be subject to the other.

Nyssenus Chrysost. Cyril. and others.

Others will have this saying of the Apostle to be spoken of the whole Church of Christ, or of Christ as hee is in his members; so that the sence should bee this; then the whole body of Christ shall be so subject unto God, that not any one member of the same, shall in any thing be contumacious or rebellious against the will of God.

But

But although this may passe without absurdity, as being true in respect of the matter; yet I do not finde, that it agreeth with the Apostles meaning in this place; for he speaketh of him, to whom all things are subdued; but all things are subdued unto the person of Christ, considered in himselfe, and not unto the whole body of Christ, or unto Christ considered in his members, as both the Prophecie of David, and this place of the Apostle make it plaine: and therefore Saint Ambrose, Oecumenius and Theophilact, doe expound it of the Son of God absolutely considered; and that it signifieth not a servile subjection, any waies betokening an inferiority, but an unanimous agreement of the Sonne with the Father, which sheweth their unity and equality.

But I like best of Saint Augustines and Primasius expositions, which doe interpret it of the humane nature of Christ, which then shall be truly subject unto God; not because it was not subject before then, but with a more emphasis the Apostle would give them to understand, that, as ever before it was subject unto God, so then also, in that excellent glory, when all things are subdued unto it, it shall be subject unto God: and the reason hereof is, (as some of the Greeke Fathers have observed) because he writ unto the Corinthians, which were but very lately converted unto the Christian Faith, from the vaine fables of the Gentiles, which taught that the gods did contest, and strive amongst themselves, to the destruction or exclusion of one another.

That Christ in glory for ever and ever as man, shall be still inferiour and subject unto the God-head.

And therefore, least they should thinke, that Christ subduing all things, and putting all things under his feete, would doe unto his Father, as they said Iupiter did to his Father Saturne, ædibus & sedibus effugari, to drive him out of house and home, he saith, all things shall be subjected unto Christ, excepting him, which hath subdued all things unto him: and not onely this, (that all things shall be subject unto Christ, but the Father,) but also, that, as now it is, so it shall be then, in that glory and triumph, after all things shall be subdued unto the Man Christ Iesus; yet then shall all his humane nature, that is, Christ himselfe, as he is man, be still subject unto God his Father; so that he, which, is, and ever was equall to his Father, as touching his God-head, is and ever shall be inferiour and subject to his Father as touching his Man-hood.

Many other objections they have, against the Deity, co-essentiality, and coequality of the Sonne of God with his Father; but they are all so triviall that they deserve no answer, and they are all deduced from those places, that are spoken of Christ, as he is a man, and misapplied by them, to denie his excellencie, as hee is a God; and therefore I need not proceed any further in this point; but onely to desire you from hence, to observe these few branches of instructions, that do most naturally spring from this roote; as principally these foure points.

This doctrine, that the word incarnate was a true God, teacheth us foure speciall things.

Videlicet.
1. The greatnesse of Gods love to man.
2. The craftinesse of Satans dealing with men.
3. The perversenesse of Heretickes among men.
4. The unthankefullnesse of men, towards God.

1 Point.

First, we see this Word, this Sonne of God, was not made flesh to dignifie or to better himselfe; for he was before (as I shewed to you before) a God in the best and highest degree, from everlasting, αὐτόθεος, ὁμοούσιος, a God of himselfe, co-essentiall and co-equall unto his Father: what therefore should he merit, or wherein could he be dignified by his Incarnation, more then he was before his Incarnation? Gloria ejus augeri non potuit, nothing could be added unto his glory; or if it could, his love to us could not be so great; for then it might be said, he did it not onely for our sake, but also for his owne sake, that himselfe might thereby bee the more dignified & exalted; but seeing he was so high before, that he could not be higher, so great that he could not be greater, and so good that he could not be better, it is most certainely apparant, that he descended from the height of his dignity, unto the very depth of humility, to be made flesh, onely for our sake: and therefore we may well say, that greater love then this cannot be, that he, which is the highest, chiefest, everlasting God, should descend and be made the Son of Man, that wee might be made

How greatly God loved us, that God would be made man for our good.

A love like himselfe, incomprehensible.

Iohn 15.13.

the ſonnes of the immortall God through him.

2 Point. How Satan hath ever laboured more to obſcure the truth concerning the perſon of Chriſt, then any other point of doctrine whatſoever.

Secondly, we may from hence ſee both the ſubtiltie and the cruelty of Satans dealing; for hee knoweth that this is the greateſt benefit that ever man received from God; the giving of this Word to be made Fleſh, this his eternall Sonne to be made man; Quia in creatione dedit te tibi Deus, Becauſe in thy creation, he did but give thy being unto thee; but in this his Incarnation, he gave himſelfe unto thee: and therefore Satan would faine obſcure this benefit, either by debaſing the perſon, and perſwading us to beleeve that he was not ſo excellent as he was, that is, not a God, or if a God, not ſo high, not ſo excellent as his Father was; or elſe by corrupting the action, and ſuggeſting unto us, that he did not all for our ſakes onely, but chiefly for his own merit, (as if he were ambitious of vaine-glory, which is blaſphemy to thinke) that he might thereby get him a name above all other names.

Mat. 4. 3.

And this is his uſuall practiſe, to ſeeke alwaies at the chiefeſt, to corrupt the greateſt points and to overthrow the ſtrongeſt pillars of Chriſtian religion; for hee tempted Chriſt himſelfe, and would faine have overcome him; for he knew, that if the Captaine were once conquered, then all the Souldiers would ſoone be vanquiſhed; if the Shepheard were once ſmitten, then all the ſheepe would eaſily be ſcattered; and ſo ever ſince the comming of Chriſt, he ſtirred up more and greater hereſies concerning Chriſt, either his perſon, or his offices, then he did concerning any other point of Chriſtian Religion; for as there is no point ſo great and ſo waighty, nor any point more comfortable then this, concerning the perſon of our Redeemer; becauſe this is eternall life to know him to be the true and eternall God; So Satan did never beſtow more paines about any point, to over-throw it, and corrupt it, then he did about this ſame; as they that are but meanely read in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtories and counſels, may eaſily perceive: And therefore I have ever thought no paines too great, no diſcourſes too long, no time miſpent, that is ſpent to diſcuſſe this truth, and to diſpell thoſe cloudes of errours, that do ſeek to obſcure the dignity and excellency of the perſon of the Sonne of God; Quia bonum eſt eſſe hic, For it is good to dwell on this Rocke, and here to build us Tabernacles, as Peter ſaith; Iuvat uſque morari.

Iohn 17. 1.

3 Point. How maliciouſly Hereticks have denied the Godhead of Chriſt.

Thirdly, we may from hence ſee the perverſneſſe of wicked Heretickes; for that it is not enough for them, to offend God, but they will deny him to bee a God, and as the Atheiſts will be wicked κατ' ἐξοχην in the higheſt degree, by ſearching ſo farre into God, as to ſay at laſt, there is no God; ſo will they ſearch ſo farre into the nature of the Son of God, that they wil deny him to be a God, until the vengeance of God doth make them ſee their abominable ſins: and therefore we ſhould all take heed, that the God of this world doe not ſo blinde our eyes, as to make us to deny God our Saviour.

4 Point. How thankefull we ought to bee unto God for the giving of the word to bee made fleſh.

Fourthly, we may from hence conſider how thankefull wee ought to be, and yet how unthankefull we are to God; for here we ſee, that more then this hee could not doe for man, for the higheſt God to be made man, yea a man of ſorrowes (as I ſhall by his helpe in my Treatiſe of his Paſſion ſhew unto you) that we might be made the ſonnes of God and the heires of joy; and yet we ſeldome or never ſet this great benefit before our eyes, to be thankefull to God for the ſame; for if we did, how could we find in our hearts with the ſight of this goodneſſe, to heape up ſuch horrible wickedneſſe, as we do againſt his Majeſty? to blaſpheme his name, to abuſe his Word, to deſpiſe his ſervants, and to be to every good worke reprobate; O beloved! remember what our Saviour ſaith, If you love me keepe my Commandements; and if you be thankefull to God, for this his great love to you, to be vilified, and made fleſh, and made of no reputation for you, offend not his Majeſty, and render not unto him evill for good, and hatred for his good will. And ſo much touching the excellency of the perſon, that was made fleſh, he that was the true and eternall God, co-eſſentiall and co-equall unto his Father.

Iohn 14. 15.

6 utinam prædicã do verbum tuum, aut laudando nomen tuum tantummodo loquerer. Aug.

CHAP.

Chap. VI.

Of the word λόγος, The word here shewed by the Evangelist, to expresse the person, that was incarnate, and what it signifieth, and why the Evangelist useth it.

2 Of the word λόγος, here used to expresse this person.

SEcondly, having seene the excellency of the person that was made flesh, wee are now to consider, the Word here used, to declare that person, λόγος, the Word; touching which I will onely discusse these three points.

Three points handled.

1. What λόγος signifieth.
2. Why Christ is tearmed λόγος.
3. Why the Evangelist saith here, The Word was made flesh, rather then, the Sonne of God was made flesh.

1 What λόγος signifieth. 1 Reason.

First, some say that λόγος signifieth reason, and that the Sonne is therefore called λόγος, Reason, because as reason is most inward with us, so is the Sonne with the Father, as Saint Basil, and Nazianzen say, or because he maketh us obedient to yeeld unto reason, as Origen saith; Others will have λόγος to signifie definition, because Christ defineth and expresseth the whole nature of his Father, hee being the brightnesse of his glory, and the ingraven forme of his person, as Nazianzen and Euthymius upon those words of the Apostle do affirme; Others translate it sermo, (which I translate speech) as Prudentius, where hee saith,

2 Definition. Heb. 1. 3.

3 Speech.

Ades Pater supreme, Patrisq́, sermo Christe.

So Beza, In principio erat sermo, and so Tertullian, Saint Cyprian, Saint Hillarie, Saint Ambrose, Saint Augustine, Saint Hierome, and divers others; and some call him the voice of God, according to that of the Psalmist, The voice of God is a glorious voice, as Claudian, 4 Voice. Psal. 29. 4.

Claudian. de laud. Christi.

Christe potens, redeuntis conditor ævi,
Vox summi sensusq́, Dei, quem fudit ab alta
Mente Pater.———

O mighty Christ, maker of the world, thou voice and sence of the highest God, which the Father begets in his most inward minde.

5 Word.

But most commonly the Fathers, and almost all the Schoole of Divinity, following the vulgar Latine, do expound λόγος to signifie verbum, the Word; because Sermo, speech, doth seeme to consist of many words; whereas a word doth altogether denotate and declare unity.

Ob. But then it may be objected, that none can expresse his whole minde by one simple word; and therefore that speech is more likely to bee the meaning of the Evangelist.

That as God is one act, so he can expresse himselfe with one word.

Sol. I answer, That man indeed, with one conceived word, can hardly expresse his whole minde and wisedome; but it is not so with God; for, as he is but Vnus simplicissimus actus, One most simple act; so he doth apprehend and understand all things, Vno ictu & uno conceptu, at one instant, and can expresse himselfe with one word: And multiplicity of words doth shew the infirmity of man, that with few words cannot expresse himselfe; but the unity and simplicity of Gods Word doth denote the superexcellencie of God, that so briefly, and so easily can do all things.

2 Why Christ is tearmed the word

Secondly, wee are to note, why Christ is termed λόγος, the Word; Touching which point, we must understand, that whatsoever speaketh, uttereth forth words; And wee finde that God, Angels, and Men doe speake, though after a different and a divers manner; for, though God being a Spirit, wanteth mouth, lippes, and tongue; and that the Apostle speaketh hyperbolically of the tongues of Angels, (as Zanchius noteth); yet this is certaine, that God and Angels doe

Zanch. l. 2 c. 19. de operibus sex dierum.

Hieron. to 3. p. 187. in c. 24. Iobi.

often ſpeake, as we reade Gen. 1. Zach. 2. Eſay 6. 2, 3. Although the ſpeeches, and the communications of the Angels be farre unlike to ours, (as Saint Hierome ſaith) and that we can neither know, nor underſtand after what manner they either doe, or have heretofore ſpoken at any time, either outwardly unto the eare, or inwardly in the minde of any man, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith: And therefore we ſay, that there is a Divine, Angelicall, and a humane word; And to each of theſe, that is, God, Angels, and Men, we do aſcribe a twofold word.

That there is a twofold word.

1. One inward of the minde and underſtanding.
2. Another outward of the voice and tongue.

} And

1 Inward. Pſal. 53. 1. Sap. 2. 1. Mat 9.

After the firſt manner, we are ſaid to ſpeake, when we doe conceive certaine thoughts and cogitations within our minde; As, the foole hath ſaid in his heart there is no God, and, they ſaid within themſelves, but not aright. And 2 Outward. Fulgent. in reſp. ad ob. Arr.

After the ſecond manner, we are ſaid to ſpeake, when by any outward word or voice, we doe expreſſe and declare our inward cogitations; And this is ſaid to bee onely the outward ſigne and voice of the inward word; for that the inward conception of any word is moſt properly ſaid to be the Word, as Saint Auguſtine affirmeth.

Hilarius l. de Synod. How in ſome things the word God reſembleth our outward word. Mat. 12. 34.

Now Chriſt is not any outward vocall word, nor any tranſient voice of God, (as divers Hereticks ſaid he was), but he is the inward, eſſentiall, and permanent word of God, as Epiphanius, Saint Baſil and Saint Auguſtine doe declare; And yet (as Saint Baſil ſaith) he hath ſome certaine ſimilitudes and reſemblances with our outward word; for, as the ſame ſpringeth from our inward minde, (becauſe the tongue uttereth what our minde conceiveth, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh;) So is the Word God begotten from the minde of the Father; and as the vocall Word is the lively Character of the inward thought, and doth repreſent the image of the ſame; ſo is the Word God the living Image of the begetter, and the very effigies, or the engraven forme of his perſon, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

Heb. 1. 3.

The likeneſſe of the word with our inward word.

But he hath a farre more propinquity and likeneſſe with our inward and mentall Word, (as Saint Auguſtine teacheth,) For Aug de Trinitate. l. 15. c. 10. & c. 11.

Firſt, As a man conceiveth and brings forth this Word in his minde, ſo doth the Father beget his Sonne by his underſtanding.

Nazian. orat. 4 de Theolog.

Secondly, As the Word of the minde is from our knowledge, our knowledge from reaſon, and reaſon from the minde, immaterially produced, ἀπαθῶς, without any paſſion, or corruption; ſo is the Word God begotten of the Father, as S. Baſil, and Nazianzene doe declare.

Fulgentius ad Monimum.

Thirdly, As the mind doth ſo beget the Word within it ſelfe, as that ſtill the ſame remaineth in the minde, (as Fulgentius noteth;) So the Word God is ſo begotten of his Father, as that he remaineth alwaies with the Father, as, The Sonne which is in the boſome of his Father, he declared unto us; and, No man hath aſcended up to Heaven, but he that came downe from Heaven, even the Sonne of man which is in Heaven; Nam cum ad terrena deſcendit cœleſtia non dereliquit; For when he deſcended to the Earth and was made fleſh, he left not Heaven, but, as the word of the minde doth alwaies remaine in the minde; ſo doth this Word God alwaies remaine in the boſome of God.

Iohn 3. 13.

Fourthly, as the conceived word of the minde is the beginning of all working, ſo is this word God the beginning of all creatures; for by it all things were made, and without it was nothing made that was made.

Iohn 1. 3.

Fiftly, as the mentall word is ſhewed by the voice, ſo is the word God manifeſted by the aſſuming of our fleſh.

How the word God differeth from our word. Baſilius contra Eunom. Aug. Ser. 190. de tempore.

And yet becauſe it is unpoſſible to accommodate little, vile, and terrene things, fully to expreſſe, or in all things to agree with divine and eternall things, as Saint Auguſtine doth moſt excellently declare, ſaying, Cum Deus comparatur non poteſt comparari æquali ſcilicet comparatione, When God is compared, he cannot be compared compared with any equall comparison; for to whom will you compare me, or what similitude will you make like unto me, saith the Lord? therefore we must note, that although in some things, this word God is like unto our inward word, yet in many things they doe differ; As Differences betwixt our word and the word God.

First, our word hath a beginning of time, when we frame the same in our understanding; but the word God hath no beginning; For he is α & ω, the first and the last, that never had beginning, and that never shall have ending; for thou art God from everlasting, and world without end, saith the Psalmist.

Apoc. 1. 8.

Psal. 90. 2.

Secondly, our minde is before any of our words; but this word God is co-eternall unto his Father, as I have formerly declared.

Thirdly, our word differeth from the minde that produceth it; but this word God is ὁμοούσιος, of the same Essence with the Father; for, I and my Father are one, saith our Saviour, that is, one substance, though not one person, as I have likewise shewed unto you before.

Athanas. in Symbolo Cyrillus de Trinitate. Aug. in Iob.

Fourthly, our word is an accident, in the subject of our mind, but the word God is a most perfect substance, and the cause of all beings, in whom and by whom are all things; as the Apostle saith.

Rom. 11. 36.

Fiftly, our word, of it selfe, can doe nothing at all; but the word God can doe all things.

Sixtly, our word is a dead word, wanting life; but in the word God, there is not onely life, but he is life it selfe.

Iohn. 14. 6.

Seaventhly, our word is manifold; for we produce many thoughts and intelligences; but the word God is onely one; because God with one act doth understand himselfe, and all things else: and therefore Saint Augustine upon the Psalmist, Semel loquutus est Dominus, The Lord spake once, expoundeth the same of the word Christ: And so you see these differences betwixt the word God and the word of man; and he that desires to see more discrepances betwixt them, let him reade Athanasius in his third Sermon against the Arrians.

Aug. in Psal. 61.

But here it may be demanded, whether λόγος the word, be a name of his person, as he is God, or a name given him, in respect of his Office of Redeemer, as hee is God and Man.

Whether the Word bee a name of person or of office.

I answer, that it is a name of his person, and that in respect of his God-head only; for it is observed, that none of the Evangelists, nor of the Apostles, doth call him the Word, but onely S. Iohn; nor he neither, doth call him λόγος, the Word, after he had said, that the Word was made flesh; to note unto us, that, as Saint Iohn onely was specially set a part, to declare the Deity of Christ, so he onely calls him by that name which is onely proper unto him, as he is God, and none else; and he calls him onely so, before his Incarnation; to shew that he is the Word, as God, and not as Man.

Maldon. in Joh. c. 1

Thirdly, wee are to consider why Saint Iohn saith, the Word was made flesh, rather then the Sonne of God was made flesh; touching which, Theophylact and Euthymius thinke that he saith, The Word was made flesh, least that if he should have said, the Sonne was made flesh, the Reader might perchance imagine some passible or carnall thing, as the Arrians dreamed, as Saint Hillarie witnesseth.

3 Why Saint Iohn useth this word λόγος, the Word.

Hilar. in l. contra Constant.

But this reason seemes not solid enough to me; because Christ hath many other names besides this, as Wisedome, Light, Brightnesse, and such like, which signifie neither passion, composition, nor corruption, as both Origen, and Saint Basil have observed: and therefore others doe alleadge these two especiall reasons.

Two reasons why S. Iohn useth λόγος.

First, because this word λόγος, was an acceptable and a knowne name, both to the Iewes and Gentiles.

1 Reason.

Secondly, because it was the most proper, and the fittest name that hee could use, to make way to expresse that thing, which hee was immediately to declare.

First, It is manifest that there was no name of the Son of God among the Iewes, so generally used, and so well knowne as λόγος, the Word, as it might bee easily

That this name of the Sonne, the Word, was the best knowne name of Christ among the Iewes shewed out of the Chaldee paraphrase; for whereſoever that paraphraſt thinketh, the Name of God ſhould ſignifie the Sonne, hee alwaies tranſlates the ſame, and reades it the Word; the which without doubt he did; becauſe hee ſaw this Word and name of him was vulgarly beſt knowne amongſt them; for Philo the moſt learned of all the Iewes, and the moſt expert in the myſtery of the Trinity, though he never calleth Chriſt the Sonne, yet doth he often call him the Word in many paſſages of his Workes.

Philo in l. de opific. mundi.

That the Gentiles were not ignorant of this Word.

Neither was his name λόγος, the Word, onely knowne among the Iewes, but among the Gentiles and Ethnicks alſo; for it is apparant, that although the way to Heaven, was unknowne unto them; yet did many of them (eſpecially of their Philoſophers) diſpute and deliver many things concerning the true God; For Ariſtotle, or whoſoever he was that wrote thoſe bookes De mundo, did finde, that, in this rare piece of worke and frame of the world, there is a moſt excellent conveiance, without confuſion; great variety, concurring in unity; and diverſity of all things, without diſorder; all which hee attributeth to the powerfull working of the inviſible God, of whom the ſaid Author conceives, that for his power he is moſt mighty, for his beauty moſt excellent, for his life immortall, and for his vertue moſt abſolute, and that (as Empedocles ſaith) from him proceeded,

The author of the bookes de cuſo & mundo, not certainely knowne.

All things that were, that are, and ſhall be here,
Plants, men, beaſts, birds, and fiſh in waters cleere:

And the ſame Philoſopher entring into further conſideration of Gods nature, ſaith, that, although God bee but one, yet wee call him by many names, as Ζηνα and Δία, Becauſe we live by him; ἀνάγκη, becauſe hee is of an immutable nature; εἱμαρμένη, becauſe nothing is done by chance, but according to his moſt certaine decree; ἀδρεστία, becauſe no man can poſſibly avoid him, or flie from him; ἄϊστα, becauſe hee abideth for ever; and as for that fable, (ſaith he) of the three Siſters of the deſtiny, Clotho that ſpinneth, Lacheſis that draweth out to a juſt length, and Atropos that cutteth off the thred of mans life, it is to bee underſtood of God onely, who is the beginning, mids, and end of all things; and to conclude, he ſaith, there is a Juſtice, that is never ſeparated from God, which is the revenger of all tranſgreſſions committed againſt the Law of God, wherein every one muſt be well inſtructed, that would be partaker of humane felicity and happineſſe.

Clotho filum baiulat, Lacheſis net, Atropos occat. Theſe deſtinies are but the actions of God.

All which doth moſt apparantly prove, that the Gentiles had ſo much knowledge of the true God, as not onely was able, I ſay not with Clemens Alexandrinus, to bring them to ſalvation, but to make them without excuſe in the day of retribution; becauſe that they knowing God, glorified him not as God, but alſo as doth exceed the knowledge of many, which make profeſſion of Chriſtianity, and will no doubt riſe in judgement, to condemne them in the latter day.

Hieron. in ep. ad Paulinum.

1 Cor. 1. 19.

Suidas whence ſo called.

Vide N. Nancelium in proæmio. p. 20.

And as we ſee many of them underſtood many things concerning the moſt true and everlaſting God, ſo we finde ſome of them have delivered ſome things concerning this word, and Sonne of God; for, though Saint Hierome, ſpeaking of this word, ſaith, Hoc doctus Plato neſcivit; This word learned Plato knew not, eloquent Demoſthenes was ignorant of it; becauſe it is written, I will deſtroy the wiſedome of the wiſe, and caſt away the underſtanding of the prudent; Yet Suidas, a good Author, whoſoever he was, (for it is not knowne who he was, or when he lived, and this name was by the event impoſed upon him, which ſignifieth, (if any man ſhould inquire who he was) σὺ οἶδας, thou knoweſt,) ſaith thus; Hermes Trimegiſtus was a wiſe man of Egypt, and flouriſhed before Pharaoh, hee was called Ter-Maximus, thrice great, becauſe he writ of the Trinity, ſaying, that there was one Divinity, or Deity, in the Trinity, in theſe words; ὦ φῶς νοερὸν πρὸ φωτὸς νοερᾶς, τὸ ἓν ἀεὶ νᾶς νοὸς φωτεινὸς: Καὶ ἄδυτον ἕτερον ἦν, ἢ πυτου ὑγότης, ὁ πνεῦμα πάντα πεφεῖχον, ἐκτὸς τούτου ὁ Θεὸς, ὐκ ἀγγελος, ὐκ ὑσία τις ἄλλη. Πάντων γαρ κύριος καὶ πατὴρ, καὶ Θεὸς, ἡ πάντα ὑπ αὐτου, ἡ ἐν αὐτω ἐστιν. ὁ γὰ λόγος αὐτε παντέλειος ἂν ἡ γόνιμος, ἡ δημιυργικὸς εν γονίμω φύσει πεσὼν, καὶ γονίμω ὕδατι, ἐγκὸν ὕδωρ ἐποίησε; which which is, There was an intellectuall light, before the intellectuall light; and there was alwaies an inlightened mind of the mind; and this was nothing else than the unity of these, and the Spirit, which containeth all things; besides this, there is no God, nor Angell, nor any other substance; because he is the Lord, and Father, and God of all things, and all things are under him, and in him; for his perfect Word (that is, Christ, which here he calleth λόγ☉, the same word that our Evangelist useth) existing and being fruitfull, and a worker or maker of all things, fallen in a fruitfull nature, hath plentifully produced all things: and then, having said these things, he prayeth unto this God, saying, ὁρκίζω σὲ ἔργαν, Θεοῦ μεγάλα σοφὸν ἔργον; ὁρκίζω σὲ φωνὴν πατρὸς, ἣν ἐφθέγξατο πρώτην, ἡνίκα τὸν πάντα κόσμον ἐτεύξατο: ὁρκίζω σὲ χθ τὸν μονογενῆ λόγον, καὶ τὸν πάσης τῆς πρεσκόντος πάντα ἵλεως ἔσω; that is, O heaven, the most excellent worke of the great God, I do adjure thee; and I do adjure thee, the voice and speech of the Father, which he first uttered and spake, when he established all the world; and I beseech thee by thine onely begotten word (that is, Christ) and the Father which containeth or upholdeth all things, be thou favourable and mercifull unto me. And Lactantius saith, that Zeno affirmed λόγον, the Word, to be the maker of this universe; and that Mercurius, sirnamed τρισμεγιστος, thrice great, did often describe the power and majestie of this Word; and S. Augustine affirmeth that the said Trismegistus did compose a book, whose title was λόγ☉ τέλει☉, that is, the perfect Word; and that therein he left written, Monas genuit Monada, & in se sum reflexit ardorem; which is as much as if he had said, the Father begat the Sonne, or the mind begat the Word, and from both proceeded the Holy Spirit, and lib 7. confess. c. 9. he saith, that he saw certaine bookes of the Platonists, wherein he found, though not in the same words, yet the very selfe-same matter, proved by many reasons, that in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God.

A mind full of light.

Verbum eius perfectum lapsum in fœcunda natura, & aqua fœcunda, prolificam fecit aquam.

Quæ verba, quia sunt in eis quædam carminum vestigia, deinde restituta quidam Orpheo vindicarunt.

Aug. l. 5. c. 3. de hæresibus.

Idem l. 7. c. 9. confess.

S. Cyril also saith, that the Philosophers have affirmed the essence of God to be distinguished into three subsistences, and sometimes to have delivered the very name of Trinity; and Theodoret doth affirme, that Plotinus and Numenius have collected out of Plato, that there are three eternities; bonum, & mentem, & universi animam, that is, Goodnesse, which answereth the Father, that is, the Fountaine of the Deity, the mind, which signifieth the Sonne, and the soule or life of this whole universe, which is the holy Spirit; that as in the beginning of the creation he presently moved upon the waters, to sustaine the same; so ever since he spireth and preserveth every living thing; and Clemens Alexandrinus saith, that Plato in his Epistle to Erastus and Coriscus, hath manifestly spoken of the Father and the Sonne; and so Eusebius likewise, and Eugubius, and many others, have collected out of their writings, that this name of the Sonne, λόγ☉, the Word, was not altogether unknowne unto the Gentiles; but that, as Oedipus in the Poets, knew that he had a father, though he knew not who he was; so they did conceive a certaine kind of knowledge and understanding, though undigested and imperfect, over-shadowed (as it were) with humane reasonings, concerning this eternall word God, enough to save them, if they believed in him; or els to make them without excuse, if they, knowing, though not simply, Verum λόγον, sed aliquid veri λόγε, this true Word, but something of this Word, did neglect and not seek further into the knowledge of the same.

Cyril. l. 8 cont. Iul.

Gen. 1. 2.

Clem. Alex. l. 5. strom.

Senec Traged. Oedip.

And this knowledge of the Word they might attaine unto, either by

1 The illumination of God himselfe.
2 The divination of the divels.
3 The tradition of their elders.
4 Their owne exceeding diligence to seeke and search after the knowledge of divine mysteries; For

How the Gentiles came to have any knowledge of the Word God.

First, the Apostle saith that, τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, what may be knowne of God, that is, his eternall power and Godhead, God hath shewed it unto them; and as the Deity it selfe might be contemplated in his creatures, as in a glasse, or read by them, as in a booke, as S. Basil saith; so (no doubt) but he left therein certaine impressions of the Trinity of the Persons, which though they could not fully attaine unto the knowledge thereof, no more than an unskilfull Arithmetician can find the just summe that cyphering characters do import; yet they might perceive somthing thereby, and know, that there was such a thing to be knowne: And thus much God himselfe might shew unto them, not, as Clemens Alexandrinus thought, thereby to bring them unto salvation; because (saith he) Philosophie was unto them, as the Law was unto the Iewes; a Schoole-master to bring them unto heaven; but that (as the Apostle saith) they knowing this God, and not glorifying him as God, nor seeking to be saved by this God, might be without excuse in the sight of God.

1 By the illumination of God. Rom. 1. 19. 1 Cor. 13. 12. Basil hom. 11. hexam.

Ph. Mornæus de veritate relig. c. 5. Rom 1.16.

2 By the divination of the divels. Aug. de cognit. veræ vitæ c. 37.

Secondly, the very divels might make knowne the same unto them; for the divels believe that there is a God, and they know him to be but one God, εἷς ἔστι αὐτογενὴς &c. εἷς Θεὸς ἐν πάντεσι; one in himselfe, one in all things; and they know him to be ὕψιστον Θεὸν, the most High and omnipotent God; neither do they know the Father only, but they know Christ also; for the evill Spirit said unto the Sonnes of Sceva, τὸν Ἰησοῦν γινώσκω; Iesus I know; and they know him to be the Sonne of God, and God himselfe, as Sozomen, out of this verse of Sybill, doth declare,

Acts 19. 15.

O lignum fœlix in quo Deus ipse pependit.
I may thee call a happy Tree,
Whereon a God to hang I see.

And they know the sacred mystery of the Trinity; for by them this distiche before cited related unto a certaine Egyptian, that desired to know this truth,

Serapis ad Thulem Selucerum l. 1.

πρῶτα Θεὸς, μετέπειτα λόγος, καὶ πνεῦμα σὺν αὐτοῖς,
Σύμφυτα δὲ πάντα, καὶ εἰς ἓν ἴοντα τὸ κράτος αἰώνιον.

Principio Deus est, tum Sermo, & Spiritus istis
Additur, æquæva hæc sunt, & tendentia in unum.

The Father, Sonne, and Spirit, all three
Are one God, of the same eternitie.

Aug in Expos. Ep. ad Rom.

And so the divels, knowing these things, might suggest them and reveale them, though ænigmatically and darkely unto the Sybils, (which, as S. Augustine saith, were none of Gods Prophets;) from the Sybils they might be spread unto their Priests; from the Priests unto the Philosophers, Poets, and Oratours; and from them they might be divulged and spread unto the lowest ranke of the vulgar people: Neither must we think, that Satan did it with any intent to do them good, and to bring them unto the true saving knowledge of their Saviour; but, as God by his true Prophets did fore-shew the comming and incarnation of this Word, so would Satan play the Ape, and by his prophets teach them, (like as Oedipus, blindly seeking his father, did unfortunately slay his father) by seeking thus after Christ, to worship him in stead of Christ, and so to offer sacrifices unto divels, (as the Apostle saith) and not to God.

Why Satan revealed Christ unto the people. Senec. in Oedipo.

3 By the tradition of their elders. Gen. 3. 15.

Thirdly, they might by the continuall tradition of their Elders retaine some reliques of that promise made unto Adam, that the seed of the woman should come, and breake the serpents head; for we find by their rites and ceremonies, their Priests and sacrifices, and such like, that they had a kind of corrupted divinity, still remaining amongst them, and that they did conceive some thing by these outward things, which should expiate their sinnes, and appease the wrath of God for them.

What the Gentiles conceived.

4 That the Philosophers were wonderfull diligent to attaine unto all kind of knowledge.

Fourthly, their owne great diligence might bring no small knowledge and understanding of divine things unto them; for they were exceeding great searchers of all antiquities, and most wonderfully greedy of all kind of knowledge and learning; and therefore they did search into the Oracles of the Caldeans, Ægyptians, and Hebrewes, that so much as they could, they might find out the truth both of humane and divine things.

To

To this purpose, Iacobus Colerus saith, and he saith truly, Neq; sanè vetustissimos illos scriptores, Homerum dico, Socratem, Platonem, & alios quosdam rerum veterum Ecclesiæ, ita rudes & ignaros esse judico, ut earum nunquam quicquam viderint aut legerint; cum enim essent homines valdè diligentes ac industrij, nihilq; parcerent sumptuum ac laborum in investiganda veritate, diligenter omnes omnium temporum libros & historias evolverunt, ac sedulò omnia perlustrarunt, indagarunt, cumq; suis sententijs contulerunt, quæq; visa sunt rationi consentanea approbarunt, quæ verò contraria, repudiarunt atq; confutarunt; Neither do I truly think those ancient Writers, Homer, Socrates, Plato, and others, to be so rude and ignorant of these things, as that they neither saw nor read any thing thereof; for seeing they were men so exceedingly diligent and industrious, and spared neither cost nor labour to find out the truth, but did most carefully search into the Bookes and Histories of all times, it is most certaine, that they found out many things whereof they kept, what they thought agreeable, and rejected what they thought contrary unto reason. And so Theodoret, Clemens Alexandrinus, and Iustin Martyr do plainly affirme, that Plato read the Bookes of Moses, and the Prophets; and both S. Ambrose and Eusebius say, that Numenius a Platonist was wont to say, τί γάρ ἐστι Πλάτων ἢ Μωσῆς ἀττικίζων; that Plato was none els but Moses in the Grecian tongue; and S. Augustine himselfe saith, that Plato learned the Divine Scriptures from the Prophet Ieremie, when the Iewes were in their captivity at Babilon; but I find he retracted this opinion in his eight Booke and eleventh Chapter, de civitate Dei; for there, by the computation of their yeares and times, wherein both of them lived, he finds that Ieremie died almost a hundred yeares before that Plato was borne; (the captivity being in the time of Cyrus and Darius Kings of Persia, and Plato borne but a little before Alexander King of Macedon) yet there he denies not, but that Plato, by his industry, when he travelled into Egypt, might by some Interpreters learne the Scriptures; for as yet the Septuagint had not translated them into the Greeke Tongue; and yet Aristobulus (as Eusebius citeth him) saith, that certaine parts and pareels of the Scriptures were translated by others before the Septuagint, out of which Plato might learne many points of the divine Truth: Or if this knowledge was not had out of the Hebrew Bookes; yet might he learne much, as Herodotus did in other points, from the Egyptian Priests; for it is not likely, that the Egyptians had lost all knowledge of Divinity, but that still there remained some reliques of that verity, which Ioseph and the children of Israel, when they dwelt in Egypt, did spread and leave amongst them; for God sent Ioseph to instruct the Princes of Pharaoh, and to teach his Senators wisdome, not onely to provide food for their bodies, but also for the happinesse of their soules.

Colerus de animarum immortalitate. l. 1. c. 7. p. 90.

Plato a Grecian Moses.

Aug. de doct. Christiana l. 2. c. 28. Idem de civit. Dei. l. 8. c. 11

Plato a hundred yeares after Jeremie.

Herodotus learned very much from the Egyptian Priests.

Psal. 105. 22. Ioseph taught the Egyptians the true God.

All these things being well considered, it seemeth not absurd unto me, to say that Plato, and other learned men among the Gentiles, were not altogether ignorant of the knowledge of this truth, concerning this eternall Word: Nay, they could not be ignorant of the same; for it is well knowne that the Gentiles did expect the comming of the Messias, as well as the Iewes; though for want of the Divine Oracles, they had not the knowledge of many particulars of his comming, so well as the Iewes had; And therefore he is called expectatio Gentium, the hope and expectation of the Gentiles; and so those many multitudes that became Proselites of the Iewish Religion, those Sybils, and Prophets, Zoroaster, Balaam, and others, that prophecyed of his comming, and those Magi that came from the East, To worship him, as soone as ever he was borne, do sufficiently prove that the Gentiles expected the comming of this Word, before he was made flesh: and therefore seeing λόγος, the Word, was most chiefly knowne, or likeliest to be knowne, both among the Iewes and Gentiles, and that the Evangelist desired to apply himselfe to both Nations, that he might win and gaine the more to Christ, he useth the word λόγος, and saith, The Word was made flesh. And

That the Gentiles expected the comming of a Messiah.

Num. 24. 17.

Mat. 2. 1. &c.

Secondly, the word λόγος was the fittest word that he could chuse, to make

2 Reason, why the Evangelist useth λόγος.

way

way for him to expreſſe what he meant immediately to declare; for he intended preſently to ſay, that all things were made by him; but he could not call him, by whom all things were made, by any fitter terme than the Word; becauſe all men did know, that God made all things by his Word; for by the Word of the Lord were the heavens made, when God ſpake the Word, and they were made, he commanded, and they ſtood faſt.

Pſal.32. Pſal.148.5.

And ſo you ſee theſe few obſervations, touching λόγος, the Word, here uſed by the Evangeliſt, to expreſſe the perſon that was made fleſh: Now, ſeeing this Word is the chiefeſt Word in the world, and was the Word beſt knowne to all the beſt men of the world, Kings, Prieſts, Prophets, Philoſophers, Orateurs, and the like, it ſhould put us ever in mind, never to neglect the knowledge of this word; for what a ſhame is this to us, that we are ſo full of idle words, yea of lewd and wicked words, and this word God ſhould be ſo ſtrange unto us? and that the very Heathens knew it, even before he came into the World, and we ſhould be ſo ignorant of it, now after he is come, and is preached, yea ſo often and ſo plainely preached, throughout all the whole world? that they were ſo diligent to find him out before he came, and we ſo negligent to accept him now come, and offered unto us, and preached every where, to every one of us; without doubt, they ſhall riſe in judgement againſt us, and condemne us.

What a ſhame it is for us to be ignorant of this Word now already incarnate.

And ſo much for this word λόγος, here uſed, and why that word is here choſen by the Evangeliſt.

CHAP. VII.

Of the chiefeſt cauſes, why this word was made fleſh.

3 Of the worke, why the Word was made Fleſh.

THirdly, we are to conſider, why this word was incarnate and made fleſh; touching which I ſay, that,

1 The impulſive cauſe,

Firſt, cauſa προκαταρκτική, the impulſive cauſe in reſpect of us, was our moſt wofull miſerable caſe and condition, wherein we lay all, deprived of the grace and favour of God; and cauſa προηγουμένη, the impulſive cauſe in reſpect of God, was his great love, and tender compaſſion towards mankind, ſo lying in miſery, under the tyranny and bondage of the divell, and the performing of his promiſe, which he made unto Adam, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould breake the ſerpents head; And therefore, becauſe he would not alter the thing that was gone out of his mouth, nor ſuffer his truth to faile, he remembred his holy covenant, and the oath that he ſware unto our Father, and at the fulneſſe of time, he ſent this word to be made fleſh.

Gen.3.15. Luke 1.72.

2 The finall cauſe

Secondly, the finall cauſe in reſpect of us, was the reſtoring of mankind unto the favour of God againe: and therefore we profeſſe in our Creed, that for us men, and for our ſalvation, he came downe from heaven, and was made man; And ſo our Saviour ſaith, that he came not to be ſerved, but to ſerve, and to give his life a ranſome for many; And S. Auguſtine ſaith, Non eum de cœlo ad terram meritanoſtra, ſed peccata noſtra traxerunt; It was not our goodneſſe, but our wickedneſſe, our ſins, our grievous ſins, that brought downe Ieſus Chriſt out of heaven; and ſo Hugo ſaith, Nulla cauſa veniendi fuit niſi peccatores ſalvos facere, tolle morbos, tolle vulnera, & nulla eſt cauſa medicinæ; there was no cauſe that he ſhould come to us, but to ſave us; for where there are no wounds, where there are no diſeaſes, there is no need of medicines, there is no uſe of plaiſters; becauſe the whole need not the Phyſician; which may ſerve to ſhew the errour of Oſiander, who ſaid, that if a man had not ſinned, yet this word had been incarnate, becauſe there was nothing that could bring him out of heaven, or to move him to be made man, but only to bring us into heaven, and to make us the ſons of God through him; and the finall cauſe, in reſpect of God, was his own glory; for he made all things for his owne ſake, and he gave his Sonne for us, that we might aſcribe all praiſe and thanks

Concil. Nic.

Mat.20.28. Iohn 12.46. Aug. in Iob. & Gloſſ in 1 Tim.1.

Hugo in l. de Sacraments.

The errour of Oſiander.

thanks unto him: And therefore the Angels said unto the Shepheards, Glory be to God on high, peace upon earth, and good will towards men; and reason good, that seeing we have peace with God, our God should have glory and praise from us.

Quest. 1. But here first it will be demanded (as S. Augustine saith) Quare non potuit Dei sapientia aliter homines liberare? &c. Why could not the wisdome of God devise, and the power of God effect some other way to deliver and save sinfull men, than by sending his Sonne to be made man, to be borne of a woman, and to suffer such shamefull things of shameless sinners? Luke 2.14. Why God decreed the incarnation of the Word for the salvation of man. Gen. 1.26.

Sol. To this S. Bernard frameth this witty answer, that as in the creation of man, God did as it were consult with his wisdome, how to make him, when he said, Let us make man in our image; so after the transgression of man, there was (as it were) a consultation in heaven, what should become of man; for truth and justice stood up against him and said, that man had sinned, and therefore man must die, or els that they must needs be violated; for thou saidst (say they to God) In what day thou eatest of the tree of knowledge of good and evill, thou shalt die the death; but mercy and peace rose up for man, and said, Gen. 2.17.

Regia (crede nobis) res est succurrere lapsis. Quo quisq; est major, magis est placabilis ira.

It is a royall thing to relieve the distressed, and the greater any one is, the more placable and gentle he should be, and that God himselfe had said, he was the God of peace, and the Father of mercies; and therefore they concluded, that although man had sinned, yet man must be pardoned, or els they must needs be abandoned; therefore the wisdome of God became an umpire, and devised this way to reconcile them, that as one man had sinned, and thereby destroyed all men; So 1 Cor. 1.3.

Unus homo nobis patiendo restituat rem. Bosquier. de pass. Dom. ser. 13. p. 793.

One righteous man should suffer for all men, and so justice should be satisfied, and then all, that believed in that man, should be pardoned, and so mercy should be shewed: then, all thus contented, God looked downe from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that would understand and seeke after God; but they were all corrupted, and become abominable, and there was none that did good, no not one; and therefore the wisdome of God, that had found out this way, was contented to performe this worke himselfe, and to be made man, that mercy might be extended, and to suffer death for man, that justice might be satisfied: and so in him mercy and truth met together, righteousnesse and peace kissed each other. Psal. 14.4.

But S. Augustine and S. Gregory do more solidly answer, saying, Omnia Deus poterat si voluisset, that in regard of his wisdome, God could have devised another way, and in respect of his power, he could have performed the salvation of man, without the incarnation of his Sonne; but, if he had done it otherwise, it would, no doubt, have likewise displeased our foolishnesse; for God appeared visibly, (saith S. Augustine) that he might prepare us to invisible things; and therein, he displeased the covetous man, because he brought not a body of gold; he displeased the lascivious, because he was borne of a woman; he displeased the Iewes, because he came so poore; and he displeased the wise men of this world, because he erecteth his kingdome by the foolishnesse of preaching; and so he should have displeased man, what other way soever he had invented to save man; for the wisdome of God is not sufficient to satisfie the foolishnesse of men. Psal. 85 10. Aug. de Trin. l. 13. c. 10. Gregi. Mor. l. 20. c. 16. How hard it is for the wisdome of God to please foolish man.

And therefore he, that knowes all things best, sic voluit ruinam vasis fragilis reformare, ut nec peccatum hominis dimitteret impunitum, quia justus erat, nec insanabile quia misericors; so God would repaire the ruine of fraile and fickle man, that neither the sin of man should escape unpunished, because God is just, nor yet miserable man remain uncured, because he is merciful; & although he could otherwise have saved man, quantum ad potentiam medici, in respect of the power & skil of the Physitian; yet he saw there was no fitter way to do it, Quantum ad medicinam ægroti, & quantum ad justitiam Dei, in regard of the state of the patient, to free him from sin, and to satisfie the justice of God; for it behoved the Mediator Aug. de Annunt. Dom. ser. 3.

betweene

betweene God and man, to have ſomething like unto God, and to have ſomething like unto man, leſt that, in all things being like unto man, he might be ſo too farre from God, or, being in all things like unto God, he might be ſo too farre from man; and therefore Chriſt betwixt ſinnefull mortall men, and the juſt immortall God, did appeare a mortall man with men, and a juſt God with God: and ſo the Mediator betwixt God and men, was God and man Chriſt Ieſus; and fitly too, ſaith Saint Auguſtine; Quia ille congruè ſatisfacit qui poteſt & debet, Becauſe that is moſt agreeable to reaſon, that he ſhould make ſatisfaction, which ought and can ſatisfie; but we know, that none ought to doe it but man, and none can doe it but God: and therefore God was contented to bee made man; and that for theſe two eſpeciall reaſons.

Ne in utroq; Deo ſimilis longè eſſet ab homine, aut in utroq; homini ſimilis longè eſſet à Deo.

1 Tim. 2. 5.

Two ſpeciall reaſons why Chriſt was made man.

First, to ſhew the greatneſſe of his love; for hee had ſeemed to have loved us the leſſe if he had done leſſe for us; but now, Quid tam pietate plenum, quam filium Dei pro nobis factum eſſe fœnum? What can more commend the love of God to man, then to ſee the word God made fleſh for man? and therefore the Evangeliſt, to ſhew the greatneſſe of Gods love to mankinde, ſaith, God ſo loved the world, that he gave his onely begotten Sonne, that is, to be incarnate, to bee made fleſh, and to ſuffer death, that whoſoever beleeveth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

First, to shew the greatneſſe of his Love to man.

Iohn 3. 16.

Secondly, to erect our hope, that was already dejected, and to ſtregthen our faith, which was alwaies wavering; for we ſaw two things, that were to bee done for man, and yet could not be done by any man, but ſuch a one, as ſhould bee both God and Man.

Secondly, to erect the hope and to ſtrengthen the faith of man.

The firſt was a removall of that great evill, which ſuppreſſed us.

The ſecond was a reſtoring of that great good, that we were deprived of.

Two things to be done for us.

First, Magnitudo mali, the greatneſſe of that evill, which ſuppreſſed every man, and could not be taken away by any man, conſiſted in foure things.

Videlicet,
1. The waight of ſinne, that was like a talent of lead.
2. The height of Gods wrath, which no creature was able to ſuſtaine.
3. The power of death, which is one of the moſt terribles.
4. The tyranny of the divell, that did continually rage againſt us.

1 The evill that oppreſſed all men was fourefold.

And theſe could not be aboliſhed, by any creature, but onely by him that created all creatures, and can worke all things mightily, according to the purpoſe of his owne will.

1 Cor. 15.

Secondly, Magnitudo boni, the greatneſſe of that good, which was taken away from all men, and could bee reſtored by no man, conſiſted in two things.

Videlicet
1. The repairing of Gods image, here in this life.
2. The enjoying of the bleſſed viſion of God in the next life.

2 The good that man loſt was twofold.

For, none could reſtore the image of God to man, but he that was the living image of God, and the ingraven forme of his perſon; and the Kingdome of Heaven, none could give but God that gives it to all that love him: and therefore to take away the evill, which we had deſerved, and to reſtore unto us that good, whereof we were deprived, God himſelfe, that made us, was contented to redeeme us, by taking our fleſh upon him, ut natura offendens ſatisfaceret, That the nature offending might make ſatisfaction; and becauſe ſatisfaction could not bee made without bloud, for without bloud there is no remiſſion, ſaith the Apoſtle, hee was made fleſh, that he might die, and ſhed his bloud for us; Vt injuſta mors juſtam vinceret mortem & liberaret nos juſtè, dum pro nobis occiditur injuſtè; That ſo his unjuſtly inflicted death might overcome our juſtly deſerved death, and might moſt rightly free and deliver us from death; becauſe hee was moſt wrongfully ſlaine for us, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh.

Heb. 1. 3.

Heb. 9. 22.

Aug. Ser. 10. de tempore.

Queſt. Secondly, It will be demanded, why the word, that is the Sonne, ſhould be bee incarnate and made fleſh, rather then the Father or the Holy Ghoſt.

Reſp. Saint Auguſtine thinketh that the cauſe pertained more ſpecially unto the Sonne then to the Father, or to the Holy Ghoſt; for that the Divell attempted to uſurpe the dignity and authority of the Sonne of God, ſaying in his heart, that hee would be like unto the moſt higheſt, that is, the image of the Father, and ſought to intrude himſelfe into his glory, to bee the Prince of this world, and the Head of every creature, which things were onely proper unto the Sonne of God; and therefore it behoved the Sonne to come into the world, to overcome the Divell, that would have wronged him, and all other men, that were to bee members of him.

Why the Sonne rather then the Father, or the Holy Ghoſt was made man.

But we find many other reaſons, to ſhew, why the Word was made fleſh, rather then the Father, or the Holy Ghoſt; As

First, becauſe it is the office of the Word to declare the minde of God.

First, becauſe the Incarnation of God was made for the manifeſtation of God; but we declare and manifeſt things by words; and Chriſt is the word of the Father, the wiſedome, the knowledge and the interpreter of his Fathers will, even as our word is the interpreter of our minde, as Origen and Clemens Alexandrinus doe declare: and therefore the word was rightly incarnate, that God in him might be ſeene, and heard, and underſtood of us, according to that ſaying of the Evangeliſt, that which wee have heard and ſeene, and our hands have handled of the word of life, that declare we unto you; For as he is λόγος, the word, in reſpect of his perſon, which is a name of relation unto the minde, as Sonne is to the Father, ſo is he the word in reſpect of his office, that is, of his office, as he is the ſecond perſon of the Trinity; for as it is the property and office of the eternall minde, that is, the Father to beget the word, that is, the Sonne ſo it is the property and the office of the Word to declare the Minde; but becauſe this ſpirituall, inviſible, and ineffable Word, as he is God, could never be ſeene, nor heard, nor underſtood of us, therefore was he made fleſh, that he might be heard and ſeene.

1 Iohn 1.1.

And this the Apoſtle ſeemes to ſhew unto us, when he ſaith, God heretofore at ſundry times and in divers manners ſpake unto the Fathers by the Prophets, but in theſe laſt daies he hath ſpoken unto us by his Sonne; for this is all one, as if hee had ſaid, that the word heretofore was uttered by other mens mouthes, but now, after he was made fleſh, he ſpake and revealed his Father unto us by his owne voice, and with his owne proper mouth; for ſo Tertullian ſaith, that he, which ſpake unto the Fathers, was this word God; and ſo Saint Paul ſheweth, when hee brings in God, ſaying, The Word is neere unto thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart, and then he expoundeth this word of Chriſt, ſaying, This is the Word of Faith which we preach; for they preached Ieſus Chriſt; and ſo Saint Iohn himſelfe ſeemeth to ſhew this reaſon, why he had called Chriſt the Word, when he ſaith, The onely begotten Sonne, which is in the boſome of the Father, he hath declared; for this is all one as if he had ſaid, This only begotten Sonne is therefore the Word, becauſe hee declareth the minde of God unto us; ſo when he ſaith, what we have heard of the Word of life, that is, he is therefore the Word, becauſe we have heard him; and ſo when he ſaith, There be three that beare witneſſe in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit; for why ſhould he ſay the Word, when as the name of Father required that he ſhould rather ſay, the Father, the Sonne, and the Spirit; but becauſe the Son, as the word of the Father, doth beare witneſſe unto us of his Fathers will: and therfore, ſeeing it was the office of the Word to declare the mind of God, it belonged unto the Word to be made Fleſh, that he might be heard and ſeene of us.

Heb. 1.1.

Rom. 10.8.

Iohn 1.18.

1 Iohn 5.7.

Whether the Holy Ghoſt is termed the Word.

Ob. But then it may be objected, that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be incarnate, as well as the Sonne; for Saint Baſil ſaith, that the Holy Ghoſt is called λόγος, the word, as well as the Sonne, and that he is therefore called the Word, becauſe hee is the interpreter of the Sonne, even as the Sonne is the interpreter of the Father; for he ſhall teach you all things, ſaith Chriſt; and to prove this, he citeth thoſe words of the Apoſtle, that we ſhould take the ſword of the Spirit, which is λόγος θεοῦ, the Word of God; and thoſe words in the firſt Chapter to the Hebrewes, ver. 3. that

Iohn 14.16.

Basilius l 5.c.11. contra Eunom.

Christ beareth up all things with the word of his power, or his mighty Word, that is, his Holy Spirit, saith Saint Basil.

To this Aquinas answereth, that S. Basil herein speakes improperly; for that the Sonne of God alone, is properly called the Word, and that Saint Paul, by the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, doth not understand the Holy Ghost, but the word which came unto the Prophets, & was left unto us in the holy Scriptures; and that the words of the Author to the Hebrewes, are to bee understood of the command of Christ, as if the Apostle had said, that Christ beareth up all things, and governeth all things by his mighty command, or according as himselfe defineth, and would have all things to be, as Victorinus saith; or else that Christ sustaineth all things by his mighty word, that is, after an Hebrew phrase, by himselfe, which is the mighty Word of his Father, as Maldonat saith.

Victorinus in l. adverſ. Arrium.

Maldonat. in Ioh. 1

Secondly, because God would observe good order in all things.

Secondly, the Word was made flesh, Propter ordinem ſervandum, because God, which is the God of order, would keepe good order in all things; As

First, that the world might be repaired by the same instrument by which it was created; but the Father made all things by his Word, therefore he would redeeme mankinde by his Word.

Secondly, that he which was the essentiall and uncreated image of God, might restore that created image of God, which was corrupted in us.

Thirdly, that the naturall Sonne of God might make us the adopted sonnes of God.

Fourthly, that the Sonne by his example might teach us the obedience of sonnes.

Thirdly, because God would shun all inconveniences that might arise, if he had not beene incarnate.

Thirdly, the Word was made flesh, Propter vitandum inconveniens; because God would avoide all absurdities that otherwise might seeme to ensue; for, if the Father had beene incarnate, then there had beene two Fathers, and two Sons; the Father in the Deity had beene the Sonne in the Humanity, and the Sonne in the Deity had beene the Father of the Humanity, and neither of them had beene of himselfe, without beginning; but he, that was the beginning of the Sonne in the Deity, had had his beginning from the Sonne, in the humanity; but now he, that is from the Father in the Deity, is likewise from the Father in the humanity, and he, that is the Sonne in the Deity, is likewise the Son in the humanity; and if the Holy Ghost had beene incarnate, then there had beene two sonnes, one in the Deity, and another in the Humanity; Et nomen Filij ad alterum transiret, qui non esset aeterna nativitate Filius; And the name of Sonne had passed to another, which was not a Sonne by an eternall nativity: and therefore in all respects it was fittest, and agreeable to all reason, that the Word should be incarnate and made flesh, as Saint Augustine saith.

Ob. But against this it will be objected, that seeing Opera Trinitatis ad extra sunt indiviſa, The outward workes of the Trinity are indivisible and common to each person, so that whatsoever any one of them doth, it is done by each one; and that this is an outward worke of the Trinity, common to each person; each person being an agent in this action; the Fathers power, the Sonnes wisedome, and the Holy Ghost his goodnesse, all concurring in this incarnation; For

That all three persons were the makers of the flesh of Christ.

First, how can the Creator and the Creature especially a creature relapsed from God, be joyned together without great power? the power of joyning the disagreeing elements was very great, and the power of joyning them to a created spirit was greater, but hypostatically to joyne a creature, disioyned from his Creator, unto an uncreated spirit must needs be the greatest power that can be: And therefore this incarnation of the Word could never have beene done without the infinite power of God.

Secondly, how can the first and the last be united together, without great wisedome? for this Word was the beginning, yea before the beginning of all things, and Adam was the last of all Gods creatures: And therefore the Word God, and the the flesh of man, could never bee united without infinite wisedome.

Thirdly, can the Creator communicate himselfe so neerely unto his Creatures, without the greatest goodnesse that can be? for it was a great benignity and kindnesse of God, to communicate himselfe unto all creatures by his presence, and it was a greater kindnesse to communicate himselfe to all the godly by his grace; but it is the greatest of all, to unite himselfe hypostatically by his spirit unto our flesh; And therefore this could not be done without infinite goodnesse; and so, in this respect, we finde this worke of the incarnation ascribed to each person; for the Father sent me, saith our Saviour; and I came into the world, saith he of himselfe; and the Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the most high shall overshadow thee, whereby thou maist conceive, saith Gabriel unto the blessed Virgin: And therefore, seeing the whole Trinity was the Maker of this Word flesh, how can it bee but that the whole Trinity should bee incarnate and made flesh?

Iohn 5.36. Chap. 6.38 & Chap 18.37. Luke 1.35.

Sol. I answer that this worke of the Words Incarnation, is to be considered two waies.

That the Sonne onely assumed our Flesh.

1. Inchoativè. As it was inchoated and begun.
2. Consummativè. As it is consummated and finished.

And

In the first sense, it is common to all the three persons of the Trinity; for it was made by them all three; but in the second sense, it was proper only unto the Word; because it was assumed onely by the Word, as Saint Augustine sheweth; for, as if three Maides should spinne and make a garment, and then put it upon one of them to weare, all three should be the makers, yet but one should be the wearer of the same; Even so, though the Father did appoint Christ a body, and this body was conceived by the Holy Ghost, yet neither the Father, nor the Spirit did assume that body, but onely the person of the Sonne of God: and therefore Saint Augustine saith truly, that Implevit carnem Christi Pater & Spiritus Sanctus, sed majestate, non susceptione; The flesh of Christ was filled with the Majesty of the Father, and of the Holy Ghost, but it was onely united to the person of the Word.

Aug. in Enchrid. C.38.

Idem Ser. 3. de temp.

Ob. But then againe it may be objected, that seeing the nature of the Father and the nature of the Sonne bee the very same; for they bee both ὁμοουσιοι, of the very selfe-same essence (as I have sufficiently shewed unto you before,) and the whole divine Essence is in every one of them; therefore how can it bee but the Sonne being incarnate, the Father should bee incarnate also.

Sol. To this we answer briefly, that although the nature of the Father, and the nature of the Sonne be the very same, yet, Aliter est in Patre, & aliter est in Filio; This very selfe-same essence is otherwise, or after another manner in the Father, and after another manner in the Son; and therfore we say, that the Divine nature, simply considered, cannot be said to be incarnate; Sed natura divina determinata & limitata in persona filij, But the divine nature limited and determined in the person of the Sonne: And this S. Augustine doth most excellently expresse against the Iewes, saying, O Iudae Cytharam respice, &c. Behold, O Iew, the Harpe, when it yeelds sweet and pleasant tune; there be three things that seeme to concurre alike, the skill, the hand and the string, and yet there is but one sound heard; Ars dictat, manus tangit, chorda resonat, The Art or skill directeth, the hand toucheth, and the string onely soundeth; Tria pariter operantur, they doe all three worke alike, and yet neither the skill, nor the hand do yeeld the sound, but onely the string; Sic nec Pater, nec Spiritus Sanctus susceperunt carnem, & tamen cum Filio pariter operantur; So neither the Father, nor the Holy Spirit did assume the flesh, and yet they did all agree in the working and making of this flesh; but, as the string alone doth yeeld the musicall harmony, so the word alone did assume the flesh; the worke is seene in all three, but as the sound of the musicke pertaineth unto the string alone, so the assumption of our flesh pertaineth to the word alone: and if any incredulous

The divine nature limited in the person of the Sonne, was made flesh.

Non quia, qui summus Pater est, & Filius hic est, Sed quia quod summus Pater est, & Filius hoc est. Sedulius.

Operatio in tribus consistat, sed quem admodum ad solam chordam soni redditio, sic pertinet ad solum Christum carnis humanae susceptio.

Iew, with Nicodemus, demaunds, how this Word should be made flesh of a Virgin without the helpe of man, let him tell me how Aarons rod, being a drie stick, could blossome and beare ripe Almonds, and I will tell him how the Virgin did conceive and beare a Sonne; but he cannot tell the former, though the lesser miracle; therefore no wonder that I cannot expresse the latter, which is so ineffable a mystery, saith Saint Augustine. And so you see the first Branch of this Text, touching the person, who was made, the Word, the Sonne, the second person of the blessed Trinity, fully discussed.

Numb. 17. 8. Aug. de incarnat. Dom. cont. Iudeos. Vt virga floruit absq; germine, sic virgo concepit non ex homine. Bernard. ho sup. missus est.

BRANCH II.

2 Branch.

CHAP. I.

Of Christ his apparition before his Incarnation, and of the conception of Christ; the manner of it, and the reasons why he was so conceived.

Tres mistiuras fecit omnipotens illa maiestas in assumptione carnis nostræ, ita mirabiliter singularia & singulariter mirabilia, ut talia nec facta, nec facienda sint amplius super terram.

SEcondly, having seene who was made, we are to consider what hee was made, Flesh; for the Word was made Flesh; & S. Bernard saith, God did three workes, three mixtures, as he calleth them in the assumption of our flesh, so singularly wonderfull, and so wonderfully singular, that the like were never made before, nor shall be made hereafter upon the face of the Earth; Conjuncta quippe sunt ad invicem Deus & homo, mater & virgo, fides & cor humanum; For now are joyned together God and our Flesh, a Mother and a Virgin, a divine Faith and a humane Heart; for Three mixtures.

1 Mixture.

First, the Word, and Soule, and Flesh have met, and made but one Person: These three are one, and this one is three; not by the confusion of substance, but in the unity of person; This is the first and most super-excellent mixture, or conjunction.

2 Mixture. Gaudia matrù habens cum virginitatis honore. Bernardus.

The second is a Virgin, and a Mother, a thing so admirable and so singular, that since the World beganne it was never heard, that she, which brings forth a childe, should bee a Maide, and that she should bee a Mother, which still remaines a Virgin.

3 Mixture.

The third is Faith, and Mans Heart; Inferior quidem, sed non minus forsitan fortis; an inferiour copulation, but perhaps not deserving much lesse admiration; For it is a wonder to see how the Heart of Man can yeeld Faith and believe unto these two, and to beleeve that God should be made Man, and that she should remaine a Virgin, which had borne a Sonne; for as Iron and a Gally-cup can never be coupled together, so no more can these two, unlesse they be glewed and coupled by Gods Spirit: And therefore this is an excellent conjunction; the second is more excellent; but the first is most excellent, that the Word should be made Flesh.

Bernard. Ser. 3. in vigil. nativitatis.

That there is a great difference betwixt Christ his apparition in the shape of man, and the assumption of our flesh to bee made man.

But to descend a little into more particular examination of the same; We must observe, that he doth not say, The Word appeared in Flesh, but the Word was made Flesh; To note unto us a speciall difference betwixt his apparitions in the forme and shape of man, unto the Fathers of the Old Testament, and his incarnation and making himselfe man now in the time of the New Testament; For it is most certaine, that this Word, at divers times, did appeare and conferre with the Fathers, in the visible forme and shape of man; & præstantissimi theologorum dicunt quotiescunq; Deus immortalis hominibus apparuit, apparuisse personam secundam, id est, filium; quod sanè ab illis rectè existimatum est, saith Cunæus: the most excellent Divines doe say, that whensoever the immortall God hath appeared Petrus Cunæus de repub. Heb. l. 3. c. 3. p. 405.

red unto mortall man, it was the ſecond perſon of the Trinity, that is, the Sonne of God, Chriſt Ieſus, that did appeare, which in truth is moſt rightly ſaid of them, in the judgement of that learned man; and therefore

It is not improbable, nor to many men incredible, that he aſſumed upon him the forme and ſhape of Man, when he created man, and ſo made man not onely in his owne Image, which he had as God, that is, In holineſſe and true righteouſneſſe, but alſo like unto himſelfe, in reſpect of that forme and ſhape, which he then aſſumed, and which he intended to be made himſelfe thereafter; for which cauſe it is ſaid, that he made man in his owne Image and likeneſſe, to ſhew by theſe two words, that as he purpoſed to be made like unto this man, which he was now to make, ſo this man ſhould be made like unto him in a double reſpect; that is, both of this forme aſſumed, and of thoſe Divine Excellencies wherewith he ſhould be indued: And this may be collected out of Moſes, where he ſaith; That Adam heard the voice of the Lord God, walking in the Garden; For God, as he is a God, hath neither voice to ſpeake, nor feete to walke, but aſſuming the forme and ſhape of a man, he did both walke and talke with him; And in reſpect of this bodily preſence of God, the man did ſpecially ſeek to hide himſelfe among the Trees of the Garden, when he heard his voice, and not before.

That Chriſt divers times aſſumed the forme of a Man, before hee was made man.

Gen. 3. 8.

But to Abraham, it is apparant, that hee appeared two ſeverall times at leaſt.

Firſt, In the plaine of Mamre; for Moſes ſaith, not onely, that the Lord talked with Abraham, but he ſaith alſo, that Abraham calleth him, The Iudge of all the world, which can be aſcribed to none but Chriſt, which is the Iudge of quicke and dead.

Gen. 18. 13. 20. Verſ. 25.

Ob. But againſt this it may be objected, that the Apoſtles, which are the beſt Interpreters of the Old Teſtament, doe interpret this of the Angels, and not of Chriſt, as the Authour of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes ſheweth, ſaying, Bee not forgetfull to entertaine ſtrangers, for thereby ſome have entertained Angels unawares.

Heb. 13. 2.

Sol. To this I anſwer briefly, that an Angel, being a name of Office, and not of Nature, that ſignifieth a Meſſenger, or one that is ſent, Chriſt is oftentimes called an Angell; becauſe he was ſent from God, to performe thoſe Offices, that he did in thoſe aſſumed formes, on the behalfe of God; So he is called, The Angell of the Covenant; And ſo Eſayas ſaith, That the Angell of Gods preſence ſhould ſave his people, that is, Ieſus Chriſt; for it is he, and none but he that ſhall ſave his people from their ſinnes: And therefore I ſay, that he which appeared unto Abraham, was none other but Ieſus Chriſt, accompanied with two Angels; to ſhew both the myſtery of the bleſſed Trinity, and the ſoveraignty of Chriſt over all his Creatures; and therefore Abraham ſpeakes to one, as to the Lord, and calls but one of them the Iudge of all the World.

That Chriſt is often called an Angell.

Mal 3 1. Eſay 63. 9.

Secondly, He appeared unto Abraham in his returne from the Conqueſt of the foure Kings; for though ſome of the antient Iewes in their idle fancies have imagined him to be ſuch a perſon,* as is much derogatory to the Majeſty of ſo glorious a Prieſt, and ſuch a ſuperexcellent King, becauſe hee is onely named by Moſes without any mention of his deſcent; And Saint Hierom, with divers others old and new Writers, of good eſteeme in the Church of Chriſt, doe reject the judgement of one, which in Saint Hieroms time did ſay, that Melchiſedecke which met Abraham and bleſſed him, was the Sonne of God; and that opinion of Origen likewiſe, who thought this Melchiſedecke to be an Angell of God or the Holy Ghoſt, as ſome father it upon him; and ſo likewiſe that opinion of the Melchiſedechians, which ſuppoſed him to be no leſſe then an Angell, to whom the Hieracites drew very neere, when they would needs have him to bee more then a man, as both Epiphanius, and Saint Hierome, and Saint Ambroſe doe teſtifie; and ſaith, that hee was one of the Inhabitants of Canaan, and a King of Shalem, and alledgeth for the confirmation of his opinion, the judgement of Ireneus, Hippolitus, Euſebius Caſarienſis, Euſebius Emiſſenus, Apollinarius, and Euſtathius,

* A baſtard.

Hieron in Epiſt. ad Evagrium. Petrus Cunæus de repub. Heb. l. 3. c. 3 p. 396. Origen. in Comment. in loc.

Epiphan. hæreſ 55. Hieron. ep. ad Evag 20. 4. Ambroſ. in ep ad Hebr. 7. 2.

Sharpius in Symphon. Epocha. 3. q. 5 & Hugo Broughton, & Warburton in quad. concione de Melchisedec. & Selden. in hist. decimarum. p. 451 &c.

first Bishop of Antioch; and though some of our latest Divines have imagined him to be Sem, the sonne of Noah; yet if we search out this truth without partiality, we shall finde this man to be none other then Iesus Christ, the Sonne of God; For 1 That Melchisedecke was no inhabitant of Canaan.

First, it is not likely that he should bee an Inhabitant of Canaan, and a King of Salem.

1 Reason.

First, because it is certaine that hee must bee a greater and a holier man then Abraham; for the lesser is ever blessed of the greater, and it is certaine that the Cananites inherited the curse of their Father Canaan; and therefore it may not be conceived, without some breach to the analogie of our faith, that he, which blesseth faithfull Abraham, should bee of the cursed generation of the Cananites.

2 Reason.

Secondly, because S. Paul explaining the story of Melchisedech, saith, πρῶτον μὲν ἑρμηνευόμενο βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης ἔπειτα ἢ καὶ βασιλεὺς σαλήμ, ὁ ἐστὶ βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης,

Heb. 7. 2.

He was first, by interpretation, King of Righteousnesse, and after that also King of Salem, which is (saith he) King of Peace: and therefore although there was a towne in Canaan called Salem as either that Salim, which wee reade of in Iohn 3. 23. and was not farre distant from the plaine of Mamre, where Abraham now lived, or Ierusalem it selfe, that was called Salem, Psal. 76. 2. as others will have it; yet the Apostle sheweth that he was called Melech-Salem, not because he was King of such a towne, but because hee was indeed a King of Peace; or otherwise, we might say, Sedec was a towne in Canaan, as well as Salem, and he was Melech-Sedec, that is, King of Sedec, as well as Melech-Salem, that is, King of Salem.

Vers. 2.

3 Reason.

Thirdly, because then, there must be of necessity another everlasting Priesthood, beside the Priest-hood of Christ; For that this Melchisedecke had neither beginning of daies nor end of time, but remaineth a Priest for ever: And, whereas they that would have this Melchisedecke to be a mortall man King of Salem, even Sem the sonne Noah, doe answer hereunto, and say, that he was not eternall, but is so said to be by the Apostle, that is, to have neither beginning of daies nor end of time; because the Scripture, especially there, where he is named Melchisedecke, makes no mention of his parents, nor of his birth, nor of his death; or, because he was so aged, at this time, so long after the flood, that no man, then living, remembred his Father, or could say any thing of his Mother; or els that hee was without beginning of daies, in respect of the new world, after the flood; and without end of life, in respect of the old world, before the flood, I say, that this is a weake and simple answer; for how many Levites, Priests, and worthy men, have we in Scripture, whose beginnings and endings are not mentioned? and shall we therefore say that they were eternall?

Vers. 3.

Profectò hoc non est mysteria sed rerum ludibria consectari.

Besides, if every aged man, that out-lives all his generation may bee said to bee without Father, and without Mother, without beginning of daies, or end of life; then let Nestor, that lived three ages of men, or Iohannes de temporibus, that as they say lived, in these latter times, 300. yeeres, or any other, that is the most ancient, assume these epithets unto himselfe; and for their last reason I say, Noah himselfe and his two other sonnes may as lawfully challenge the same priviledge, and be as justly said to be, without beginning of daies, in respect of the new world, and without end of life, in respect of the old world, as this Melchisedecke, if he was Sem, as these men would have it; and then the Apostle in giving him this elogie, faileth of his purpose, to preferre him by these priviledges above others.

Quis enim tam ignarus usti nesciat cultum religioni, etiam in ipsis Patriarcharum familijs rudè duntaxat informèq; fuisse donec lege lata, societatem atq; ordinem Levitarum instituit ipse Deus.

4 Reason.

Fourthly, because then, this Priest must needs be of a more excellent order and perfection, then the Levitical Priesthood; and this is not like to be, that in Salem, a towne in the midst of Canaan, there should be now a more excellent order then that, which God himselfe gave unto the Priesthood of the Iewes.

2 That Melchisedecke was not Sem the sonne of Noah.

Secondly, I say this Melchisedecke could not be Sem, in all likelihood; for these speciall reasons.

1. Be-

1. Becauſe, as I ſaid before, thoſe rarities and prerogatives, that the Apoſtle aſcribeth to Melchiſedecke, are no more peculiar to Sem, then to Noah, Iaphet, Ham, or any other ancient man, that ſuperviveth the reſt of his coetanei, that is, the men of the ſame yeeres, if hee may bee ſaid, without Father and without Mother, becauſe no man then living could remember that they ever knew or ſaw his Father or Mother; which yet cannot be proved; becauſe Iaphet or Ham or both of them, might be alive at this time for ought wee know, when as Sem lived 130 yeares after this, as anon I ſhall make it plaine unto you. 1 Reaſon.

2. Becauſe it is very improbable, that Sem, a moſt holy and godly man ſhould live, and live peaceably, in a towne that was not of his owne progenie and offſpring, but in the mids of the Cananites, whom hee knew to bee the moſt accurſed generation, that was then on earth; For this Salem, if wee expound it litterally, muſt bee, either that Salim neere Ænon, where Iohn Baptiſt baptized, as Saint Hierome and Saint Ambroſe doe underſtand it, or Ieruſalem it ſelfe, as many others doe expound it; and both theſe places were inhabited by the Cananites, whereof Ieruſalem was the Metropolis of the Iebuſites, and ſo called Iebus, as you may ſee in Iudges 19.10. and 1 Chron. 11.4, and was poſſeſt by the Iebuſites untill the time of David, which was the firſt that tooke it from them, as you may ſee in the place afore-cited and in 2 *Sam.*5.6. and it was called Ieruſalem, not of Abrahams Iireh added unto Salem, as ſome would have it, becauſe Abraham on Mount Moriah, when the Angell preſerved the life of Iſaac, called the place, Iehova Iireh; * for this Salem was neere unto Sodome, as you may ſee *Gen.*14. 17,18,21. and this place in the land of Moriah was more then too daies journey from the plaines of Mamre that was neere Sodome and Salem, where Abraham dwelt; becauſe it is ſaid, that on the third day Abraham lift up his eyes and ſaw the place a farre off, *Gen.*22.4. therefore it is farre fetcht, to make up Ieruſalem of Abrahams Iireh, that was on Mount Moriah, and this Salem which was not in all likelihood ſo farre from the plaines of Sodome; but it was called Ieruſalem of the Iebuſites, that inhabited the ſame towne, and called it, as I ſaid before, Iebus, which added unto Salem maketh Iebuſalem, and according to the Dialect and Euphonie of that tongue, as of all other languages, was uſually called Ieruſalem: Therefore I thinke it moſt unlikely that Sem ſhould leave all his owne kinred and progenie, that dwelt in the land of the Caldies, as you may ſee in *Gen.*10. 30. & Chap.11.31. and ſhould come to raigne as King among the Iebuſites, that were of the ſeede of Canaan, which poſſeſſed all thoſe places about Salem. 2 Reaſon.

D. Warburton in concione de Melchiſed p.13.

* Vaniſſimum eſt, & exibilet deſpet quod Rabbi Eliezer in capitulis ſuis, ex communi Iudæorũ prodidit, Montem (ſcilicet Moriah) in quo ædes Hieroſolymitanæ ſtetit, hunc ipſum eſſe, in quo primus Lamiſium parens Adamus ſacra fecit, atq; ibidem mox Abelem Caini numq; munera ſua, obtuliſſe, verſus vero & Noachum illic altare poſuiſſe, cuiꝰ ex area egrederetur, & Abrahamum eodẽ loco monitis huic præceptum fuiſſe ut filium macta ret — nemo noſtrum tam barbarus eſt qui hoc credat. Petrus Cunæus de republ. Hebr. l. 2. c. 12.

Ob. But you will ſay, why might not hee come there as well as Abraham, that came of Arphaxad, the ſonne of Sem.

Sol. I anſwer, that Tera, Abrahams Father is the firſt that wee reade of, which, with Abraham and Lot, is ſaid to have gone foorth from Ur of the Chaldees to goe into the land of Canaan; and they are ſaid to be ſojourners in a ſtrange land, *Heb.*11.9. and to dwell in Tabernacles and Tents, and not to rule as Kings or governours, unleſſe it were over their own families, in any place; and therefore the comming of Abraham, which is recorded as a matter of great faith, that hee ſhould leave his owne countrey where hee might have lived as a King, to live as a ſtranger among theſe Cananites, doth no waies prove any likelihood, that Sem ſhould come to Canaan, and be there received as a King, and the Scripture make no mention thereof.

Thirdly, that Sem ſhould bee the eldeſt ſonne of Noah, and ſo the right of Prieſthood to belong to him by the law of primo-geniture, as it was the ordinary cuſtome, in the primitive age of this world, it is now of all ſides yeelded, that hee was not; becauſe what the Hebrew Text in the 10. of *Gen.*21. through the want of the variation of caſes, hath left doubtfull, the Septuagint verſion makes it plaine, when it ſaith; Καὶ τῷ Σημ ἐγεννήθη καὶ αὐτῷ πάσῃ, παντων τῶν υἱων Εβερ ἀδελφῷ τῷ Ιάφεθ τῷ μειζονος; that is, unto Sem alſo the Father of all the children of Eber, 3 Reaſon.

Eber the brother of Iaphet the elder, even to him were children borne, as our laſt Engliſh tranſlation doth moſt rightly render it; and howſoever Ioſeph Scaliger is confident that he was the firſt-borne, yet the ſtory of Moſes is ſufficient to diſprove the ſame; becauſe, as M. Selden rightly collecteth, Noah was five hundred yeares old, and Noah begat Sem, Ham, and Iapheth, and Sem was an hundred yeares old, and begat Arphaxad two yeares after the floud, that is, (as is moſt probable, if not plaine) Sems age was onely a hundred yeares, when Noah was ſix hundred and two yeares old; ſo Noah was five hundred and two yeares old, when Sem was borne; and therefore whoſoever was borne when Noah was but five hundred yeares of age, (which muſt be either Ham or Iapheth) he muſt be a hundred and two yeares old, when Sem was but onely a hundred; and ſo the Rabbins teach that Iaphet was the elder brother.

In Eleuch Orat. Chron. David. Parai. p. 35.

Gen 5.32.

Gen 11.10.

Gen 7.6.

M. Selden in his review. p. 451. Dav. Kimchi & Iarchi ad Gen. 10. 21.

But to this it is anſwered, that although regularly and ordinarily the birthright and the Prieſthood were annexed together, and the eldeſt was to be the Prieſt, yet extraordinarily and by ſpeciall bleſſing, it was ſomtimes transferred upon ſome younger brother, as at firſt from Cain to * Abel, as ſome do thinke, and then to Seth, as others ſay; and afterwards from Iſmael to Iſaac, and from Eſau to Iacob.

* Vide Philonem περὶ τῶν ἱερουργοῦντων Ἀβέλτε καὶ Καίν.

But againſt this (I think) I may ſafely reply, that although God hath jus abſolutum, an abſolute right over all his creatures, and may, without controlment, bleſſe whom he will, and with-draw his bleſſing from whom he pleaſe, he may have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth, yet God, being pleaſed to ſet down certaine rules, whereby he will bring his purpoſes to paſſe, and aſſuring us that he will deale with us according to thoſe preſcribed lawes, which he hath promiſed to tie himſelfe unto, as never to reject any man, untill that man rejecteth him, it is not probable unto me, that God uſeth his abſolute power at any time, without ſome ſpeciall reaſon for the ſame; and therefore, though the Prieſthood was transferred from Cain to Abel, and ſo of the others, yet this doth give no colour that it ſhould be tranſlated from Iaphet unto Shem; becauſe Cain was an hypocrite, and brought the worſt things to God, when Abel offred the beſt, and Iſmael was a wild man, his hand againſt every man, and every mans hand againſt him; and Eſau ſo prophane, that he ſold his birthright for a meſſe of pottage; and therefore good reaſon, that both the birth-right, and bleſſing, and Prieſthood, ſhould be given, as God ſaith unto Saul of his kingdome, to men better than they; but we read of no ſuch deſerts in Iaphet, that he ſhould loſe either his bleſſing or his Prieſthood, though it pleaſed God, out of his more ſpeciall mercy, to tie the bleſſing of the promiſed ſeed unto the poſterity of Sem.

Exod 33.19. Rom 9 15.

No reaſon to prove that God took away the Prieſthood from Japhet.

Gen. 16. 12.

1 Sam. 15. 28.

And beſides I ſay, that the families of theſe men increaſing, and ſpreading themſelves, even in the dayes of Sem, over Perſia, Armenia, Caldea, Babylon, Ægypt, Aſſyria, Canaan, and almoſt all the countreyes of the Eaſt and South part of the world, we muſt not think but that Iapheth was both Prieſt and Prince as well as Sem; and ſo the chiefe man in every family, though he was not the firſt-borne of his father, nor to have the right of Prieſthood while he lived with his elder brother, was to be Prieſt; elſe how ſhould every nation be furniſhed with Prieſts, if the Prieſthood did not dilate it ſelf, anſwerable to the repleniſhing of the earth with the ſonnes of men; and therfore I ſay now, Sem was no more Prieſt than Iapheth, nor ſo much neither, Iapheth being his eldeſt brother, and no wayes deſerving to be diveſted from his Prieſthood.

More Prieſts than one.

4 Reaſon. Vide S.W. Rawleigh. l. 1. part 1. cap. 7.

4 Becauſe we find by good reaſon, that the Arke of Noah did reſt in ſuch a part of mount Ararat or mount Taurus in Armenia, which is forty degrees in longitude from the land of Canaan, which comes to above two thouſand and foure hundred miles, reckoning ſixty miles to a degree; and it is moſt probable to all men, that thoſe Eaſterne parts, about the place where the Arke reſted, were firſt inhabited by the ſons of Noah, and then, as the people began to multiply, the elder, in all likelihood, ſtaid in their accuſtomed places, and the younger ſort were ſent

The Eaſtern parts firſt inhabited.

ſent forth to plant colonies in the further countreyes; and therefore it carieth no colour of truth to me, that Sem, being ſo godly a man, that ſo much reverenced and reſpected his father Noah, would now leave him in his old age, and go travell above two thouſand and 4 hundred miles with the accurſed Canaanites; or if he did, that he no wayes ſought to diſſwade that head-ſtrong and ambitious people to attempt the ſtructure of ſuch a Babell, as would bring confuſion to the whole world; or if he came with Nimrod and his colonie, it is as ſtrange to me, that Moſes, which is ſo punctuall in relating all particulars in the ſtory of the faithfull, from whence the bleſſed ſeed ſhould come, ſhould be ſo ſilent, and ſay nothing either of his comming or his living in this place.

5 Becauſe Origen, that was a man of great wit, learning, and induſtry, ſo much that S. Hierom wiſh'd he had his knowledge, would never have thought this Melchiſedech to be an Angell, nor thoſe many learned men (no doubt) that were called the Melchiſedechians, and the Hieracites, would never have thought him to be more than a man, if they had ſeen any probable reaſon to induce them to believe he had been Sem the ſon of Noah. 5 Reaſon.

And therefore, though I confeſſe Sem might and did live about a hundred and thirty yeares after this time, becauſe Sem lived ſix hundred yeares, and when he was

The yeares of Shem.

102 yeares old, he begat Arphaxad.
35 yeares after that, Arphaxad begat Sala;
30 yeares after that, Sala begat Eber,
34 yeares after that, Eber begat Peleg;
30 yeares after that, Peleg begat Reu;
32 yeares after that, Reu begat Serug;
30 yeares after that, Serug begat Nahor;
29 yeares after that, Nahor begat Tera;
70 yeares after that, Tera begat Abraham; and

80 yeares after that, or thereabouts, was the time that Melchiſedech met Abraham, becauſe he was 86 yeares old when he begat Iſmael, and he had then lived ten yeares in the land of Canaan; ſo by this account Sem was about 470 yeares, when Melchiſedech did meet Abraham; and he muſt live after that, 100 and 30 yeares, to make up the age of ſix hundred yeares, which the Scripture doth aſcribe unto him; yet I ſay, it is no waies likely, neither could I yet ſee any convincing argument, to prove that this Melchiſedech was Sem, or any other mortall man whatſoever, of all the inhabitants of Canaan: And therefore

Thirdly, I ſay with him in S. Hierom, whoſe name he doth not ſet down, and whoſe arguments to confirme his ſpeech, S. Hierom doth neither relate nor confute, that it is moſt probable unto me, and moſt agreeable unto the Apoſtles mind, that he was none other than Ieſus Chriſt, the Son of God. 3 That Melchiſedech was Ieſus Chriſt.

Firſt, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that he was greater than the Patriarch Abraham, which is ſaid by the Apoſtle to be the Father of the faithfull; which Epithete, with the words χωρὶς πάσης ἀντιλογίας, do ſufficiently ſhew him to be, diviniori cujuſdam naturæ, of a farre more excellent and diuiner nature than Abraham was. 1 Reaſon, Verſe 7.

Secondly, becauſe the Apoſtle, going to ſpeake of this Melchiſedech, ſaith that he had many things to ſay concerning him, which were δυσερμήνευτος λέγειν hard to be explained: which certainly he would never have ſaid, had he not underſtood this Melchiſedech to have been ſome excellent and ineffable perſon; becauſe he never doth ſo, when he ſpeakes of other types and figures. 2 Reaſon. Heb. 5. v. 11. περὶ οὗ πολὺς ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, καὶ δυσερμήνευτος λέγειν.

Thirdly, becauſe the Apoſtle ſaith not, whoſe death is not mentioned by Moſes, for ſo he might be dead, though his death is not ſpoken of; but he ſaith, that David teſtifieth of him ὅτι ζῇ, that he liveth, to ſhew the difference betwixt this Prieſt and thoſe Leviticall Prieſts which died: And therefore comparing both the Prieſthood of the Levites and of Chriſt together, he ſaith, καὶ ὧδε μὲν δεκάτας ἀποθνήσκοντες ἄνθρωποι λαμβάνουσιν, μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῇ; and here men that die receive 2 Reaſon. Verſe 8. Heb. 7. 8.

tithes

That Melchisedech liveth.

tithes, but there he receiveth them of whom it is witnessed that he liveth; wherein he would give us to understand

1 That the Levites were men.
2 That they were mortall men and died.

But this Priest, by the antithesis, to be neither man, that is, simply a man, nor mortall, because the Prophet testifieth, that he liveth; and going to prove the necessity of the change of the Law, he saith, it was evident, because our Lord sprang out of Iuda, but yet it was farre more evident, because that after the similitude of Melchisedech, there ariseth another Priest, who is made, ὃς οὐ κατὰ νόμον ἐντολῆς σαρκικῆς, not after the law of a carnall commandement, ἀλλὰ κατὰ δύναμιν ζωῆς ἀκαταλύτου; but after the power of an endlesse life: therefore Melchisedech can be none other than Christ; because he was of an endlesse life; or els the similitude doth not hold, that Christ was of an endlesse life, κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα Μελχισεδέκ, after the likenesse of Melchisedech; but the Apostle proveth him to be so, not by what Moses said, or said not, but by the testimony of David, which affirmeth that he liveth.

Heb.7.14,15,16.

4 Reason. Heb.7.3.

Fourthly, because the Apostle saith, that this Melchisedech, was like unto the Sonne of God, even as Nebuchadnezzar saith, that the fourth man, which walked with the three children, in the fiery furnace, was like unto the Sonne of God; so here the Apostle saying, that he was ἀφωμοιωμένον τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, like the Sonne of God, meaneth (no doubt) that he assumed a body of the same likenesse, and habit, and countenance, as afterward he meant to unite personally unto himselfe; for that it is an usuall thing in Scripture, to say, that he, which is, is like unto himself, as where the Apostle saith, that he was found in shape as a man, and tooke upon him the forme of a servant, and was made in the likenesse of men, that is, he was made indeed a true and a naturall man.

Dan.3.25.

Phil.2.7,8.

5 Reason.

Fiftly, because Abraham did give unto him Tythe of all, as perceiving under that visible forme and shape of man, an invisible Deity to subsist, to whom tythe is only due, and everlastingly due, because he is an everlasting Priest.

6 Reason.

Sixtly, because the Apostle confirmeth the perpetuity and eternity of Christ his Priesthood with the testimony of David, who, speaking of Christ, saith, Thou art a Priest for ever, κατὰ τάξιν, according to the order of Melchisedech, saith the Greeke, but sicut, vel quemadmodum Melchisedecus, like Melchisedech, or even as he is a Priest for ever, saith the Hebrew, as Aben Ezra doth expound it.

P. Cunæus de republ. Heb. l.3.c.3. p.402.

7 Reason.

Seventhly, because all they, which do affirme this Melchisedech to be either Shem or any other king of Salem, and a mortall man, Fateri coguntur ea omnia, quæ de illo Apostolus dixit, etiam Messiæ convenire; are compelled to confesse, that all those things which the Apostle speaks of Melchisedech, do very well agree with Christ.

And therefore I say, that this Melchisedech was no mortall man, but the immortall Sonne of God, which assuming this visible shape, did appeare unto Abraham, and offered (as a type of our blessed Sacrament of the Lords Supper) Bread and Wine unto him, after his victory over his enemies: And it may be, that our Saviour had respect hereunto, when he said, that Abraham saw his day, and rejoyced, that is, not only with the eyes of faith, (as all the rest of the Patriarchs and Prophets did) but also in a visible shape, which he assumed, like unto that, whereunto he was afterward to be united, and which many Prophets and just men desired to see, & have not seen; God yeelding not such a speciall favour unto them, as he did unto faithfull Abraham.

Iohn 8.56.

So that man, which wrestled with Iacob, was none other but the man Christ Iesus; for he himselfe said, that Iacob should be called Israel, a wrestler and prevailer with God; and Iacob called the name of the place Peniel, because he had seene God face to face; And so that man, which appeared unto Ioshua, and came as a Captaine of the hoast of the Lord, was none other than Iesus Christ, as Peter Martyr doth most excellently by many arguments confirme.

Gen.32.28,30.

Iosh.5.14.

Whereby

Whereby you see Christ did heretofore assume unto himselfe humane formes, wherein he appeared unto the Fathers, to be as a præludium of his incarnation; but in none of these apparitions, and assumptions of such formes, was he ever said to be made the thing that he assumed, or to unite himselfe hypostatically unto any of the said formes; for those bodies he formed of the ayre, or of nothing, and when he had finished the work for which he had assumed them;

Tum redit in nihilum, quod fuit antè nihil.

Then it returned into nothing, or into that substance, out of which it was framed.

The conception of the Word.

But now, the Evangelist saith, that this word did not onely appeare, or assume unto himselfe our flesh for a time, to discharge some speciall offices, and then to depose, and to lay aside the same again, but that he was made flesh, that is, really made man, like one of us, (sin only excepted) and eternally to remaine man for ever and ever.

Two things to be considered for the understanding of Christs conception.

And therefore, that we may truly understand this point, how this word was made flesh, we must well consider these two especiall things.

1 The manner of his conception in his mothers wombe.
2 The matter, or substance, from which he was formed.

1 The manner.

First, the word ἐγένετο, made, here used, doth plainly shew unto us, (as both S. Chrysostome and Tolet do observe) Mirabilem ejus conceptionem, non virili virtute, sed divina potentia eum esse conceptum; his wonderfull conception, that he was made, not by any vertue of mans seed, but by the power of Gods Spirit, who without any seed of man, did frame and make the man Christ in the wombe of his Mother: and therefore we are to observe Annon putas eum novum puerum in alvo virginis potuisse formare, qui cum primum conderet hominem, nec semen patris, nec viscera materna quæsivit. Maxim. de nat. hom 3.

Three things to be considered.

1 The reason
2 The manner } of this wonderfull and divine conception.
3 The end

1 The reason of this conception.

First, we read that mankind before Christ his comming was made three manner of wayes;

1 Without any man to be his father, or any woman to be his mother, as our fore-father Adam.

2 Of a man without a woman, as Evah.

3 Of a man and woman, as all the off-spring of Adam. But Never any one was made, as Christ was made.

Now Christ after a fourth and a more wonderfull manner, was made of a woman, without the helpe of a man; and so we never read of any other before him, nor of any other after him; for as the Flowers (saith Protagoras) Solummodo habent in cœlo patrem, & in terra solummodo matrem, have only a Father in heaven, that is, the Sun, by whose heat and vertue they grow, and a mother only in earth, that is, the ground, from whence they spring; so Christ, the flower of the root of Iesse, hath only a Father in heaven without a mother, and a mother only in earth without a father; and yet he is not another from his Father, and another from his mother; Sed aliter est à Patre, & aliter ex matre, but he is otherwise from his Father, and otherwise from his mother, that is, a true God of God his Father, and a true man of the Virgin his mother, of two natures, subsisting in one and the self-same person: And the reason why he was borne of a woman, (as S. Ambrose saith) was, Ne perpetui reatus apud viros opprobrium sustinerent mulieres, Least women should still suffer the reproach of perpetuall guiltinesse and blame in the sight of men, for their first transgression; for her yeelding unto the serpent, and the seducing of her husband, made her and all her sexe to be deservedly subject unto much reproach: and therefore, though because the mankind is more noble, Christ would be made a Man; yet because women should not be contemned, he was contented to be borne of a woman; Et sic formam viri assumendo, & de fœmina nascendo, utrumq; sexum hoc modo honorandum indicavit; And so he did sufficiently honour both sexes, the men, by assuming the forme of a man, and the women, by taking his flesh from a woman; that as a woman was the meanes to make man a sinner, so she might be the instrument to bring him a Saviour; but licet secundum conditionem naturæ natus est ex fœmina, tamen supra conditionem

Amb in Luc. 24.

Why Christ was born of a woman.

Aug cont Faust.

natura

Thom. p. 3. q. 31. art 5.

Barrad. l. 7. c. 10.

Why Christ was borne of a Virgin. Irenæus l. 5. c. 19. Vt unde culpa dedit pœnam, pietas daret inde salutem. Sedulius.

Gen. 3. 15.

Esa. 7. 14.

Quis enim peccata mundi tolleret, nisi is, in quem peccatum non cadit?

Iohn 3. 6.

Fitz-Ieffrey.

2 Of the manner how Christ was conceived. Luke 1. 35.

Iohn 3. 6.

Iust. Mart. Apol. 2. pro Christianis. Aug. Ser. 3. de tem. Basil. Ser. de nativitate.

The manner of Christ his conception is ineffable. Mirabilis Deus in sanctis suis Psal. 68 & sit in sanctis mirabilis Deus, quomodo non in ipso mirabilis maximus? Pa. hom. 2. de nat. Dom.

naturæ natus est ex fœmina, tamen supra conditionem naturæ natus est ex virgine, he would, beyond the condition of nature, be borne of such a woman that was a Virgin; becauſe it became not God to have any mother, but a maid; and it beſeemed not a maid to have any ſonne, but a God, ſaith Barradius: And ſo he was made of a woman, of a woman that was a Virgin, and of a Virgin without the helpe of a man; and that for diverſe reaſons; As Firſt, becauſe that woman was a Virgin by whom ſin entred into the world, (as Irenæus thinketh) and all probability confirmeth.

Therefore the heavenly wiſdome did ordaine,
That they, who by a virgins ſin were ſlaine,
Should by a virgins ſeed be ſaved, and whence
Sin came, God would ſalvation draw from thence.

Secondly, becauſe God had promiſed, that the ſeed of the woman, that is, of the woman onely, without the helpe of man, ſhould breake the ſerpents head: and therefore Eſayas ſaith, Behold a virgin ſhall conceive and beare a ſonne.

Thirdly, becauſe he was to be moſt pure, without any the leaſt ſpot or contagion of ſin, which he could not have been, if he had been born after the uſuall manner of men; for as Adam, ſo all the poſterity of Adam, begetting children, do beget the nature of man, together with the guilt and corruption of nature: and therfore our Saviour ſaith, Whatſoever is borne of fleſh, (that is, after the uſuall manner of fleſh and bloud) is fleſh, that is, fleſhly, corrupted, and defiled.

Fourthly, Becauſe this Word had a naturall Father in Heaven; and therefore he was to have none on earth, leaſt thereby he ſhould be ſaid to have two Fathers.

For 'twas not comly, that one ſonne ſhould know
Two fathers; one above, one here below.

Fiftly, becauſe he was to be a Prieſt after the order of Melchiſedech, who was without father, and without mother, to ſhew that Chriſt ſhould be ἀμήτωρ, without mother as he was God, and ἀπάτωρ, without father, as he was a Man; and ſo I might collect many other reaſons, why this Word, being to be made fleſh, would be made of a virgin; but I will proceed.

Secondly, touching the Agent, and the manner of the act, how this ſubſtance ſhould be framed, and this Child ſhould be conceived without the helpe of man, S. Luke doth moſt plainly and fully declare unto us, ſaying, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Higheſt ſhall over-ſhadow thee; which words are not to be underſtood ſo, as if he were begotten ſpermaticos per concubitum, by any carnall effuſion of ſeminall humour, as Ianſenius ſeemeth to imagine; nor of the eſſence or ſubſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, as ſome hereticks have ſaid, for ſo the Holy Ghoſt being God, ſhould have begotten him not man, but God; Quia omne generans generat ſibi ſimile, becauſe every begetter begets his like; and that which is borne of the Spirit, is Spirit; οὐκ διὰ δωρεᾶς; but he was conceived by way of manufacture, that is, by the handy worke, or operation, or by the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt, whereby the Virgin did conceive, as Iuſtine Martyr ſaith; or els by the energeticall command and ordination of the Holy Ghoſt, as S. Auguſtine ſaith; or by the benediction and bleſſing of the Holy Ghoſt, as Saint Baſil ſaith; whereby, that part of the Virgins bloud, or ſeed, whereof the body of Chriſt was to be framed, was ſo cleanſed and ſanctified, that in it there ſhould be neither ſpot nor ſtaine of originall pollution; (for otherwiſe the ſeed of that bleſſed Virgin, before it was ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, was tainted and infected with ſinne;) and then was ſo compoſed and framed, that it became a perfect Chriſt: And becauſe we ſhould not ſearch too much into this myſtery, to know the manner of this conception, it is ſaid, that the power of the Almighty ſhould over-ſhadow her, to teach us, that as we cannot perfectly ſee, nor know the things that are covered, or over-ſhadowed from our eyes; ſo we cannot perfectly know the manner of this conception: Scio quod verbum caro factum eſt, ſed quomodo factum ſit, neſcio; miraris quia ego neſcio, omnis creatura ignorat; I know that the Word

Word was made flesh, but how he was made, I know not; neither is it any wonder that I know not, because every creature is ignorant of it, saith S. Chrysostome: and therefore, as the Prophet David saith of himselfe, I am fearefully and wonderfully made; so we may say of this Sonne of David, that he is most wonderfully made; for Chrys hom. 5.

Psal. 139 13.

First, his Mother was sanctified with the fulnesse of grace, with the over-shadowing of the Holy Ghost, and with the inhabitation of the Sonne of God; and therefore S. Bernard saith, that she was Sine pudore fœcunda, sine gravamine gravida, & sine dolore puerpera; great with child, without breach of chastity; a Mother, and yet a Maid; a woman, and yet escaping the curse of all women; for the Law had accursed them all; virgins, because they were barren, and the married wives, because they should beare in sorrow; but the blessed virgin escaped both, Quia virgo genuit & dolorem non sensit; for that she conceived without sinne, and was delivered without paine, as S. Augustine sheweth, by the example of the Sun, that shines through a glasse, and yet breakes it not; and of the fire, that Moses saw in the bush, and yet consumed it not; but whether she felt any paines or not, I cannot tell; only this we may be sure of, that the greatnesse of her joy and gladnesse, to bring forth such a Sonne, might well swallow up the greatest paine and griefe; and as she conceived a virgin, so she continued a virgin, as all the most judicious Writers have affirmed; for it is neither piety to speake, nor reason to think, that Ioseph being so just, and so godly a man, as the holy Scriptures do testifie of him, and being eighty yeares old, when he was espoused unto Mary, (as Epiphanius saith) should have any desire to know her, whom he knew did beare his Sauiour, or that she especially should yeeld to the desire of any man, after she had conceived and brought forth a God.

Mariam non libido impregnavit, sed fides.

Luke 1.25.

Gen 3.16.

Thus Moses bush sent forth a flaming fume, And burning did not with the fire consume. Exod. 3.2. That the blessed Virgin continued still a Virgin.

Secondly, though the substance and the parts of other men, in ordinary generation be framed successively by degrees; for the seminall humour, first becomes an embryo, then a body inorganicall, then are the liver, heart, and braine fashioned, and then the rest one after another perfected; and it is at least forty dayes, before the body of any child in the wombe be fully formed; yet Christ in the very instant of his conception, Quoad perfectionem partium, non graduum, in respect of the perfection of all parts, was made a perfect man in body and soule, void of sinne, and full of grace; and so in a moment, Totam naturam humanam uniendo formavit, & formando univit; he was perfectly framed, and instantly united unto this eternall Word, perfect God and perfect man; because it is the property of the Holy Ghost, subitò operari, to work instantly and perfectly: And therefore Damascen saith, ὥστε ἅμα σὰρξ, ἅμα θεοῦ λογοῦ σὰρξ; as soone as ever the Flesh of Christ was conceived, it was presently united, and made the Flesh of this Word God; And S. Augustine biddeth us to believe assuredly, Carnem in utero non esse conceptam, priusquam susciperetur à verbo; that the flesh of Christ was not conceived in the wombe, before it was assumed of the Word; and so S. Hierom upon the words of the Prophet Ieremy, where he saith, that a Woman shall compasse a Man, is of the same mind: And not only the ancient, but also the modern Writers do most of them agree in this same point.

That Christ was conceived a perfect man in the first moment of his conception.

Damascen. l. 3 de fide orth. Aug. l. de fide ad Pet. c. 18.

Ier. 3. Pet. Mart. in Symb. Amand. Polan. Syntag theol. de persona Christi. l. 6. cap. 14.

And therfore, when we consider how wonderfully and inexplicably this Word was made flesh; how a Starre gave light unto the Sun, a Branch did beare the Vine, a creature gave being unto the Creatour; how the Mother was younger than what she bare, and a great deale lesser than what she contained; and how this child was suddenly made, perfectly made, holily made, without the helpe of man; we may well say with the Apostle, that great is the mystery of godlinesse; and we should say with S. Augustine, Rem credo, modum non quæro; I do most faithfully believe the matter, but I will not curiously search into the manner of his conception; Quia ratio facti est potentia facientis, ideo considerans autorem, tollo dubitationem.

1 Tim. 3.16.

Tertull. de resur. carnis.

¶ Thirdly, Touching the end and finall cause of this his extraordinary and miraculous conception, it was, as I have partly shewed before, twofold.

3 Christ was conceived of a Virgin.

1 That he might be free from all sin.

First, that he might be pure, and free from all originall sin; because it was requisite, that he which should save sinners, should be himselfe free from all sin; for

The beame out of mine eye he plucks alone,
Who hath nor beame nor blemish in his owne.

Rom.11.16. Ob. But against this it may be objected, that all those which were descended from Adams loynes, did sin in Adam; for if the root be holy, the branches are likewise holy; but if the root be rotten, the branches must needs be corrupted; and

Rom.5.12. S. Paul saith, that by one man sin entred into the world, and by sin death; and so death went over all men; because all men had sinned: But Christ according to the flesh, descended from the loynes of Adam; for so S. Luke fetcheth his pedigree,

Luke 3.ult. even from Adam: and therfore Christ cannot be quite free from all the contagion of sinne.

That Christ cometh not from Adam after the usuall manner of generation. Sol. I answer, that the guilt of Adams sin diffused it selfe only upon such as were in him, both according to the substance of their flesh, Et secundum rationem seminalem, and according to the carnall and usuall way of propagation, as Aquinas saith: But Christ, though he came from Adam according to the substance of his flesh, yet was he not produced from him according to the ordinary way of naturall generation; for he was conceived of the Holy Ghost, and borne of a pure Virgin, who never knew man carnally at any time: And therefore it is most true which S. Peter saith, that he did no sin, neither was any guile found in his mouth;

1 Pet.2.22. Heb.7.26. and that also, which S. Paul saith, He was pure and undefiled, separate from sinners.

2 That he might free us from our sinnes. Secondly, he was thus conceived in all purity, that he might thereby hide and cover our impure conception from the sight of God; for he was conceived after a new manner, that he might take away that sinne, which humane generation attracteth and getteth by the accompanying and coupling together of sinfull flesh:

Aug. de fide ad Petr.c.2. And so S. Augustine saith, God was incarnate in the wombe of his Mother a Virgin, without any carnall copulation with any man, and without any lust of the conceiving Virgin, that by the God-man, which (being conceived without any lust) the inviolate wombe of the Virgin hath brought forth, that sinne might be washed away, which all other men, that are begotten with mans seed, are infected withall; because the condition of our birth is such, that our mothers cannot performe that work of fruitfulnesse, unlesse they first leese the virginity of their flesh; and so with the emission of seed, send forth an infection of sin, which corrupteth both the begetters and the begotten: And therfore hence it is apparent, that seeing he was not onely sanctified by the Holy Ghost, that he might be holy, and without staine of sinne, and so fitted to be united to the person of the Sonne of God, but was also made by the Holy Ghost without any helpe of man, we need not run with the Franciscan Friers to the purity of his mothers conception and birth, to make him pure, and without sin; for indeed it is the manner of his conception by the Holy Ghost, and the sanctifying of that substance, which he assumed of his Mother, and the purging of it from all disposition or inclination unto evill, and not the purity of his Mothers conception, or her want of originall corruption, that frees our Saviour Christ from all imputation of originall infection: And therefore though we acknowledge her the most blessed amongst women, and sanctified above the ordinary degrees of any other man or woman,

That it was not the purity of the Virgin, but the working of the Holy Ghost, that caused Christ to be conceived without sin.

For such a mother never was before,
And such another never shall be more.

Rom.5.12. Yet to say that she was no wayes tainted with originall sin, I dare not affirme; because both the Scriptures and those fruits that we read of, which do spring from Luke 2.48. Iohn 2.4. this naturall root, do sufficiently seem unto me to contradict the same.

And so you see the manner how the substance of his manhood was conceived.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Of the matter whereof the flesh of Christ was formed, and that he had a true naturall Body.

SEcondly, having seen the manner of Christ his conception, we are to consider the matter from which the Flesh of Christ was compoſed; for as there are diverſe kinds of bodies, celeſtiall bodies, aeriall bodies, and terreſtriall bodies; ſo there are diverſe kinds of fleſh; for all fleſh is not the ſame fleſh, but there is one kind of fleſh of men, another fleſh of beaſts, another of fiſhes, another of birds; and therfore to expreſſe what kind of fleſh he took, S. Paul ſaith, He was made of a woman, that is, of the fleſh, and blood, and ſubſtance of his Mother; and ſo he ſaith, that he was made of the ſeed of David: and therefore it muſt needs follow, that he was made in all things like unto his brethren, ſinne onely excepted; for the ſeed of the parents is the firſt matter and ſubſtance whereof the man is made: And if it be true what Ariſtotle and the Philoſophers do affirme, that Semen patris in ſubſtantiam fœtus non cadit, ſed ad menſtruum mulieris ſe habet tanquam artifex ad artificium; the ſeed of the man doth not fall into the ſubſtance of the child, but doth ſo diſpoſe the ſeed of the woman, as a workman frameth and diſpoſeth his worke, to make the ſame into the forme of man, (as this is moſt probable to be true, although Galenus and the Phyſitians ſay the contrary) then have we no reaſon at all to thinke, that he tooke not all the whole nature of man; becauſe he had another worker to diſpoſe and to frame the ſame ſubſtance into the forme of man, ſeeing he was made of the ſame whole ſubſtance, as all other men are made of; and eſpecially, ſeeing he had a farre more excellent agent to worke the ſame, than any ſeed of man can be; for ſeeing, Ibi potior effectus, ubi nobilior eſt cauſa, the effect is ever better, where the cauſe is more excellent, Reaſon it ſelfe ſheweth, that we haue no reaſon, to thinke that he was defective in any thing, that pertained to the perfection of humane nature, or of the naturall properties of the ſame: And therefore, ſeeing he was made of a woman, that is, of the ſeed and ſubſtance of the woman, as all other men be, differing onely in the manner of his conception, or in the agent and worker of his ſubſtance, which made him free from all ſinne, (becauſe that to the ſame end he was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt) which all other men could not be, (becauſe they are conceived by the helpe of mans ſeed,) it is moſt apparent, that he aſſumed,

1 All our humane nature, that is, a true humane body, and a reaſonable humane ſoule.
2 All our naturall properties and infirmities, ſinne onely excepted.

First, that he was a perfect man, of a reaſonable ſoule and humane fleſh ſubſiſting, it may be thus confirmed.

First, becauſe he is a perfect Mediatour; for he cannot be a perfect Mediatour except he be a perfect man: but the Apoſtle ſaith, that there is one Mediatour, that is, one perfect and abſolute Mediatour betwixt God and man, even the Man Chriſt Ieſus; therefore he muſt needs be a perfect man.

Secondly, becauſe he is a Prieſt; for every Prieſt by the Law was to be perfect in all parts, or if he was maimed in any part, he was to offer no ſacrifice unto God; but Chriſt is a Prieſt for ever; therfore he muſt needs be a perfect man, wanting neither ſoule nor body.

Thirdly, becauſe he is our ſacrifice; for the Law requireth that every ſacrifice ſhould be perfect, and to want no part, nor to have any blemiſh at all; but Chriſt is our ſacrifice, and hath offered up himſelfe a ſweet ſmelling ſacrifice unto God for us: and therefore he muſt needs be perfect, without defect, without blemiſh.

2 Of the matter whence Chriſt his fleſh was formed.

1 Cor. 15.
1 Cor. 15. 39.

Gal. 4 4.

Rom. 1 3.
Heb 4. 15.

That we take the ſubſtance of our fleſh from our mothers.

What Chriſt aſſumed.
1 All the parts of man.
That Chriſt was made a perfect man.

1 Reaſon.
1 Tim. 2. 5.

2 Reaſon.

Pſal. 110. 4.

3 Reaſon.

4 Reason.

Mat. 18. 11.

Fulgent. l. 1. de mysterio redemp. ad Trasim.

That Christ had a true humane body, proved
1 By the Scripture of the old Testament.
Gen. 3. 15.
Gen. 22. 18.
Cap. 21 12.
Mal. 1. 2.

Gen. 49. 10.
Esa. 11. 1.

Ier. 23. 5.

Psal. 132. 11.

Quo supra.

That Christ was made of the very substance of his Mother.

2 By the Scriptures of the new Testament.
Luke 1. 31.
Vers. 42.

Heb. 2. 14.

Heb. 10. 5.

Luke 24. 39.

Gal. 4. 4.

Gorham super Gala.

Fourthly, because the whole nature of man, that is, both body and soule was to be redeemed; for that both body and soule were captivated unto Satan: but the Sonne of man came to seeke and to save that which was lost; therefore he must consist both of body and soule; for seeing the divine pitie was contented to deliver all, it behoved the divine Majesty to assume all, saith Fulgentius.

And more particularly, that he had a true and a perfect humane body, it may be thus proved, and shewed unto us.

First, by the Scriptures of the old Testament; for the Lord said in Paradise, that the seed of the woman should breake the serpents head: and afterward unto Abraham, In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; then to Isaac, for in Isaac shall thy seed be called; then to Iacob, for Iacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated; then to Iuda, for the scepter shall not depart from Iuda, untill Shilo come; then to Iesse, for a rod shall come out of the root of Iesse; and then to David, for I will cause the branch of righteousnesse to grow up unto David; and because he was the best and the worthiest of all the Kings of Israel, for he was a man according to Gods owne heart, Et rex super universum Israel; and a King over all Israel; therefore all the Prophets after him, do still play upon his harpe, and alwaies inculcate upon this point, that the Messias should come of the seed of David; for the Lord had sworne unto David, saying, Of the fruit of thy body will I set one upon thy throne; and therefore the Prophet Esay saith, that there should come forth a rod of the stocke of Iesse, and a graffe should grow out of his root; and the Prophet Ieremy saith, that he would raise unto David a righteous branch; as I said before: And therefore seeing he is the seed of Abraham, the seed of David, the fruit of Davids belly, the rod of David, and the branch of David; it is most apparent that he took upon him the substance of David; for who can deny but that the seed, the flower, and the branch is of the same nature and substance that the tree is of, which beareth the flower and the branch? Why then should we be more cruell against our Saviour Christ, which is the branch of David, and the flower of the virgin his mother, than we are against the flowers of the field, by denying that unto him, which we yeeld unto them? for seeing he is the flower of the Virgin, therefore it is apparent, that as the flower of a rose cannot spring forth of a vine-tree, so no more can the flesh of Christ take his originall of any other thing than the body of the virgin.

Secondly, this may be proved by the Scriptures of the New Testament; for the Angell Gabriel said unto Mary, that she should conceive and beare a Son; and Elizabeth saith of that Son, blessed is the fruit of thy wombe; but what is it to conceive, but to administer part of her substance unto her son? and what is it to be the fruit of the wombe, but to be of the same substance as his mother was of? for how can that be called the fruit of a tree, that never had the nature of a tree? for I would suppose it to be madnesse to call a Pomegranate the fruit of the Orange tree; and therfore it was as great a madnesse to call Christ the fruit of Maries wombe, if he had brought his body with him, either from heaven, or from any other place; and the Authour of the Epistle to the Hebrewes saith, That for as much as the children were partakers of flesh and bloud, he himselfe also tooke part of the same; and again, he bringeth in Christ himselfe, saying, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me: And therfore, when the Apostles thought that they had seen a phantasme, or a Spirit, he said unto them, Handle me and see, because a Spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have; and above all, the words λαβὼν & γενόμενον, used by S. Paul, and ἐγένετο here used by the Evangelist, which signifie to take our nature upon him, and to be made flesh, if they be diligently marked and well understood, do make it most apparently plaine, that the Sonne of God tooke unto himselfe personally the true nature of man, and the very substance of his mother; for the Apostle doth not say, factus de muliere, sed factus ex muliere, made in a woman, but made of a woman, (as Nicolaus de Gorram well observeth) even as bread is made of the wheat, and wine of grapes: and therefore though

Christ

Christ had his Principium formale, his formall beginning from the Holy Ghost, yet it is most certaine, that he had Principium materiale, his whole matter and substance from the body of his Mother.

Thirdly, the same truth is confirmed by the uniform consent of all Orthodoxe antiquity; as the great Councell of Chalcedon, that had in it 630 Bishops, the Councell of Lateran, the Councell of Toledo, Tertullian, in his booke de carne Christi, Fulgentius, S. Basil, S. Augustine, venerable Bede, and diverse others, whose pithie sayings, and unanswerable arguments to confirm this point, I might here alledge, but that Theodoret, Leo, Vigilius, and Gelasius, have so fully collected what the Fathers before them had written hereof, that more proofe need not be required, and more excellent arguments cannot be composed, for the manifestation of any truth; and therfore being not willing to write Iliads after Homer, I referre my reader unto them, if he desires any further comprobation of this point.

3 By the consent of all antiquity.

Fulgentius l. 2. de persona Christi. Basil. in l. de humanitate Christi genitas. Aug. de trin. l. 13. c. 18. Beda in 11. Luc. l. 4. c. 48.

And yet for all this, Macedonius and Valentinus affirmed, that Christ brought with him a celestiall body from heaven; and that dog Servetus and his fellow Memnon taught, that the Body of Christ was begotten of the substance and essence of his Father; and so Apelles, Marcion, and Apollinaris avouched that he had an aeriall body, and a sydereall flesh; so Gasper Swenkefeldius saith, that Christ in respect of his humanity, is a true God, as if his very flesh had been begotten of God, as Servetus said; so Manichæus saith, that he had but an imaginary body; a phantasme only in shew, and no true body in substance; and so the Anabaptists of our time do now avouch it, that he took not upon him the very nature of man, nor the very flesh of the Virgin; but that he had only the shew and phantasme of a man, which passed the wombe of his Mother, as water passeth through a conduit; and this is one of their most principall points, as Iohannes Cochlæus witnesseth: And therfore to maintaine their damnable errours, to obscure this cleare light of verity, and to shew themselves grand captaines of that arch heretick and adversary of Christ and all Christians, the divell, they do object, Wicked heresies. L. 2 de Trin. L. de divina maiestate humanitate Christi.

Bucanus l. 2. p. 21. loc. com.

Cochlæus in l. de erroribus Monast. Anabap.

Ob. 1. That Christ himselfe saith, No man ascendeth into heaven, but he that descended from heaven, the Sonne of man which is in heaven; and againe, speaking of the Iewes, he saith, You are from below, I am from above, you are of this world, I am not of this world; and that S. Paul saith, The first man is of the earth earthy, but the second man, that is, Christ was from heaven heavenly; and therfore (say they) he had the substance of his flesh from heaven, and not from the substance of his mother.

John 3.13.

Iohn 8.23. 1 Cor. 15.47.

Sol. I answer, that all these and the like places are spoken of the whole person of Christ, to whom the properties of each nature, in respect of the communication of properties (which hereafter I shall more fully declare unto you) may be fitly ascribed; and they teach us, that the Sonne of God descended from heaven, not by any change of place, but by his voluntary humbling of himselfe, to receive the forme of a servant, and that he was conceived after a heavenly manner, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and not after any earthly generation; and therfore they do impiously and most falsly referre that to the substance of his flesh, which is indeed spoken of the whole person of Christ, and of the heavenly manner of his conception; for though it be true that I should say, I am a reasonable creature, which doth both heare and understand; yet doth this no way prove, that my body alone without the soule is such, or can do either of these; even so, though Christ saith, that he descended from heaven, because he was a God, that ever was in heaven; yet that doth no way prove that his flesh, which he assumed on earth, descended from heaven; because he had that from his Mother, and brought it not downe from above.

That we must not refer that to the body of Christ, which is spoken of the whole person of Christ.

And that he is not of this world, but from above, or from heaven heavenly, is nothing els, but that he is not worldly-minded, or swayed with the lusts of the flesh, or any wayes earthly affected; and this (though in a farre inferiour degree to him) he saith of the Apostles, You are not of this world, because (as Saint Paul saith of of all Christians) they mind not the things of this world, but have their conversation in heaven.

Iohn 15.19. Phil. 3.20.

Ob. 2. Secondly, they say, that in what body he appeared to the Fathers of the Old Testament, he appeared in the like body to the Apostles and Disciples in the New Testament; but he appeared unto the Patriarchs in no true body, but onely in the shew and shape of a body; therefore hee appeared in no true body to the Apostles.

That Christ appeared to the Patriarchs in a true body.

Sol. To this I answer, first, that the minor is false; for hee appeared unto the Fathers in a true body, as may bee easily proved from those actions, of eating, drinking, walking and such like; and when he had ended that businesse, for which he was sent of his Father, he deposed that body, which for that end he had assumed; and so he laid downe his body againe, because he had not as yet, really and hypostatically united himselfe unto the same.

Christ in former times did assume a body for some speciall end, now he was made flesh to remaine man for ever.

Secondly, I say, that if it were so that he appeared unto the Fathers in a phantasme, yet it followeth not that he did so likewise unto the Apostles; for before, he assumed it only for a time, to performe some one speciall act; but now hee is made flesh, which hee hath really united unto himselfe for ever, to performe the greatest worke in the world, the redemption of mankinde: and therefore Saint Iohn, to expresse the truth thereof so fully as words could doe it, saith, that himselfe and the rest of his fellow Apostles did beare witnesse of that, which they saw with their eyes, and heard with their eares, and their hands had handled of the word of life, and that this Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, which was never spoken of any of the formes that he assumed in the Old Testament; For though we reade that hee appeared unto the Fathers at sundry times, and in divers formes; yet we doe never reade, that hee made himselfe of no reputation, by taking those formes upon him, or that therefore he was made to be the things that he appeared to be; because he never assumed them unto himselfe, as to unite them personally unto himselfe.

1 Ioh. 1, 2. Iohn 1. 14.

Heb. 1. 1.

Phil. 2. 7.

Ob. 3. Thirdly, they say, that the Scriptures teach not, that he had a true naturall body, but onely the shew, and likenesse of a body; for Saint Paul saith, that Christ tooke upon him the forme of a servant, and that God sent his Sonne in the similitude of the flesh of sinne, or of sinnefull flesh, and Saint Iohn saw one walking among the seaven golden Candlesticks, which was like unto the Sonne of Man; therefore he assumed no true body, but onely a shew and a likenesse of a body.

Phil. 2. 7, 8. Rom. 8. 3.

Revel. 1. 13.

Sol. I answer that these words, and the like, doe give them no such ground, nor any shew of reason, to build any such conclusion thereupon; for the Scripture saith, that Adam did beget Caine, Abel, Seth, in his owne image and likeneesse; but we might justly account them very foolish, that would hereupon inferre, that neither Caine, nor Seth had the very nature of Adam, but onely a bare shadow, and similitude thereof: and therefore the Apostle, in saying that he was sent, in the similitude of sinnefull flesh, gives us to understand, that hee was conceived and borne without sinne; and yet to have flesh like unto sinnefull flesh; because, though it was without sinne, yet it seemed to be full of sinnes, by reason of the punishment that he was contented to undergoe for our sins: And this is most excellently declared by Tertullian, where he saith, that Saint Paul affirmeth Christ to be made in the similitude of sinfull flesh; not that he tooke the likenesse of flesh, or the image of a body, and not a true body; but that he would give us to understand, that Christ tooke upon him true flesh in the similitude of sinnefull flesh; Quia similitudo ad titulum peccati pertinebit; Because the word similitude is to be referred to the iniquity of sinne, and not to deny the verity of his substance; for he would not have added the word sinne, if hee had understood and meant that the word similitude, should be referred to the substance of his flesh, to deny the verity of the same; but when he thus frameth his speech, saying, That hee came and tooke upon him the likeneesse of the flesh of sinne, or of sinnefull flesh, Et substantiam confirmavit, id est, carnem; & similitudinem ad vitium substantiæ retulit, id est, peccatum; He doth confirme the verity of his substance, that is, his flesh, and he referreth similitude to the vitiousnesse of the substance, that is, sinne,

Gen 5. 3. Christ in regard of his meane condition did appeare like a sinfull man, but was without sin.

Tertul in l. de carne Christi c. 17.

Idem l. 5. contra Marcion Accepit carnis veritatem non similitudinem; accepit peccati similitudinem non veritatem sinne, which in the sight of the Iewes hee seemed to have, though in very deed he had none; So Cassianus saith, that Similitudo non ad carnis veritatem, sed ad peccati imaginem referunda est; The word similitude hath relation not to flesh, to denie the truth thereof, (for that was true flesh) but to this word sinnefull; Quia in veritate corporis sed sine veritate peccati, suscepit Dominus speciem peccatoris; Because that in the true nature of man without any sinne, hee appeared (and was so esteemed of many) a sinnefull man, saith Saint Ambrose: So the Poet saith, and he saith truly.

Cassian. collat. 22. c. 11.

Amb. de Spiritu Sancto l. 3. c. 9.

The flesh he takes in truth, with flesh indu'de
The sinne he takes but in similitude;
The flesh he takes, for ever to injoy it,
The sinne he takes but onely to destroy it.

And so when the Apostle saith, that Christ was made in the similitude of Man, he doth not meane so to referre the word similitude, Ad naturam humanam; as that we should understand him, to be made onely in the likenesse of our humane nature; but by the similitude of man hee understandeth, Conditionem abjectam, that abject and meane condition of man, whereby Christ was made like unto all other men; and therefore Saint Paul doth hereby more confirme the truth of his humane nature, then any waies weaken the same; because (as Iustin Martyr speaketh) Deus quidem intelligitur ex prodigiorum operatione, homo autem ostenditur, ex aqualibus nostræ naturæ perpessionibus; His God-head is sufficiently seene by the working of his miracles, but his Manhood is chiefly seene by the like sufferings and infirmities of our nature.

The manhood of Christ seene by the sufferings of Christ.

Iustin Martyr. in expos. fidei.

And to that place of the Apocalyps, I say that S. Iohn saw him in a Propheticall vision, his body being in heaven and not on earth, and therefore this of all other is alledged most improperly to deny the truth of that flesh, which Saint Iohn of all other had so plainely declared unto us: And so you may see, that neither these places, nor any other place, though never so much wringed, and wrested from the true meaning of the Holy Ghost, no nor the gates of Hell it selfe, can disprove the truth of this point; that Christ hath a true and a naturall body.

Chap. III.

Of Christ his true perfect humane Soule.

That Christ had a true reasonable humane soule.

And further wee must consider, that as he had a true humane body, so he had a perfect reasonable soule; for

First, The testimonies of the Scriptures are most plaine and pregnant herein; As, My soule is heavy unto death; And againe, Father into thy hands I commend my spirit.

Mat. 26. 38.

Secondly, Reason it selfe confirmeth it; for, Hee was made in all things like unto his brethren, Sinne onely excepted; and hee is The Shepheard of our soules: And therefore he must needs consist of body and soule.

Heb. 2. 17.

1 Pet. 2.

Thirdly, The whole Schoole of Divinity did ever teach the same Truth; for Nazianzen saith, Quod non assumpsit non salvabit, Either he had a soule, or hee will not save a soule; And Saint Augustine saith, Totum suscepit ut totum liberaret verbum, The Word tooke all upon him, that is, both body and soule, that hee might save both body and soule; And so Fulgentius doth most largely and excellently prove this point, in his first Booke, De Mysterio Mediatoris, unto King Trasimund, where I referre my Reader to a most elegant, and learned discourse of this matter.

Aug. de tempore Ser. 145.

Fulgent. de myst. Med. ad Tras. l. 1.

Ob. But against this, many of the Arrians and Apollinaris doe object, (as Nazianzene, Athanasius, and Saint Cyrill doe affirme) that Christ had no humane soule, but onely a living flesh; because the Evangelist saith; That the Word

Iohn 1. 14.

Rom. 1. 2. was made Flesh; And Saint Paul saith, That he was made of the seede of David, according to the Flesh.

Sol. To this I answer, that it is an usuall thing in Scripture, to speake synechdochically, and sometimes, totum denominare ex parte præstantiori, to put the soule for the whole man, as seventy soules, that is, seventy men went downe into Exod. 1. 5. Egypt; and, the soule that sinneth, that soule shall die; and, let every soule be subject to the higher Powers: and sometimes, totum denominare ex parte minus præstantiori, to put the body for the whole man; as, all Flesh, that is, all men had corrupted their waies before God; and, all flesh shall see the salvation of God; and, Ezech. 18. 20. Rom. 13. 1. Gen. 6. 12. to thee shall all flesh come; that is, all men: And therefore, hee was made Flesh, signifieth, that he was made Man, of a reasonable soul, and humane flesh subsisting. Athanas. in Sym.

And the reason, why the Evangelist saith, Hee was made flesh, rather then, Hee was made man, is diversly rendered by the Fathers; For, some say, it was to shew what part of Christ was made of his Mother, that is, his Flesh, for his Deity was in-created, and his soule (say they) was created of nothing, and his body onely was made of his Mother: And therefore hee saith, The Word was made Flesh: But this cannot satisfie them which beleeve the Soule to be ex traduce, by traduction from the Parents: And therefore Why the Evangelist saith, hee was made flesh, rather then he was made man.

1 Opinion. Secondly, others, with Theophylact doe say, that the Evangelist saith, The Word was made Flesh, to expresse the greatnesse of Gods love, who for our sake would bee contented to be made the vilest thing; for, all flesh is grasse. 2 Opinion. Esay 40. 6.

Thirdly, others, with Saint Augustine, say, It was to shew the greatnesse of Christ his humility, Ex parte ignobiliori, to be named by the meanest name, and the basest part of man; he was contented to be made flesh; for so we finde, that in this respect, that is, to shew the greatnesse of his humility, though hee was the Sonne of God, yet most commonly would he terme himselfe, The Sonne of man; so shew unto us, how he debased himselfe, and was well contented with the meanest and most abject titles for our sake; and to teach us also by his example, not to stand so much upon our dignities, but to humble our selves, that we may be exalted. 3 Opinion.

Fourthly, others, with Saint Cyrill, say, It was for our greater confidence, that we should not doubt of Gods love and favour towards us, because our flesh, which was the part most corrupted, is now united unto God; and because Christ is now become our brother, and our kindred, according to that of the Evangelist, Behold thy Brethren, and thy Kinsmen stand looking for thee; for that Consanguinity is in regard of flesh and blood. 4 Opinion. Mar. 3. 32.

Fiftly, others say, It was, Vt infimum summo poneret; that hee might put the highest and the lowest together; for he had called Christ the Word, which sheweth the highest power of God; for thy Word is Almighty, and hee beareth up all things by his mighty Word: And therefore as he had set downe his Deity by λόγος, the Word, which declareth his greatest power, so he would shew his humanity by σάρξ, Flesh, which expresseth our greatest infirmity; for, as Summa dignitas in verbo, the greatest dignity is expresst in the word, So Summa infirmitas in carne, the greatest infirmity is shewed in the flesh: And therefore he saith, The Word was made Flesh; to declare unto us, Quantus Deus quantillus factus est homo, How great a God, was made so meane a man: All these reasons are very good, and may well stand all of them, to shew why hee saith, The Word was made Flesh, rather then, Hee was made man. Yet 5 Opinion. Heb. 1.

Sixthly, I like best of Tertullians reason, alledged also by Irenæus, Saint Chrysostome, and others, that the Spirit of God foreseeing what Heresies would follow after, and soone creepe to invade the Church of Christ, did therefore purposely here, and in many other places, set downe most evident and unanswerable arguments to convince them whensoever they should arise; that so the light of Truth might be cleered, and the mouth of all wickednesse might be stopped: And therefore I say, that the Pen of the Evangelist was here directed by Gods Spirit, to say, The Word was made Flesh, not because he had not a soule, but to assure us against 6 Opinion. Tertul. l. de carne Christi. Irenæus l. 3. c. 11. God, before heresies came, provided for us, that we might bee preserved from them, when they came.

against Marcion, Macidonius, Valentinus, Manichæus, and others, that Christ had a true and a naturall flesh assumed from the very flesh and substance of his Mother, and united unto his God-head. And so you see that Christ had not, Ideam humanæ naturæ, An imaginary patterne of humane nature, but the whole nature of man, In uno individuo, Consisting both of body and soule.

CHAP. IV.

Of Christ his being subject to all the humane infirmities that are without sinne.

SEcondly, As Christ had all the parts of a true man, that is, body and soule, so he had all the properties that doe concerne mans nature, or doe belong either to the soule or to the body of man, as length, breadth, thicknesse, understanding, will, affection, &c. and all other infirmities that we have, sinne onely excepted; for, as in the creation of man, God made man like unto himselfe, by stamping in him the Image of his owne nature; so in the assumption of our flesh, this word made himselfe like unto us, by taking upon him the infirmities of our nature; So that as God said heretofore, in a pittifull derision, Behold, the man is become as one of us; so now we may say in a joyfull exultation, Behold, our God is become as one of us; of the same nature, and subject to the same infirmities as wee are, as the Apostle saith of Elias, He was subject to the like passions as we are.

2 All the blameesse properties of man.
That Christ was made subject to all our humane frailties, which are without sin.
Once God of Adam in derision said, Behold the man like one of us is made.
The tennes of Adam now of God may say, Behold he's made like one of us to day.
Gen 3.22.
Iames 5.7.

Ob. But is it possible (may some man say) that he, which came to destroy the workes of the Divell, and to swallow up death into victory, should disarme himselfe of strength and power, and bee cloathed with our weakenesse and frailties?

Sol. To this the Prophet answereth, That Gods wayes are not as our wayes, nor his thoughts as our thoughts; for we finde many times God working one contrary out of another, as creating all things of nothing, bringing light out of darkenesse, making his power knowne through weakenesse, and by the foolishnesse of preaching, destroying the wisedome of the wise, and saving those that beleeve in him: And therefore, as David laid aside the Sword and brigandine of Saul, and tooke his staffe and slender sling, when hee went to encounter great Goliah, So Christ the Sonne of David did assume the infirmities of our flesh, (a slender staffe to relie upon) that so not by his strong arme, but by his weake, yet holy arme, hee might get unto himselfe the victory.

Esay 55.8.

Gen. 1.1.

That God many times worketh one contrary out of another.

And it was requisite (saith Saint Ambrose) Vt infirmitates nostras susciperet, That he should take upon him our infirmities.

Why Christ undertooke our frailties.

First, To demonstrate the truth of his assumed humanity; for else, Quomodo Discipuli crederent fuisse hominem, nisi humanas infirmitates comperissent; How should his Disciples beleeve him to be a man, if they had not found and seene him touched with the infirmities of man? And 1 Reason. Ambros in Luc. l.10.c.22.

Secondly, To strengthen, and underprop the weakenesse of our declining Faith; for, Vt patientem docere non potest, qui subjectus passionibus non est, As hee can never teach a man how to be patient, which was never troubled with any passions himselfe, saith Lactantius, so he can never so well succour those that are afflicted, which never hath beene afflicted himselfe; But now as Queene Dido saith unto Æneas,

2 Reason. Lactant. institut. l.4.c.16.

Haud ignara mali miseris succurrere disco.

So, seeing wee have a High Priest, which is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, wee may with boldnesse accede unto the Throne of Grace, and assure our selves to finde mercy in the time of neede.

Heb 4.14.

And yet, here we must distinguish and understand, that all the infirmities and the defects of our nature, are either,

1. Culp-

That infirmities are of two kindes

1 Sinnefull.
2 Painefull.

Christ tooke none of our finnefull infirmities.

Iohn 8.

That those infirmities which are not finfull, are either,
1 Perſonall.
2 Naturall.

Eſay 1.6.

That Chriſt took no perſonall infirmities upon him.

2 Sam 14. Ceſſod. in Pſal. 45.

Chriſt of a raviſhing beauty. Mat. 19.27.

That Chriſt tooke all the infirmities which are common and naturall infirmities. Iohn 18.6. Heb. 2.17. 4.15.

Damaſ. de fide orthodoxa. l 3. c. 20 Ambroſius de fide ad Grat. l. 2. c. 4

Diſcipulus in quod ſer de temp.

Mat. 21.18.

{1. Culpable and blame-worthy, or / 2. Inculpable and blameleſſe.} Or elſe, {1. Sinfull without paine. / 2. Painefull without ſinne.} And

The firſt are διαβλητως, damnable and odious in the ſight of God, (as Damaſcen calleth them;) The ſecond are Miſerabiles, Miſerable, and to be pitied before God and Man, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith.

Thoſe of the firſt kinde, hee was abſolutely free from; becauſe he was conceived without ſinne, borne without ſinne, lived without ſinne, and died without ſinne: And therefore let not the covetous man, whoſe deſire is as large as Hell, thinke that Chriſt tooke upon him the unſatiable affection of covetouſneſſe, nor the ambitious man imagine, that he was tainted with an aſpiring minde, nor any man ſuppoſe, that this immaculate Lamb, was any waies blemiſhed with inordinate affection; for, he was a true Iſraelite, in whom there was no guile.

Thoſe of the ſecond kinde, we ſay with the Schooles, that they are either

{1. Detractabiles, or / 2. Indetractabiles.} that is, either {1. Perſonall. / 2. Naturall.}

Firſt, perſonall or proper to ſome men, as to be affected with malady, infeebled with infirmity, or disfigured with deformity; or elſe

Secondly, naturall or common to all men, as to be borne weake, and to live incompaſſed with humane frailties.

Thoſe that are perſonall, we ſay not, that he tooke; for though many of us, bee wholly corrupted from the ſole of the feete, unto the crowne of the head; yet the body of Chriſt being framed by the Holy Ghoſt of the pureſt Virgin bloud, was proportioned in moſt equall Symmetry and correſpondency of parts; and therefore he was Speciоſus forma præ filijs hominum, fairer then the ſonnes of men, wholly pure, more pure then the body of Abſolon, in whom there was no blemiſh: So Caſſiodorus ſaith, Forma ejus lactei coloris decore illuxit, & inſigni ſtatura præeminuit; His body of the beſt compoſed ſtature, did excell all other men; and ſo Saint Hierome ſaith, that his countenance carryed, hidden, and vailed in it, a ſtarre-like ſhining brightneſſe, which being but a little revealed, it ſo raviſhed his Diſciples hearts, that at the firſt ſight thereof they left all, and followed him, and it ſo aſtoniſhed his enemies, that they ſtumbled and fell to the ground: But Thoſe that are naturall or common infirmities, we affirme that hee had them in all things, like unto us.

Firſt, becauſe hee was to bee in all things like unto his brethren, ſinne onely excepted.

Secondly, becauſe the prayer of Chriſt, in the garden of Gethſemane, proceeded from the infirmity of his humane nature, as moſt Interpreters doe affirme.

Thirdly, becauſe an Angell from Heaven appeared unto him, comforting him; for his Divine vertue had no need to bee ſtrengthened, but his humane infirmity required to be aſſiſted.

Fourthly, becauſe all ancient antiquity, and the moderne unanimity of all Divines, have ever taught and maintained this truth; for we confeſſe, ſaith Damaſcen, that Chriſt tooke all the naturall Paſſions of man, which are without ſinne; Et ſcire mihi prodeſt (ſaith Saint Ambroſe) Quod propter me ſuſcepit Chriſtus omnes infirmitates meas; And it availeth me much to know that Chriſt took all mine infirmities upon him; and Fryar Diſcipulus ſaith, that every man was ſubject unto twelve naturall defects and infirmities; whereof (ſaith hee) our Saviour Chriſt hath undergone tenne of them, and hath ſuffered the ſame, even as wee doe.

{First, Cold, / Secondly, Heate.} Two infirmities incident to every man, and denied by no man to be in Chriſt; elſe could he not be a man.

Thirdly, Hunger, as when he came to the Figge-tree, and would have eaten.

Fourthly,

Fourthly, Thirst, as when he asked Drinke of the woman of Samaria, and cryed, I thirst, upon the Crosse. Ioh. 4.7. & Chap. 19.28.

Fiftly, Wearinesse, as when he sate by the Well side to rest him. Iohn 4.6.

Sixthly, Weakenesse and Paine, as when he was not able to beare his Crosse any further, but was faine to have Simon of Cyren to helpe him: (And these sixe were infirmities of his Body, the other belonged more properly unto his soule, and must be warily distinguished, if we would truly understand them, as they are in him.) Iohn 19.17. Mat. 27.32.

Seventhly, Heavinesse and Sorrow, as when his soule was heavy unto death, and when he wept for griefe over the City of Ierusalem. Mat. 26.38. Luke 19.41.

But here we must distinguish and know, that this heavinesse and sadnesse of Christ was in him as an affliction, and not as a transgression; and that it was in his sensuall and not in his rationall will; or if in his reasonable will, that he was sorrowfull, because he would be sorrowfull; Et turbatus quia turbavit seipsum; And he was troubled, because he troubled himselfe: and therefore his sorrow was Subjacens, non presidens, turbans, sed non perturbans eum; Ruled by reason, and not over-ruling reason, and so onely disturbing, but no waies disordering him. That there is a twofold sorrow. Iohn 11.33. Mar. 6.6.

Eightly, Shamefastnesse and admiration, as when he marvelled at the infidelity of the Iewes, even as Elias was ashamed of the iniquity, and wondered at the stupidity of the Israelites. 1 Kings 18.

But here also we must know, that it was externally moved, by the sins of others, and not internally procured by any act of his owne.

Ninthly, Feare, as when his Father heard him, in that which he feared; and in this, as through wearinesse he willingly fainted, so through feare he was exceedingly astonished. Heb. 5.7.

But here likewise we must distinguish that his feare was Filialis, non servilis; A filiall feare, adjoyned with Hope, and not a servile feare proceeding from despaire, that is, not a sinnefull, but a pious feare, which might move him in his considerations, but no waies remove him from his godly intentions. That there is a two-fold feare.

Tenthly, Anger, as when he looked angerly upon them; and so, when hee drove the buyers and sellers out of the Temple. Mat. 21 13.

But yet still we must distinguish, that his anger was stirred up and moved, Per zelum, non per vitium, through a godly zeale, and not through any inordinate affection; and it was nothing else in him, but Voluntas vindicativa malefacti; A desiring will to punish the sinne, and not a sinnefull passion to be revenged on the person of the sinner, as Bonaventure saith. That there is a twofold anger.

These are the tenne infirmities, which Discipulus saith, were in our Saviour Christ; thus, and after this manner, as I have shewed you.

The other two, which he denieth to be in him, are { 1. Sinne. 2. Ignorance. } And

For the first, that is, Sin, we all know and we are all sure, that he had none; but For the second, that is, Ignorance, we must distinguish that it was either

{ 1. Crassa. 2. Mera. } that is, either { 1. A sinnefull ignorance, or 2. A simple ignorance. } And That there is a twofold ignorance.

The first we call, Ignorantia prava dispositionis; An ignorance of a wicked disposition, as when men know not, or will not know the things that they ought or might know; and this we say was not in Christ; because it is sinnefull, and the cause of many sins.

The second we call, Ignorantia mera privationis; An ignorance of meere privation; Et ignorantia negativa, seu nescientia plurimorum; and a negative ignorance, or the not knowing of many things, which are not of absolute necessity to be knowne; and this ignorance we say was in our Saviour Christ.

First, because Adam had the same in the state of his innocency; for he was ignorant of many things that God did know, and he knew not that he should be seduced by the Serpent. 1 Reason. Ignatius in ep. 2. ad Trallian.

Secondly,

2 Reason. That Christ was ignorant of some things. Damasc. l. 3. Nazian. l. 2. de fil.

Secondly, because hee did increase in wisedome and knowledge, that is, in his acquisite and experimentall wisedome, and not in his infused or divine wisedome; for he had that perfect from the very first moment of his conception: and therefore by his acquisite and experimentall wisedome, he learned some things, that he knew not before.

3 Reason.

Thirdly, because he knew not, that there were no Figges on the Fig-tree, untill he went and saw there was none; and he knew not the houre and the day of judgement.

4 Reason. Polanus in Sympho Catholica thes. 7. c. 9. Scotus in sent. dist. 14. q. 1. & 4.

Fourthly, because all ancient Orthodoxe Fathers doe confirme the same truth, as Amandus Polanus sheweth.

And yet we say, that although Christ knew not these things, Ex natura humanitatis, by the manhood; yet he did know them in natura humanitatis, in the manhood; for the Schoolemen doe well distinguish of a twofold knowledge in Christ:

That is, { 1. In verbo, in the word, whereby hee seeth all things as in a cleere Chrystall glasse. 2. In genere proprio, in each proper nature, whereby hee seeth all things as they are in themselves, and from himselfe.

In the first sense, we say, the man Christ Iesus knoweth all things, because hee is hypostatically united unto that eternall word, which made, and seeth, and knoweth all things. And

In the second sense, we say that the knowledge of Christ is twofold,

Videlicet { 1. Infused. 2. Acquisite. } And

First, the infused knowledge at the very instant of his conception was granted and powred into his manhood, so much as a finite creature could be capable of: But

In what sense Christ may be said to be ignorant of any thing.

Secondly, the acquisite knowledge did increase daily more and more, as his experience acquainted him with many things, that practically he knew not before; and in this respect, we may lawfully say, that Christ was ignorant of many things in his youth, which afterwards he learned in his age: And so you see, that as Christ assumed our nature; so he assumed our naturall imperfections, that are voide of sin, though they were full of paine.

But here we must observe that he assumed them all (as Saint Augustine saith) Non miseranda necessitate, sed miserante voluntate; Not by any imposed necessity, but by a voluntary assuming of them, to deliver us from them; because hee freely subjected himselfe unto them, when no Law could have compelled him to undergo them. And thus I have shewed you how this word was made flesh; that is, a true, and a naturall man, in all things, like unto his brethren, sin onely excepted.

CHAP. V.

Of the comfortable instructions that we may collect from this Doctrine of the incarnation of the Word.

What wee may learne from this doctrine of Christ his Incarnation.

AND thus you have heard what the Word was made, Flesh; and from thence we may learne many comfortable and excellent lessons for our instruction, especially in respect,

{ 1. Of God. 2. Of Christ. 3. Of our Selves. } And in each respect many things of memorable note; as

First,

First, in respect of God, we may see, and wee ought seriously to consider it; first, his great love and charity towards us, that he should give his onely Sonne to be made flesh for our sake: and therefore seeing he gave his Sonne for us, and that while we were yet sinners, while we were yet enemies unto God, how can it be, but that he should give us all things together with his Sonne, especially now being reconciled unto him through his Sonne? for in him he is well pleased, and through him he cannot be offended with us: and therefore Christ, to shew how dearely God loveth us through him, saith, Whatsoever you aske the Father in my Name, it shall be given you.

First, Gods love to man.

Rom. 5. 10.

Secondly, we may from hence see the faithfullnesse and truth of God, in performing his promise, and the oath that he sware unto our Fathers, touching the giving of this Word to be made Flesh: and therefore we may assure our selves, that whatsoever he saith, shall come to passe; for he is not as man that he should lie, or as the Sonne of Man, that he should alter the thing that is gone out of his lips.

Secondly, that God is a true performer of all his promises. Luke 1. 73.

Numb. 23. 19.

Secondly, in respect of Christ, we may from hence see these two things.

2 In respect of Christ.

First, His great obedience, in that he was contented in all things to submit himselfe unto his Fathers Will; and therefore we that doe beleeve in Christ, should herein follow the example of Christ, to be obedient unto our heavenly Father.

First, Christs perfect obedience.

Secondly, his rare and singular humility, in that he being the Sonne of God and the eternall Word of God, that could have commanded all the Angells, and by his stretched-out-arme without the assumption of our weakenes, have made all his enemies his footstoole, was notwithstanding contented, Exinanire seipsum, to empty himselfe, as it were of his divine riches, and to clothe himselfe with our humane nakednesse, and so to become the Sonne of Man, and to be made flesh, that is, a vile, a base, and an abject thing for us; for man is like a thing of naught, his time passeth away like a shadow; And therefore we should not lift up our hornes on high, nor speake with a stiffe necke; but we should labour to have the same minde in us, which was in Christ Iesus, and learne of him to be meeke and lowly in heart: It was an humble speech of King David, when he said, I am a worme and no man, a very shame, or scorne of men, and the out-cast of the people; He was lowly in his owne eyes, and did imitate herein our Saviour Christ, who (as I shewed you before) was not onely contented, to be made a true man, but also, in the judgement of the World, to become no better then one of the baseſt of the people; so rare a patterne of humility, did he leave unto us; And Secondly, how Christ humbled himselfe.

Psal. 144. 4.

Phil. 2.

Mat. 11.

Psal. 22. 6.

Ere he could talke or speake, his incarnation
Was the first lecture of his humiliation.

Heinsius hom. in Theophan.

Quia nihil profuisset sublimitas, nisi adfuisset humilitas: because his greatnesse had availed us nothing, if his humility had not prevailed to gaine favour for us; yet now, as the Poet saith,

Maxima quæq; domus servis est plena superbis:
Every man is full of pride, and as the Proverbe is, every Iacke will bee a Gentleman.

How farre we are from true humility.

Proijcit ampullas, & sesquipedalia verba:
It is strange to see how we strout our selves, and speake great swelling words, magnifying our selves by contemning others, swaggering them out of countenance, and thinking our selves to be gods and not men, and with the Church of Laodicea, to be rich and want nothing, to be wise and valiant, and neither our manifold sins, which are as the sands of the Sea, nor our miserable estate, which is most fraile and feeble, so weake, that a little sickenesse will even us downe with the dust, can humble us before the mighty hand of God; so farre are we from learning true humility. And

Revel. 3. 17.

Melior est peccator humilis quam iustus superbus. Augustinus Ser. 44.

Thirdly, we see from hence our Saviours love, and his abundant great charity towards us; for quanto pro me vilior tanto mihi charior, The viler and baser hee made himselfe for me, the dearer he shewed that he loved me; but how could hee ever debase himselfe more then he did? not onely to appeare for a time in the visible shape of a man, but also to assume for ever the true nature of man? and, though we be loath to take his sweet and easie yoke upon us, yet he willingly tooke our bevie and bitter yoke on him; for he tooke our infirmities, and carried all our sorrowes: and therefore, O thou sweet Iesus, that usest to clothe thy selfe with the cloudes, as with a garment, and now clothest thy selfe with my naturall nakednesse, that I might be adorned with thy supernaturall riches, we beseech thee inflame our spirits with the love of thee, that nothing but thy selfe may be deare unto us, because it so pleased thee, to vilifie thy selfe for us.

Thirdly, the great love of Christ. Bernard Ser. 1. Epiphan.

Esay 53 4.

3 In respect of our selves.

Thirdly, in respect of our selves, we may from this doctrine of the words incarnation, collect unto our selves, these singular comforts; As 1 Generally. What great benefits wee receive by the incarnation of the Word.

First, generally, what fruits and benefits we have, from this incarnation of the Sonne of God; Beneficia nimis copiosa, multa & magna, privata & positiva; and they are exceeding great blessings, innumerable and invaluable, as, repentance, remission of our sinnes, Grace, Faith, Righteousnesse, Wisedome, Sanctification and Redemption; and in a word, whatsoever blessing, grace, or goodnesse we have, we have the same from this incarnate Word; for, in him are hidden all the treasures of wisedome and knowledge, and from his fullnesse wee all receive, and grace for grace; For neither his Deity onely, Quia non debuit, Because he ought not; nor his humanity onely, Quia non potuit; Because that could not; was sufficient to be a Mediator betwixt God and man; Sed inter divinitatem solam & humanitatem solam, mediatrix est divina humanitas, & humana divinitas Christi; but betweene the bare humanity and the bare divinity, the divine humanity and the humane divinity of our Saviour Christ doth mediate for us unto God; and therefore by reason of this Incarnation of the Word God, wee are made Kings and Priests, and a peculiar people unto God, even for ever; For this Incarnate Word, this God and Man Christ Iesus, hath performed all things that are necessary for our salvation; he lived for us, he dyed for us, he rose againe for us, and he became the Physitian and the medicine both of our originall and actuall sins; For against the corruption and guilt of originall sin, the pure birth and undefiled conception of Christ is a sufficient salve; and against the guilt of actuall sinne, the Sanctity and innocent life of Christ, that was without any spot of sin, is a sufficient remedy; and against the punishment, either of originall or of actuall sinnes, the most pretious death of Christ is a sufficient satisfaction; Quia injusta mors justam vicit mortem, & liberavit nos juste: quia pro nobis occisus est injuste; Because his unjust death, hath justly overcome our death, and he hath most justly delivered us, because he was most unjustly slaine for us.

Colos. 2. 3.

John 1. 16.

Aug. C. 12. hom. de evibus.

Revel. 1. 19.

How Christ hath performed all things for us.

Aug. Ser. 101. de tempore.

Besides, the Word being made flesh, we have his life, as a most perfect patterne to frame our lives thereby; for we are all like Apes apt to imitate; and we say the life of our Minister would more move us to godlinesse, then his doctrine; and no doubt, but it would do much to them that hate not their Minister, because he will not be as deboyst as themselves; for a good example to good men, is as a light set upon a Candlesticke, that all they, which come into the house, may see the light; although to evill men, it moves them to the more indignation and wrath; because it makes their sinnes appeare the more exceedingly sinnefull, and will bee a just witnesse against them in the day of wrath; for that seeing the light of a good life, shining amongst them, they hated the same, because their deeds were evill: And therefore, if we would be led by examples, and would not erre, let us lay the example of Christ before our face; for this is a true looking-glasse, that is ever laid open before every man, and will never deceive nor flatter any man; and it is not onely a patterne for our practice, but the continuall inspection and looking into the same is also, in some measure, an efficient cause and impulsive motive to incite us to the imitation thereof, and to the performance of all godlinesse; because Christ is the giver of all such graces, whereby men do live a godly life, as the Apostle sheweth.

That good examples, are meanes to further godlinesse.

John 3. 19.

Christ an infallible patterne for men to imitate.

Cyrillus L. 4. c. 5.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

Moreover, Christ having united his Deity with our humanity, and having so well tempered his Majesty with humility, wee may the more confidently and boldly draw neere unto the throne of grace; for that as his Deity confoundeth, so his

That wee may boldly come to God.

his humanity comforteth our faint and feeble ſoules; and as his Majeſty amazeth, ſo his humility animateth us to come unto him, and to ſeeke of him whatſoever is needfull for us.

And further, this Word being made fleſh; Naturam humanam nobilitavit; He hath ſo innobled our humane nature, (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith) that we, which were wormes and no men, are now, θείας κοινωνοι φυσέως, partakers of the Divine nature, and as it were Gods and no worms: ſo that now, our nature being repaired, it is exalted farre above the dignity of its firſt originall, and it hath obtained to a farre better ſtate in Chriſt, then it had, and loſt in Adam; becauſe Adam was but in the image of God, but we are joyned and made one with God, as Saint Bernard ſaith: and therefore fœlix culpa, quæ talem meruit redemptorem; happy was that fault (as it happened unto us) which brought forth ſuch a Saviour; to bee made partaker of our fleſh, that we might be partakers of his Spirit, as Saint Gregory ſpeaketh.

That we attaine to a farre better ſtate in Chriſt then we loſt in Adam. 2 Pet. 1. 4. Bernard Ser. 1. de Epiphan.

Secondly, and more particularly, in that he was made a true and a perfect man, conſiſting both of body and ſoule, we may aſſure our ſelves of the ſalvation both of body and ſoule; for as our ſinnes deſerved damnation unto both, ſo the aſſuming of both by this Word, hath brought deliverance unto them both.

2 Particularly. That both our bodies and our ſoules ſhall bee ſaved.

And in that he was made ſubject unto all our humane frailties, paſſions, and miſeries, being made in all things like unto us, ſinne onely excepted, wee may (as I have already touched before) conceive thereby an exceeding comfort; for as Queene Dido ſaid unto the diſtreſſed Trojans;

Heb. 2. 17. Chap. 4. 15.

Haud ignara mali, miſeris ſuccurrere diſco.

Experience of miſeries hath taught me to ſuccour all thoſe that are miſerable; even ſo Chriſt, having felt all infirmities, and ſuffered more miſeries then any of us can endure, will be mercifull and compaſſionate towards us, when he ſeeth us in diſtreſſe; for, he became like unto us, that he might be mercifull unto us; and hee was tempted and ſuffered, that he might be able to helpe and ſuccour them that are tempted, ſaith the Apoſtle: And therfore, ſeeing we have not an High-Prieſt, which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but is a pittifull and a compaſſionate Redeemer, if we be involved in miſeries, and doe ſuffer all kindes of infirmities, wants, ſcornes, ſickneſſes, paines, or whatſoever elſe, let us goe boldly unto the Throne of Grace, and beg confidently his mercy and grace, to helpe us in the time of neede; for as he which in our Creation formed us, according to the Image of God, was contented now by his incarnation, to take upon himſelfe the Image of man; So we which by our tranſgreſſions made our ſelves like unto the divell, ſhall be moſt happy and bleſſed, if as Chriſt became like unto us in fleſh, ſo we doe endevour to become like unto him in the graces of his moſt bleſſed Spirit. And ſo much for the ſecond point, that he was made Fleſh.

We may be ſure of comfort in diſtreſſe.

Heb. 2. 17, 18.

Heb. 4. 16.

Branch 3.

BRANCH III.

CHAP. I.

Of the distinction of the two Natures of Christ, how each of them remaineth entire, inconfused; and the objections made against this truth (sufficiently answered.

THirdly, We are to consider, how this Word was made, and still is, Flesh, which manner may be collected out of this word ἐγένετο; He was made Flesh: Touching which, we must well observe two speciall points,

Two things to be considered.

{1. The distinction / 2. The union} of the two natures, the Word and the Flesh, that is, the Deity and the humanity of our Saviour Christ.

1 The distinction of the natures. That in Christ there are two distinct natures. Rom. 1. 3. 4.

First, The distinction of these two Natures, is most excellently shewed by Saint Paul, where hee saith, that Christ was made man, κατὰ σάρκα, according to the flesh, and declared mightily to be the Son of God, κατὰ πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης, according to the Spirit of Sanctification; for that according to his humane nature onely, hee was made of the seede of David, which according to his divine nature was declared still to be the eternall Sonne of God; So that here Saint Paul sheweth two natures to be in Christ, that is, his divine and his humane nature, still remaining entire after his incarnation; because, as he was made only of the seed of David, in respect of his manhood, (for that his God-head was not made of the seed of David,) so was he declared onely to be the Sonne of God, in respect of his God-head; for that his manhood was not the omnipotent, and the eternall Sonne of God.

The most blasphemous subtilties of hereticks, to denie the truth of the two natures of Christ.

Ob. But against this place of the Apostle, the Somosatenian Heretickes doe affirme, that Saint Paul meaneth not hereby, to shew a twofold nature to bee in Christ, but a twofold nativity, that is a carnall and a spirituall, which wee finde to be in every faithfull Christian; for to be made of the seede of David (say they) according to the flesh, doth shew his carnall generation, and to be declared to bee the Sonne of God according to the Spirit of Sanctification, is to shew his spirituall regeneration.

Rom. 9. 3.

The first they seeke to confirme, out of those places of Scripture, where the Apostle saith, The Iewes were his Kinsmen, according to the flesh, and where hee calleth them, Israel according to the flesh; for herein (say they) the Apostle meaneth by these words, according to the flesh, nothing else, but according to the vulgar and common sort of generation; And therefore to be made of the seed of David, according to the flesh, is nothing else, but to be made of him, according to his carnall generation. And

1 Cor. 10. 18.

John 1. 13.

It is a horrible thing to say, that all those phrases which are true of us, must be likewise true of Christ, in the same sence considered. Rom. 1. 3.

The second they seeke to confirme, out of the words of Saint John, where hee saith, That the faithfull are not borne of bloud, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God; And therefore, as these phrases and limitations according to the flesh, and according to the spirit, do signifie the double nativity of every faithfull man, and do no waies prove a double nature to be in any man; Even so in Christ they signifie the same things, that is two nativities, but not two natures.

Sol. To this I answer first, that this phrase κατὰ σάρκα, according to the flesh, neither in the place urged by me, nor in any other place alledged by them, doth signifie the common and carnall generation; but it doth imply a difference and distinction distinction betwixt kindred according to the flesh, and kindred according to the spirit; for otherwise all Israel was in respect of their common generation, kindred according to the flesh; And therefore the meaning of the Apostle is, to shew, that although all of them were the children of Abraham, according to the flesh, yet that but few of them were the Children of promise.

Secondly, I say, that the miraculous and singular birth of Christ, is not insinuated so much in the words, according to the flesh, as it is plainely shewed in the word made; for the same being in the originall γενόμενος, and not γενεθεντος, it doth most apparantly shew the extraordinary making of his flesh, not after the usuall and common sort of carnall generation by any humane seede, but by a supernaturall generation, through the virtuall operation of the Holy Ghost, as Tertullian, Irenaus, Vigilius, S. Augustine and others have observed.

γενόμενος sheweth the extraordinary making of Christ his flesh. Tertul. l. cont. Prax. Irenæus l. 3. c. 32. Vigilius l. 5 contra Eutyches. Aug. l. 2. c. 5. de Trinitate.

Thirdly, I say, that there is a great deale of difference betwixt the twofold generation of the faithfull Saints, and the twofold generation of Christ; for when they are said to be borne of the flesh and of the Spirit, we confesse, that not two natures are thereby signified, but two beginnings of their divers births: But this cannot be said of Christ, because he was so sanctified in the first moment of his conception, that he needed not any second regeneration; neither is he said to be borne of the spirit, in respect of any regeneration, as we are, but declared to be the Sonne of God, according to the Spirit, that is, manifested to be a true God, according, or in respect of his owne sanctifying Spirit, that is, his God-head: And therefore, though such a limitation might prove a double generation in the rest of Gods children; yet this cannot shew a double generation of him in whom there is no double generation, in respect of his manhood; but it must needes shew plainely two natures to be in Christ; for all other faithfull men are the Sonnes of God by adoption and grace; but Christ is the naturall and the essentiall Sonne of God his Father; He being the brightnesse of his glory, and the engraven forme of his person; And all other men are so borne, that except they be borne againe they cannot enter into the Kingdome of Heaven; But Christ was so conceived and borne, that there was neither neede, nor any possible way of any further sanctification of his person; because that in him dwelled the fullnesse of the God-head bodily.

That Christ was so borne, free from all sin, that he needed no further sanctification or regeneration.

No double generation of Christ in respect of his manhood.

Heb. 1. 3.

Iohn 3. 5.

But this truth of the two natures of Christ, may be confirmed by most apparant and unanswerable arguments; for the Iewes said, that he did not onely breake the Sabbath, but also said, that God was his Father, making himselfe equall unto God; And Christ himselfe said, I and my Father are all one; And therefore the Pharisees did rightly collect, that Christ by these words had affirmed himselfe to be a God; And yet he saith, My Father is greater then I; but it cannot possibly be, that Christ according to the same nature, should be equall, nay, one with the Father, and yet inferiour to the Father: And therefore it must needs follow, that he hath one nature, according to which he is equall to his Father, and another nature, in respect whereof he is inferiour to his Father.

Two natures in Christ proved.

Iohn 5. 18.

Iohn 10. 30.

Iohn 14. 28.

Besides, our Saviour saith, Before Abraham was, I am; And yet Saint Luke saith, He was borne in the daies of Augustus Cæsar; but it cannot be, that Idem secundum idem, The same one, in the same respect, should be before Abraham, and after Abraham: And therefore he must needes have two natures in him, according to one whereof, he was before Abraham, and according to the other, he was after Abraham.

Iohn 8. 58.

Luke 2. 7.

And further, we finde the same confirmed and confessed by all antiquity; for Vigilius writing upon those words of the Apostle, who being in the forme of God, tooke upon the forme of a servant, saith; Mirum est, &c. It is a wonder to think, why some are afraide to say, that Christ had two natures, when as the Apostle saith, that he had two formes: and the great œcumenicall Councell of Calcedon, wherein were 630 Bishops, left this confession unto all posterity; Confitemur in novissimis diebus, filium Dei unigenitum in duabus naturis inconfuse, immutabiliter, indivise, inseparabiliter agnoscendũ, nunquam sublata differentia propter unionẽ; We confesse, that the only begotten Son of God, which came in the last daies to be

All Orthodoxe antiquity confessed two natures to be in Christ.

Vigilius l. 2. cont. Eutych Philip 2.

Concil Calced Act. 5 in Symb. fidei.

incarnate, is now to be acknowledged, to be, and to ſubſiſt of two natures, (that is, Divine and humane) inconfuſed, immutably, inſeperably, and undividedly united together; and that the differences or diſtinction of theſe natures is never to bee aboliſhed and taken away, by reaſon of the union of the ſame.

All the actions of Chriſt do manifeſtly ſhew the two natures of Chriſt.

And ſo in very deed, we finde all the actions of our Saviour Chriſt, while hee lived here on earth, to make inanſwerable proofe of the ſame truth; for, as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Iacebat Chriſtus quantum ad carnem mortuus in ſepulchro, mortuos ſuſcitans in inferno, vitam tribuens univerſis in cœlo; Chriſt according to the fleſh lay dead in his grave, yet did he, then in Hell, (that is, in reſpect of his ſoule) according to his God-head, raiſe the dead here on earth, and give life to all them that were in heaven; Quia aut nec mundum dimittens ad cœlum aſcendit, ita nec cœlum deſerens venit ad nos; ſed uno atque eodem tempore totum totus implevit; Becauſe that as now he hath not left the world, though he be aſcended into Heaven; ſo then hee did not leave the Heavens, when hee came to bee made fleſh on earth, but was wholly at one and the ſelfe-ſame time, in all places, repleniſhing and filling all things; And Gregory Nazianzene doth moſt excellently ſhew, how the properties of both his natures concurred together, and might bee eaſily diſcerned in him, from the very beginning of his daies, to the laſt end of his being here on earth; for he is borne of his mother, and wrapped in ſwadling clouts, as being a man, but a ſtarre doth manifeſt him, and the wiſe men adore him, as being a God; he is baptized in Iordan, as being a man, but the Holy Ghoſt deſcends upon him from Heaven, as being a God; he is tempted of the divell, as he is a man, but he overcomes and expels the divels, as he is a God; he travels and is thirſtie, he is hungry and is weary, as he is a man, but he refreſheth the weary, he feedeth the hungry, and he giveth drinke unto the thirſty, as he is a God; he ſleepes in the ſhip, and his Diſciples awake him, as hee is a man, but he rebukes the windes, and ſtilleth the rage of the Seas, as he is a God; hee is poore and needy, and hath not an houſe to put his head in, as he is a man, but hee is rich and mighty and cannot be contained in the heavens, as he is a God; hee is ſorrowfull and ſad, he weepes, and hee prayes, as hee is a man, but hee heareth our prayers, and comforteth the ſorrowfull, as he is a God; he is ſubject to infirmities, as hee is a man, but he healeth all our infirmities, as he is a God; he is whipped and crucified, as he is a man, but he renteth the vaile of the Temple, and cauſeth the Sunne to hide his face for ſhame to ſee him crucified, as he is a God; he ſaith, Eloi, Eloi, Lamaſabachthani, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? as he is a man, but hee ſaith unto the theefe, This day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe, as he is a God; he yeeldeth up the ghoſt, and he dyeth, and is buryed, and lyeth in his grave, as he is a man, but he overcommeth Death, and deſtroyeth the divels, and raiſeth himſelfe unto life againe, as he is a God; and being riſen, he appeares unto his Diſciples, and eates and talkes with them, as he is a man, but he vaniſheth out of their ſight, and aſcendeth up unto Heaven, as he is a God; and ſo now; the Heavens doe containe him, and hee ſitteth there on the right hand of God, as he is a man, but he ſuſtaineth the Heavens, and rideth upon the ſame as upon an horſe, as he is a God; and ſo Fulgentius ſaith, Iſte puer in præſepi quidem parvulus collocatur, ſed magnus in cœlo mirabiliter operatur; permittit ſe manibus in terra portari, ſed præcipit ſibi cœleſtia famulari; That little childe is laid in a cratch, that is, as he is a man, but he doth wonderfully worke in heaven, that is, as hee is a God; and hee ſuffereth himſelfe to be carryed in their armes, as he is a man, but he ſupporteth all things, and commandeth all the hoaſt of Heaven to do him ſervice, as hee is a God.

Luke 2.7. Mat.2.11. Mat.3.16. Mar.1.12. Iohn 4.6. Iohn 7. Mat.24.26. Mat.8.20. Mat.26. Iohn 14. Eſay 53. Mat.27.46. Luke 23.43. Mat.27.50,60. Luke 24.ver.15 31 Pſal.68.4. Fulgent Ser. de Epiphan.

And therefore it is moſt apparant, that the perſon of Chriſt ſo ſubſiſteth, Ut cum in homine Chriſto videtur veritas hominis, in eodem Deo Chriſto cognoſcatur paternæ veritas Deitatis; as, when wee ſee the verity of the Manhood in the Man Chriſt Ieſus, we muſt know and acknowledge the eternall Deitie in the ſame God Chriſt Ieſus; becauſe he is ſtill a perfect God, and a perfect man, and of theſe two natures ſubſiſting in one perſon inconfuſed.

Idem de perſona Chriſti l.3. ad Traſim.

But againſt this, Eutyches and his followers, have and doe moſt impiouſly affirme,

What the Eutychian hereticks ſay againſt this truth.

firme, that in Christ after his Incarnation, there is but one onely nature, made of the Word and of the flesh by the conversion of the Deity into the humanity; because the Evangelist saith, that the Word was made flesh, even as when the Water was made Wine, it was no more Water, but was presently converted into Wine; or else by the conversion of the flesh into the Deity; because Gregory Nazianzene, and Gregory Nyssen say, that Caro Christi est deificata, the flesh of Christ is now deified; and to confirme the same, they doe object;

Nazian. in Ep. ad Cledonium.

Ob. 1. First, the authority of some ancient Fathers, alledged in the councell of Calcedon; for Eustachius affirmeth that Saint Cyrill writ, Non oportere intelligere in mysterio incarnationis duas naturas, sed unam naturam Dei verbi incarnatam; that we must not understand in the mysterie of the Incarnation two natures to be in Christ, but one nature of the word God incarnate and made flesh.

Concil. Calcet. 1. post Ep. Cyrilli.

Sol. I answer that the nature of the Word may be truely said to be incarnate, if it be rightly and truely understood; that is, Non per conversionem in carnem, sed per unionem cum carne in una hypostasi; Not by the conversion of it into flesh, which could not possibly be, because God is immutable and without any shaddow of turning, but by the uniting of the same with the flesh in the same subsistence; so the words of Nazianzene and Nyssen doe onely shew the union and conjunction of the flesh with the Deity, and not the conversion of the manhood in the Godhead; and for the words of Eustachius alledged out of Saint Cyrill, I say that they be none of the words of Eustachius, but of Dioscorus, or some other Eutychian Hereticke, that hath most impiously and falsly inserted that sentence, among the words of Eustachius.

How the Word may be said to be incarnate, or made flesh. Iames 1.17.

Eustachius falsified by the Eutychians.

Ob. 1. Secondly they do object, that Saint John saith not, that the Word did assume flesh, but was made flesh; and therefore as the water that is made wine, hath no more two natures, but onely one; because the nature of the water is converted into the nature of the Wine; so the Word, though before his incarnation, he had a nature different from the flesh; yet now being made flesh, he hath onely the same nature with the flesh.

Sol. To this Theodoret answereth, that the flesh was assumed of the word; and he proveth the same out of these Scriptures, where Saint Paul saith, that Christ being in the forme of God, did take upon him the forme of a servant; And againe, where he saith that hee tooke not on him the nature of Angels, but he tooke on him the seed of Abraham; And againe, Saint John himselfe, in this very Chapter and verse, immediately after he had said, that the Word was made flesh, doth add, (that we should not thinke it to be made by the conversion of the Word into the flesh,) Et habitavit in nobis; And he dwelt in us; for this is all one as if he had said, the Word was made flesh, because that having assumed and united our flesh unto himselfe, he began now to remaine and to dwell in our flesh for ever.

Phil. 2.7.

Heb. 2.16.

That Christ did assume our flesh.

But the Holy Ghost fore-seeing that Nestorius would affirme Christ to consist of two persons, as if the divine person had assumed the humane person, (which is most blasphemous) therefore he directed the Pen of the Evangelist to write, the Word was made flesh, and not to say, the Word assumed flesh, to shew that he is no more twaine but one Christ.

Why the Evangelist saith the word was made flesh.

And yet, least we should fall into the errour of Eutyches, to say that Christ after his incarnation had but one nature, because he had but one person, he addeth, and he dwelt in us; to shew unto us, that he is not so made one, by the conversion of either nature into the other, but that still each nature remaineth whole and intire, without confounding either the substance, or the properties of either nature; for the humane nature of Christ is not deified by the conversion of the flesh into the nature of the Word, nor the Word made flesh by the conversion of the same into the nature of flesh, (as Apolinaris taught,) but the flesh is said to be deified and the Deity is said to be incarnate and made flesh, by reason of the union and conjunction of the flesh with the word in one person; even as the soule and body remaining still two intire natures, without the conversion of either into the nature of other, are united together, to make one person, that is, one man: and therefore Saint

Aug. de heresibus heres 55.

How the flesh is said to be deified, and the Word incarnate.

Aug. Ep. 120.

Augustine saith, that his divine nature was not consumed, when his humane nature was assumed; Humana quippe natura accessit, divina non recessit, homo factus, naturam suscipiendo nostram, non amittendo suam; because the humane nature was adjoyned, and the Deity was not abolished; but he was made man by taking our nature upon him, and not by losing or casting his owne nature from him; and the divine Poet Prudentius saith, Prudent. Psychomach.

Ille manet quod semper erat, quod non erat esse
Incipiens———

How Christ notwithstanding his incarnation, remaineth still what he was before.

What he was, he alwaies is, but is otherwise for our blisse;

And so the common distich hath it, and doth most fully declare the same.

Sum quod eram, nec eram quod sum, nunc dicar utrunq́;
Ignoras, nisi me stirpe ab utraq́, tenes:

I am what I was, but I was not, as I am; for now I am both God and man, and thou knowest me not, if thou knowest not me to be of both these natures; which sacred riddle our English Poet thus expresseth.

Fitz-Jeffrey. p. 17.

That which he was he is, yet once was not
That which he is; a nature he hath got
More than he had; and yet he still retaines
That which he had; and having both, remaines
But one: and though he tooke one nature more,
Yet is he but one person as before.

Nazian Orat 3. de Theolog.

And so Gregory Nazianzen saith, Permansit quod erat, & assumpsit quod non erat; He remained what he was, and he assumed what he was not; because the Word was made flesh, Non deposita, sed deposita Majestate; not by cancelling or laying away, but as it were by concealing and laying aside, for a time, the most glorious appearance of his divine Majesty, cum assumpta est humanitas non consumpta divinitas, as Eusebius Emyssenus doth most briefly and excellently declare, and the Poet as wittily, saying,

Verbum quippe caro factum non desiit esse
Quod fuerat verbum carnis dum glutinat usum.
Prudent. quo supra. Emyssen. hom. 2. de nativit.

The Godhead so the manhood doth possesse,
That for the man God nothing is the lesse.

How one thing may be made another thing three wayes.

And that we might the better understand how this Word was made flesh, Euthymius sheweth, that one thing may be made another thing three manner of wayes.

1 Way. John 3.9 Gen. 19.26.

First, when one thing is turned and changed into another thing, as when the meat that we eat is turned into bloud, the milke into cheese, the water into wine, Lots wife into a pillar of salt, and such like; and thus the Word was not made flesh; because without any change, he remained still what he was before.

2 Way.

Secondly, when some accident onely is added unto the substance, as when the brasse or stone, or any other metall, is made a statue, or receives any other impression; and thus likewise, the Word is not made flesh; because the Deity is incapable of any other forme, but the forme of God, and no accident can be in God.

3 Way. The Word is made flesh, not by changing either nature into the other, but by uniting the one to the other.

Thirdly, when one substance is adjoyned unto another, and yet is not transferred or changed into the nature of the other, as a souldier, putting on his armour, is made an armed man; or a man, wearing on his garments, is no more a naked, but a cloathed man; and so the Word is now cloathed with our flesh, the same Word, but after another manner; before, only subsisting of the Deity; now, of both natures; being made flesh, not as water is made wine, but as Aaron was made Priest, and David King, not by changing him into a Priest or King, but by beginning to be what they were not, and not leaving to be what they were; or, because this doth not so fully shew it, the Priestly or Kingly dignity being but an accidentall title conferred upon these persons, as a naked man is cloathed and made an apparelled man; or as a souldier is harnessed and made an armed man, when when all his harneſſe is put upon him, as Theodoret, S. Auguſtine, and others do declare.

Theodoris in Dialog.

And ſo you ſee that in our Saviour Chriſt, the two natures do ſtill remaine intire, inconfuſed.

Chap. II.

Of the union of theſe two natures of Chriſt, in one and the ſelfe-ſame perſon, and ſome objections anſwered.

SEcondly, touching the union of theſe two natures, the Deity and the Humanity, we muſt know, that although this eternall Word, the Sonne of God, was ſo made fleſh, that is, a perfect man, of the ſeed of David, as that ſtill each nature remaineth intire and inconfuſed; yet we muſt not imagine that he is therfore two ſonnes, or two perſons (as Neſtorius thought;) but that he is one only perſon, conſiſting of both theſe natures.

2 The union of the natures.

And becauſe this point of the union of theſe two natures, is not of ſmall moment, but is a point full of comfort, much oppoſed, and of great difficulty, I will divide al that I mean to ſay concerning the ſame, into theſe three principal heads.

1 The truth hereof ſhall be confirmed, and the objections of our adverſaries ſhall be anſwered.

2 The manner of this union, wherein it conſiſteth, ſhall be ſhewed.

3 The chiefe benefits and effects thereof, ſhall be declared.

Three things handled concerning the union of both natures in Chriſt.

1 For the union of theſe two natures, the Word and the Fleſh, Iuſtin Martyr ſaith, Sicut poſt unitionem primogenij luminis cum ſolari corpore, &c. As after the collection and the unition of the light, with the body of the Sun, no man can pluck them aſunder, neither doth any man call the one a part, the Sun, and the other the light, but both of them joyntly together we terme the Sun; even ſo after the unition of our fleſh, with this true light the Word, no man will call the Word apart to be one Sonne of God, and the Sonne of man to be another; but he will underſtand both theſe together, to be one and the ſelfe-ſame Chriſt; as by the name of Sun, we underſtand both the light and the body, which containeth the light; and as the light and body of the Sun are two ſeverall natures; ſo there be in our Saviour Chriſt, two diſtinct and ſeverall natures; Altera noſtra, altera nobis ſuperior; the one is ours, the other is Gods; and as the light is actually in the Sun, ſo that none can ſeparate it from that body wherein it is fixed and contained; yet we may eaſily diſcerne the nature, and the propriety of each one from the other; Sic in uno filio Dei, univerſam vim nemo ſeparaverit ab unica filietate, natura tamen ejus proprietatem, ratione quivis diſcreverit; ſo in that one Sonne of God, no man can ſeparate his whole vertue, that is, of the Word and Fleſh, from that only Sonneſhip; and yet in our underſtandings we may diſcerne the different propriety of each nature: And ſo (ſaith the Father) by this example, we flie unto the more holy cogitation of the divine union of theſe two natures; and if hereby we be not altogether able to attaine unto the truth thereof, (as what can be fully ſufficient to expreſſe ſo great a myſtery?) yet certainly we have herein a moſt excellent ſimilitude, which will greatly helpe, and contentedly ſuffice the godly and moderate ſearchers of this truth.

1 The verity of the union confirmed.

A very good ſimily of Iuſtin Martyr, to expreſſe the manner of the union of the two natures in Chriſt.

Hoc exemplo divinæ unitionis addicte, nos ad majùs cognitionis non confugimus; ſi non omnino ipſam veritatem aſſequuti, certè quandam ſimilitudinem, quæ piè ſcrutantibus ſufficiat. Juſtin Martyr. de recta confeſſ. ſive de coeſſent. trin.

But indeed the holy Scriptures do, of all other writings, moſt fully and clearely ſhew that theſe two natures do make but one perſon in our Lord and Saviour Ieſus Chriſt; for when Chriſt asked his Apoſtles, Whom do men ſay that I the Son of man am? S. Peter anſwered, that he was Chriſt, the Son of the living God; therfore he is but one perſon; becauſe S. Peter confeſſeth the Son of man to be the Son of the living God; and the Angell ſaid unto the Virgin, That holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Sonne of God: therefore he is but one perſon; becauſe he which was borne of the Virgin, was and is none other, but he that is truly called and is the true Sonne of God; and S. Paul ſpeaking of Chriſt, as he was the eternall

The unity of Chriſt his perſon moſt clearly proved from Scriptures.
Mat. 16.13.
Verſ 16.
Luke 1.35.

nall Sonne of God κατὰ πνεῦμα, in respect of his Godhead, and as he was the Sonne of David, κατὰ σάρκα, in respect of his Manhood, yet doth he not say of his Sonnes, as of two, but of his Sonne, made and declared to be his Sonne; to shew unto us, that as before his making, to now after his making, he is still but one Sonne, one Person of the two distinct natures subsisting.

Rom 1.3.

Iohn 20.31. And S. Iohn more plainly saith, that these things are written, that you might believe that Iesus is the Christ, the Sonne of God, that is, that Iesus the Sonne of Mary is that same Christ, which is the Sonne of God: And in his first Epistle he doth almost nothing but confirme this truth; that is, that there is but one person in the God and Man Christ Iesus; For Chap. 1. he saith, that which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seene with our eyes; therefore he must needs be but one person; for to see with their eyes that Word, which was from the beginning could no wayes be, but only in respect of the unity of the person; so Chap. 2. he saith, Who is a lyar, but he that denieth Iesus to be the Christ? So Chap. 3. he saith, In this we perceive the love of God, that he layed down his life for us; So Chap. 4. he saith, Every spirit, Qui solvit Iesum, which looseth or divideth Iesus, that is, to make two persons of him, is not of God; and so in many other places, he doth most plainly shew, that the eternall Word, and our humane nature, united unto the same Word, is but one and the selfe-same Christ, that is, one Christ, one person.

1 Iohn 1.1.

Chap. 2. v. 22. Chap. 3 v. 16. Chap. 4 v. 3.

All our Creeds and all antiquity confesseth the same truth, touching the unity of Christ his person.

And this is confessed by all antiquity; for in the Apostles Creed, we say, that we believe in Iesus Christ his onely Sonne our Lord, which was conceived of the Holy Ghost, and borne of the Virgin Mary; and therefore he is but one person, because he which is said to be the onely Sonne of God, is said also to be borne of the Virgin Mary; the same is said in the Nicen Creed; and in the Creed of Athanasius it is said, that although Christ be both God and Man, yet is he no more twaine, but one Christ; and that not by confounding of the substances, but by the unity of person, that is, by the uniting of both natures into one person: What should I rehearse any more? for the third Councell of Ephesus, the great Councell of Chalcedon, the Councell of Lateran, and all the ancient Orthodoxe Fathers; as Iustin Martyr, Irenaus, S. Basil, S. Nazianzen, S. Damascen, S. Hillary, S. Ambrose, S. Hierom, S. Augustine, and the rest of them, have most truly confessed, and most learnedly confirmed this truth; that although Christ hath two natures, the Word and the Flesh, yet do these two make but one person, one Sonne of God, one Saviour of men.

What the hereticks have conceived and most impiously thought concerning the person of Christ.

But against this Cerinthus, and certaine of the Pelagian Hereticks, and afterwards Nestorius, separating Iesus from Christ, or rather Christ from Himselfe, have affirmed that Iesus was but meere man, having not only a humane nature, but also a humane person; and afterwards to be made Christ, at the time of his baptisme, when the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the forme of a Dove; and therefore they conclude, that as he consisteth of two natures, so he is likewise two persons, which notwithstanding may be said to be one, in respect of their co-habitation, affection, operation, and participation, as hereafter I shall further shew unto you.

And to confirme this damnable errour against the inviolable truth, they do object,

Obiect. 1. That our Saviour said, Destroy this temple, when he spake of his humanity, and therefore the God Christ, and the man Christ, are two severall persons; for he doth not say, destroy me, but destroy this temple, and I will raise it up in three dayes, to shew unto us (say these men) that the Temple, and the dweller in the Temple, or the raiser up of the Temple, are not the same, but diverse persons.

Iohn 2.9.

Sol. To this I answer briefly, that this alledged instance may well prove two natures to be in Christ, but not two persons: for the soule of man is said to dwell in the body, as in a tabernacle, because the nature of the soule is different from the nature of the body, and yet man hath not two, but one person, which consisteth of both both natures, that is, soule and body; for Iob saith, that men dwell in houses of clay, and Saint Paul saith, If this earthly house of our Tabernacle bee dissolved: And therefore S. Chrysostome upon these words of Saint Iohn, and he dwelt in us, doth most truly gather, that in Christ there are two natures; but from these, or from any other places, it can never be proved, that in him there are two persons.

Iob 4.19. 2 Cor 5.1.

Obiect. 2. Againe, they do obiect, that the Sonne of Mary had an Angell to comfort him, and said, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? And againe, Father, Salvificame ex hac hora; Save me from this houre; and such like speeches, which are not consonant, and agreeable to the Sonne of God; and therefore the Sonne of Mary is one different and another person from the Sonne of God.

Iohn 1.14. Mat.29.46.

Sol. To this I answer with S. Cyrill, that as there are many things, which do agree with him, according to the forme of God, which cannot be agreeable to him, according to the forme of a servant; so there are many things, that do agree with him, according to the forme of a servant, which do not agree with the Sonne of God absolutely considered; because he is both a true God, and a true man, so united together, as that the properties of neither nature are confounded, (as hereafter shall be shewed:) and therefore all such sayings, and allegations, which are said of him, or be referred unto him, in respect of one nature, which are not properly agreeable to the other nature, do only shew, and most rightly prove two natures, but not two persons, to be in our Saviour Christ.

Cyril. deffens 4. Anath. contra Theodor.

Iohn 11 27.

CHAP. III.

Of the manner of the union of the two natures, and wherein this union chiefly consisteth.

SEcondly, for the manner of this union of these two natures in one person, or wherein chiefly it consisteth, herein resteth the greatest difficulty; For 2 The manner of the union. Wherein the Heretiks have affirmed the union of both natures in Christ to consist.

First, the Nestorians and their followers say, that both these natures are said to be one, by the unity of 1 Co-habitation. 2 Will and affection. 3 Operation. 4 Participation.

1 Of co habitation.

First, by the unity of co-habitation; because the Word dwelled in the man Christ, as in his choicest House and Temple, according to that saying of the Evangelist, and he dwelt in us.

Iohn 1.14.

2 Of will and affection.

Secondly, by the unity of will and affection; because the will of Christ was alwaies agreeable to the will of God; and this they do illustrate by the example of Man and Wife, which though they be two persons, yet are they said to be one flesh, in regard of their mariage-knot, and especially in respect of their unanimous hearts; so the Sonne of God, and the Sonne of Mary are two persons, (say they) and yet may be said to be one Christ, in regard of that indissoluble spirituall conjunction and affection that is betwixt them.

Mat.19.5.

3 Of operation.

Thirdly, by the unity of operation; because the man Christ was the Instrument, which the Word God used for the effecting of all those great works that he did, while he walked here on earth.

4 Of participation.

Fourthly, by the unity of participation; because the Word God did impart unto the man Christ his name and dignity, that he should be called God, and the Son of God, and should be worshipped of all creatures, not for his owne sake, but for his sake to whom he was thus united.

How falsly the heretiks affirme the union of the two natures to consist in the aforesaid points.

But how false and fained are all these subtill infernall distinctions, to mis-teach the manner and the matter, wherein the true union of these natures chiefly consisteth, ſiſteth, it will eaſily appeare, if we do but obſerve, that all this may, and doth agree with all the Saints and ſervants of God; for Foreſaid union agreeable to all the Saints.

First, God dwelleth in his Saints, as in his Temples; for we are the Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in us, ſaith the Apoſtle.

1 Cor. 3.16.
1 Cor. 6.19.

Secondly, the Saints are one with God, by will and affection; for the Apoſtle ſheweth us plainly, that he which is joyned unto the Lord, is one ſpirit, and wiſheth rather, that Gods will may be done, than his owne, as they do daily in their prayers, ſaying, Thy will be done.

1 Cor 6.17.
Mat. 6.10.

Thirdly, that the Saints are Gods inſtruments, (as be many times the wicked alſo) whereby God worketh many excellent things, the ſame Apoſtle ſheweth, where he ſaith, that although there be diverſities of operations, yet, it is the ſame God which worketh all in all, and calleth us co-workers with God.

1 Cor. 12.6.
Rom. 15.19.

Fourthly, that the Saints are called the Sonnes of God, and ſome of them alſo ſaid to be Gods, by the participation of many graces and titles, which God hath given unto them, it is moſt plaine; for, I ſaid you are Gods, and the children of the moſt High; and ſo the Apoſtle ſheweth, Gal. 4. 6,7. and ſo in many other places: And therefore ſeeing all the faithfull ſervants of God, may be truly ſaid to be united unto God, in reſpect of the co-habitation of God in them, and of their will and affection agreeable to the will of God, and of the working of God in them, and the beſtowing of his names, titles, dignities, and graces upon them; and ſeeing that the union of this Word with our fleſh, that is, of the Divine Nature with the humanity, is farre otherwiſe than the union of the Saints with God, it muſt needs follow, that although it be true, that there is a moſt perfect unity of co-habitation, affection, operation, and participation betwixt the two natures of Chriſt; yet this is not all, but the union of them conſiſteth in a farre more excellent reſpect than any and all of theſe. And therfore

1 Iohn 3.1.
Pſal 82 6.
Gal. 4.6,7.

Chriſts union with God otherwiſe than the union of the Saints.

What the Lutherans teach concerning the union of the two natures of Chriſt.

Secondly, Brentius, Smidelinus, and the reſt of their Lutheran followers, do affirme, this union of both theſe natures, to conſiſt in the communication of the properties of the Deity to the humanity of Chriſt, ſo as they are really transferred, and the humanity inveſted with the divine properties: And therefore, they do conclude, that in reſpect of this reall communicating and transferring of attributes, the manhood of Chriſt is omniſcient, omnipotent, omnipreſent, and ſo forth.

The abſurdities that muſt needs follow the Lutheran Doctrine.

But how groſſe this errour is, and how derogatory to the truth of Chriſtian doctrine, it will eaſily appeare, if we do but conſider thoſe intolerable abſurdities, that of neceſſity muſt needs follow the ſame; for

1 Abſurdity.

Firſt, the Father and the Sonne ſhould be hypoſtatically united one to the other, and ſo be made one perſon; for that it is moſt certaine, (as themſelves muſt, and do confeſſe) that the Father hath, and doth communicate all his eſſentiall attributes and properties unto the Sonne; and therefore if the union of theſe two Natures conſiſteth in the communicating of properties, the Father and the Sonne muſt be united into one perſon; but this is moſt horribly abſurd: Therefore the other

2 Abſurdity.

Secondly, the whole Trinity ſhould be incarnate; becauſe all the eſſentiall attributes of the Deity are common to the whole Trinity, and to each Perſon of the Trinity.

3 Abſurdity.

Thirdly, the two natures of Chriſt could not be hypoſtatically united; becauſe there are certaine divine properties, which cannot be ſaid to be communicated to the humanity of Chriſt, as to be increated, to be infinite, to want beginning of time, to be ens independens, an independent being, and certaine other things, which Chriſt in reſpect of his fleſh had not before his paſſion and reſurrection, as to be impaſſible, immortall, and ſuch like.

4 Abſurdity.

Fourthly, if this union conſiſted in the communicating of the properties, then this transfuſion of them muſt be reciprocall, that is, as the divine properties are transfuſed into the humanity, ſo the humane properties muſt be likewiſe transfuſed into the Deity; and then it muſt needs follow, that as Omnipreſency, Omniſcience, ſciency, ubiquity, and ſuch like, are transfuſed into the humanity; ſo paſſibility, mortality, and ſuch like, ſhould be really transfuſed into the Deity: but it were moſt abſurd to ſay, that the Godhead is capable of humane frailties; and therefore it is as abſurd to ſay, that the Manhood was inveſted with divine excellencies, as they are divine: And

Fiftly, if this were true, then the humanity ſhould be no humanity at all; becauſe it ſhould be then freed from humane frailties, and inveſted with divine properties; and therefore to expreſſe truly wherein this union conſiſteth,

5 Abſurdity.

Wherein the union of the two natures truly conſiſteth is ſhewed.

Thirdly, we ſay, that the union of theſe two natures conſiſteth in the communicating of the ſubſiſtence of the Word with the humane nature, that it aſſumed, that is, of the very being of the Word with the being of our fleſh. ſo that it is an hypoſtaticall or perſonall union, that is, ſuch an union, as that both natures do make but one perſon of Chriſt, even as the ſoule and body do make but one perſon of man; for ſo ſaith the Councell of Calcedon, the Councell of Lateran, the Councell of Toledo, S. Cyril, and all the Orthodoxe Fathers that writ thereof; Si quis non confitetur carni ſecundum ſubſiſtentiam unitum Dei Patris verbum, anathema ſit; whoſoever confeſſeth not the eternall Word of the Father to be united unto our fleſh according to his ſubſiſtence, let him be accurſed.

In Ep. Alex Concil. anath. 11.

Itaq; eſt unio perſonalis, ſed non perſonarum; & eſt hæc naturarum, ſed non naturarum; ſed ſupernaturalis eſt.

And further we ſay, that the union of theſe two natures, that is, the God-head, as it is limited to the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity, and the Manhood of Chriſt, is,

Six ſpeciall things obſervable in the union of the two natures of Chriſt.

1 Inconvertible.	4 Inſeparable.
2 Indiviſible.	5 Subſtantiall.
3 Inconfuſed.	6 Ineffable.

Firſt, Inconvertible, becauſe neither the divine nature is turned into the humanity, nor the humanity into the Deity.

1 Inconvertible.

Secondly, Indiviſible, becauſe the natures are ſo united into one perſon, that they can never be ſeparated, unleſſe we divide the perſon of Chriſt, which is moſt hereticall.

2 Indiviſible.

Thirdly, Inconfuſed, becauſe the natures remaine ſtill intire, without confounding either their eſſence, or their properties, or their wills, or any other operations whatſoever; and therefore (excepting only his ſubſiſtence, which is one, that we make him not two perſons, with Neſtorius) we do affirme, that in Chriſt there are two natures, two wills, two naturall proprieties and operations, entire and unmixed, that we may not confound them with Eutyches; for ſith the natures are neither confuſed, nor transfuſed each into other, the properties alſo muſt needs remaine entire to either nature, without that ſuppoſed transfuſion of them each to other; for that rule can never be diſproved; Confundens proprietates eſſentiales, confundit naturas, confound the naturall or eſſentiall properties of any things, and you take away the nature of the things: And therefore in that one and ſelfe-ſame ſubſiſtence of Chriſt, there muſt needs be a divine and a humane nature, a divine and a humane wiſedome, a divine and a humane will; and ſo of all other properties of each nature, they muſt be as well inconfuſed, as indiviſible.

3 Inconfuſed.

How the properties of each nature do remaine entire and inconfuſed to each nature.

And this Chriſt himſelfe briefly ſheweth, where he ſaith, I lay downe my life, and I take it up againe; for though the actions of each nature are inſeparably joyned together, in reſpect of the perſon, that is, though the ſame perſon is ſaid to do the actions of each nature, yet are the actions never confounded, but do ſtill remaine diſtinct and proper to each nature, as to lay downe his life, is the proper worke of the humanity, and to take it up againe, is the proper worke of the Deity: And this Damaſcen doth explaine, by the example of a fiery ſword, wherein both the natures of the fire and of the ſword, and ſo likewiſe the actions and proprieties of each of them, are preſerved intire, to each nature; Nam ferrum habet virtutem incidendi, ignis urendi, for the iron retaineth ſtill, and retaineth onely the power of cutting, and the fire of burning; Even ſo it is in the perſon of Chriſt, the divinity doth ſtill retaine the propriety of working divine operations, and the humanity ſtill retaineth the propriety of working all humane operations: And Theodoret uſeth the ſame ſimilie, though not in the like words, yet to the very

Iohn 10.17.

A ſimilie.

Damaſc. de fide orthodoxa, l. 3 c. 15.

Theodor. Dial. 2. f. 165.

An example shewing how the two natures, though united, do remain inconfused.

very ſame effect, ſaying, Si ignis cum ferro commixtio, qua ferrum ita oſtendit, ut etiam ea faciat quæ ſunt ignis, ejus naturam non mutat, ita nec Dei cum corpore eſt mutatio corporis, &c. If the commixtion of the fire with the iron, doth make the iron not onely to appeare like fire, but alſo to do the ſame things, (as to dry, to heat, and to burne) which the fire doth; and yet this fire changeth not the nature of the iron; even ſo the union of the Word with our fleſh, doth not change the nature of our fleſh, but as a man hath his ſoule and body both united and inconfuſed; Ita multò magis Chriſtus habens divinitatem cum corpore, habet utrâq; permanentia, & non confuſa; ſo much more, Chriſt having his divinity united with our fleſh, hath them both remaining entire and inconfuſed.

4 Inſeparable.

Fourthly, inſeparable; becauſe the natures are ſo inſeparably united, as that the humane nature, which the Word aſſumed, can never be ſeparated from the ſame; and therefore when Chriſt died, ſubtraxit viſionem, ſed non ſolvit unionem; the ſoule parted from the body, but the Deity was ſeparated from neither, as Leo ſaith; for in reſpect of this union of the Deity, with either part of Chriſts humanity, the Man Chriſt ſaith unto the Godhead, Thou wilt not leave my ſoule in hell, nor ſuffer thine holy one, that is, my body in the grave, to ſee corruption; but as a tree cut in twaine, the Sun cannot be cut, but that it may ſtill ſhine on either part; ſo the body and ſoule of Chriſt being parted, the Deity was ſtill united unto them both, and could never be ſeparated from the manhood, after he had once aſſumed the ſame into the unity of his perſon.

Pſal. 16. 11. When Chriſt died, and body and ſoule were parted, the Godhead parted from neither of them.

5 Subſtantiall. That there are three ſpeciall kinds of union.

Fiftly, ſubſtantiall; for (as Bellarmine well obſerveth) diverſe things may be united three manner of wayes.

1 Eſſentially.

First, eſſentially, as when of many things is made one eſſence, after which manner the matter and forme, the kind and difference are joyned and united together; and thus the union of theſe natures in the Words incarnation, is not made; First, becauſe that if it were ſo, then there ſhould be in Chriſt but one nature, and that ſhould be neither divine nor humane, but a certaine third kind of nature out of them both; And ſecondly, becauſe that this eſſentiall union is never made, but of imperfect natures; or if they be perfect, then is it by a certaine corruption, or converſion of them; but the natures of Chriſt are perfect and entire, and therefore not eſſentially united.

2 Accidentally.

Secondly, accidentally, as when accidents are adjoyned to the ſubject, or when a ſubſtance is joyned to a ſubſtance; but of that coupling ariſeth nothing els but an accidentall forme, as when of timber and ſtones we compoſe and frame a houſe; and thus alſo the hypoſtaticall union of Chriſts two natures is not made; becauſe God is no accident, nor the ſubject of any accidents.

3 Subſtantially. That the union of Chriſt his natures is ſubſtanciall.

Thirdly, ſubſtantially, as when a ſubſtance, which otherwiſe exiſteth of it ſelfe, is drawne to the being of another ſuppoſitum, that is, of another of it ſelfe exiſting ſubſtance, and dependeth on the ſame, as a part thereof: And thus is the union of the Word with our Fleſh; for we ſay, that the Word is ſubſtantially made fleſh, that is, a true and a perfect man, whoſe being is no accident, but a ſubſtance.

6 Ineffable. That the manner of the uniting of the two natures, is ineffable. Hic humana ceſſat ratio, hic flacceſſit acies intellectus noſtri, hic docti pariter indoctiq; conjunguntur. Heinſius homin Theophan. Pſal. 96. 19.

Sixtly, it is ineffable, ſo abſolutely perfect, and ſo exceedingly myſticall, that it can never be perfectly declared by any man; for though the Fathers ſought by many examples and ſimilitudes, to expreſſe and to illuſtrate the ſame, as by the union of the body and ſoule, of a branch ingraffed into a Tree, of a fiery iron, and ſuch like; yet all come too ſhort, for the full expreſſing of this inexplicable myſtery: And therefore S. Bernard compareth this ineffable myſtery, of the uniting of theſe two natures, unto that incomprehenſible myſtery of the Trinity; and ſo indeed that of the Trinity is greateſt, and this of the incarnation is like unto it, farre exceeding mans capacity; for his wayes are in the ſeas, his paths are in the great waters, and his footſteps are not knowne.

And ſo you ſee, how that theſe two natures do make but one perſon of our Saviour Chriſt, and how they are really, though ineffably, united in that one and ſelfe-ſame ſubſiſtence of Chriſt.

CHAP.

Chap. IV.

Of some of the chiefest effects and benefits of this union of these two Natures of Christ.

THirdly, for the effects and benefits of this hypostaticall union of these two natures, we must understand, that they are especially of two sorts.

1 Some in respect of Christ.
2 Others in respect of Christians.
} And

3 The effects and benefits of the union are of two sorts.

First, those in respect of Christ, are likewise threefold.

1 An exemption of all sinne and corruption from Christ.
2 The collation of ineffable graces into the humanity of Christ.
3 The communication of the properties of each Nature to the person of Christ.

1 The benefit of the union of the two natures in respect of Christ, is threefold. Eta. 53. 10. 1 Pet. 2. 22.

First, we find, that although Christ appeared like a sinfull man, and was numbred among the wicked, yet in very deed, he did no sinne, neither was any guile found in his mouth; for though, In carnis assumptione condescendit mihi, in culpæ tamen vitatione consuluit sibi, he assumed the true nature of man, yet by reason of his pure conception, and of this hypostaticall union, he was conceived and lived without sin; and so, as Leo saith, Qui non alienus ab hominum genere, alienus fuit à crimine; he tooke upon him the seed of man, but not the sinne of man; he united himselfe to our nature, but he shunned all the iniquity of our nature.

1 To free the manhood from all sinne.

Secondly, the graces collated unto the humanity of Christ, by reason of this union of the two natures, are very many, especially these six.

2 To inrich the manhood with these and the like speciall graces.

First, his subsistence, and that in the second person of the Trinity, whereof it selfe, as of it selfe, is destitute.

1 Grace.

Secondly, an extraordinary dignity, in that it is a peculiar Temple for the Deity of Christ to dwell in, and the place where the Godhead shewes it selfe more manifestly and more gloriously, than in any other creature whatsoever; for though God sheweth himselfe by his providence, to be in all his creatures, and by his grace, to be after a more speciall manner in his Saints; yet is he onely most gloriously, eternally inhabiting, according to the fulnesse of his Deity, by an hypostaticall union, in the humanity of Christ; for in him dwelleth the fulnesse of the Godhead bodily; and as now in this life, no man commeth unto God but by Christ, so hereafter in the next life, no man can see God, but in the face of Iesus Christ.

2 Grace.

How God is in things.

Col. 2 9.

Thirdly, a more neare familiarity with the Godhead, than any other creature, (whether men or Angels) either had, or have, or can have; for that to all other creatures he is adjoyned only by the presence of his grace, or glory, but to the humanity of Christ, he hath personally united himselfe for ever; so that, as he said My Father and I are one, that is, one essence, he may as truly say, the Manhood and I are one, that is, one only person for ever.

3 Grace.

Fourthly, an extraordinary measure, without measure, of habituall graces, wisdome, understanding, holinesse, and the like; such as dwels not in that measure in any other creature whatsoever, no not in the very chiefest Angels of God; for to all them were given grace by measure, but to the humanity of Christ was given grace without measure, (saith the Baptist) even so much as a creature is any ways capable of.

4 Grace.

Eph 4 7. Iohn 3. 34.

Fifthly, a partner agent with the Godhead, according to its measure, in the works of redemption, mediation, and such like.

5 Grace.

Sixtly, to be adored and worshipped with divine honour, not as it is considered in it selfe, without respect unto the Deity, but as it is united with the Godhead; Neq; tamen creaturam adoramus, absit sed Dominum rerum creatarum, incarnatum verbum Deum, adoramus; And yet we adore no creature, God forbid, but we worship and adore the Lord of all creatures, the incarnate Word God, Iesus Christ, saith Athanasius; Nam veluti si quis nostrum, &c. For as if any one of us should find a

6 Grace.

Athanas. Orat 5. contra Arrianos.

purple robe, or a Kingly Diademe, lying upon the ground, would he worship the same trow you? but when the King is cloathed, and decked with the same, he is guilty of death, that despiseth and refuseth to worship and honour them, together with the King that weareth them; even so in our Saviour Christ, we do not adore the sole and bare humanity, but being united unto the Deity, whosoever shall dispise to adore with divine worship that only Sonne of God, true God, and true man, he shall undoubtedly suffer the paines of eternall death, saith S. Augustine.

We worship not the flesh alone considered, but we adore the person of Christ, which consisteth of the Word and our flesh.

Aug de verbis Dominis sec. Iob. Ser. 38.

Thirdly, for the communicating of the properties, we are to consider it,

3 To have the properties of each nature to be indifferently predicated of the whole person of Christ.

1 In respect of those properties, which are common to both natures, joyntly considered.

1 Common properties.

2 In respect of those properties, which are peculiar to either nature, severally considered.

1 The office of a Mediatour is ascribed to Christ, in respect of both natures, Quia totus Christus secundum divinitatem & humanitatem est Mediator & Intercessor, because whole Christ according to his Deity and humanity is our Mediatour and Intercessour, saith S. Augustine.

2 Peculiar properties.

2 The peculiar properties of either nature are said to be communicated, when they are predicated, or spoken of the whole person of Christ in the concrete, and largest extent; and this communicating of properties, is nothing els, but a forme of speech, whereby those things are spoken of the whole person of Christ, which indeed are proper to either one nature, and not to the other; for oftentimes it comes to passe, that by reason of the personall union of these two natures, each one of them doth interchangeably take the concrete or compounded names each of other in predication, as when it is said, that God purchased the Church with his owne bloud; not that the Godhead shed bloud, but because that person, which was a God, did, to procure redemption, shed bloud, not which it had as God, but which it had in respect of the manhood united unto it: So the Sonne of man, talking with Nicodemus, is said to be in heaven, not that he was in heaven, as he was man, while he was on earth, but because that person, which was the Sonne of man, was by something that was in his person, that is, his Deity, in heaven; so S. Paul in the first Chapter to the Romans, Verse 3.4. doth give us a perfect patterne how to interpret all such alternate predications; for there he saith, that the Sonne of God was made of the seed of David; but how? not according to his divine Sonneship or Deity, which he had from all eternity, but in respect of his humane nature, which was personally united unto the Sonne of God.

Acts 20 28.

Iohn 3.13.

Rom. 1.4.

These speeches in the abstract disagree, In sense compounded well accorded be.

And therefore, though it be most usuall in the Scripture, to heare things properly appertaining to the Manhood, to be affirmed of our blessed God and Saviour, and also things properly belonging to him as he is God, ascribed to the man Christ Iesus; yet is it most heretical, to confound the one nature with the other, as the Eutychians did, or to communicate properly the speciall properties of one nature unto the other, as the Lutherans do; for in the concrete, and not in the abstract, (as the Schooles do speake) we say, that they have crucified the Lord of glory; as noting that person, which was, and is the Lord of glory, and understanding it of his person, not in respect of that nature whereby he was the Lord of glory, but in respect of the other nature personally united thereunto, wherein he was passible and might be crucified.

1 Cor. 2, 8.

And so speaking of his person, in respect of his other nature, we say, That the man Christ is Almighty; because he is so in respect of his divine nature, personally united unto his humanity; but as we may not say, that they have crucified the Godhead; so we may not say, That the manhood of Christ is Almighty; for when any thing is affirmed of Christ, in respect of that one nature which properly belongeth unto the other, the meaning thereof is not to invest the one nature with the properties that are peculiar to the other, but thereby to shew the truth and certainty of the union of both natures in one person: and we have a good example hereof in man, as he consisteth of body and soule; for we may truly say, that man is heavenly and immortall, and that man is mortall & earthly; and againe we may say, that Damas. l. 3. c. 3. 4. de fide orthodoxa. Theodoret. in Dialog.

that the soule sleepeth, and the body heareth, whereas to sleepe, is the property of the body, and to heare, is the property of the soule; and yet they destroy the nature of man, that would either turne the one of these natures into the other, or confound one of these with the other, or invest the one nature really with the properties that are peculiar unto the other; Even so we may say, that God was borne of a Virgin, and the Virgin to be Θεότοκον, the Mother of God, that God suffered, and was crucified, and did redeeme the Church with his owne blood; yet not simply, sed χῖ ἀνῶ κῦ ἀνῶ; but in this or that respect, that is, in respect of another nature, which God hath united unto himselfe; because God here, is a concrete word, and not an abstract, and signifieth the person of Christ, and not the divine nature of Christ; and so we say, that the man Christ is almighty, omniscient, omnipresent, &c. yet not simply in respect of his manhood, but in respect of the person, which is the same, God and man, or of the other nature, of the man Christ Iesus; for that here man also is a concrete word, signifying the whole person, and not the humane nature of Christ.

Acts 20 28.

Thus what is said of God the same of man (sith God and man are one) affirm we can. And what of man said properly may be, The same likewise of God affirme may we.

And so in this respect, and after this manner, the speciall properties of each nature, may be predicated and affirmed of the other nature; Quia aut Deus propter unitatem propria ducit humana, sic homo propter unitatem propria ducit divina; Because that as the God Christ in respect of the hypostaticall union of the two natures, assumed all the humane properties; so the man Christ, in respect of the same union, is partaker of all the divine properties, as S. Cyril speaketh: But on the contrary side, we may not say, that the Deity of Christ was borne of a Virgin; or that Mary is the Mother of the Godhead, or that the divinity of Christ was passible, and mortall; nor that the humanity of Christ is almighty, omniscient, omnipresent, or the like; because the Deity and humanity are abstract words, that is, such words as do note unto us the two natures of Christ, the one divine, the other humane, and not the person of Christ.

Cyril de incarn. c.26.

And therefore if we do but rightly distinguish between prædicata absoluta & limitata, the things that are spoken absolutely in the largest sense, and the things that are predicated by way of limitation in the strictest sense, we shall easily see, that the communication of the properties of both natures, do no wayes prove such a reall transfusion of the properties of each nature into the other, as that the humanity of Christ should receive into it selfe from the Deity, a power to be omnipotent, omniscient, or omnipresent in it selfe, but as the natures are distinct, so the properties of each nature are still distinct, without transfusion or confounding the one with the other.

Of absolute and limited predications.

Chap. V.

Of certaine objections and arguments, endeavouring to prove the investing of the humanity of Christ with divine properties, answered; and the effects of this union in respect of all Christians, shewed.

And yet notwithstanding all this, and all els that hath been spoken, by all the most famous Divines of this latter time, the Lutherans say, that Christ did such miracles in his naturall body, and that there are such things ascribed to the manhood of Christ, as do sufficiently prove, that his humane nature is really invested with the divine properties. For

Ob. 1. They do object that when the Iewes would have throwne him downe the hill, he passed away invisibly from among them all; therefore the man Christ Iesus is invisible.

Ludolph p.1. c.65. p.155.

Sol. To this Ludolphus answereth, that this happened not, by making the Body of Christ invisible, but by the sudden striking of his enemies with such stupified blindnesse, as were the Sodomites, when they sought for Lots doore, untill they were wearied.

Object. 2. They doe object, that Christ came into the roome where the Apostles were, the doores being shut; therefore the body of Christ is void of that grossenesse, incident to a naturall body, and is now made invisible and inpalpable.

Sol. To this some do answer, that he came in, the doores being shut, that is, at that time, when the doores are usually shut in every place; but this could be neither strange to the Apostles, nor any extraordinary act of Christ: and therefore Zanchius doth more truly answer, that this proveth not any mutation to be in the body of Christ, nor any investment of the same with divine properties; but that by the omnipotent power of his Deity, he caused the doores to go backe, and to open themselves unto him, to make way for the true and solid body of Christ to enter in, as the stone was rolled away from the doore of the sepulchre, to make way for the same solid body, to passe forth; and we read, that to others he did the like to this; for Saint Peter being in prison, and the doores being shut, they opened themselves unto him, and he came forth; and all the Apostles (if we believe Master Harding) came into the Chappell to helpe Saint Basil to say Masse, though the doores were shut: and therefore the opening of the doores by the power of Christs Deity, doth no way prove the inpalpability of his body.

Zanch tom. 8. p. 389.

That the doores opened themselves to Christ.

Acts 12. 10.

Object. 3. They do object that he walked upon the Sea like a Spirit; and therefore his Body was invested with the levity and agility of the Deity.

Mar. 6. 49.

Sol. To this I answer, that he walked upon the Seas, not by the alleviating or making light his body, or specially by the losing of the properties of a true naturall body; but by the consolidating, and confirming or strengthening of the waters, through the power of his Deity, to make them able to beare him up; and so they were strengthened to beare up the body of Saint Peter, untill Saint Peters faith began to faile, and yet I hope our Lutherans will not say, S. Peters body was therefore invested with divine properties.

Object. 4. They do object, that the heavens must containe the body of Christ untill the restitution of all things, as Saint Peter saith; and yet that Christ in respect of his humanity, did appeare unto Saint Paul, as he went towards Damascus; and therefore either the saying of Saint Peter cannot be true, or Saint Paul did not see him, or els his humanity, by reason of the union with the Deity, hath obtained those Divine properties, to be omniscient and omnipresent with the Deity.

Acts 3. 3.

Acts 22. 6.

Sol. To this some do answer, that Christ might, for that time, and to that end, frame a body of the ayre, to speake unto Saint Paul, as he did many times unto the Fathers of the Old Testament; and so the heavens did containe the true and naturall body, and he appeared unto S. Paul in a body that he assumed for that purpose.

Others thinke that Christ might for a short space of time leave the Heavens, and descend into the Ayre to speake with Saint Paul; and yet the saying of Saint Peter to be still true, thus understood, that the heavens usually and alwaies without some rare and speciall dispensation do containe him, untill the restitution of all things.

But it is unlikely that he would assume any created form upon him, after he had once really united himselfe to our nature; and we have no argument to prove that ever he did it; and it is not probable that he would leave his throne void in heaven, for the least moment of time, after he was once seated in that excellent Majesty: and therfore I think with Zanchius, that Christ remaining in heaven, might appeare unto Saint Paul, as he did unto Saint Stephen, the heavens were opened, and his eyes were indued with a most excellent sharpnesse of sight, that he saw Christ standing on the right hand of God; for Saint Paul doth not say that Christ appeared unto him on earth, but that suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven, and that he heard the voice of the Lord, saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And all this might be without any presence of Christs Body; for Christ might speake in heaven, and cause that same voice to be heard here

Acts 7. 55.

That Saul saw no body on earth, as he went to Damascus.

here on earth, or he might frame a voice in the ayre, as the Father did at the baptiſme of Chriſt, where the voice was framed and heard, but no body ſeene nor aſſumed. Mat. 3. 17.

Ob. 5. They do object that the Body of Chriſt doth viviſie us, and raiſe us up, and doth ſuch other effects, which are only proper unto the Godhead; and therfore it is inveſted with the properties of the Godhead.

Sol. To this Damaſcen anſwereth by this ſimilitude, Vrit ignitum ferrum, non naturali ratione, uſtivam poſſidens actionem; ſed ex unitione ignis ad ferrum, illud obtinet; that as a hot fiery iron will burne any thing, not that the iron hath naturally the faculty or propriety of burning, but by reaſon of the union of the fire unto it; ſo the humanity is ſaid to do many things, not that it hath any property in it ſelfe to do them; but being united unto the Deity, it is ſaid to do the ſame, though indeed, as it is not the iron that burneth, but the fire that is united unto the iron; ſo it is not properly the fleſh that doth any of theſe, but the Word, unto which the fleſh is hypoſtatically united: And therfore it is apparent, mauger all that can be ſaid againſt it, that Chriſt by this communicating of properties, hath neither loſt the properties of a true naturall body, nor that his humanity is really inveſted with the properties of the Deity. How the fleſh of Chriſt is ſaid to do divine operations. Damaſ. de fide orthodox. l. 3 c. 17.

Secondly, the other effects and benefits of the union of theſe two natures, which, in regard of us, are our ſpirituall union with God, and thereby the inriching of us, with all thoſe graces that do prepare us, and bring us unto everlaſting happineſſe; for our ſinnes had ſeparated us from God, and made us aliens and ſtrangers from the life of God; they were, and are, like a partition wall betwixt God and us; they keep us farre from God, and make us indeed to be ἄθεοι, men without God in the world: but now as God made the perſonall union of ſoule and body, for the conſtitution and continuation of the whole and common nature of mankind; ſo he united the Word with our fleſh, that our nature might be reſtored in the perſon of Chriſt, and that they, which before were at variance, God and Man, might now be reconciled through this union of God and man in the perſon of Ieſus Chriſt; for ſeeing Chriſt hath perſonally united our nature unto himſelfe, he hath thereby naturally united us unto God; Quia natura nobis eſt ὁμοούσιος, becauſe by nature he is of the ſame nature with us, and we are of the ſame with him, though we be not carnally in him, but as we are ingrafted, Et conſortes Chriſti per fidem, and partakers of Chriſt by faith, as S. Baſil ſaith. Secondly, the benefits of the union of the two natures of Chriſt, in reſpect of us. Eſay 1. Eph 4. 18. Baſil. Ep. 41 ad Cæſarienſ.

And ſo now, by reaſon of this uniting of our nature unto the Sonne of God, and thereby our communion and fellowſhip with God, we receive (as all the members do receive life and motion, by reaſon of their union with the head) all thoſe gracious motions, and gifts that are neceſſary for ſuſtaining of our ſpirituall life, and ſhall hereafter fully attaine unto the bleſſed fruition of God for ever.

And ſo you ſee the particulars of this great myſtery of the words incarnation, how the word was made fleſh.

Chap. VI.

Of certaine reaſons why theſe deepe doctrinall points were ſo largely handled.

And now, if any man doth marvell, (as no doubt but many do, and blame me too perhaps) that I ſhould ſo largely treat of the eternity and divinity of the Word, againſt the Arrians, of the verity of his humanity againſt the Marcioniſts, of the diſtinction of the two natures againſt the Eutychians, of the union of the natures againſt the Neſtorians, and of the communicating of the properties againſt the Lutherans; ſeeing (as Hyperius adviſeth us) we ſhould rather deale againſt the iniquity of the times, and thoſe preſent evils, that are raging and raigning amongſt the people in every place, than by needleſſe mention of old buried Why the former points were ſo largely handled.

heresies, to give occasion unto any man to inquire into them; I answer, that I have done the same for sundry and divers reasons; As

1 Reason.

Iohn 17.3. The chiefest knowledge, is the knowledge of Iesus Christ.

First, because these points concerning Christ, are the most principall points of all Divinity, and the most comfortable for all Christians; for this is eternall life, to know thee to bee the onely true God, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ: And therefore I did ever love to be ever fishing in this Sea, to bee ever studying in these points, and I did never thinke, that I could either stay too long, or speake too much, in discoursing about Iesus Christ.

2 Reason. 1 Cor. 11. 19.

The diuell is most desirous to keepe us ignorant of this truth, or else to corrupt this Truth.

Secondly, because the Apostle saith there must bee Heresies, and that, in these our daies, we are as apt and as prone to fall into all sorts of Heresies, as ever were men in any daies, since the beginning of daies; and that we know the divell is more desirous to obscure this light, and to corrupt the truth of this doctrine, concerning Christ, then any other point of Divinity whatsoever: And therefore I thinke it were good, if this truth were more fully handled, and more generally divulged unto all people then it is; not onely, that our armour might bee in a readinesse; but also that having oyle in our lampes, and our loynes girt, and these points, by continuall hearing and reading of the same, perfectly knowne and understood, wee might be able to quench the fiery darts of Satan, and to stop the mouthes of all Hereticks, if at any time Satan should stirre them up to speake against the truth.

3 Reason. By seeing the villanies of Satan, we ought the rather to detest him, and to beware of him.

Thirdly, because it is not onely our parts, onely to set downe ablative directions, to confute or prevent errours; but also as we are to recite the long forepassed benefits of God, that we may see the greatnesse of his goodnesse, and be thereby induced to shew the more love and thankefullnesse to his Majesty; so we are to relate the long-fore-passed villanies, miseries, and Heresies, whereunto that cruell enemy of mankinde hath plunged us, that so men may see, and have it alwaies before their eyes, what destruction and miseries he hath brought continually unto the sonnes of men, and may be hereby induced ever to hate and detest that cruell fiend.

4 Reason. Luke 5.4.

The best way to teach us is to lay a good foundation.

Fourthly, because we are debters both to the wise and unwise, and must oftentimes launch forth into the deepe, (as our Saviour commanded Saint Peter) if we will catch a good draught of fish; for we find that popular exhortations, not grounded upon the sure doctrinall points of instructions, are like roofes built without foundation; and therefore Tertullian saith, it is the property of Hereticks first movere, to perswade, and then, docere, to teach, and ever to spend more time in morall perswasions, then they doe in the fundamentall points of divine instructions; but the true labourers, with Saint Paul, are most desirous ever to lay downe a good foundation; and other foundation can no man lay better then this, to know Iesus Christ and him crucified.

The propertie of hereticks. 1 Cor. 3. 11.

5 Reason. The doctrine of divinity is very deepe. 1 Tim. 4. 16. 2 Cor. 2. 16.

Fiftly, because we are to shew how Divinity is like a boundlesse Ocean, and of an unwadable depth, wherein the greatest Elephant may swimme, and how great is the mystery of godlinesse, God manifested in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seene of Angells, preached unto the Gentiles, beleeved on in the world, and received up into glory; that so the people may see how laborious and painfull is the calling of the poore Ministers; for who can expresse his noble Acts? πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ἱκανός? or, who is sufficient for these things? or to attaine to the knowledge of any of these things, without fervent prayers for Gods assistance, and indefatigable paines, with all diligence continually; and that both Priests and People, should alwaies strive and labour, Et orando, & audiendo, & legendo, & bene vivendo, ut intelligant, By praying, hearing, reading, and all other possible meanes, that they may understand so much as their weake capacities can unblameably comprehend, both of these and all other truthes concerning Christ; for all knowledge without this will availe us nothing; the knowledge of all morall vertues, of all naturall causes, of all Crafts and Sciences can never bring us unto eternall happinesse, but this is eternall life to know Iesus Christ: and therefore, for mine owne part, I had rather weare and weary out out my ſelfe, in this difficult ſtudy of Chriſt, then to bath my ſelfe in thoſe fountaines, or to bee crowned with the ſweeteſt Garland flowers of Philoſophy or morality.

How diligent wee ought to bee to attaine unto the knowledge of Iesus Christ.

Sixtly, becauſe hereby is ſeene, the greatneſſe of Gods love to mankinde, in that he was pleaſed to open and to ſearch the treaſure of his wiſedome, that hee might deviſe and finde out the meanes to ſave us, which of our ſelves could never ſo much as to have invented the way, much leſſe to effect the meanes to helpe our ſelves; for if it be now ſo ineffable, and ſo incomprehenſible, that wee can never fully underſtand, nor perfectly attaine unto the depth of theſe myſteries, how the Word ſhould bee incarnate, and the two natures, ſo farre in nature diſagreeing one from the other, ſhould notwithſtanding be united into one perſon, for the accompliſhing of our redemption, being already done, and ſo plainely ſhewed by Chriſt, and unfolded by ſo many faithfull ſervants of Chriſt, how ſhould wee ever have invented, or found out the way to effect ſo great ſalvation, before it was done? for many can tell how to deviſe the way, and learne to know the meanes that might doe them good, but cannot tell how to effect the ſame; but we could neither performe the worke, nor yet deviſe the way how we might bee reconciled unto God; and therefore, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, The helpe that is done upon earth, God doth it himſelfe; And hee did it wholly himſelfe; for when we could doe nothing to helpe our ſelves, no not ſo much as to imagine which way to doe our ſelves any good, God of his meere love was moved, through his wiſedome, to finde out this meanes of uniting the Word with our Fleſh, that we might be united unto God againe. O that wee would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and ſhew the wonders that hee doth for the Children of men; That we would offer unto him, The ſacrifice of praiſe and thankeſgiving, and ſhew forth his praiſes from one generation to another.

6 Reaſon.

That no wiſdome but that infearch able wiſedome of God could ever have found this way to ſave ſinfull man.

Pſal. 139. 8.

Seventhly, Becauſe hereby is ſhewed the difference betwixt the Law and the Goſpell; for that the Fathers under the Law, did ſee theſe things darkely, and beheld Chriſt through the grates and latices, that is, under the types and ſhaddowes of the Law, as it were with Moſes, in foramine petræ, through the holes and clefts of the rocke, to behold a few glimpſes of the glory of God; but wee with open face may ſee him, as in a glaſſe; for now the vaile is taken away from Moſes his face, all Types are now accompliſhed, all ceremonies are aboliſhed, and all the myſts of darkeneſſe, errours, and Hereſies are now eſpecially diſperſed; for that not onely the day-ſtarre hath appeared but alſo the Sunne of Righteouſneſſe hath riſen, and ſhineth over the face of the whole world; and this great myſtery of godlineſſe is, and hath beene long preached, unfolded, and moſt plainely ſhewed unto the Gentiles, as the Apoſtle ſheweth.

7 Reaſon.

2 Cor. 3. 18.

Cant. 2. 14, 15.

The difference betwixt the Law and the Goſpell.

And therfore it is a ſhame for us, if we be dull in hearing, and unapt to underſtand all neceſſary truthes; for though the Iewes of old might bee excuſed for their ignorance, becauſe they ſate in darkeneſſe, and in the ſhadow of death; yet are we without excuſe, becauſe the cleere light of truth is continually preached unto us: and therefore it will be our condemnation, if we love darkeneſſe more then light, and deſire rather to be ſtill groping in the twy-light of morality, that is, the precepts of morall men, then to walke in the true light of Divinity, which is the Doctrine of Ieſus Chriſt.

Heb. 5. 11.

Luke 1.

Iohn 3. 19.

And yet ſuch is the miſery of our daies, and the dullneſſe of our people, that, as the Church of Rome teacheth implicite faith to ſuffice a man for his ſalvation, that is, to beleeve what the Church beleeveth, though he know no more what that is, then Baalams Aſſe underſtood her owne voice; So many amongſt us (whom God hath indued with ſufficient capacities, to underſtand many myſteries of faith, if they would apply their deſire and diligence to learne them) are contented with confuſed, or at the beſt, very generall notions, that Chriſt died for them, and that they hope by him to bee ſaved; and if you enter into the particulars, concerning his perſon, they preſently frame unto themſelves falſe and erronious conceits, thinking perhaps Chriſt to be a man, by an humane perſon, and

Numb. 22. 31.

That many men are very ignorant of the chiefeſt points of Chriſtianity.

and ſo are Neſtorians, or to be a meere man, and ſo are Arrians, or to have his natures confounded, and ſo are Eutychians, or elſe to have the properties of theſe natures confounded, and ſo are Lutherans, and ſo are wrapped in many monſtrous Hereſies, not for want of meanes, but for want of deſire or diligence to underſtand theſe truths.

1 Cor. 14. 38.

But if any will bee ſuch, that is, not looke upon the light for feare of blinding his eyes, let him take heede of that feareſull ſaying, Qui ignorat ignorabitur, He that will not know Chriſt, ſhall not be knowne of Chriſt; And yet I meane not that every one, eſpecially of the meaner underſtanding, ſhould labour for perfect or exquiſite knowledge herein, or more then their capacities are able to comprehend; for as we muſt not bee too careleſſe, ſo wee may not be too curious in theſe unſearchable myſteries; but my meaning is, that men ſhould not ſatisfie themſelves, onely with involved, implicite faith, or ſome generall notions, concerning Chriſt; but we ſhould labour, every man according to the meaſure of underſtanding that God hath given him, to learne and know, in ſome competent meaſure, the particular myſteries of our faith; and what we cannot comprehend by reaſon we ſhould apprehend by faith; becauſe as Heinſius ſaith, omnia in Deo ſupra rationem nihil ſupra fidem, though many things may be above the reach of reaſon, yet nothing beyond faith; nam quicquid ſolus Deus poteſt facere, ſola fides poteſt credere, for whatſoever God alone can do, faith alone can beleeve the ſame; and faith is the compendium of our ſalvation and humane wiſedome the chiefeſt obſtacle of the ſame. And ſo much for the firſt part of this Treatiſe; the ſumme and ſubſtance of the words Incarnation.

Juveniet pius pulſator quod curioſus indagator non poterit Bern. in Cantic. Ser. 26.

The myſteries of our religion are to be beleeved by faith rather then to be ſearched out by reaſon.

The

The second part.

Part 2.

The chiefest circumstances that are requisite to bee knowne for the understanding of this mystery, of the Words Incarnation.

Chap. I.

Of the Ancestors and family from whence Christ descended. And what we may learne thereby.

SEcondly, the chiefest circumstances concerning the words Incarnation, are especially these three;

Three points.

First, His family, from whence he was descended;

Secondly, His nativity, whereby he was declared; And

Thirdly, His testimony, by which hee was approved unto the world, to bee the true Messias.

First, for the family from whence Christ should descend, It was propheſied long before, that the Messias should come of the seed and linage of David; and the Evangelists say, that Christ was borne of a Virgin, whose name was Mary.

1 The family of Christ. Psal. 132. 11. Mat. 1. Luke 1. 27.

First, of a Virgin, to fullfill the propheſie of Esay, Chap. 7. 14. And that hee might be conceived without sinne, because he was to redeeme us from sinne: and so, as the Poet saith,

——We truely may averre,
No sonne like him, no mother like to her;
For such a mother never was before,
And such another never shall be more.

Nec primam similē visa est, nec habere secundam Bern. in Vigil. Nativit. Ser. 3.

Secondly, of a Virgin called Mary, that the verity of the Story might appeare most manifest, and that the certainty of his pedegree might bee the more easily shewed.

Ob. But it may be objected, that Christ was to be like Melchisedecke, without Father, and without mother; and therefore the Sonne of Mary is not likely to be the Christ, because he hath a mother.

Sol. I answer, that some affirmed Melchisedecke to have both a Father and a Mother, and is thought by Saint Hierome and divers others, to be Sem the Sonne of Noah; but he is said to be without Father, and without Mother, because by that name, and in that place, where he is said to have come, and to have blessed Abraham, there is no mention made of his Father, or of his Mother, or of his beginning, or of his ending; but for mine owne part, I answer, (as I shewed before) that I beleeve this Melchisedecke was Christ himselfe, and that he may bee truly said to be without Father, and without Mother, if we understand the same aright; for that as God, he hath no Mother, and as man, he hath no Father; because Ioseph was but his legall, and not his naturall Father.

Hieron. ad Evagr.

This point is fully discussed before.

Ob. But you will say then, that he could not come of the seede of David; because Mary was the Daughter of Ioachim, a Priest of the Tribe of Levi, as the Manichees and others have affirmed; because the Scripture saith; Behold, thy Cosin Elizabeth, which was the wife of Zacharias the Priest.

Aug. contra Faust. Man. l. 23. c. 3. 4.

Luke 1. 36.

Sol. To

To this divers men doe diverſly anſwer; for Origen thinketh that they were Coſens, not in reſpect of Tribe, but in reſpect of Nation, as Saint Paul calleth all the Iewes his Kinſemen, according to the Fleſh; but then Elizabeth had beene her Coſen none otherwiſe then all the reſt of the Iewiſh Women; Theophylact thinketh they are ſaid to be Coſens, becauſe Aaron married the Daughter of Aminadab, of the Tribe of Iudah; but then it may be ſaid, That this is farre fetcht, and therefore might be (eone forgotten, too ancient a kindred, to make any great reckoning of it; Saint Auguſtine thinkes, that ſome Woman of the Tribe of Levi, was married unto ſome one of Chriſts progenitors, of the Tribe of Iuda, that ſo Chriſt might deſcend both of the Prieſtly and the Kingly ſtocke: But the truth is, that Elizabeth was of the Tribe of Iuda, and was married unto Zacharias the Prieſt; for though it was forbidden to all the other Tribes, to match with any that were not of their owne Tribe, yet was it lawfull for the Prieſts to take Wives out of any Tribe: and therefore Aaron, married Elizabeth, the Daughter of Aminadab, of the Tribe of Iuda; and Iehoida the Prieſt married the Daughter of King Ioram and ſiſter unto Amaſia King of Iuda.

Theoph in 1 Luc. Exod. 6.

Aug q. 49. ſup. Iudic.

That Elizabeth the wife of Zacharias, was of the Tribe of Iuda.

2 Chron. 22. 11.

That the bleſſed Virgin Mary was of the Tribe of Iuda.

Or howſoever, let Elizabeth be of what Tribe you will, yet it is moſt manifeſt, that Mary was of the Tribe of Iuda; for as Saint Matthew ſetteth downe the Pedigree of Ioſeph, ſo Saint Luke ſetteth downe the Pedigree of Mary; to ſhew unto us, that both Ioſeph and Mary were lineally deſcended of the Tribe of Iuda; for Hely, whoſe Sonne Ioſeph is ſaid to be by Saint Luke, (becauſe it was the manner of the Iewes, to continue their Genealogies in the Male kinde) was the naturall Father of Mary, and but Father in Law to Ioſeph; even as Naomi called Ruth her Daughter, being but her Daughter in Law; for Saint Matthew ſaith plainely, that Ioſephs owne naturall Father was Iacob, and not Heli: And therefore Hely was the naturall Father of Mary, as both Damaſcen and Affricanus teſtifie; and he was alſo called Ioachim, as Saint Hierome witneſſeth: And therefore it is moſt apparant, that for his Family, he deſcended lineally from Iuda, and from the ſeede of David.

Heli the naturall Father of Mary.

Damaſ. l. 4. c. 15. Affricanus apud Euſebium.

Queſt. But then againe it may be demanded, how he came of David, whether of Salomon or of Nathan, both Sonnes of David.

Sol. I anſwer, that Saint Matthew ſetteth downe the legall deſcent of Chriſt from Salomon, becauſe he ſucceeded him in the ſpirituall right of the Kingdome, he being the true King of the Iewes; and therefore he reckoneth fourteene Kings in his Pedegree, and he omitteth three, that is, Ahazia, Ioas, and Amaſia; either becauſe they were wicked Kings, and repented not of their abhominations, (as ſome of the other wicked Kings had done, And therefore as their names were odious in the Booke of God, and it may be blotted out of the Booke of Life; ſo were they not worthy to be once mentioned among the Auncеſtors of Chriſt;) or elſe he omitteth them, becauſe he would bring his Pedigree to three foureteene generations: But Saint Luke ſetteth downe the naturall deſcent of Chriſt, and ſo he came from Nathan, not him that was a Prieſt and a Prophet, as both Saint Ambroſe and Beda thinke, (for then he could not come from David, and it is certaine that he came from Iuda, and not from Levi) but of that Nathan, which was the Sonne of David, and brother unto Salomon, not onely by his Fathers ſide, but alſo by his Mothers ſide, as both Damaſcen and Paraus thinke; And yet Origen and Euſebius thinke, hee came of Salomon, becauſe in Saint Matthew the words, He begat, are ſtill repeated, which are not ſo in Saint Luke; but to this wee anſwer, that this reaſon is not ſufficient; becauſe Saint Matthew ſaith, Iechonias begat Salathiel, where indeed Iechonias died without iſſue, as we may ſee in Ieremy, the 22. 30. and Salathiel was the naturall ſonne of Neri, (as Saint Luke plainely affirmeth;) and therefore the meaning of the Evangeliſt, in ſaying, that Iechonias begat Salathiel, is no more, but to ſhew unto us, that Iechonias, dying without heire, appointed Salathiel according to the Law, to ſucceede him, and to be his lawfull heire: And therefore, ſeeing all the poſterity of Salomon ended in Iechonias, whoſe right then paſſed unto Salathiel, which lineally deſcended

That Chriſt came not of Salomon, but of Nathan the Sonne of David.

Three Kings omitted in Chriſt his pedegree, and why?

Chriſt naturall deſcent ſet downe by S. Luke.

Ambroſ. in Luc. Beda in Luc. Damaſc. l. 4. c. 15. Paraus in Rom.

Ier. 22. 30.

Salomons race ended.

descended of Nathan, it is apparent that our Saviour Christ came of the seed of David by Nathan, and not by Salomon.

And this teacheth us, that if our children forsake Gods Law, and walke not in his ordinance, he will visit their offences with the rod, and their sinnes with scourges; yea, be they as wise as Salomon, be they as noble and heroick as were all the Kings of the posterity of Salomon, be they as deare unto God, as the signet upon his right hand; yet if they forsake his lawes, he will cut them off; he told David this before, that though he loved him never so deare, yet would he deale with his children, as they would behave themselves in his wayes; but they would not be warned; Salomon first offended, and all the Kings of Iuda, excepting Ezechias and Iosias, followed after, and were defective; and therefore they were cut off, and their right passed unto Salathiel the Son of Neri, as I have shewed unto you before.

Psal. 89. 32.

To serve God is the only way to perpetuate our posterity.

And therefore, if we would continue in Gods favour, let us go on in Gods service; for he shall establish his posterity for ever, that establisheth the same in the feare of God; the seed of David shall never fail, because he feared God; the seed of Salomon shall be finished; because he hath offended God: and therefore it is neither wisdome, nor power, nor wealth, nor any thing els, but onely the feare of God, that perpetuateth both our selves, and our posterities; blessed are all they that feare him.

And so much for the family from whence Christ descended.

Chap. II.

Of the time when our Saviour Christ was borne, and of the place and manner of his birth.

Secondly, for his nativity whereby he was brought forth and manifested unto the world, we must consider these three especiall points.

2 The nativity of Christ.

1 The time
2 The place. } of his birth. And
3 The manner

Three things considerable.

First, for the time, when this Word was made flesh, S. Paul saith it was in the fulnesse of time; for there be three things which measure all durations; First, Eternity; Secondly, Mortality; Thirdly, Time.

1 The time, Gal. 1. 4. That there be three things that measure all durations.

The first is proper to God, which wanteth beginning and ending.

The second is proper to soules and spirits, which have beginning, but shall never have ending.

The third is proper to all compound bodies, which as they had beginning, so they shall have ending; Quia omnia orta occidunt, & omnia aucta senescunt; because all raised or created things shall fall, and whatsoever increaseth waxeth old.

After the first sense, the Word was never made in any time, but is the Father of all times, and before all times.

After the second sense, the soule of Christ was made in time, but to continue ever immortall for all times; And

After the third sense, the body of Christ was likewise made in time, and to continue here but for a time in respect of his mortall condition, before it was invested with the indowments of immortality.

How Christ was made in time.

And so both body and soule of Christ were made in time to subsist in the person of him that made all times; and that time wherein he was made thus to subsist, was in the fulnesse of time, saith the Apostle; for as places, so times have their fulnesse and their emptinesse; some places are empty, having nothing in them, but onely ayre, and some are full of gold, and pearles, and precious things; even so we find in histories that some times are void of strange accidents, and some times are full of admirable occurrents; and in such a time was the Word made flesh the Sonne of God made man; for now the time was full of peace, full of plenty,

How time hath his fulnesse.

and full of wickednesse; the divell had broken loose, and had possest the minds of most, and the bodies of many men, more than ever before, or ever since, as some imagine, by reason of those multitudes that they read of, to be really possessed with divels in our Saviours time: and therefore being so full of all unrighteousnesse, he that was the fulnesse of grace came, to root out the evill weeds of our sinnes, and out of his fulnesse, to offer us grace for grace; for

Rom. 3. 9.

Iohn 1. 16.

Three quære's.
1 Why Christ came not before the fall.
2 Why Christ stayed so long before he came.

First, he would not come before Adam fell; because that had been superfluous, to seek the sheep before the sheep were lost.

Secondly, he would not come presently after; because thereby he would shew the greater love to mankind; for though in some cases it be true, that Gratia ab officio quod mora tardat abest.

Delayed kindnesse loseth halfe his goodnesse; yet herein, the long tarrying of Christ, before he came to be incarnate, was a manifest signe of his greater goodnesse towards us, for these three speciall causes.

1 Reason.

First, that by the Law of nature, and by the written Law of God, man might be convinced, and see his own sins, and so be the more moved to seeke his Saviour.

2 Reason.

Secondly, that he tarrying for a while, might be the more earnestly desired, and make him, being obtained, to become the more acceptable unto us; Quia diu desiderata dulcius obtinentur, because that things long desired, are more sweet, when they are obtained, as S. Augustine speaketh.

3 Reason.

Thirdly, that due preparation might be made, by the Patriarchs and Prophets, before his comming, and the people made by them apt and ready to receive him, and to imbrace his comming, that so his comming might be the more profitable unto them; for they were sent to prepare and to make straight the way of the Lord: and therefore, as his tarrying now from comming to judgement, is an exceeding great argument of his goodnesse; because he doth it to see, if his long patience will lead us to repentance; so his long tarrying then, was a sure signe of his greater love, because he would have us thereby to be fitted to make the better use of his comming; and yet

Mat. 3. 3.

3 Why Christ would not stay any longer than he did.

Thirdly, he would not stay untill the last end of the world, Ne fides & spes de promisso semine nimis tardata perirent; Least staying so long, there should be no hope left to expect him, no faith to believe in him, and no charity to love him, when he should come; for though there was but a little goodnesse then, God knowes,

Ovidius met. l. 1.

Ante dies patrios filius quærebat in annos;

Yet there is a great deale lesse now, when all the world sees that

——Terras Astræa reliquit;

For our Saviour told us, that towards the end of the world, The love of many should waxe cold, and faith should scarce be found upon the face of the whole earth: And therefore seeing that to come in the beginning of the world, had beene too soone, and to tarry till the latter end, had been too late, he came in the fittest time, in the fulnesse of time, to be incarnate and made flesh.

The particular time of the Words incarnation.

And if we search a little further, to know more particularly, what time was this fulnesse of time, we shall find it to be

1 In the sixt Age of the world.
2 In the Raigne of Augustus and Herod.
3 In the tenth Moneth of the yeare.
4 In the shortest Day of the Moneth.
5 In the first Day of the Week.
6 In the first Houre of the Day.

} And

1 In the sixt age of the world. How the world is divided into his severall ages.

First, we must note, that as man, which is μικροκοσμος, the little world; so κοσμος, the great and large universe hath his times and his ages; for Damascen, Lucidus, and others, (as Clithovæus collecteth) do affirme that the worlds age is sevenfold.

First, the infancy of it, from Adam to the floud.

Secondly, the childhood of it, from the flood to Abraham.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, the youth of it, from Abraham to Moses.
Fourthly, the riper and livelier youth, from the Law to David.
Fiftly, the manhood of it, from the Temple of Salomon to the captivity.
Sixtly, the maturity of it, from the Captivity of Babylon unto Christ.
Seventhly, the dotage of it, from Christ unto Iudgement: but S. Augustine, S. Chrysostome, S. Isodore, Bede, Arrias Montanus, and others; though they say the world doth consist of seven ages, yet they doe divide them otherwise, viz.

Aug de civit. Dei. l. 22. c. 30.

1 From Adam unto Noahs Flood.	Containing	1656.	yeares.
2 From Noahs Flood unto Abraham.		293. or, 383.
3 From Abraham unto David.		941.
4 From David to the Captivity.		485 and 6 Moneths.
5 From the Captivity unto Christ.		620.
6 From Christ to the day of judgment.		1635 hitherto; and how many more none can tell, as our Saviour sheweth, Of that day and houre knoweth no man.
7 From the day of Iudgement unto all eternity, for ever and ever.

The division of the worlds age.

And so according to this account, Christ was borne in the yeare of the world, 4085. but according to the LXX. Interpreters account, he was borne in the yeare 5451. and according to our account, he was borne in the yeare 3948. And so I find that in the account of yeares, Alij atq; alij aliud atq; alind opinati sunt; Diverse men have diverse judgements; but in dividing the worlds age into seven parts, I find most agreeing in the same judgement; and in affirming Christ to be borne in the sixt age of the world, the latter end of the same, if we follow Damascens account; or in the beginning of the same, if we follow S. Augustines account; but which soever, it was in the sixt age, that there might be a correspondency betwixt the works of creation and of redemption; Nam sicut primus Adam conditus fuit sexta aetate, ad totius creaturæ perfectionem; because, that as the first Adam was made on the sixt day, to be the complement and perfection of all creatures; so the second Adam was made in the sixt age of the world, to restore all mankind unto their integrity.

1 That Christ was borne in the sixt age of the world, and why?

And this teacheth us, patiently to wait for the comming of Iesus Christ; for if God deferred the first comming of Christ almost 4000 yeares, but did at last fulfill his promise, and came in his appointed time; then we may assure our selves, that he will do the like for his second comming, against all those that say, Where is the promise of his comming?

2 Pet. 3. 4.

Secondly, he was borne in the raigne of Augustus, the two and fortieth yeare of his raigne, as Tertullian and S. Augustine say, and in the one and thirtieth yeare of King Herods raigne, as Beda saith, or the two and thirtieth yeare, as Eusebius saith.

2 In the raigne of Augustus. Why Christ was born in the raigne of Augustus and Herod.

And he was borne in the raigne of Augustus, to shew unto us,

1 Reason.

First, that as Augustus was a temporall Monarch, so Christ should be a spirituall Monarch; for that as the world can no more beare two temporall Monarchs, than the heavens can beare two Suns, when as the Poet saith,

Nulla fides regni sociis, omnisq; potestas
Impatiens consortis erit ——

Lucan. l. 1.

So the Church of Christ can have but one head, or els it should be a monster.

2 Reason.

3 Reason. Esa.9.6.

Mat.11.29. Esa.53.5.

Idumæi verò Iudæi non erant, sed habiti modo appellati, ex qua tempestate eos Hyrcanus religiones ceremonias q; veri numinis suscipere coegit, antea Deum Coelum coluerunt.
Chrys in Mat hom 6.
Leo hom 3. in Epiph.
Ioseph. antiq. l. 14 c. 26.
Philo de part. temp. Pet. Cunæus. l. 1. de Repub. Heb. c. 16. p. 150.

Secondly, that as Augustus was the second Emperour; so Christ was the second person of the Trinity.

Thirdly, that being borne, when all the world was at peace, and yet taxed, we might hereby see, that although Christ was the Prince of peace, that immaculate Lamb, which was meeke and lowly in heart, yet he should be taxed for our sinnes, and burdened for our transgressions.

And he was borne in the raigne of Herod, that is, Herod the great, which was an Idumæan; to distinguish him from Herod Antipa, and Herod Agrippa, whereof

Ascolanita necat pueros, Antipa Iohannem,
Agrippa Iacobum, mittitq; in carcere Petrum.

This first killed the children, the second John Baptist, and the third Iames the brother of the Lord; to shew unto us, as both S. Chrysostome and Pope Leo do observe, that this is that Shilo, which was for to come; because a Prince (as S. Hierom reads it) or the Scepter should not depart from Iuda untill Shilo came; For though this is not to be understood, as diverse men do think, that the regall government should not depart from the tribe of Iuda, untill the Messias should be borne, though the name of Kings should be taken from them; because, as Cunæus well observeth, we find that after the restauration of the Temple, Pontificis rebus gerendis præfuerunt, nullo principis aut regis nomine assumpto; apud hos omnis gratia, potentia, divitiæ erant; cæteri vulgus erant sine honore, sine autoritate; The Priests ruled all, and had all honour and power among themselves; and after the death of Eliasib, his wicked sonnes Iesus and Iannes, and then Manasses, and he that was worse than all, Onias, did rule the people, untill Matthias Hasmonæus, did restore that government unto a better forme; yet the meaning of the Holy Ghost in that prophesie is, that the administration of the government of this people, under what head soever, Prince or King, good or bad, of the tribe of Levi, or of the tribe of Iuda, should not depart from Iuda, (as indeed it did not, while the Sanhedrim had the judgement of the state) untill Shilo came; but now Herod, Patre Idumes & matre ortus Arabica, being an Idumean, having got the Scepter from Iuda, and the Crowne from Antigonus, by Augustus his meanes, and having, in the thirtieth yeare of his tyrannicall rule, destroyed all the Sanhedrim, that is, the Eldership of seventy Iudges of the house of David, which determined all causes among the people, and is indeed the chiefest part of the government of any state: it must needs be that the Messias must be borne.

3 In the tenth moneth. Why Christ was borne in December.

Thirdly, he was borne in December, the tenth moneth of the yeare, to shew that he came to make satisfaction for the 10 commandements, and to shew, that as 10 consists of the figure 1. and the cypher 0. so his person did consist of the figure of his Deity, and the cypher of our humanity, as some Divines have observed.

4 In the shortest day. Three things observable in this day of Christs nativity.

Fourthly, he was borne in the shortest day of this moneth, which was then the five & twentieth day in the Winter Solstice, in which day three things are observable; First, the cold is greatest; Secondly, the Sun is lowest; And thirdly, thenceforward the dayes begin to increase; So Christ was borne Conceptus est in æquinoctio veruo, natus in solstitio hyberno; & in conceptione eius, & in nativitate dies accepit incrementum, & nascente vera lucis & dei augmentatur officium Aug de temp ser. 22. Amb Serm. 2. de nativit.

Iohn 3.30. Mat.11.13.

First, in the coldest day, to teach us not to pamper up our untamed flesh.

Secondly, he was borne when the Sun was lowest, to teach us humilitie. And

Thirdly, as when the day is shortest, the Sun is in his Tropicke, so called of τρέπω, to turne; because now it turneth towards us, and so increaseth the length of our dayes more and more, and ascendeth up into the heavens higher and higher; so from the day of Christs nativity, the favour of God is turned to us, our comforts are increased, and the Kingdome of heaven is inlarged; for as John Baptist saith, I must decrease, and he must increase; so we find that after the birth of John Baptist, which was in the longest day, as the Sun descended, so the observation of the Ceremoniall and Iudiciall Lawes decreased; for the Law and the Prophets continued untill Iohn; but after the birth of Christ, which was in the shortest day, day, as the Sun thence ascended, so the kingdome of heaven increased more and more.

Fiftly, he was borne upon the first day of the Weeke, that is, upon the Sunday, as Rupertus, Antoninus, Bonaventure, Petrus de Natalibus, S. Augustine, and others do affirme; Ut quo die dixerat fiat lux, & facta est, ejusdem diei nocte oriretur in tenebris lumen rectis corde, retinens ordinem mirabilium suorum; that upon the same day, as he said, Let there be light, and it was so, there should spring up light for them that are true of heart; and therefore S. Augustine saith, that this day was ever venerable; because that on this day, God the Father began to create the world; on this day, God the Sonne began to redeeme the world; on this day God the Holy Ghost began to sanctifie the world, when he appeared on the Apostles, like cloven tongues of fire; on this day, God made the light; on this day was the true light produced, that lighteneth every one that commeth into the world; on this day, the children of Israel came out of Egypt; on this day, Christ came out of his grave; and like enough, that on this day, Christ will come to give us an everlasting rest: and therefore we should alwaies sanctifie this day, above all the dayes of the yeare, that when he commeth, he may not find us singing in the Tavernes, but serving him in his Church.

5 First day of the weeke. That Christ was born upon the first day of the week, which is our Sabbath.

The excellency of the Sabbath.

Acts 2.3.

I ohn 1.9.

Sixtly, Tertullian, and S. Augustine say, that he was borne in the night-time, in the time of darkenesse; because he came to dissolve the works of darkenesse; and to prove this, they alledge, not onely what S. Luke saith, that the shepheards watched at night, when the Angell came unto them, and told them, that Christ was borne, but also the saying of David, where he saith, Ante Luciferum genui te; Before the morning I have begotten thee: And Cardanus that great Astronomer, commenting upon Ptolomies Quadripartite, and there treating of Christs Nativity, he makes the 11. degree of Virgo, to ascend in the 1. house about 10. of the clock and 15. minuts; and therefore he affirmeth Christ was then, and at that very houre to be borne; and not unlikely, that the Sonne of a Virgin should be then born, when the heavenly figure Virgo did ascend.

6 In the first houre of the day. Tertul. l. 5. c. 9. contra Marc. Luke 2.8.

But I think rather with S. Hierom and S. Bernard, that he was borne about midnight, or presently after; because it is said, that while all things were in quiet silence, and the night was in the midst of her swift course, thine almighty Word leapt downe from heaven out of his royall throne; and no marvell, that the greatest light should be produced in the time of greatest obscurity, and that he should come in medio noctis, about mid-night, which came to be the medium and Mediatour betwixt God and man; and as this place of wisdome sheweth, that he was borne about mid-night; so it may be collected (as I take it) out of S. Luke, that it was rather presently after, than either at that very instant, or at any time before; for the Angell said unto the Shepheards, This day is borne unto you a Saviour, which you must understand of the day artificiall, which beginneth presently after mid-night, and not of the day naturall, which beginneth with the light, and so he may be said to be borne that day, though it should be but the first houre after mid-night: And so you see that, as the Poet saith,

That Christ was borne presently after mid night. Sap. 18.14.

Luke 2.11.

The light which shines in darkenesse comes by night,
All those that sit in darkenesse to inlight.

Ioh. 1.5.

And this should teach us, that our spirituall birth should begin betimes; for you see Christ was borne betimes, the first houre of the day; and he rose out of his grave betimes, before the morning watch; and all to teach us to serve God betimes, and as Salomon saith, To remember our Creatour in the dayes of our youth, and not to put it off while to morrow, but to say with S. Augustine, Quamdiu cras, quare non modo finis turpitudinis mea? How long shall I say to morrow; and why should I not now forsake my filthinesse? For, as the Poet saith in another case, it is most true in this,

Our spirituall birth to begin betimes. Eccl 12.1.

Aug. in Confess.

Qui non est hodiè cras minùs aptus erit.
He that is not fit to day,
Shall have to morrow a harder way; that is, to repent.

Fitz Geffry p.39.

And if with the Poet you demand any other reason,
Why should the truth, that never shuns the light,
Come like a theefe in darkenesse of the night?
I answer, with the same Poet, to very good purpose;
To make both commings, first and last t'agree,
That they (who him expect) should watchfull be.

2 The place of Christ his birth. Mich.5.2.

Mat.2.6.

Of the place where Christ was borne.

Secondly, For the place where the Messias should be borne, the Prophet saith, Thou Bethlehem Ephrata, art little among the thousands of Iuda, out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that shall rule my people Israel; But Saint Matthew saith, And thou Bethlehem in the Land of Iuda, art not the least among the Princes of Iuda; for out of thee shall come a Governour, which shall rule my people Israel; Wherein we see they speake almost cleane contrary; for Micah saith, Thou art little among the thousands of Iuda, as if he said, Thou art but a little poore Village, the least among thousands; and Saint Matthew saith, Thou art not the least among the Princes of Iuda, As if he said, Thou art a great Princely Towne, the chiefest among thousands; for when we say a thing is not the least, we meane that it is in the number of the greatest, and the greatest account, at least none of the meanest ranke.

Iosh.a 15.

How the Prophet Micah, and Saint Matthew are to be reconciled.

But to reconcile these places, I say, that Micah speakes of it, as it was indeed, a little, poore, and ignoble Village, so meane, that it is not reckoned in the number of those Cities, that fell by Lot unto the Tribe of Iuda, but Saint Matthew speakes this, either as a true Historiographer, relating not the saying of the Prophet, but the saying of the Scribes unto Herod, or else as it was in reputation, not so much for the excellency of it selfe, as in this respect, that Christ the Saviour, refusing thousand greater Townes, should choose this to be borne in, and so make this little, yea, the least, not the least blessed City.

Why Christ chose to bee borne in Bethlehē.

And so you see the place, that Christ was to be borne in, was a poore and a meane scattering Village; it is like, it had not many Houses, or they did not use halfe so much tipling as we doe; for we reade but of one Inne that was in all the Towne; and yet in this Towne did Christ choose to be borne; And that for three reasons.

1 Reason.
2 Reason.
1 Cor.8,9.

First, In respect of the prediction that Christ should be borne in it.

Secondly, In respect of the present condition, a poore place, fittest for him that made himselfe poore for us.

3 Reason. Greg.hom.8.in Evang. Chrysost. hom.1. ex varijs in Mat.

Thirdly, In respect of the mysticall signification; for Bethlehem (saith Saint Gregory) signifies the House of Bread; and therefore he, which is The true bread of Life, was rightly to be borne in Bethlehem, as Saint Chrysostome saith: And this sheweth the difference betwixt Gods dealing, and the World; for we aime at the bravest things, he at the meanest; and he chooseth the foolish things of this World, to confound the wise; and the weake things, to confound things that are mighty; and base things, and things that are despised, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence.

1 Cor.1.27,28,29

Aug. de concord. Evang.

Now the meanes how he came to be borne in Bethlehem, Saint Augustine observeth, how Saint Matthew omitteth, but that Saint Luke declareth the same; for Augustus would have all men to goe into their owne Cities, to be taxed; and therefore Ioseph and Mary went to Bethlehem, and while they were there, Mary was delivered.

The providence of God.

Aug in Enchirid. c.101.

From whence we may see, the most admirable providence of Almighty God, who as in the great worke of Creation, made the Light out of darkenesse, so in the wonderfull workes of gubernation, he can fullfill his owne will, being good, by the wils of wicked men, that are not good; for Augustus thought on nothing lesse, then to have Christ borne at Bethlehem, when he sent every one to their owne Cities; But behold how God disposeth of this Edict for the fulfilling of his promise; so God bringeth many things to passe, through unknowne waies; and there is nothing happeneth, but through his providence; we perceive it not,

Of the admirable providence of Almighty God.

while

while things are in doing, but we ſhall plainely ſee it, when they are done; and therefore we ſhould ever pray unto God, that he would guide, and direct all our actions to his glory, and to our comfort; and then no doubt, but as this long and tedious journey of Mary, did redound to her exceeding joy, ſo thoſe things, which for the preſent ſeeme harſh and bitter unto us, will in the end prove to our great advantage.

3 Of the manner of Chriſts birth, how meane it was in many reſpects.

Thirdly, For the manner of Chriſt his birth, it is recorded, that it was very poore, and meane; meaner then ordinary, or extraordinary baſe; for hee was borne of poore Parents, they travelled on foote, they had not an Aſſe to ride on, in a poore Towne, little Bethlehem, which is by interpretation, An Houſe of Bread, but ſuch a poore Houſe of Bread, that there was ſcarce any bread in the Houſe; And then being come from darkeneſſe into light, Non poterat Verbum fari verbum, This Word could not ſpeake a word, but he was wrapped in poore ſwadling clouts, it may be his Mothers ragges; and then hee was laid in a poore lodging, even in the Manger; and ſo he was indeed made lower then the Angels, for he was conſorted, and laid among the Beaſts that periſh; Quia non erat locus in diverſorio, Becauſe there was no roome in the Inne, for theſe poore innocent people, among the drunken ſwaggering companions; for theſe will be ſure to have roome, Et pauper ubiq; jacet, And the poore ſhall be thruſt out of doores;

Vncivill Cittizens and people vilde,
Thus to exclude a woman great with childe,
So neere her time I had you humanity,
You would have ſhew'd to ſuch more courteſie:
You would for ſuch a one have found a place,
Thinking it might have beene your mothers caſe.

Why Chriſt would be borne ſo meanely. 1 Reaſon. Pſal. 22. 6.

And yet Chriſt was well contented, hee deſired no better, but choſe indeed to come after this meaneſt manner.

Firſt, to fulfill the Scriptures; for the Prophet David ſaid in the perſon of Chriſt, I am a worme, and no man, a very ſcorne of men, and the outcaſt of the people; And the Prophet Eſay ſaith, Hee ſhould grow up as a roote out of a dry ground, that is, wrinckled and almoſt withered for want of radicall moyſture, He hath neither forme nor comelineſſe, and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty, that we ſhould deſire him; he is deſpiſed and rejected of men.

Eſay 53. 2. 3.

2 Reaſon.

Secondly, To teach us true humility, Deſcendit quo inferius non decuit, ut aſcenderet quo ſuperius non poterat; For he made himſelfe of no reputation, that hee might be exalted, and have a name given him above all other names; to ſhew unto us, that Whoſoever humbleth himſelfe, ſhall be exalted.

Phil. 2. 9.

Luke 18. 14.

3 Reaſon.

Thirdly, To condemne the courſes and deſires of worldly men; for they deſire nothing ſo much as wealth, honours, and promotions; and yet all the Monarchs of this world, with all their pompand power, with all their riches & greatneſſe, cannot reconcile one ſoule to God, They muſt let that alone for ever: But Chriſt, poore, ſtript, and naked, hath ſo pleaſed God, that through him God cannot be diſpleaſed with us; for it is goodneſſe and not greatneſſe, to be void of ſin, and not to be full of riches, that our God reſpecteth.

4 Reaſon. 2 Cor. 8. 9.

Fourthly, To procure true riches unto us; for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that Chriſt, though he was rich, yet for our ſake, he became poore, that we through his poverty, might be made rich.

5 Reaſon. Mat. 16. 27.

Fiftly, To ſhew the difference betwixt his firſt and his ſecond comming; for now he came in poverty, but then he ſhall come in majeſty; He ſhall come in the glory of his Father with his Angels; The Earth ſhall burne, the Heavens ſhall melt, and all the powers of the ſame ſhall bee ſhaken: And therefore ſeeing (as Emyſſenus ſaith) Talis & tantus ſit horror venientis, quis poterit terrorem ſuſtinere judicantis? That comming of his ſhall be ſo terrible, as that all the wicked crue of damned ſort ſhall exceedingly howle and cry, and pray the mountaine to fall upon them, and to hide them from that fearefull day, let us make the right uſe of this his firſt comming, that wee may eſcape the terrour of his ſecond comming: And ſo you ſee the manner of his birth, weakely, poorely, and meanely.

That we ſhould be well contented with any ſtate

And this ſhould teach us, to be ever contented with our poore and meane eſtate; for if the Sonne of God, who made all things, and whoſe all things are, All the Cattle upon a thouſand hills, was well contented, and made choice of this low eſtate; why ſhould we be diſcontented with the ſame? for wee are unworthy of the very Bread we eate, and of the very Light of Heaven, wherewith we are illuminated; we are very baſe, and miſerable beggars, begging of God the very crummes that we eate, ſaying, Give us this day our daily bread; and yet ſuch is our pride, and haughtineſſe, that we are ready to ſnatch it out of his hands, and not to ſtay while he gives it us; Such is our diſdaine and diſcontenteaneſſe, that the daintieſt fare will ſcarce pleaſe us, and ſuch is our deſire and ambition, that every man ſtill eryeth with the Daughters of the Horſe-leech, More, more; Our eyes are never ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor our eares with hearing, nor our hearts with enjoying the vanities of this World.

Mat.6.11.

Wiſd.1.11.

But alas Beloved, Beware of murmuring, which is nothing worth, and let the ſame minde be in you herein as was in Chriſt Ieſus; If you would be happy, remember how he came, poore and meane; remember how he lived, meane and miſerable; for He had not an Houſe wherein to put his head; We have more then that; and remember how he was entertained, cold and comfortleſſe; for Hee came amongſt his owne, and his owne received him not: And therefore ſeeing hee found ſuch cold entertainement in the world, why ſhould we looke for any better, or be any waies diſcontented at the like? for The Servant is not above his Maſter; but it is enough for the ſervant to be as his Maſter is.

Phil.2.5. Mat.8.20.

Mat.10.24,25.

CHAP. III.

Of the teſtimonies which prove that Chriſt the Meſſias is borne.

3 The teſtimony of Chriſt his birth The witneſſes that teſtifie the comming of the Meſſias twofold.

THirdly, For the teſtimony and witneſſe whereby he was approved, and confirmed unto the world, to be incarnate, and made Fleſh, for to be the Saviour and Redeemer of the World, I finde the ſame eſpecially to be twofold.

That is, { 1. The Creatures. 2. The Creator. } And

1 Of the creature threefold.

Firſt, The teſtimony of the Creature is threefold.

Videlicet { 1. The Angels of Heaven. 2. The Starre in the Skie. 3. Men on Earth. } For 1 Angels. Luke 2.11.

Eſay 6.2. Revel.4.

Firſt, An Angell ſaid unto the Shepheards, Vnto you is borne this day in the City of David, a Saviour, which is, Chriſt the Lord; And immediately there were not ſixe Cherubims (as Eſayas ſaw) nor foure and twenty Elders, (as Saint Iohn ſaw) but a multitude of heavenly Angels, that by their heavenly Halelu-jah did confirme the ſame, and ſo,

That Goſpell by an Angell firſt was brought
To man, which now by men to men is taught.

Iſidorus.l.1 c.12.de ſummo bono.

And therefore the truth hereof is infallible; becauſe the Angels though they be mutable by nature, yet they be now confirmed by grace, Ne à veritate voluntatem averterent, That they cannot lye, nor fall away from truth, as Iſidorus ſaith.

2 A Starre. Numbs.24.17.

Secondly, The gentile Prophet Balaam, propheſied, that there ſhould come a Starre of Iacob; And Zoroaſtres King of the Bactrians, a man excellent in all learning, (as Iuſtin ſaith) left this as a tradition among the Gentiles, and afterwards

Iuſtin.lib.1.

wards it was more plainely publiſhed by the Sybils, that a Day-ſtarre ſhould appeare, before the ariſing of the Sonne of Righteouſneſſe; And this was freſh among the Gentiles, untill the very comming of Chriſt; for Virgil (though miſapplying the ſame) ſaith, Ecce Dionæi præceſſit Cæſaris aſtrum.

Rightly applyed thus, That the glorious Starre long expected, ſhould precede and fore-ſhew the comming of the Saviour.

Quicunq; Chriſti quæritis, oculos ad alta tollite; illic iacebit viſere fontem parentis gloriæ Prudent. ſ. adnotat. Epiphan.

Yet Fulgentius ſaith, That Puer natus novam ſtellam fabricavit; Chriſt being borne, did of nothing frame this new Starre; And ſo indeed it is called, His Starre; his Starre, becauſe he made it, and his Starre, becauſe it bare witneſſe of him; for the Magi, the Wiſemen, being upon the Mountaine Victorialis, worſhipping their God, (as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith) a Starre did appeare unto them, in the likeneſſe of a little Childe, and ſo ſhewed unto them and to all others, that this Childe and the Sonne of God was borne, and as the Poet ſaith, Fulgent. ſal. 637. in Octavo. Ser. de Epiphan.

This Starre ſtill ſhining through the heavens doth glide,
And to the Sunne, which never ſets, doth guide.

Chryſoſt. hom. 2. op. imperf. in Matthæ. 2.

Thirdly, Men, both Iewes and Gentiles, did beare witneſſe unto his birth.

3 Men.

First, The Iewes, becauſe he was chiefly ſent unto the loſt ſheepe of the Houſe of Iſrael; Therefore immediately after his birth, the Angell told the Shepheards, that Chriſt was borne: And the Shepheards when they had ſeene him, that they might be ſure of the truth thereof, did make knowne abroad, the ſaying that was told them concerning that Childe.

1 Iewes. Mat. 15. 24.

Luke 2. 17.

And here one thing is very obſervable, that the Angels made choice of Shepheards, to be the firſt partakers of this bleſſed newes, and the firſt proclaimers of our Saviours birth, That the great Clearkes and Schollars of the Iewes, the Scribes and Phariſees, that knew beſt how Chriſt ſhould come, and where Chriſt ſhould be borne, ſhould notwithſtanding be utterly diſcarded, and theſe Heardsmen ſhould be ſo graciouſly admitted, to ſee that, which ſo many Wiſemen and Prophets deſired to ſee, and have not ſeene.

Why the birth of Chriſt was firſt revealed to the Shepheards.

Mat. 13. 17.

To teach us, how much God favoureth holy & modeſt ſimplicity, and diſalloweth impious and ſcrupulous ſubtilty; Theſe Shepheards that followed their vocation, and kept their Sheepe, did firſt finde that good Shepheard, that gives his life for his Sheepe; becauſe as the wooll, that hath received the die and tincture of no colour, is beſt capable of any colour; ſo theſe Shepheards, that were never before indued with any kinde of humane wiſdome, were the fitter Subjects to be inlightned with this divine knowledge; And thoſe great Doctors of the Law were excluded from theſe tydings of the Goſpell; becauſe inſolent preſumption of our own knowledge is that indeede, which depraveth our affections, and depriveth our ſoules from ſaving grace.

Secondly, The Gentiles were called to be witneſſes of the birth of this Childe; for the Starre appearing unto the Magi, did caſt forth three eſpeciall beames, whereby the Wiſemen did perceive that Childe, which was borne, to be

2 The Gentiles. That the Magi beleeved this Childe to be
1 A Man.
2 A King.
3 A God.

First, A Man; ſecondly, ſuch a man that was to be a King; and thirdly, ſuch a King, as ſhould be both God and Man: And therefore they addreſſed themſelves, both in their ſpeech and actions, to teſtifie as much; for

First, In their ſpeech unto Herod, they ſay, Where is he that is borne? to ſhew that he was a man; King of the Iewes, to ſhew that he was a King; for We have ſeene his Starre, and are come to worſhip him; to ſhew that he was a God.

Secondly, In their actions, they ſhew the very ſame; for as Iuvencus ſaith aurum, thus, myrrham, regiq; hominiq; deoq; dona ferunt, they offered unto him Myrrhe, Gold and Franckinſcence.

Baſil in ſermone de hum Chriſti generat. f. 138.

First, Myrrhe, to ſhew that he was mortall; becauſe they uſed to put Myrrhe to the bodies of the dead.

Secondly, Gold, to ſhew that he was a King, that ſhould have a Crowne of pure Gold to be put upon his head.

Thirdly, Franckinſcence, to ſhew that he was a God, Quia thus ad honorem divinum

Chryſ. ſt hom 6. in c. 2. Matthew.

divinum concrematur; Becauſe Franckinſence was uſed to be burned in honour of God, as the Poet ſaith,

Et capitur minimo thuris honore Deus.

That the Magi beleeved Chriſt to be a God.

And this is moſt manifeſtly ſhewed, that they beleeved him to be a God, by all the particulars of their actions; For 1 Reaſon. Ammon. Alex in hæres. Niceph. l. c. 13. Cyprian ſer. de Baptiſ. Chryſ. hom. 6. in 2. Matth.

First, Though Ammonius Alexandrinus and Nicephorus think, that the Starre appeared two yeares before Chriſt his birth, that ſo they might make preparation for ſo long a journey; becauſe theſe Magi were Kings themſelves, as S. Cyprian delivereth it from the tradition of the Church, and Saint Chryſoſtome ſeemeth to conſent, and Boſquierus laboureth to confirme it; yet I think rather with Saint Auguſtine, that theſe three Wiſemen, Iter unius anni in tredecim diebus peregerunt, Did performe that journey, which was enough for a whole yeare, in thirteene dayes; becauſe (as Remigius ſaith) Puer ad quem properauerunt, potuit eos in tam brevi temporis ſpatio ad ſe adducere; That child unto whom they haſtened, might helpe and further them forward to come unto himſelfe, in ſo ſhort a ſpace: and therefore this their diligence and ſpeedy haſt to come to Chriſt doth ſufficiently ſhew that they beleeved this new borne Babe, to be the true and eternall God.

What haſte the Magi made to come to Chriſt.

2 Reaſon. Chryſoſt. quo ſupra.

Secondly, Their behaviour being come, doth in a farre plainer manner ſhew, that puerum quem viderunt hominem, agnoverunt Redemptorem; the childe which they ſaw to be a man, they did acknowledge to be their God; for though they ſaw him dandled in the lap of his poore Mother, wrapped about with ſilly clouts, and having not the leaſt ſigne of any humane Kingly dignity, yet they did homage unto him, as unto the King of Kings; For

In gremio pauperis matris poſitum, & pannis uilibus involutum & nullũ regiæ dignitatis humanæ ſignum habentem.

First, They fell downe, to ſhew their Humility.

Secondly, They worſhipped him, to ſhew their Faith.

Thirdly, They offered their gifts, to ſhew their Charity.

Fulgentius ſer. de Epiphania.

Quid? adorant regem nuper natum, &c. And what is this, that they adore this child newly borne, and ſucking on his Mothers Breaſts, and would not adore that King, which had beene long ordained, and was moſt glorioufly raigning on his Kingly throne? what is the cauſe of this? Ille natus in pallatio contemnitur, iſte natus in diverſorio quæritur; That he which was borne in the Pallace ſhould bee contemned, and he which lay in the Manger ſhould be adored?

Saint Chriſoſtome, Maximus, Leo, Fulgentius, and all, do all agree it was, becauſe the Wiſemen knew, that he Quem dixerunt regem Iudæorum erat Creator Angelorum, & quem viderunt parvum in præſepio, erat immenſus in cœlo; Whom they had called King of the Iewes, was the Lord and Maker of the Angels, and whom they ſaw little and poore in the cratch, was rich & immeaſurable in Heaven.

Thom. in hymn.

Quod non capis, quod non vides,
Animoſa firmat fides,
Præter rerum ordinem.

Their faith did ſhew them that he was their God.

And ſo that Starre, which ſent forth theſe three fore-named beames of light into the hearts of theſe Wiſe men, did ſend from thence by reflection, three other beames of light, for our inſtruction; for here we ſee this Starre wrought in them,

What effects the Starre wrought in the Wiſemen.

First, Illumination and Faith in their hearts; for when they ſaw him, they beleeved in him.

Secondly, Confeſſion and Inquiſition in their Mouthes; for when they loſt him, they made diligent ſearch and inquiſition after him, ſaying, Where is hee that is borne King of the Iewes.

Deut. 6. 16.

Thirdly, Diligence and Obedience in their Actions, for they made haſt to goe unto him, and when they came, they came not empty-handed, but they brought unto him, Gold, Franckinſence and Myrrhe.

Aurea naſcenti fuderunt munera regi,
Thura dedere Deo, myrrham tribuere ſepulchro;

And ſo herein theſe Wiſemen were wiſe indeed; not becauſe they had all the wiſedome of the Gentiles, but becauſe they did thus ſeeke and find him, In whom are are hid all the treasures of wisedome and knowledge: Oh that it were so with us, that we did know him, beleeve in him, goe unto him, search and seeke him, and offer him our selves and ours, to doe him service!

Pro myrrha lachrymas, auro cor porrige purum,
Pro thure ex humili pectore funde preces.

What we should offer unto Christ.

And we shall not neede to fetch gold from Ophire, but the gold of a pure Faith, which will abide the fiery tryall, neither shall we need to goe to the Apothecaries, to buy their Franckinsence or Myrrhe, but the sweet perfume of devout prayers, and the bitter teares of godly sorrow, for our ungodly sins; these are the most acceptable sacrifices unto Christ.

And as the fore-named witnesses, which were primitiæ Martyrum, the first fruits of his witnesses, both of the Iewes and Gentiles, do testifie this truth unto the world; so to these are added, the testimony of Iohn the Baptist; for he was sent to beare witnesse of that light; and he testified and bare witnesse of him, that he was that Lambe of God, which taketh away the sinnes of the world: And because wee should the better beleeve him and his testimony herein, he sheweth how he came to know him to be the true Messias, even by the testimony of the Spirit of truth; for I knew him not (saith he) but he that sent me to baptize with water, that is, the Holy Ghost, said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he, which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost; and I saw (saith he) and bare record that this is the Sonne of God: And then the testimonie of all the Evangelists, the Apostles, the Fathers, the Martyrs and all the holy Men of God, which have testified and sealed this truth unto us, some with their words, some with their workes, and some with their deerest bloud.

Iohn 1.8.

Iohn 1.29.

Iohn 1.33.

Secondly, if these testimonies of the creatures be not sufficient to prove Iesus the Sonne of Mary, to be the Eternall Sonne of God, we finde God himselfe the Creator of Heaven and Earth, testifying the same; for though the testimony of Iohn was sufficient, to satisfie any man, because he was a burning and a shining light, in whom the Iewes themselves were willing to rejoyce for a season, as our Saviour witnesseth; yet Christ needed not to receive testimony from man, because he had a greater witnesse then that of Iohn, even the Father himselfe which sent him, he bare witnesse of him, and with an audible voice he proclaimed the same twice from heaven, saying, first at the River Iordan, and then on Mount Thabor, that he was his Beloved Sonne, in whom he was well pleased: And these are sufficient witnesses, Quia dicta Iehovæ dicta pura; Because the words of the Lord are pure words, as the Psalmist saith; Or if any Atheist will not beleeve these Divine Oracles, let him beleeve his owne eyes; If he will beleeve neither Angels, Men, nor God, let him beleeve himselfe; for the very workes that I doe, testifie of me; for the workes of every man doe testifie of him, what he is; because that is a sure rule of our Saviour, By their fruits you shall know them: But then you must not understand their workes, as they are reported to be, for so we are, and may be many times deceived; for Iohn came neither eating nor drinking, and they said he had a Divell; and, our Saviour came eating and drinking, and they said, behold a Glutton and a Wine-bibber; And the Prophet David saith, They laid to his charge things that hee never knew: So the Christians of the Primitive Church, that were as carefull as men might possible be for their lives, to leade a strict and an upright life; yet it is incredible almost to thinke, what wicked reports were raised of them: & therfore not the works of man, as they are by envy, or malice bruited to be, for what will not envie say? but as they are in deed and verity, do manifestly shew what any man is: and therefore Christ saith unto the Iewes, If you were the sonnes of Abraham, you would doe the workes of Abraham; and S. Iames saith, Shew me thy Faith by thy Workes; for the workes of a man truely considered, are an infallible argument to shew what he is: so the workes that our Saviour did, while he did live on earth, do sufficiently prove him to be both God and Man; and so his very enemies testified, saying, He hath done all things well, he maketh both the deafe to heare, and the dumbe to speake; and those that doubted of 2 That God himselfe testified Christ to be his Sonne. Mat 3.17. Iohn 5.35.

Iohn 5.36.

Mat.7.5.

Iohn 5.36.

Mat 7.16.

Mat.11.18.

Our workes witnesses what we are.

Iohn 8 39. Iames 2.18.

Marke 7.37.

Iohn 7.31.

of him, whether he was the true Messias, or not, said, When Christ commeth, will he doe more miracles then these, which he hath done? and the workes that he doth now, raigning in heaven, do sufficiently prove him to be the Maker, Preserver, and Redeemer of men: for he sitteth on the right hand of God, making intercession for his Saints, and ruling till he hath put all his enemies under his feete. And therefore I conclude, as I began, that the Word was made flesh, and blessed is hee that is not offended in him.

Heb.10.12,13. Rom.8.34. 1 Cor.15.25. Mat.11.6.

Why then, O thou incredulous Iew, wilt thou not receive thy Saviour? is it because he came poore, without any shew of worldly pomp? why? that should make all men the rather to imbrace him, and the more thankefully to acknowledge him; because that he which might have come in Majesty, Cum cælestibus, Attended on by Angels, would come in poverty, and have his bed made, cum jumentis, among the beasts that perish, that so by his comming poore, we might be all made rich through him; and therefore O Iew, I do advise thee, that as thy Fathers accomplished the decree of God, in condemning him; so doe thou according to the will of God, in beleeving on him, and thou shalt be happy; for he that beleeveth in him shall never perish; To whom with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, be ascribed all Honour, Thankes and Praise, both now, and for evermore, Amen.

A Prayer.

O Eternall God, who, as in all things else, so more especially in giving thy deerest Sonne, co-eternall, co-equall, and co-essentiall unto thy selfe to bee made flesh, subject to our humane frailties, and in all things like unto us, sinne only excepted, hast shewed thy goodnesse and thy love to man, to be like thy selfe, infinite and incomprehensible; we most humbly beseech thee to give us grace to know thee, and whom thou hast sent Iesus Christ to be the onely true God, whom to know, is eternall life, through the said Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

IEHOVÆ LIBERATORI.

This Treatise containeth

1 An introduction of the meditation of Christ his death, which is
- 1 Acceptable unto God.
  - 1 To hinder sinne.
  - 2 To kindle our charity.
  - 3 To erect our hope.
- 2 Profitable for us.

2 A declaration of the passion of Christ; wherin is handled 4 points.

1 The person suffering, which was
- 1 A Man.
- 2 A just Man.
- 3 A good Man.
- 4 A King.
- 5 A Priest.
- 6 A Prophet.
- 7 A God.

Wherein is shewed who are subject to most affliction.

1 Before Annas, where
- 1 He is examined
  - 1 Of his disciples.
  - 2 Of his doctrine.
- 2 He is strucken by the High Priests servants.
- 3 He is denied by his stoutest Apostles.

2 Before Pilate the first time, where he is accus'd
- 1 Of impiety against God.
- 2 Of treason against Cæsar.

3 Before Herod, where the mystery of cloathing Christ in white is explaned.

4 Before Pilate the second time, where his scourging, crowning with thornes, &c. is expressed.

2 The sufferings of Christ.

1 In the garden of Gethsemane,
- 1 Alone, where is shewed
  - 1 How the affections of Christ differ from ours in respect of the
    - 1 Object.
    - 2 Manner.
    - 3 Effects.
  - 2 The cause of his agony, in respect of
    - 1 Object.
    - 2 Subject.

    Where is *
- * Explaned
  - 1 What might grieve Christ
    - 1 In respect of himselfe,
      - 1 The greatnesse of his paine and shame.
      - 2 The deferring of his death and punishment.
    - 2 In respect of others,
      - 1 Small account he saw they would make of his death.
      - 2 The greatnesse of their punishment, which he knew they must suffer for that their neglect.
  - 2 What Christ might feare.
    - 1 The waight of sinne.
    - 2 The malice of Satan.
    - 3 The wrath of God.

2 By others where is shewed,
- 1 The treason of Iudas, where is shewed,
  - 1 What Christ had done for Iudas.
  - 2 Why Iudas betrayed him.
  - 3 How Iudas betrayed him
- 2 The flight of all the followers of Christ.
- 3 The taking and binding of Iesus Christ.

- 3 In Golgotha, where is expressed
  - 1 Those things that he suffered on the crosse, — 1 An accursed, 2 A shamefull, 3 A painefull, 4 A lingring death. — Where also is shewed the generality of his suffering.
  - 2 The seven gracious words that he uttered, and many other speciall observations full of comfort.
- 3 The necessity of Christ his sufferings in respect of the causes, viz.
  - 1 Instrumentall. — 1 The envy of Satan. 2 The malice of the Iewes. 3 The covetousnesse of Iudas. 4 The desire of the multitude.
  - 2 Efficient, God himselfe, for our sinnes, out of the love he bare to man.
  - 3 Finall.
    - 1 In respect of men. — 1 To save the elect by the vertue of his death 2 To make the wicked without excuse for neglecting his death.
    - 2 In respect of God, for the glory of his blessed Name, where is shewed that this should teach us, — 1 To compassionate his death. 2 To make us thankefull for so great a benefit. 3 To cause us to love him above all things in the world. 4 To make us ready to suffer any thing with him, and for his sake.
- 4 The maner of his suffering these things.
  - 1 So as the Prophets foretold, that he should suffer.
  - 2 So as the Apostles and his Disciples saw, and declared unto us that he did suffer.

And so in respect of himselfe, as it is incomprehensible unto all men.

The

The fourth

Golden Candlesticke,

HOLDING

The fourth greatest Light of Christian

RELIGION.

Of the Passion of the MESSIAS.

LUKE 24. 46.

Καὶ οὕτω ἔδει παθεῖν τὸν Χριστὸν.

And thus it behoved Christ to suffer.

YOu have heard (dearely beloved) how miserably man is distressed by sinne, how he may be relieved only by the Mercy of God, and how this reliefe is applied unto us, by the Incarnate Word; for he is the true Samaritan that doth helpe the wounded man; he is the blessed Angell that doth stirre the poole of Bethesda, and give vertue unto the water, to heale our sores, to helpe our soules; But alas, this Angell, as yet, is but descended, and the waters are not troubled, and this Samaritan is but allighted, and the poore semi-dead traveller is not set up upon his horse, to be carried towards his Inne, that is, he hath not yet entred into the waters of tribulation to save our soules from drowning in hell; neither hath he put our sinnes upon his backe, that we being freed from the burden, might walke on towards heaven; this resteth yet behind, and this Tragedie is yet unheard: and therefore, though he much humbled himselfe by his incarnation, yet is that nothing; it is but the beginning of sorrowes, in respect of his sore and bitter passion; For to redeeme our soules from sinne, the deepe waters must enter into his soule, and all our sinnes must be laid upon his backe, and for our sinnes, It behoveth Christ to suffer.

Hic labor, hoc opus est,——

And this is that which we are now to treat of; Thus it behoved Christ to suffer.

The coherence of this Treatise with the former Treatises.

Chap. I.

Of the manifold uſe and commodities that we reape by the continuall meditation of the ſufferings of Chriſt.

Three things that move attention.

THere be three ſpeciall things, ſaith the Orator, that do uſe to move attention.

1 An eloquent Authour.
2 An important matter.
3 A compendious brevity.

And all theſe three do here joyne and meet together in this Text of Scripture; for Firſt, the Authour of theſe words is Chriſt. Luke 11.49.

Firſt, the Authour of theſe words, is Ieſus Chriſt, the wiſdome of God, wiſdome it ſelfe, ſo incomprehenſibly wiſe, that all men wondred at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth.

Secondly, the ſumme of theſe words is the tragedy of Ieſus Chriſt.

Secondly, the matter is the Tragedie of himſelfe; the laborious life, and the dolorous death of the Sonne of God; the chiefeſt tragedy of all tragedies; for the Cataſtrophe hereof hath the effuſion of bloud, and the mourning, not onely of the Sufferer, or Parents and Friends, but of Heaven and Earth, and all the whole world, farre more dolefull than the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megyddo.

The Actors of this Tragedy.

The Actors of this Tragedy, are Kings, Vice-Royes, Dukes, Scribes, Phariſees, High-Prieſts, Elders of the people, the Apoſtles themſelves, and others; all great: Chriſt the King of Kings; Herod, the great King; Pilate, the Vice-Roy; Annas and Cayaphas, High Prieſts; Peter and Iudas, great Apoſtles; and thoſe that were mute, as the Sun, the Earth, the Stones, the Vaile of the Temple, and the very Graves did, by apparent ſignes, moſt dolefully bewaile the nefarious death of the Sonne of God; yea more, the Angels mourned, and the divels trembled to behold the ſame.

The Theater was Ieruſalem.

The Theater on which it was acted, was Ieruſalem, the very midſt and heart of the earth, as ſome imagine, according to that ſaying of the Pſalmiſt, Operatus eſt Deus ſalutem in medio terræ, God hath wrought ſalvation in the midſt of the Earth.

Here is the place where it was acted:

——Hic hic, mors & vita duello,
——Conflixere mirando.

Here life and death did ſtrive for victory; and here the beholders were men of all nations, Hebrewes, Greeks, and Romans; and the time was their moſt ſolemne feaſt, wherein all did meet to eat their Paſchall Lamb.

And therefore if there be any Theme that may challenge our eares to liſten, and our hearts to meditate upon the ſame, it is this; for this is one of thoſe things that was once done, that it might be thought of for ever, that it might be had in everlaſting remembrance: And the continuall meditation thereof is

The continuall meditation of Chriſts paſſion what it doth.

1 Acceptable unto Chriſt.
2 Profitable for us.

For

First, it is moſt acceptable unto Chriſt.

Luke 22. 1 Cor 11.1.

Firſt, if the rod of Moſes, which wrought ſo many miracles in Ægypt, and the Manna which fed the children of Iſrael forty yeares in the wilderneſſe, and the Book of the Law, which was delivered unto Moſes upon Mount Sinai, were to be preſerved in the Ark, as teſtimonies of Gods love throughout all generations; how much more ſhould we keep the remembrance of the Croſſe of Chriſt, of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, and of the glad tidings of ſalvation, which we have by the death of Chriſt in the Church of God for evermore? Our Saviour gave but two Sacraments unto his Church, and one of them is chiefly inſtituted to this end, for a remembrance of his ſuffering; for as often as you eat this Bread, and drinke this Cup, you ſhew the Lords death untill he come: And the remembrance of Chriſts Christs death (saith Saint Chrysostome) Est beneficij maximi recordatio, caputq; divinæ erga nos charitatis; Is the commemoration of the greatest benefit that ever we received from God, and the chiefest argument of his Divine love towards man: for though it was great love, to be clothed with the vaile of our flesh, and to take the infirmities of our fraile and feeble nature; yet it is farre greater love, to bee compassed with the shadow of Death, and to undergoe the penalty of our sinnefull nature. And therefore seeing the mercifull and gracious Lord hath so done this marvellous worke, that it ought to be had in remembrance, I may well say with the Prophet; Have ye no regard, O all ye that passe by the way? Stay here and consider, and behold, If ever there were any sorrow like his sorrow, or any suffering like the suffering of Christ? your businesse may be great, and your occasions urgent, yet none so great, none so waighty as this; and none so acceptable unto God as this: for if you must remember when he rested, how much more should you remember how he suffered?

Chrys hom. 83. in Matth.

Pſal. 22. 4.

Lam. 1. 12.

Secondly, As no worke more acceptable unto God, so none more profitable for us; for the serious meditation of the sufferings of Christ effecteth in us, (besides many others) these three especiall good.

1. It hindereth us to sinne.
2. It kindleth our charity.
3. It erecteth our Hope.

} For

Secondly, It is most profitable unto men, in three respects.

First, Tanta vis crucis, ut si ante oculos ponatur, &c. So great is the power and efficacy of the sufferings of Christ, that if it were alwaies fixed in the mindes of the faithfull, so that they did intentively behold the death of Christ, no concupiscense, no lust, no envy, no fury could overcome them; but presently upon the consideration of Christ his sufferings, the whole hoste of the flesh and of sinne would flie away, saith Orosius; and Saint Bernard saith, Quid tam efficax ad curanda conscientiæ vulnera, nec non ad purgandam mentis aciem, quam Christi vulnerum sedula meditatio? What can be more powerfull, to cure the sinnefull wounds of our consciences, yea, and to purge our mindes from all sinnes, then the sedulous meditation of the wounds of Christ? for the Passion of Christ sheweth how dearely it cost him to redeeme us from sinne; and therefore it should make us afraid to sinne; for when the Harlot Lais asked of Demosthenes 1000. Drocmas, that is, almost 24. pound of our money, or as some report, 10000. Dracmas, that is, 200. pound for one nights lodging with her, he wisely answered her, Non tanti emam pœnitere, I will not buy repentance at so deare a rate; so, when Satan suggesteth us to sin, if we did but consider the great price, that Christ did pay for sin, and must be paid for it before it can be pardoned, for we are bought with a price, yea, with a great price, saith the Apostle, there is no doubt but it would be a great meanes to preserve us from sinning; for it is most certaine, saith Origen, that the true consideration of the Passion of Christ, in the heart of a Christian, is the chiefest munition to guard us against every sin; for as Uriah said unto King David, The Arke, and Israel, and Iuda, abide in Tents, and my Lord Ioab, and the servants of my Lord are incamped in the open field, and shall I then goe downe into mine house to eate and drinke, and to lie with my wife? as thou livest, and as thy soule liveth, I will not do this thing; So every good Christian man will say, My Saviour Christ did weare a Crowne of thornes, and shal I say, come, let us crowne our selves with rosebuds? his hands are extended upon the Crosse to imbrace me, and shall I stretch forth mine hands unto wickednes to disgrace him? he being ready to die, had gall to eate, and vineger to drinke, and shall I being perfectly whole, say with them in the booke of Wisedome, Come, let us fill our selves with Wine and pleasant ointments? He suffered his breast, his side, and his heart, to be opened and pierced for me, and shall I harden my heart, and shut the doore of my soule against him? hee was contented to heare himselfe reviled and scorned for me, and shall I still scorne him, and stop mine eares from hearing him, so graciously speaking, and so lovingly calling me, by the mouth of his holy servants?

1 How the meditation of Christs Passion driveth away sin. Orosius sup ep. ad Rom. 6.

Bern. ser 61. in Cant.

1 Cor. 6. 1.

Origen. in c. 6. ad Rom.

2 Sam. 11. 11.

Sap. 2. 8.

Wisedome 2. 7.

And as Origen saith, Pro me Dei Filius jugulatus est, & iterũ me peccare delectat?

The Sonne of God was ſlaine for my ſins, and ſhall I ever againe delight in ſinne? So will every true remembrancer of Chriſts ſufferings ſay, the deſire of money betrayed my Saviour, and ſhall I ever after that, love covetouſneſſe? my wanton pleaſures, my vaine delights, my ſwelling pride, my greedy deſire and all my wicked ſins, were the onely cauſe of my Saviours want, of his bitter ſorrowes, and his ſhamefull, cruell death, and ſhall I ever love thoſe ſinnes that brought theſe ſorrowes unto him? no ſure, I will not doe it, ſaith every ſoule that thinkes of this; Etiam ſi lapis eſſet, yea, though his heart were made of ſtone, yet the true meditation hereof, would mollifie the ſame like waxe, and cauſe him to depreſſe his pride, and to deteſt all ſin ſaith Saint Chryſoſtome; for as the deſtroying Angell could not hurt any of them, whoſe doore-poſts were ſprinkled with the bloud of the Paſchall Lambe; ſo the ſubtlety of Satan, that deſtroying enemy, can never prevaile againſt them, which have their mindes and hearts alwaies ſprinkled with the true meditation of the ſuffering, and ſhedding of the pretious bloud of Ieſus Chriſt.

Chryſ. hom. 88 in Matth.

Exod. 12.

And therefore, as that bleſſed Apoſtle Saint Paul ſaith, God forbid that I ſhould glory in any thing, ſave in the Croſſe of Ieſus Chriſt, whereby the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world, that is, whereby all worldly vanities and pleaſures, are become loathſome unto me, and I am become a hater and deteſter of them, as being the cauſe of Chriſt his Croſſe; ſo I ſay unto every man; if ever Satan, or the luſt of the fleſh, inticeth thee to ſin, I pray thee doe but this one thing, before thou doſt the ſin, call to mind and conſider, what thy deare Saviour ſuffered for thy ſinnes, and I doubt not but it will prove a moſt wholeſome antidote, and a moſt excellent preſervative againſt ſin. And

Gal. 6. 14.

2 The meditation of Chriſts Paſſion cannot chooſe but make us to love Chriſt.

Secondly, As the the conſideration of Chriſts Paſſion, is a great meanes to prevent ſinne, ſo it is of maine force to ſtirre up our love, and to kindle our affection towards Chriſt, as Saint Bernard ſaith, Nihil eſt, quod eum ita nobis amabilem reddit, quam calix ille, quem pro nobis bibit, nothing in the world makes Chriſt to be loved of us more then that Cup, which he hath drunke up for us; Quia amor amoris magnes, & durus eſt, qui amorem non rependit; Becauſe love is as a loadſtone to draw love againe; and, greater love then this, hath no man, that a man ſhould give his life for his friends; and therefore the remembrance of this cannot chooſe, but cauſe us to love him againe.

Bern. ſer. 20. in Cantic.

It is reported——ſubeuntem fata mariti
Alceſten,——

Euripides in Alceſte.

What Alceſtes did.

that Alceſtes was contented to undergoe the deſtinies of her husband; for when Apollo had obtained of the Fates, to ſpare Admetus life, if any one of his friends or kindred would willingly die for him, and that all his friends refuſed the ſame, his wife Alceſtes redeemed his life with her owne death; So was Pythias ready to die for Damon, and Damon likewiſe for Pythias; and ſo the Codri for the Athenians; and the Curtij for the Romanes did willingly give themſelves to die;

Sic fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit:

And ſurely theſe are argunments of great love; yet farre farre ſhort of the love of Chriſt; For Lactant. inſtitut. l. 5. c. 18.

Firſt, theſe did it for them that loved them as much, and were as ready to doe as much for them againe; but Chriſt did it for us, when we were his enemies, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh.

Rom 5. 8.

Secondly, theſe owed ſo much unto their friends and countrey; for in that they were, they were from theſe, and whatſoever they had, they had from them; and therefore, Partem ortus noſtri patria, & partem patres ſibi vendicant; Our Countrey, our friends, and our parents, doe rightly challenge no ſmall part of every man, ſaith Cicero; and as Lucan ſaith.

Cicero l. 1. Offic.

Lucan. l. 2.

——Hæc duri immota Catonis
ſecta fuit,——
Nec ſibi ſed toti genitum ſe credere mundo;

It was Cato's mind, that he was not borne for himſelfe, but to doe what good he

he could to others; but Christ oweth us nothing, he is a debter to no man; for who hath first given unto him, and it shall be recompenced unto him againe? And therefore seeing the love of Christ to us was so great, as when wee deserved no good at his hands, but deserved so much evill, as is due to mortall and perfidious enemies, to suffer so many things for us; how can it choose, but the remembrance thereof, should exceedingly kindle our love towards him againe? for who can behold and consider the great price that was paid for his redemption, and not love his Redeemer? or who can thinke of that bitter potion, which he drunke for our salvation, and not be inflamed with the love of his Saviour? Rom.5.8.

There bee three things (saith Mirandula) that doe move us to love any one: Three things that move us to love one. Miranda de morte Christi l.1. c.17.

First, The vertues of the person.

Secondly, The benefits that we have received of him.

Thirdly, The good that we doe expect from him.

But Christ is the vertue of God his Father, the chiefest good, and all goodnesse; and although every vertue doth challenge love, yet no vertue deserveth the same so much as liberality; and what greater bounty or liberality can there bee then this, to shed his precious bloud, and to offer up himselfe upon the Altar of his Crosse, to deliver us from eternall death? and what greater good can be desired, then that eternall happinesse, which hee hath purchased for us, and which wee doe expect from him? And therefore who would not love so good a Saviour? Liberality the chiefest procurer of love.

It is reported of Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, that he did so continually meditate upon those great things, which Christ had done and suffered for him, that he was thereby brought so intirely to love him, as when he was demanded, why he would not forsake and forget Christ, rather then suffer himselfe to be torne and devoured of wilde and savage Beasts? He answered, That he could not forget him, because the sufferings of Christ, were not onely words transient in his mouth, or removeable objects before his eyes, but they were indelible Characters, so engraven in his heart, that all the torments of the Earth could never race them out: And therefore being commanded by that bloudy Tyrant Trajane, to be ript and unbowelled, they found Iesus Christ written upon his heart, in Characters of Gold. Idem quo supra. c.10. The story of Ignatius at his death.

Oh that it might be so with us, that we would ever set the sufferings of Christ before our face, and with Saint Paul, desire to know nothing but Iesus Christ, and him crucified, that so by the continuall consideration of Christ his great love to us, we might be inluced to love him againe.

Thirdly, As the continuall meditation of Christs sufferings, suppresseth sinne, and kindleth our love, so it supporteth our hope; for though I have sinned grievously, and my conscience is much troubled, yet it shall not bee over-charged with despaire; Quoniam vulnerum Domini recordabor, & quod ex me mihi deest, usurpo ex visceribus Domini; Because I will remember the wounds of my Lord Iesus, and whatsoever is wanting in my selfe, I will assume from the bowels of my Saviour; for when my wisedome faileth, my righteousnesse sufficeth not, my holinesse helpeth not, the sufferings of Christ shall suffice for all: This shall be my last refuge, this shall be mine onely remedy, saith Saint Bernard. And so Saint Paul, after he had shewed how, doe he what he could, he served with his flesh many times the Law of sinne, and therefore cryed out many times, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? saith; I thanke God, through Christ our Lord; As if he should have said, Seeing I am so prone to sinne, and so unapt to goodnesse, I have none other refuge, but onely to flie unto the sufferings and merits of Iesus Christ; and I know that is sufficient for me, in stead of all; for as as Israel sucked honey out of the rocke, and oyle out of the flint stone, so doe we sucke all our comforts, and refresh our selves with those streames of teares and bloud, that gushed out of that stony Rocke Iesus Christ; And as the high hills are a refuge for the wilde Goates, and the stony Rockes for the Conies, those poore 3 The meditation of Christs sufferings supporteth our hope. Bernard. Ser. 61. in Cant. Idem Ser. 22. in Cant. Rom.7.24,25. Deut.32.13. Psal.104.18.

ſilly fearefull Creatures, that have none other ſhift to ſave their lives, but to hide themſelves in the holes of the Rocks; ſo the poore ſilly ſimple ſoules of ſinfull men, have none other place to hide themſelves in, from the wrath of God, but only with the Dove (in the Canticles) In foraminibus petræ, In the clefts of this Rocke, in the ſecret places of his ſtayres, (as ſome tranſlate it,) that is, in the wounds and ſtripes of Ieſus Chriſt; for By his ſtripes we are healed: And therefore, ſeeing the ſufferings of Chriſt is that precious balme of Gilead, that ſoveraigne ſalve which is ſufficient to heale every ſickened ſoule, to hinder us to ſin, to kindle our love to God, and to erect our hope in God, no man can treate, no man can heare of a matter more excellent, then is the dilating of the ſufferings of Chriſt.

Cant. 2. 14.

Eſay 53. 5.

Thirdly, here is abundance of matter in few words.

Thirdly, Here is a compendious brevity, a theame ſhort enough, but foure words; Ita oportuit Chriſtum pati; Thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer, or, Chriſt muſt thus ſuffer: And they be certaine in ſence, and full of matter: And therefore you may eaſily remember the words, becauſe they be ſo few, and you ſhould diligently muſe, and daily meditate upon the matter, and be throughly excited to an unwearied hearkening or reading, and to a faithfull retaining of the ſame, becauſe they be ſo excellent; and I may be truely excuſed, for my large preamble, and long perambulation upon the ſame; becauſe there is Multum in parvo, A great deale of matter couched here in a little roome; even as the whole World is expreſſed in a little Mappe; For though the men of Myndus might well ſhut their large gates, leſt their little City ſhould runne out; yet huge ſpatious Cities muſt have their Gates bigger then little Wickets, leaſt their people ſhould get neither in nor out: And therefore, though theſe words bee but few; yet ſeeing herein there is contained infinite matter, and an huge building, Centum ſublime columnis; for what higher myſtery, or what ampler diſcourſe can wee finde, then the ſufferings of Ieſus Chriſt? you muſt give me leave to inſiſt a while, to behold the ſtripes, and to ſearch into the wounds of Chriſt; for I may not ſhut a large foote into a little ſhooe, and I cannot incloſe ſo many Iliads of ſorrowes (as one did the Illiads of Homer) within the compaſſe of a nutſhell, for this would prove an indecorum: And therefore, by Gods helpe, though I meane not to build Tabernacles, and to ſtay ever in the expounding of that, which ſhall be ever in my remembrance; yet I will Siſtere gradum, Make a ſtop, and ſtay a while, To treate of theſe words of Chriſt, Thus it behoued Chriſt to ſuffer; In which words (as the Holy Ghoſt hath ſet them downe) I note theſe foure ſpeciall points.

Hieron. ad Demetriad.

Laertius l. 6. What the Citizens of Myndus did.

The diviſion of the Text.

First, The perſon ſuffering, Chriſt; thus it behoved Chriſt.
Secondly, The ſuffering it ſelfe; it behoved him to ſuffer.
Thirdly, The neceſſity of his ſuffering; it behoved him to ſuffer.
Fourthly, The manner of his ſuffering; Thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer,

That is, As the Prophets fore-told, and as you have ſeene he did. Theſe are the parts and parcels of this Text.

The firſt part.

1 Part.

CHAP. I.

Of the ſurpaſſing excellency of the Perſon ſuffering.

Of the perſon ſuffering.

FOr the firſt, The excellency of the perſon, that is, the ſubject of any action, doth give the moſt life unto any matter; for the exploits of Kings, or the deedes of Nobles, doe of themſelves crave attention a hundred times more then the ſtory of any one of baſe condition: Conſider wee then the perſon, that is to undergoe this Paſſion. And 1 That Chriſt was a Man.

Firſt, We ſhall finde him to be a man; for ſo Pilate ſaith, Behold the man; And himſelfe commonly gives himſelfe none other title, then The Sonne of man; to ſhew indeede, that he was a true man as we are.

What Diogenes and Saint Francis uſed to do. Laertius l. 6. Bonavent. in vita S. Franciſ.

And this ſhould move in us compaſſion; for humanity it ſelfe at the torments of the very bruite Beaſts is ſomething touched; and Diogenes the Cynicke in this reſpect is ſaid, to have redeemed many times the Beaſts from ſlaughter; And Saint Francis likewiſe is ſaid, to have ranſomed the poore Lambes from the Butchers hands; becauſe it grieved them, to ſee any Creature tortured; and therfore much more ſhould wee bee moved with compaſſion, at the paſſion of any man; for if one member ſuffer, all the members ſuffer with it, ſaith the Apoſtle. 1 Cor. 12. 26.

2 That Chriſt was a juſt man.

Secondly, Chriſt was not onely a man, but he was alſo a juſt man; Non erat dolus in ore ejus, There was no guile found in his mouth; His enemies themſelves confeſſe it, Have thou nothing to doe with that juſt man, ſaith Pilates wife; and Pilate oftentimes (as I have ſhewed in my Booke of the reſolution of Pilate) confeſſed, and by many arguments confirmed his aſſertion, that Chriſt deſerved no puniſhment at all; and that he could not finde (though he had moſt diligently ſearched) any cauſe of death in him: and therefore to cleere himſelfe from the imputation of injuſtice, that he ſhould iiſdem labijs eum mittere ad crucem, quibus pronunciaverat innocentem, With the ſame lippes ſend him to be crucified, whom even now hee had juſtified, he waſhed his hands in the view of the multitude, ſaying, I am innocent from the bloud of this juſt perſon; So Herod, though he had derided our Saviours ſilence, yet dared he not condemne his innocency; for I have ſent him unto Herod, and loe, nothing worthy of death is found in him, ſaith Pilate; So Caiphas the High-Prieſt propheſieth of him whom he perſecuteth, and abſolveth him whom he accuſeth; for he pronouncing the myſtery of our ſalvation, ſaid, It was neceſſary that one ſhould die for the people: Therefore hee muſt be a juſt man, or elſe he could not ſatisfie for the ſins of wicked men; And ſo the divell himſelfe, though he violently perſecuted, and moſt maliciouſly accuſed, yet he cleerely juſtified our Saviour Chriſt; for it was he (as many of the ancients do conjecture) that told Pilates wife, and incited her to tell her Husband, that the man thus maligned, and condemned as nefarious, was notwithſtanding juſt and righteous; for the divell knew, that ſince he firſt knew him, he knew no ſinne in him; And it may be that to this our Saviour alludeth, when he ſaith, The Prince of this World commeth, Sed in me non habet quicquam, but he hath nothing in me, As if he ſhould have ſaid, When he ſearcheth, and ſeeketh, and ſifteth, what hee can; yet ſhall he finde no evill, no ſin, no, not the leaſt cauſe of death in me; For he might juſtly ſay, Which of you can rebuke me of ſinne? Quia ab omnibus accepit teſtimonium innocentiæ, Becauſe he had the teſtimonies of all men, of all ſorts,

Mat. 27. 19. Reſolution of Pilate.

Luke. 23. 14.

Leo Ser. 3. de paſſ.

Mat. 27. 24.

Luke 23. 15.

Iohn 11. 50.

Iohn 14. 30.

Talem vix reperit unum, milibus è multo hominum conſultis Apollo.

Iohn 8. 46.

as

Iren. l. 4. c. 14. All juſtified Chriſt

as Irenæus ſaith, to juſtifie him; God, Men, Angels, Divels, Friends, Foes, acquaintance, Strangers, and all juſtified him, that he was voide of ſin, and full of grace.

And therefore, as we have ever more compaſſion of them that ſuffer, and bee innocent, then of thoſe whom we conjecture to be Malefactors; ſo the conſideration of Chriſts ſuffering, being as the Dove, as innocent as innocency it ſelfe, ſhould move in us not onely a commiſeration of the ſufferer, but alſo a deteſtation of the perſecutors; for who can heare, or reade of the death of righteous Abel, by that wicked Caine, the burning of Laurentius, by that Tyrant Decius, the ſlaying of Saint Bartholmew, by his bloudy enemies, or the dragging of Hippolytus with wilde Horſes, and ſuch like cruell and bloudy Tragedies, without a deteſtation of ſuch horrible wicked Actors? And can we heare the ſufferings of innocent guiltleſſe Chriſt, without a deadly deteſtation of thoſe inhumane Butchers?

3 That Chriſt was a good man. Acts 10.38.

Thirdly, He was not onely a juſt man, that did no hurt to any man, but he was alſo a good man, that did good to every man; for He went about (ſaith the Apoſtle) doing good; and that both in words and workes; for 1 Teaching all men.

Firſt, He often taught them, in the Temple, in the Synagogue, upon the Mount, in the High-waies, in Houſes, in all places; his goodneſſe would not ſuffer him to conceale any thing in ſilence, that might be any waies profitable unto his hearers; but to diſpell with all diligence, all myſts and cloudes of errors, from the inward eyes of the people, and to inſtruct them cleerely in all the heavenly myſteries of ſalvation.

2 Curing all men.

Secondly, He cured the bleeding wounds of afflicted conſciences; he reclaimed and brought home many ſtragling ſheepe, and wandring ſinners; hee gave eyes unto the blinde, feete unto the lame, ſpeech unto the dumbe, eares unto the deafe, bread unto the hungry; yea, many times he reſtored health unto the diſeaſed, and ſometimes the dead unto their lamenting friends; And as Saint Paul ſaith, Who is weake, and I am not weake; who is offended, and I burne not? So might our Saviour more truely ſay, Who is burthened, and I am not grieved at it? for he commiſerated the corporall and ſpirituall infirmities of all men; yea, hee did not onely pitty them in us, but he put them all upon himſelfe, Et tulit in ſe, ut à nobis tolleret, and he took them all upon himſelfe, that he might take them all from us, as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith: And therefore, if the people did ſo much condole the naturall death of Dorcas, becauſe ſhe was ſo good a Creature, as to beſtow ſome few clothes upon ſome few poore diſtreſſed people; how much more ought wee to bewaile the ſhamefull and the dolefull death of Chriſt, that did ſo much good, and never any ill, all the daies of his life.

2 Cor. 11.23.

Acts 9.39.

4 That Chriſt was an honourable man, as

Fourthly, He was not onely Juſtus & bonus, A juſt and a good man, or an innocent man, voide of ſinne, and a vertuous man, full of grace; but hee was alſo more honourable and more noble then all the ſonnes of men; for he was Chriſtus, Annointed to be a King, a Prieſt, and a Prophet.

1 A King. Mat. 2.2.

Firſt, King; Simul natus, ſimul Cæſar, He was a King by birth; Where is hee that is borne King of the Iewes? He deſcended of the regall race; Saint Matthew reckons foureteene Kings in his pedegree; and he was a King to his dying day, Ieſus of Nazareth King of the Iewes; Pilate writes it, and he will not alter it; for God himſelfe had ſpoken it, I have ſet my King upon my holy hill of Sion.

Iohn 19.22.

Pſal. 2.6.

2 A Prieſt. Pſal. 110.4.

Heb. 5.6.

Secondly, Prieſt; for The Lord ſware it, and he will not repent it, that he is a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedecke; The nobleſt Order, and the royalleſt Prieſthood in the World; for this holy Prieſt was alſo a noble King; for he was King of Shalem, King of peace, even as Eſayas calls him, The Prince of peace.

3 A Propbet. Deut. 18.15.

Thirdly, Prophet; for A Prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe unto you; And he ſhall be a Prophet, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, in the higheſt degree, even the Prince of Prophets, and ſo great a Prophet, that Whoſoever will not heare him, hee ſhall ſurely die.

And

And therefore if Ieremy taketh up that mournefull lamentation, for the death of King Ioſias, and ſay, Alas for that noble Prince, ah my Lord, or, ah his glory; and yet he came to an honourable death in the Field, without any ſhame, and but little paine; then what ſhall wee ſay, for the death of this King of Kings, this Prieſt of the moſt High God, and this great Prophet of the Lord, that was annointed with the Oyle of gladneſſe above his fellowes? The Lord had ſaid, Touch not mine Annointed, and doe my Prophets no harme; yet we ſee Kings, the Annointed of God, are ſlaine, and Ieruſalem killed the Prophets, and ſtoned thoſe that were ſent unto them: But behold a greater then all Kings is here, Et quaſi unus è decem milibus, And ſuch a one as ten thouſand Kings are not equall unto him; and yet he is not brought to an honourable death, of a Prieſt at the Altar, or of a King in the Field, but to a moſt ſhamefull and reprochfull death, the moſt accurſed death of the Croſſe, among the wicked: O then let us conſider, if ever ſuch a perſon came to ſuch a death!

Ier 22.18.

Pſal.45.8.

Pſal.105.15.

Luke 13.34.

Fiftly, He was not onely the higheſt among all the Sonnes of men, but he was alſo the Sonne of the moſt High God; Pilate heard it, and feared; the Centurion ſaw it, and confeſt it, Truely this was the Sonne of God; And the very divels felt it, and proclaimed it, We know who thou art, even the holy one of God; yea, the trembling Earth quaking, the flinty Rockes cleaving aſunder, and the doleſull graves opening themſelves, did by a viſible voice confirme him to be a God; And ſo that ſtrange Eclipſe that was ſeene at his death, and that unexpected darkenes, that vailed the face of the Sunne for three houres together, becauſe it was no defect of Nature, (the Moone being at the full,) and the day being at the middeſt, and therefore could not be any uſuall Eclipſe, cauſed by the head or the tayle of the Dragon, (unleſſe you meane that old Dragon, the Divell) it made that great Phyloſopher Dyoniſius, then in Athens, to ſay, That now the World was at an end, or the God of Nature ſuffered violence; ſo ſtrange were theſe accidents, beyond the power of Nature.

5 That Chriſt was a true and eternall God.
Mat. 27.54.

Luke 4.34.

What Dyoniſius ſaid when Chriſt ſuffered.

Dyoniſ. in Ep.

Nay, the very enemies of Chriſt acknowledged him to be a Prophet, a King, a God; for while the people play upon him, and contemne him, yet notwithſtanding they confeſſe him to be a Prophet, ſaying, Propheſie unto us, thou Chriſt, who is he that ſmote thee; And as Saint Ambroſe ſaith, Compungentes coronant, & illudentes adorant; While the Souldiers denied him to bee a King, they Crowne him, they give a Scepter unto him, and they put a purple garment upon him, which are the chiefeſt ornaments of the greateſt Monarchs; and while they all deride him, and denie him for their Saviour, they doe in the meane time adore him as a God, and bow their knees unto him, to whom all knees ſhall bow: And ſo the unſpeakeable wiſedome of Almighty God, did ſo hiddenly diſpoſe of the ſufferings of Chriſt, that his very enemies ſhould attribute that to him in mockery, which he was in deede and verity.

The enemies of Chriſt aſcribe that to him in mockery, which he was indeed.
Mat.26.68.
Ambroſ 10. 6 23.

And ſo you ſee the perſon ſuffering, a man, a juſt man, a good man, a King, a Prieſt, a Prophet, a God; yea that God, which brought them out of the Land of Egypt, which ledde them through the Wilderneſſe, through a Land of deſarts and pittes, and of the ſhaddow of death, and through a Land where no man dwelt, where no man paſſed through, which fedde them in the Wilderneſſe, with the bread of Angels, which kept them as the apple of his eye, which ſuffered no man to doe them harme, but reproved Kings for their ſakes, and brought them into a wealthy place, and gave them the Lands of the Heathen, and the labours of the people in poſſeſſion: This is that perſon which endureth all this paſſion: And therefore bee aſtoniſhed O ye Heavens, and be ye horribly afraide all ye creatures, at this, that this hatefull and hated Nation, this cruell and abhominable people, this people voide of wiſedome, and deſtitute of underſtanding, ſhould not onely forget that God which made them, but alſo defile that glorious face in Mount Sion, with their ſtincking ſpittles, which they could not behold upon Mount Horeb without great aſtoniſhment; yea, that they ſhould dare to murther him without feare, whoſe very name they durſt not utter without trembling, much like our godleſſe

Ier 2.6.

Pſal 78.24.

Ier.2 12.

The Iewes like our wicked people.

people;

people, that do abhorre the very name of the divel, but will boldly imitate, and rejoyce to doe the works of the divell: and therefore I may say with the Prophet.

Ier. 9. 1. O that my head were full of water, and that mine eyes were a fountaine of teares, that I might weepe day and night; for then I would bewaile, with the weeping of

Esa. 16. 9. Iaser, this Vine of Shibma; I would water thee O Heshbon, and Elealeh, and I would most fully shew my sorrow, because they have so fully shewed their cruelty against the Sonne of God.

What the former doctine teacheth.

But from hence we may see, who are most exposed to danger, and who be subject to the greatest sufferings.

1 That of all creatures, men are most subject to sorrow. Iiay 53. 4.

First, Man; because he is most sensible, most intelligible, and most deserving miseries; and therefore of all other Creatures, man is chiefly borne to labour, and he is full of miseries; You see Christ himselfe having taken our Nature, hee tooke our infirmities, and he carried our sorrowes.

[Oh sors gravis, ô sors dura,
ô lex dira, quam natura
Promulgavit miseris;
Homo nascens cum mærore,
Vitam ducis cum labore,
& cum metu moreris:]

For this is the Law of Nature, divulged and executed among all Nations, that every man should be borne in sorrow, live in paine, and die with feare; And therefore Seneca saith, That as Quicquid facimus de cœlo est, Whatsoever noble act we do, it is from above; So Quicquid patimur mortale est; Whatsoever we suffer is but a signe of our condition, and a præludium, a fore-shew of our mortality; Nam quemcumq; miserum vides, hominem scias; For whensoever we see any man in misery, we must know that to be the property of humanity.

2 The more righteous men be, the more they shall be afflicted and persecuted by the wicked.

Secondly, The just and righteous man, the best and godliest man, is most subject to the greatest sufferings; It were no wonder, that man suffereth, because man sinneth; but that the just and righteous man should suffer, it seemeth strange; for as the Psalmist saith, Iustus quid fecit, What hath the righteous done? And yet as Aristides was banished out of Athens, Iustus quia justus, Onely because he was a just man, And, as Christ saith, Oderunt me gratis, They have hated me freely without any cause, or without any fault of mine, O God; so the righteous shall be troden, as the clay in the streetes, they shall be sure enough to suffer, and there is cause enough for it, Quia inutiles nobis, & contrarij operibus nostris; Because they are unprofitable for us, we gaine nothing by them, no pleasure, no profit, no contentment, and they bee cleane contrarily disposed to all our actions, say the wicked among themselves: And therefore though all men suffer, yet doe the righteous suffer most of all; for many (yea, and great) are the troubles of the righteous, saith the Psalmist; and though they be never so many, yea, though they perish, yet no man layeth it to heart, saith the Prophet.

Wisd 3. 12.

Esay 57. 1.

3 Kings, Priests, and Prophets, most exposed to all dangers.

Thirdly, Of all the righteous men, Kings, Priests, and Prophets, must be the chiefe in sufferings; Nam oportuit Christum pati, For it behoved the Annointed of God to suffer; And these be Christi Domini, The Annointed of the Lord; and therefore of all others, these are appointed to suffer for the Lord.

Acts 9. 16.

Fourthly, Among these, the more godly they be, the more will godlesse people afflict them; for Saint Paul was a chosen vessell, a most upright, and a most excellent man; therefore he must suffer many things for my names sake, saith the Lord; And Christ saith of all his Priests and Preachers, Behold I send you forth as Sheepe in the middest of Wolves; and you shall be hated of all men for my names sake; What? of all men? that were a wonder, that good men, nay, the best men, should be hated of all men; for where saw you a good Preacher, and an honest man hated, or ill spoken of, say the Worldlings? Yet behold it is true, for our Saviour saith it, You shall be hated of all men; And there is great reason for it; for in all men there is corruption, more or lesse; and they must be enemies to all corruption; they must reprove all the workes of darkenesse, all the sins and vices of men: And therefore it were

The best Kings & best Priests, are often hated.

How it is that all men more or lesse hate the best men more

more strange, that they should be the true reprovers of all sin, and yet not be hated of all men; for the more strictly a man is addicted to vertue, the more he is rejected by the vicious; and the more he approves or tollerates sinne in them, either by not reproving the same in them, or by walking in the same steppes of good-fellowship with them, the more acceptable he is unto them, though the lesse warrantable in the sight of God: And therefore it cannot be, that any one of us should be a just and an upright man, and should not be hated of all men.

Ob. I But will the good and godly men hate them, who doe confesse their sins, and doe alwaies strive against their owne corruptions? The wicked men may hate them, but surely the godly will not.

That there is corruption in the best men.

Sol. I answer, That the more godly men be, the lesse they hate them; yet because in them, sin stickes so close unto them, that although they confesse, and detest it with their soules, yet hath their flesh alwaies some love and affection unto the same, in so much that Saint Augustine in one of his Meditations confesseth, That in his spirit and soule, he did so heartily pray against his sin, that his flesh and carnall desire was afraid God would heare the prayers of his soule, and so deprive his carnall lusts of their delights; for in the best men, The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and drawes them oftentimes to do what they would not doe: And therefore as in the best men there is still remaining naturall corruption, so the same will still oppose it selfe against all them, that will seeke to dispossesse this old Adam from their soules.

An excellent confession of Saint Augustine. Gal. 5. 17.

And therefore, seeing Christ did suffer, Christians suffer, and that the more godly they be, the more enemies they shall have, we should not judge of men, and especially of the Preachers of Gods Word, according to their outward appearance, of their enemies, crosses and afflictions; but we should judge righteous judgement; And we that suffer, may, and should rejoyce and be glad, that We are counted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. And so much for the Person suffering.

The second part.

2 Part.

Chap. I.

Of the sufferings of Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane.

2 Of the sufferings of Christ.

Secondly, We are to consider the sufferings of this Person, Iesus Christ: Thus it behoved Christ to suffer: Well might it have agreed with his excellent Nature, to have conferred benefits, and to bestow gifts on the Sonnes of men; but to suffer torments, and to endure all indignities at the hands of sinnefull men, is strange and admirable; so incompetible is the Person and the Passion of Iesus Christ. And yet if we diligently observe all those Trgicall Scenes that are seen in the Records of the Evangelists, and mark all the dolefull passages of his whole life, even from the first houre of his birth, unto the last moment of his breath, we shall finde the same to be nothing else, but a Mappe of miseries, or a tempestuous Sea of all calamities; for he was no sooner borne, but hee began to beare our sorrowes; hee was cast into a Cratch; the breathings of the Beasts perhaps did warme his cloutes, to preserve his life; and he lived not long, but hee suffered the effusion of his bloud, and the sharpenesse of circumcision; He was no sooner circumcised, but he was designed unto the slaughter; Herod seekes his life, and he will slay all the Children of Bethlehem, or hee will put this Childe unto

That the whole life of Christ was but a continuall suffering.

the Sword: And therefore in the middeſt of Winter, hee muſt flie to Egypt to ſave his life; there he lived a while, and he muſt needs live poore; for they that have nothing among their friends, may very well bee thought to have leſſe among ſtrangers; when hee returnes, hee muſt retire himſelfe into corners, for feare of Archilaus; and when he begins to ſhew himſelfe to the World, hee muſt beginne to combate with the divell; he is no ſooner baptized, but hee is tempted forty dayes together, without meate, without drinke, without ſleepe; and hee can no ſooner beginne to publiſh the glad tidings of ſalvation, but they preſently accuſe him of ſedition; His friends ſay he is madde, his enemies ſay he hath a divell; All ſeeke his life, and this is the ſumme of his whole life; Poverty and miſery, hunger, thirſt, weakeneſſe, wearineſſe, reproaches, lyings, ſlanders, and what not?

Mat. 2. 23.

Chap. 4. 2.

Iohn 8. 48.

Yet all theſe ſufferings were but flea-bitings, they were but taſtes of that bitter Cup, whereof he ſucked out the very dregges and all,

Chriſts chiefeſt ſufferings in theſe three ſpeciall places.

1. In the Garden of Gethſemane.
2. In the preſence of his Iudges.
3. In the Mount of Calverie.

Theſe were the places of his torments, and in all theſe places we muſt conſider, both the greatneſſe of his griefe, which is, Pœna ſenſus, the paine of feeling, and the ſmalneſſe of his comfort, which is Pœna damni, the paine of leeſing: And therefore by Gods aſſiſtance, I will chiefly inſiſt upon thoſe ſufferings that he ſuffered in theſe places. And

That Chriſt ſuffered both in ſoule and body. Iſay 53. 4.

Firſt, It is concluded of all Divines, that the ſufferings of Chriſt were both in ſoule and body; ſorrowes of ſoule, and paines of body; for He hath carried our ſorrowes, ſaith our Tranſlation; our paines, ſaith another; to ſhew, that whether we regard his diſconſolate ſoule, or his tender body, it was a painefull and a ſorrowfull ſuffering; ſo painefull, and ſo ſorrowfull, that as it was well-neere intollerable unto him, ſo it is almoſt incredible unto us; for though at the bringing of Chriſt into the world, to bee the Saviour and Redemer of his Church, the Prophet Eſay ſaith, How beautifull upon the mountaines, are the feet of them that bring theſe glad tidings of peace? that is, How ready is every man to embrace this newes; yet when he goeth about to expreſſe the manner of our deliverance, by ſuch ſorrowes, paines, and ſufferings, he makes a ſtand, and ſaith, Who beleeveth our report? For Iſay 52. 7.

Iſay 53 1.

The firſt degree of Chriſts ſuffering, was that hee was made paſſible

Firſt, I told you before, that this ſufferer was a God, bleſſed for ever; and the God-head is impaſſible; no ſorrow, no griefe, no paine could faſten upon the Deity; and therefore how could our Saviour ſuffer? To this the Prophet anſwereth, Sacrifice and burnt offerings thou wouldſt not have; σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι; but a body haſt thou ordained me, (as both the Septuagint and the Author to the Hebrewes hath it) Nam cum mortis aculeum, non poſſit accipere natura Deitatis; naſcendo tamen, ſuſcepit de nobis, quod pati poſſet pro nobis; For ſeeing the Deity could not ſuffer death, The Word was made Fleſh, that he might goe the way of all fleſh, and make a paſſage unto his Paſſion, that ſo he might really ſuffer, and not appeare to ſuffer, (as Saint Hillary, otherwiſe a moſt excellent Author, doth imagine;) And indeed Hoc primum tormentum, & magnum myſterium eſt, quod paſſibilis factus eſt; This was his firſt ſuffering of torment, and an unſpeakeable myſtery, that he was made able to ſuffer torments.

Leo Ser. 8 de Paſſione. Heb 10. 5.

Hilar. de Trin. l. 10

This flower ere it ſprang ſoorth began to fade; So was his Croſſe before his cradle made.

And becauſe I finde this, as pithily ſet downe, as it can be plainely expreſſed, by one of our owne Poets, which I therefore the oftener cite, becauſe I would incite all other Poets rather to ſpend their time in Divine Poems, then in leaud rimes or idle playes, (as now moſt uſe to do) I muſt crave leave to inſert here what he ſaith.

Fitz-Ieffery.

Think not that Chriſt did then begin to ſuffer
When Iudas ſold him, and the Iewes did offer
To apprehend him; for he did then begin
To make his ſoule a ſacrifice for ſin,

When

When he tooke body: and he began to die
Then, when assuming our mortality
He made himselfe one able to be slaine,
And put on man, which is, to put on paine.

That the Humanity onely suffered.

And we say that Christ suffered, not in respect of his Divine nature, but in respect of his humane nature; for though the Deity was in the sufferer, yet was it not in the suffering, though it was in the Body of Christs Passion, yet was it not in the Passion of Christs Body; but the humanity onely suffered, and the omnipotency of the Deity sustained the impotency of the Humanity; and while the flesh groaned under the anguish of his Passion, and cryed, Father, if it be possible, let this Cup passe from me, and so breathed out that mournefull complaint, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Yet then the Deity triumphed over all the bitternesse of death, and the enemies of our flesh: And this is excellently expressed by Damascen, saying; Quemadmodum si quis ignito ferro superinfundat aquam; Even as if a man should poure water upon a red-hot-iron, that which is passible or capable to suffer by the water, that is, the heat and fire, is extinguished; but the iron remaineth still sound, and impassible; because the water hath no power to corrupt it; even so the Humanity of Christ may suffer paine and death, but the Deity inseparably united unto the same, can notwithstanding suffer no manner of Passion. And

Mat. 26. 39.

Mat. 27. 46.

Damasc. l. 3. c. 26. de fide Orthodoxa.

Secondly, As it is a thing incomprehensible, (and therefore may well have a quis credidit? who hath beleeved our report?) that God should be made passible, so it is a thing more incredible that he being just, being King, being Priest, being God, should notwithstanding really suffer; yea, so to suffer, as to be destitute, afflicted, and tormented; and so tormented, that the Prophet Esay may fitly call him, Virum dolorum, A man of sorrowes, as if he had beene wholly composed of miseries, and the Prophet Ieremy truly demaund, Si fuerit dolor, sicut dolor suus? if ever there was any sorrow like unto his sorrow? yet behold he was oppressed and afflicted, saith the Prophet; and the Lord did afflict him in the day of the fiercenesse of his wrath: And therefore, let others wonder at the rising of this Sunne, I will admire his going downe; let them marvell, to see him layed in the cratch, I much more will marvell to see him nayled upon the Crosse; and let them admire to see him sleeping betwixt two beastes, and I will much more admire to see him suffering betwixt two theeves: But he was wounded for our transgressions, and he was bruised for our iniquities, saith the Prophet; and therefore, let us the rather give the more heed unto those things that he suffered for us, least the neglect and not regarding the same, shall adde wrath unto our soule, in the day of wrath.

Heb. 11. 39.

Lament. 1. 12.

Ibidem.

The consideration of Christs suffering admirable.

Well then, seeing the Son of God was made passible, apt to suffer, and that hee knew his time was drawing neere, that he must suffer, he went out of the house, out of the City, into the garden of Gethsemane, saith the Evangelist.

1 Why Christ went out of the house before he was taken.

First, He went out of the house where they had eaten the Passeover.

1 Reason.

First, Least his Host that had so kindly received him into his house, should any waies for his sake be unkindly used of his enemies; so sacred a thing was the law of guests among the ancients, that neither the Lodger nor the lodged would hurt each other, if they met in the open fields under the Colours of two deadly enemies: and therefore Lot offered his owne Daughters unto the Sodomites, rather then they should abuse those Strangers that were come under his roofe, and the Poet notes it, as an argument of the great perfidiousnesse of the most corrupted latter age, Non hospes ab hospite tutus, That there was no truth betwixt the Host and his Guest.

Valerius Maximus l. 5. c. 1.
Gen. 19.

The law of guests

Ovid. Met. l. 1.

2 Reason.

Secondly, Least (as Sertorius was found of Perpenna amongst his banquets) he might be accused to be a Wine bibber, and be said to be a boone-companion, and be a president of ill example unto others, if he had beene found in the Inne amongst his Guests; for it is a great deale fitter to finde a Scholler in his study, then in the Taverne.

Plutarch. in Sert.

2 Why Christ went out of the City.

Secondly, He went out of the Citie, out of that famous Citie Ierusalem.

1 Reason. Theophil. in Mar. 14.

First, Least any commotion or tumult should be raised; so dearely did this Prince of Peace affect and seeke to preserve the Peace of Ierusalem; for they would have taken him many times, but they feared the people; therefore he goeth out of the Citie, that they may doe it without feare, that is, without feare of sedition.

2 Reason. Lament. 1. 13.

Secondly, To shew, that as they had shut him out of their hearts; so now, hee begins to depart out of their walls; Egressus est à filia Sion omnis decor ejus; and so all the glory of Sion is departed from them, and as the Poet saith of Troy;

——Ruit Ilium, & ingens
gloria Teucrorum——

Luke 19. 44. We may say the same of Ierusalem; the time of her desolation draweth neere, and it must be made an heape of stones; Because now, God, which had beene the upholder of them, was gone out of their wals, and departed from them: and therefore we should ever take heed, that we shut not Christ out of our hearts, least hee will hereupon shut us out of his favour.

Excessere omnes, adytis arisque relictis, dis quibus imperium hoc steterat. Virgil.

Thirdly, He went into the Garden of Gethsemane.

3 Why Christ went into the Garden of Gethsemane. 1 Reason. 2 Reason.

First, That, as our fall was wrought in a garden, so the worke of our Redemption should first begin in a garden.

Secondly, That his enemies might the more easily finde him; for it was a place that he had often frequented, saith the Evangelist; and therefore hee went not there, as seeking to hide himselfe, but rather to expose himselfe, and like a noble Champion, to appeare first in the field, and to expect his enemies; for although they sought him like a Partridge upon the mountaines; yet, noluit dolo teneri, ne derogaretur præscientiæ plenitudo; Hee would not bee craftily taken in a net by a guile, least that might be derogatory to his omniscience: and therefore knowing they were desirous to take him, he goes to meete them into the garden of Gethsemane.

1 Of Christ his suffering in the Garden and what befell unto him there. Iohn 12. 27. Mar. 14. 33. Luke, 22. 44. Mat 26 38. Pro. 18. 14. Psal. 88. 3, 4.

And as soone as ever he came into the Garden, Ecce hostem invenit; behold his enemy was there as soone as he; for he began presently, Contristari, & pavere, & mœstus esse; To be troubled in soule, saith S. Iohn, to be in anguish of mind, saith S. Marke, and to be in an agony, saith S. Luke, and to have his soule exceeding sorrowfull unto death, saith S. Matthew.

Spem vultu simulat, premit altum corde dolorem. Virgil. Aeneid. l. 1

Alas, what shall we say to this? for the spirit of man will sustaine his infirmities, but a wounded spirit who can beare? yet behold his Spirit, his Soule is sorrowfull unto death and is counted with those that goe downe into the pit; no doubt but his Apostles saw it, yet like a barrell full and wanting vent, hee must needes burst forth, and confesse it; he doth not here Æneas-like dissemble his griefe with a fained countenance; his sorrow is greater then can be contained; for it is unto death, that is, not onely extensively, such as must continue for the space of seaventeene or eighteene houres, even untill death it selfe shall finish it; but also intensively, such and so great as that which is used to be at the very point of death, and such as were able to bring death unto me, were I not reserved to a greater and a heavier punishment.

The agony of Christ Mat. 26. 39.

And therefore he kneeled downe, and fell grovelling upon his face, and said, Father if it be possible, let this Cup passe from me; and there praying, he fell into a dreadfull agonie, his thoughts were troubled, his spirits affrighted, his heart trembled, his pores opened, Et totus sudore destuit, and he sweat great drops of bloud, that streamed downe to the ground: and so panting, he prayed, and sweating, still he prayed, and the more he was afflicted, the more he prayed, and fainted, as it were in the bathe of his owne bloud, weeping, not onely with his eyes, but even with all the members of his body, as Saint Bernard saith: and whereas in the distresses of other men, the bloud hath recourse unto the heart, to recreate and comfort the vital spirits, (which is the cause, that men are most pale when they are in most eminent danger) yet such was the violence of his agony, that it put him into a sweate of blood. And therfore the end of his Passion must needs be mournefull, when the Bern Serm.

beginning

beginning of it is ſo fearefull; and the cauſe of this agony muſt needs be ſupernaturall, when it proceeds ſo contrary to the courſe of nature; for it was in a cold ſeaſon, not farre from the equinoctiall, when the evenings are cold, through the aſcention of many vapours, in the open ayre, (and they were faine to make a fire within doores,) without any exerciſe, without any man neere him to offer him violence; and therefore naturally he ſhould be inclined to a cold chilly operation, rather then to a bloudy ſweating agony; yea not onely to ſweat ſome cold, thinne, faint ſweat, which is called ſudor diaphoreticus, but in ſuch abundance of great drops (ſaith the Evangeliſt) that they were able to die his garments with crimſon red, according as the Prophet Eſay ſaith, (though properly in another ſenſe, yet in ſome reſpect may be applyed to this) Wherefore art thou red in thine apparell, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the Wine-fat; And as the Chriſtian Poet Hovedemius ſaith, Eſay 63.2.

Cum cor ſentit amoris gladium,
Cruor carnis rubricat pallium,
When through love, his hearts-veine bled,
It dyed his garments crimſon red. Sudor fluit undiq; rivis, ſanguinea manant tanquam de vulnere guttæ. Lucan.

And that theſe drops did not onely diſtillare, drop out, but decurrere, runne and ſtreame downe ſo faſt to the ground, from all the pores of his body, as if they had iſſued out of moſt deadly wounds.

It is well obſerved, by our learned Biſhop of Wincheſter out of Saint Hierome, and the Chaldee paraphraſt, that the greatneſſe of his ſorrow melted him, ſo as if hee had ſtood by ſome burning furnace, which was able to caſt him into that ſweat, and to turne that ſweat into drops of bloud: and it appeares the rather, becauſe the Prophet Ieremy ſaith in the ſame place, that a fire was ſent into his bones, and that might well melt all his marrow, and cauſe the bloud to diſtill from his fleſh, and to trickle downe to the ground; O happy garden watered with ſuch teares; thou muſt needs ſurpaſſe the garden Eden, that was watered with foure goodly rivers; for this bloud of Chriſt doth ſpeake better things, and bring forth better fruits then the bloud of Abell; for that cryed out of the earth for vengeance againſt his brother; but this cryeth for mercy unto all the earth, even to his enemies; Father forgive them, for they know not what they doe: and whereas our fruitfull Land, (the Land of our hearts) was made barren, for the ſinne and iniquity of our fore-Father, to bring forth thornes and thiſtles (ſinnes and wickedneſſe) yet now being watered with theſe heavenly ſhowers of his bloud, hee maketh it very plenteous, to abound in all graee and godlineſſe; becauſe this was done for the ranſome of our ſins, and it was, as the Poet ſaith, Wynton. in Ser. ſup. Thren. 1. Chriſt melted with the fire of Gods wrath. Heb. 12. 24. Luk. 23. 34.

Deere ranſome, where the payment is in bloud,
Deere blood, where every drop out-values gold,
Deere drops, in whom lies more the creatures good,
Then ſelfe creations treaſure can unfolde:
Deere ranſome, deerer blood, moſt deereſt droppes
Whoſe price is life, which life death underproppes.

Queſt. But alas, what was the cauſe that ſhould make him ſo ſupernaturally to ſweat ſo ſtrangely, to kneele ſo devoutly, and to pray ſo earneſtly, that, if it were poſſible, that houre might paſſe from him? The cauſe of all paſſions to bee conſidered two waies.

Thomas Aquinas anſwereth, that the cauſe of all paſſion is to bee conſidered; either

{ 1. Ex parte objecti, In regard of the object. Or
{ 2. Ex parte ſubjecti, In reſpect of the ſubject.

That, as in the conception of gold in the bowels of the earth, there is Æſtus ſolaris, & ignis ſubterraneus, A concurrency of the heate of the Sunne from above, with a ſulphurious fire from below; So in the Paſſion of our Saviour Chriſt, we muſt know, that in reſpect of the object, he ſaw the Divine wrath from above, ready to be powred forth for the ſins of men; and in reſpect of the ſubject, he ſaw the Church, which was his body, ſo juſtly puniſhed by this wrath of God, and he ſaw all that puniſhment to alight on him, which had undertaken to ſatisfie Gods Iuſtice, and to free his members from everlaſting torments.

The cauſe of Chriſt his agony in the Garden.

And therefore no doubt but the cleere ſight, and the deepe conſideration of that Cup, which he was ſo ſheerely to drinke up, was the cauſe that made him both ſo vehemently to pray againſt it, and alſo in the vehemency of the feare of it, to be in ſuch perplexed agony, as thereby to ſweat the drops of blond.

CHAP. II.

Of that fearefull Cup, what it was, which our Saviour was to drinke of, and that hee ſo much feared and prayed againſt it.

What was the Cup which our Saviour was to drinke.

BVt what was this Cup, which he was to drinke of? we cannot eaſily determine. For

Some thinke this prayer, this feare, this agony proceeded onely from the weakeneſſe of his humanity, that was now, though not diſ-united, yet unaſſiſted of the Deity; and that they were chiefly effected, through the feare of that death, which ſo neerely approached; and therefore though they were uttered, as proceeding from Paſſion, or at leaſt from humane affection, yet were they preſently ſeaſoned, and as it were corrected, with more deliberate conſideration, when he ſaid, Not my will, but thine be fulfilled. But

To theſe men I anſwer; that, although Chriſt tooke our infirmities upon him, as well the ſpirituall Paſſions of the ſoule, as the corporall infirmities of the body, that is, all ſuch as are onely miſerable, but not damnable, penall, but not culpable, or thoſe that are painefull without ſinne, but not thoſe which are ſinnefull without paine, as both Damaſcen, Saint Auguſtine, and Aquinas, have moſt excellently obſerved; yet we ſay that theſe affections in Chriſt, doe much differ from ours, in three reſpects.

That the humane affections of Chriſt, differ from ours in three reſpects.

1 Reſpect.

Firſt, in reſpect of the object; for we many times feare, where there is no feare, and we doe love the things which wee ſhould deſpiſe; but hee onely feared the things that are to bee feared, and loved the things that are to bee loved indeed.

2 Reſpect.

Secondly, In reſpect of the manner; for will we, nill we, theſe affections will invade us; and when they have once taken hold upon us, we doe many times feare, and love, and hate, if not againſt reaſon, yet ſurely beyond, and beſide all reaſon; and ſo likewiſe, as we cannot guide them, ſo wee cannot leave them, when we would; but Chriſt is angry, rejoyceth, feareth, loveth, when, and where, and ſo much as juſt reaſon directeth him; for theſe affections maſter us, but he maſtereth them: and therefore Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that, poteſtate non infirmitate turbavit ſeipſum; Theſe affections are rather ſignes of his omnipotency then arguments of his infirmity; becauſe hee maſtereth their willingneſſe to oppreſſe him, when they cannot finde any weakeneſſe in him to bee oppreſſed.

Aug. in Johan.

3 Reſpect.

Thirdly, in reſpect of the effects; for our paſſions and affections blinde us, ſo that we cannot ſee the light of truth; as in them whom we love, we ſee no ſin, our love is blinde, and in them whom we hate, we can ſee no goodneſſe; for malitia eorum exœcavit eos, the malice of the wicked blindeth them, ſaith the wiſe man; and as the Poet ſaith of wrath,

(Impedit ira animum, ne poſſit cernere verum,)

That it blindeth our eyes, and diſturbeth our ſenſes, ſo as we know not what is what; So might I ſay of feare, of love, and of every other vehement paſſion, Non modo memoriam exentit, ſed & quodvis conſtitutum, & quemvis conatum impedit, Plutarch. in l. de Fortuna Alexand.

It

It doth not onely disturbe our memories, but it hindereth all our purposes and indevours; so that in respect of these, we forget many things and are hindered oftentimes to doe those duties, which our selves most of all desire to effect: and therefore the Psalmist, according to the vulgar Latine, saith, Timor & hebetudo mentis venerunt super me, & contexerunt me tenebræ; Fearefullnesse and trembling came upon me, and then darkenesse hath invirone'd me, or, an horrible dread hath over-whelmed me; and the reason hereof is truely rendred by the Philosopher; Quia potentiæ naturales intensæ, mutuò se impediunt; The naturall powers, stretched to the highest straine, doe mutually disturbe and hinder each other, to discharge their right functions; and therefore exceeding joy swalloweth up griefe; and so of all the rest; the more intentive we are to see any thing, the lesse able we are to heare any other thing; according to that vulgar saying;

Psal. 55 5.

Avicen. ser. nat. lib 6. c. 5.

Aristot. Ethic. l. 7. c. 14.

Pluribus intentus minor est ad singula sensus:
The sense intent to many things,
To each one truth it never brings.

But in Christ, they could never divert him from his desire, they could never darken his understanding, nor any waies hinder the execution of his Office; Neither could the concourse of many, yea, of most contrary passions and affections, as love and hatred, joy and griefe, and such like, any waies mitigate or stupifie the sharpenesse or lively-hood each of other; but that even now, when he most feareth this deadly Cup, he exceedingly rejoyceth at the benefits that he seeth shall accrew thereby.

That Christ feared not death.

And therefore, though I easily grant that nature it selfe abhorreth death, the soule and body being ever loth to part, and every thing desirous of life; yet that death should be thus feared, thus prayed against, and thus melt our Saviour Christ into such a bloudy sweat, I cannot willingly yeeld; For 1 Reason. Iohn 8.20.

First, Desiderio desideravit. With a longing desire did he wish his houre, and he calleth it his houre, as if in that houre he were to injoy his longing; and hee makes no more account of his death, then of his dipping in the water; for hee calleth the same a Baptisme, saying, I must be baptized with a baptisme, and how am I troubled till that be ended? that is, How am I pained and grieved, not because I must undergoe it, for that is my chiefest desire, but because I must stay yet a while, (Mine houre being not yet come,) before I may doe it: and therefore to this end, Quasi ambiens mortem, as one that would ever keepe himselfe in his enemies sight, or as one desirous to be dissolved, he goeth up unto Jerusalem, hee raiseth Lazarus from the dead, that, the wrath of the Jewes being stirred up by this present miracle, he might be the sooner condemned unto death, he biddeth Judas to doe quickely what he meant to do, (not commanding the Act, but as desiring the speedinesse of the Act, as Cajetan saith,) and knowing, that his houre was at hand, and his enemies neere, he saith unto his Disciples, Come, let us goe meete them, because they were not so desirous to take him, as he was to be taken by them: And therefore I cannot see, how, so much feare of death, as to cause such an agony, and such a greedy desire of death, can stand together, especially in such a person, whose Passions cannot invade him beyond the limits of his own Commission; but that we must ascribe farre greater matters to be the causes of this great and fearefull agony.

Luk. 12.15.

Iohn 2.4.

Iohn 11.

Iohn 13.27.

Mat. 26.46.

2 Reason.

Secondly, We see his Saints and servants not onely willing to die, but also running with Ignatius unto the beasts, and singing (with the Salamander) in the midst of the fire; and therefore shall wee thinke that this heavenly Physitian, which healed others, would not heale himselfe, and which strengthened others, to call, and cry for death, would thus vehemently pray and cry, onely for feare of death?

The Saints at their death were supported by God

But to this it is answered, that the Saints were supported by the power of his grace, and they were enabled by the helpe of his Spirit; and therefore no wonder though they desired it; but Christ, though hee was both God and Man, yet was he now left destitute of the helpe both of God and Man; for all his friends forsak't him, and the God-head himselfe, which was himselfe, did now sequester and withdraw all his helpe from this poore, destitute, and distressed man, Iesus Christ: and therefore no marvell that he being wholly left to himselfe, nay, not himselfe, but the humanity it selfe, should be thus moved and troubled at the sight of death.

Whether Christ was wholly destitute of all assistance from the Godhead.

I confesse, that although Martyres non eripuit, God did not deliver his Martyrs from death, yet nunquam deseruit, he did never forsake them at their death; but distilled still into their hearts abundant comforts of his heavenly Spirit; and it is most true that very much of the influence of Gods comfort, and of the comfortable beames of the Godhead, were now restrained from the assistance of the manhood of Christ, (as hereafter I shall more fully shew unto you) yet I say that all the divine comforts were not detained from him; for then the humanity could not have indured so great an agony, had it not been somwhat sustained by the Deity; nay be it so, (as some would have it) that his soule was even as scorched heath-ground, without so much as any one drop of the dew of divine comfort; yet I say he was not deprived of his reasonable soule, but he had all the powers and faculties of reason and understanding in a farre more excellent measure than any other man whatsoever; and these faculties were not disturbed nor any wayes darkened with the vehemency of any passions, as I shewed unto you before; and therefore I cannot see how the feare of a naturall death onely could so exceedingly affright him, as to make him so earnestly to pray against the same; for we find, that even naturall men, not knowing God, and therefore not guided by the light of the Spirit of God, do, and have by the light of humane reason, made light account of death; and yet you see Christ, a man of perfect knowledge as man, so much as man could have, is here grievously troubled, and vehemently affrighted at the consideration of that cup which he was to drink of: and therefore that cup did containe a great deal more than that little draught of naturall death. And Winton. in Pass. Ser sup. Thren. 1. p. 3.

The faculties of Christ his soule not distempered.

Heb. 5.7. That Christ was heard, and therefore delivered from what he feared.

Thirdly, the Apostle unto the Hebrewes saith, that when Christ offered up prayers and supplications, with strong cryings and teares, unto him that was able to save him from death, he was heard in that which he feared, or, for his piety, as the originall hath it: Now this must be referred unto his fervent prayer, and those bloudy teares in the garden; for we do not read, that in any place els, he did offer the like prayers and teares unto God: and therefore, seeing he was heard, that is, so heard that he obtained his request, præ reverentia, for his modesty, or for the respect that God had unto him, and was delivered from that which he feared, it must needs be, that it was not his own naturall death, that he so much feared, and so earnestly prayed against it; for, from this he was not delivered, but he suffered, died, and was buried.

Psal. 75.9. That Christ was to undergo the punishment of all others.

And therefore, as the Prophet David saith, In the hand of the Lord there is a cup, the wine is red, it is full mixt, as for the dregs thereof, all the ungodly of the earth shall drinke them and sucke them out; so I say of this Cup of Christ, it is a Cup of many ingredients, it is full red, and it hath many dregs; and although in this good servant there was found no sinne; yet seeing he was contented to undergoe the punishments of all bad servants, and to suffer the just deserts of all the ungodly; therefore he must drinke and sucke up the very dregs of this Cup; and yet if we duly observe it, we shall see, that he was heard in that which he feared; for though he drinks it up sheere, yet it shall clearely passe from him; and his prayer was no more; for he prayed not, that he might not drinke of it, but that it might passe from him, even as a man that drinketh a cup of poyson, and yet thereby is not poysoned; and so it did with Christ; he dranke up all; and yet it did him no hurt at all; for though it made him sweat the drops of bloud, though it grieved him and pained him, and made him cry out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? yea, though it cast him into a sleepe, and laid him dead in his grave, and there sealed him for a time; yet presently within the space of forty houres, or thereabouts, he revived and awaked, as a Lion out of sleepe, or, as a giant refreshed with wine, and then he smote all his enemies upon the cheeke-bone, and

Mat. 27.46.

Psal. 78.65, 69.

put put them to a perpetuall shame; and through that short and momentary death of his, he purchased unto his Church everlasting life.

And therefore, seeing this cup which Christ feared, was not onely that little draught of naturall death, which was but the least drop thereof, but was a cup of many ingredients, let us (so farre as we may gather it out of the Word of God) observe and learne, what those ingredients might be, which were contained in that Cup, that so we may the better know what he suffered, and what he prayed against.

CHAP. III.

Of diverse particular things that were in that Cup which our Saviour dranke of.

AND if we diligently search into the particulars, we shall find, that therein might be

First, some things that he grieved at, which troubled him: And Secondly, some things that he feared, which he prayed against. For

There be great differences betwixt πὼ λύπην, griefe, and τὸν φόβον feare, and betwixt the causes of sorrow and feare; for the object of sorrow and griefe may be as well evill past, as the paine present; but the object of feare is only evill to come, or that which is present, but as yet not wholly passed over, feare alwaies going before the paine, sorrow and griefe following after; and yet I say that the same things now in Christ might, and did worke both feare and griefe; because he fore-saw those things that were to come, as present, or as already past: and therfore he feared them as things to come, and be grieved for them, as if they had been already past.

The difference betwixt feare and sorrow or griefe.

The same things might cause feare and griefe in Christ.

Of the first sort, that is, of the things that might grieve him, there were some things,

1 What Christ grieved at.

{1 In respect of himselfe. 2 In respect of others.} And

{1 In respect of himselfe, he fore-saw these two things. {1 The greatnesse of his paine and shame. 2 The deferring of his death and punishment.
2 In respect of others, he fore-saw likewise these two things.

That is, {1 The small account that they would make of so great a worke. 2 The greatnesse of that punishment, which they must suffer for this smallnesse of their account.

And would not these things grieve a man, especially such a man as he was, think you?

Of the second sort there were especially three things that might affright him.

2 What Christ feared.

viz. {1 The waight of sinne. 2 The malice of Satan. 3 The wrath of God.}

And would not these enemies, so many in number, so mighty in power, and so terrible to behold, make a man to feare, to tremble and to sweat? And yet from all these he was delivered, and so, as the Apostle saith, He was heard in that which he feared.

But to speake of these a little more particularly. And

First, he fore-saw in respect of himselfe, that he should indure Supplicium quo nullum majus, & opprobrium quo nullum vilius, a punishment, than which there could not be greater, and a shame, than which there could not be viler; the first (which was but the least thing that grieved him) yet it caused a collucta-tion of the flesh with paine, with death; because the flesh naturally is desirous to escape them both, Et omnium terribilium terribilissimum est mors, and of all terrible things death is the most terrible thing, saith the Philosopher; and therefore the 1 What Christ fore-saw in respect of himselfe.

1 His sufferings, as First, his punishment. Arist. 3. Ethic.

Secondly, his shame. The shamefull handling of Christ was more grieveus unto him than all his corporall sufferings.

the very remembrance of the same, must needs bring a terrour, at least a griefe unto flesh and bloud: And the second, (which was the shamefull things that were to be done unto him, as to be scorned and scoffed, accounted as wicked, taken by the wicked, and condemned with the wicked, and so shamefully handled, shamefully deemed, shamefully dying) did a great deale more perplexe and grieve him than the former; any man wishing rather to die, than to suffer shame; shame being a greater punishment unto the mind and soule, than any torture can be unto the flesh; for nature (cleane contrary to the course of the world, which alwaies taketh part with the stronger side, and layeth helpe upon them that are mighty) useth alwaies to assist the weaker part, as it appeareth plainly in the letting of bloud in the arme, or in any other place; for then nature, as it doth still send the bloud, Quasi agmine facto, as it were on heapes, from all the parts of the body thither, untill the said rupture be stopped up againe; and so likewise, when the heart of man, which is the seat of feare, begins to be troubled with any vehement or horrible feare, then will nature presently collect the bloud about the same, for to assist it, whereby the face is left pale, and all the exteriour parts, as it were void of life; and when the face of man, which is the seat of shamefastnesse and honesty, is aspersed with shame and reproach, then presently the bloud relinquisheth all the interiour parts, and gathers it selfe unto the face, as to that part which now hath most need to be sustained, whereby we truly say, that Pallor timentium, rubor erubescentium est signum, to blush is the signe of shame, and to be pale, is an argument of feare.

Nature alwaies relieveth the part most distressed.

Paleness and blushing what signes.

And therefore, though the feare of his punishment and of death did nearely touch him, yet to shew that the consideration of this most shamefull handling of him, did more perplexe him, his bloud did not collect it selfe unto the heart, (though the same was much affrighted) but leaving the heart, as it were destitute of all helpe, it flew into his face, as unto that part, which for shame of their despightfull usage of him, had most need to be assisted, and from thence, as the precious ointment that was powred upon Aarons head, ran downe unto his beard, and from thence unto the skirts of his cloathing; so this precious bloud of Christ gushing out chiefly at his face, did plentifully trickle down to the ground.

a The deferring of his suffering much grieved our Saviour.

Secondly, as the consideration and foresight of these things did much grieve him; so the dilation and deferring of them, did not a little trouble him; for as the Poet saith;

Morsq; minus pœnæ quam mora mortis habet.

The expectation of death, is many times more grievous unto the affrighted flesh, than death it selfe; so was the dilation of that good, which was to proceed from his death, a great deale more grievous unto him, than many deaths; for he was most greedy of our salvation, and as the horse made ready unto the battell, and hearing the Trumpets sounding,

Virg. l. 4 Æneid. Hope doth sustain the heart, yet none so great a paine, As for to hope the things we languish to obtaine.

(Stare loco nescit, micat auribus, & tremit artus, ——& fræna ferox spumantia mandit:)

Doth fume and fome, and cannot stand, but still striveth to go forward; so Christ, having this baptisme to be baptized with, was exceedingly pained, untill that was ended; Quia spes, quæ differtur, affligit animam, because (as Salomon saith) hope deferred, or expectation prolonged, languisheth the soule; and therefore as Jonas said, Iratscor usq; ad mortem, I am exceedingly angry, even unto death, that is, because death comes not to me; for I do seeke for death, and it flies from me; so Christ was grieved unto death, Non ex metu mortis suæ, sed ex mora redemptionis nostræ; not for any feare of his owne death, but by reason of the delaying of our deliverance from everlasting death, as Saint Ambrose saith.

Ambros. Luc. c. 7.

b What Christ fore-saw in respect of us. First, he neglecting of his bloud,

Secondly, as he fore-saw these things, in respect of himselfe, so in respect of others he fore-saw,

First; the small account that many men would make of this his so great a suffering; for he saw how few would imbrace it, and how many would contemne it;

and

and therefore when he considered with himselfe, Quæ utilitas in sanguine suo, what profit might accrew from his bloud, knowing that the least drop of it was of sufficient value to save the whole world; and yet, by reason of the iniquity and incredulity of men, that all of it, being spilt and shed, it should notwithstanding save but a remnant, and a small company of men; it could not chuse but grieve and vexe his righteous soule to see his bloud spilt in vaine; for would it not grieve any man to pay an infinite price to save a base slave from death, and to see that villaine presently cast himselfe to death, and with all his strength and wit to seeke the death of his Redeemer? This was the case of Christ; for he was willing to redeeme us with his owne most precious bloud; and yet he saw the wicked would trample this benefit under foot, and account the bloud of the covenant as an unholy thing, and make none other use of it, but most fearefully to sweare by it, and abuse it, and so bring upon themselves swift damnation: and therefore seeing every sin grieves God, this must grieve him most of all. Heb. 10. 29.

O then beloved brethren, seeing that as it grieveth the husbandman, to see his ground well manured, still continuing barren; so it is a grief to Christ, to see his bloud grow fruitlesse, and seeing that it is a joy to him, (by our conversion) to see the fruits of his labours; O let us never cause him to say, In vacuum laboravi, I have laboured in vaine; but let us truly repent us of our sinnes, and faithfully lay hold of his death, that so both the Angels and this Lord of Angels may rejoyce. Esa. 49. 4.

Secondly, he fore-saw the great punishment and adversity that should light upon many men, and upon many sorts of men, for, and by meanes of this his sufferings and his cruell death. As 2 The punishments for his death.

First, upon his owne Disciples and dearest Apostles; for I will smite the shepheard, and all the sheepe shall be scattered, saith the Prophet; here judgement begins at the house of God; these sheep must be scattered, and so they were; for all of them did perfidiously forsake him, and the stoutest of them did plainely forsweare him; and yet he warned them of it, and he told Peter of his infirmity, but he vaunted of his magnanimity; he told him that he should deny him thrice, but he said he would rather die than deny him at all; and he willed them all to watch, but they all gave themselves to sleepe; and therefore S. Hillary saith, that Christ, Non pro se tristis erat, neq; sibi orat, sed pro illis quos movet orare pervigiles, was more sorry for them than for himselfe; and he prayed not so much for himselfe, as he did for them whom he commanded to watch and pray; And S. Ambrose saith, Quod discipuli dormiunt, & nesciunt dolere, pro quibus Christus dolebat; that his Disciples slept, and knew not how to grieve, for whom Christ did so much grieve, to see that he did so much for them, and they so little regarded him, and so little regarded their owne soules, that had he not prayed for them, that their faith should not faile, Satan had not only sifted them all like wheat, but he would have also blowne them away like chaffe from off the face of the earth. 1 The dispersion of the Apostles. Zach. 13. 7. 2 Pet. 4. 19. Mat. 26. 34, 35. Hillar l. 10 de Trin. Amb l. 10. in Luc.

Secondly, upon that curst nation of the Iewes; for he fore-saw how that their glorious Temple, which was the joy of the whole earth, should be subverted, their houses ruinated, themselves slaughtered, and die, some with cruell famine, and some with the raging Sword, Psal 48. 2.

——Ante ora patrum
——Solymæ sub mœnibus altis.

Perhaps in their mothers armes, or before their parents faces, under the very wals, and in the spatious streets of Ierusalem, which should be made an heape of stones: and therefore S. Ambrose and S. Augustine say, Quod tristis erat pro persecutoribus; that as heretofore he wept over Ierusalem, when he considered of her subversion; so now it grieveth him, that this wicked nation, whom he had chosen as peculiar unto himselfe, of all the nations of the earth, should by their nefarious handling of him, pull down such fearefull punishments upon themselves; because indeed it grieveth God, The rejection of the Iewes. Amb l. 10. in Luc. Aug. in Psal. 85.

Quoties

——Quoties cogitur esse ferox;

Whensoever by our sinnes we do compell him to powre out the viall of his vengeance upon our selves.

1 The condemnation of all those that would not believe in him.

Thirdly, upon all the rest of the generation of men, that would not lay hold upon this his precious death; for he knew full well, that not the least drop of his bloud should fall to the ground, but it should bring forth fruit, either to satisfie Gods justice, and to pacifie his Fathers wrath against all believers in him, or els to kindle his indignation against all contemners of him; for whosoever will not lay hold on the benefits of his passion for his salvation, he shall be sure to be accountable unto God for all his sufferings, to his further condemnation; because thy sins did cause them, and for thy redemption he indured them: And because he saw so many millions of men that would rather (as we do) crucifie againe this Sonne of God, and make a mocke of him, and so tread him under feet, rather than lay hold upon his death, by the hand of faith; therefore it much grieved him that this great price, which he so lovingly offered for our redemption, should through our owne negligence and wickednesse, so fearfully redound to our further and greater condemnation.

Heb.6.6.

And these be the things which he grieved at; the greatnesse of which griefe, to see his own miseries, so unjustly inflicted on him, and the punishment of the wicked so justly imposed upon them, combating with the greatnesse of his joy, to see hereby the wrath of his Father appeased, and the eternall salvation of his Church purchased, might very well bring him into his grievous-sweating-bloudy-agony: And yet

2 The things which our Saviour feared.

Secondly, those things which he feared, were more grievous things to behold, and more intolerable things to indure than these; For

1 The waight of sinne. Zach.5.7.

First, he saw the waight of sinne, or of that punishment which every sinne deserveth, and which he was now to undergo; and this he knew to be most insupportable; for every sinne is like a talent of lead, that presseth downe the bearer, even as a Cart is pressed that is full of sheaves; the very earth it selfe is not able to beare the waight of sinne, but groaneth under the same unto this very day: and therefore the Prophet David saith, that his iniquities were like a sore burthen, too heavy for him to beare; But upon Christ was laid the iniquities of us all; and he was to make a full satisfaction for them all; and he saw that no sinne could be pardoned without great sorrow, without great paine; for as no sinne is committed, but that first it is in the mind and soule, before it proceedeth out of the body; and the rule of justice requireth, Ut per quæ quis peccat, per hæc & torqueretur; & ut inde inciperet pœna, unde incipit crimen; that by which a man sinneth, by that he should be punished, and this punishment should there begin where his sinne began; therefore seeing we our selves were neither able nor willing to sorrow sufficiently for our sinnes, he began to be troubled and grieved in mind, and to be exceedingly sorrowfull for us; and so Aquinas saith, Christus non tantum doluit de amissione vitæ temporalis, quantum de peccatis omnium aliorum; Christ did not grieve so much for the losse of his own life, as he did for our sinnes; and so S. Ambrose saith, Mihi compatitur, mihi tristis est, mihi dolet, quia pro se nihil habuit quod doleret; he pitieth me, he is sad for me, because he had nothing and he did nothing, that he should be grieved at it for himselfe: and therefore he bewailed and was grieved at, Non supplicia sua, sed vulnera nostra, not so much his owne death, as our sinnes; and because, as we not knowing the greatnesse of sinne, do not know the greatnesse of that sorrow that we owe for sinne; so Christ, knowing both, and being to undergo the sorrow of all sinnes, he did exceedingly sorrow and grieve; Et magna ut mare contritia tua; and his griefe was like an Ocean, Sea, bottomlesse and boundlesse: And therefore what marvell if he did exceedingly feare, sweat, and prostrate thus himselfe upon his face, to pray to be delivered from such a griefe and such a burden? for as the Poet saith,

Rom 8. Psal.37.

Optat. de lapsi.

Amb. de fide l.2. c.3.

Thren.2.13.

——Gemit sub pondere currus;

Gemit

——— Gemit sub pondere tellus.

The strongest pillars must needs bow, if you lay more waight upon them than they are able to beare: And as another saith,

Atlas en ipse laborat:

Atlas or Hercules cannot sustaine more than they are able.

Secondly, he saw the malice of Satan, and his full leave and license, not as it was to Iob, with limitation, do what thou wilt, but save his life; but without restriction, the whole power of darknesse was let loose to use all his violence, and to afflict him what he could; and this our Saviour intimateth, when he saith, that the prince of this world commeth and calleth that houre, the houre of the power of darknesse: And he knew his power to be very great, and his malice to be nothing lesse than his power; and therefore he might well feare and pray against the same. 2 The malice of Satan. Iohn 14.33.

Thirdly, he saw the wrath of God so infinitely kindled against every sinne of man, and (as it is agreed upon by all Divines) he now saw God sitting in judgement upon the world; for so the words of our Saviour sheweth; Now, that is, even at hand, is the judgement of this world, and the prince of this world shall be cast out; and he saw himselfe bearing the sins of all men, standing before this judgement-seat of God, and to undergo all the punishments due to man, that so he might satisfie the justice of God for us; and he knew that it was a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the living God; for the Lord our God (saith Moses) is a consuming fire; and therefore, as the Prophet saith, My flesh trembleth for feare of thee, and I am afraid of thy judgements; so what marvell is it, if the manhood of our Saviour Christ, seeing the Majesty of God, and the greatnesse of his fury against sin, and it selfe now to answer for all sinnes, was brought into this fearfull agony, and was thereby moved, so earnestly to pray to God? 3 The wrath of God. Iohn 12.31. Deut. 4.24.

First, against eternall malediction in the behalfe of all his Church.

Secondly, against the insupportable burden of corporall castigation, in respect of himselfe; For What Christ prayed against.

First, he saw that eternall damnation was due to us for our transgressions; and he now, in us and for us, stood to be arraigned, and we in him stood to be punished; and therefore as he said to Saul, Saul, Saul, Why persecutest thou me? when his Church onely, and not Himselfe was persecuted; so here he saith, Let this cup passe from me, that is, from me and mine, from me and all my Church, which is my Body, which is my Selfe; for this is vox Ecclesia in Christo, the voice of the Church uttered by Christ, or els vox Christi in Ecclesia, the voice of Christ, spoken in the behalfe of his Church; because now the Church was comprised in his Body, in which it was crucified, buried, and raised together with him, as the Apostle teacheth. 1 Eternall malediction. Gal. 2. Rom 6. Col. 3.

Secondly, he saw that his humanity, which was to suffer the just punishments of all sins, inflicted by the malice of the divell, for the satisfying of the wrath of God, was but flesh and bloud, fraile, and weake: and therefore he might well feare and pray, that God would not lay heavier punishments upon him, than his patience and obedience could indure; and so the meaning of this prayer, let this cup passe from me, should be this, viz. let it not oppresse me; for so the words immediately following seem to shew, Not my will, but thy will be fulfilled; as if he should have said, my desire is not that it should so passe from me; as that I do not drink of it at all, and so not fulfill thy will, but that I drinking of it, to fulfill thy will, may notwithstanding be not oppressed, not subverted, not wholly swallowed by it, that it may so passe from me, as a cup of deadly poyson, that is wholly drunke up, and yet is at last quite voided without the finall fall or death of the drinker. 2 Insupportable castigation. That God would lay no more punishment upon him than his manhood should be able to support.

And these are the things that he feared, and he was heard, ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας, in that which he feared, saith the vulgar Latine, or præ reverentia: for the reverence and respect had of him, as Oecumenius and Saint Chrysostome do interpret it; God laying on him but supportable paines, and delivering his Church from Heb. 5.7.

inſupportable puniſhments: And this was the beginning of his ſufferings, in the Garden of Gethſemane.

CHAP. IV.

Of the treaſon of Iudas, of the flight of all his followers, and of the taking and binding of Ieſus Chriſt.

Three ſpeciall things that happened in the Garden after his agony.

AFter that our Saviour had thus prepared himſelfe for death by prayer, we find three ſpeciall things that befell him in that very garden of Gethſemane.

That is, { 1 The treaſon of Iudas. 2 The flight of his followers. 3 The taking and binding of him. }

1 The treaſon of Iudas.

For the firſt, we ſhall the better underſtand it, if we conſider theſe three points.

viz. { 1 What Chriſt had done for Iudas. 2 Why Iudas betrayed Chriſt. 3 How he betrayed him. } And

1 What Chriſt did for Iudas.

A brief catalogue of thoſe benefits that Chriſt did for Iudas. Aug. Ser. 28 ad fratres.

Firſt, S. Auguſtine collecteth the ſumme of thoſe favours, that Chriſt had conferred on Iudas, as the healing of his father from his leproſie, and his mother, with whom he is ſaid to have often committed moſt odious inceſt, from the palſie, the chooſing of him to be one of his twelve Apoſtles, the appointing of him to be his purſe-bearer, and to keep all the wealth he had, the preſerving of his life, when he with the reſt of his fellowes, were well-nigh drowned in the ſhip, the concealing of his theft and falſhood, which our Saviour often knew, to ſalve his credit, the giving unto him of his bleſſed Body and Bloud, the waſhing of his feet, the fore-warning of him of his fact, that he might pray for grace to preſerve him from the divell, and many more benefits of leſſer note, which ſhould have eternally obliged him unto Chriſt.

Queſt. But here it may be demanded, why our Saviour, knowing him to be ſo wicked, and that he would betray him, would chooſe him to be his Apoſtle?

Why Chriſt did chooſe Iudas to be his Apoſtle. 1 Reaſon.

Reſp. I anſwer, that Chriſt did it for diverſe reaſons, as ſpecially theſe.

Firſt, that it might be no prejudice, or cauſe of upbraiding good men, that wicked men ſhould be of the ſame calling or profeſſion; for it is uſuall in the world, to twit us, with the wickedneſſe of our fellowes; none ſo covetous, none ſo contentious, (ſay the people) as your Preachers be; alas, if ſome be ſo, we cannot help it; there was a Cain in Adams houſe, and a Cham in Noahs Arke, and here a Iudas among the twelve Apoſtles; and therfore among ſo many of us, what marvell that there ſhould be many evill? But do you look, that you condemne not the righteous with the wicked, or grieve the good by upbraiding them with the faults of the bad.

2 Reaſon. Nazian. Orat. 4. de Theol.

Secondly, to ſhew unto us, that men may be called to eminent and holy places, and yet be caſt-awayes; becauſe it is not the excellency, or the ſanctity of the calling, but our holy and upright converſation in our callings, that makes us acceptable in the ſight of God.

3 Reaſon.

Thirdly, to teſtifie Chriſt his innocency, that had alwaies his enemy, to behold his converſation.

4 Reaſon. Aug. l. 18. c. 49. de Civit. Dei.

Fourthly, for our example, to be patient to ſuffer wicked men amongſt us, when we cannot otherwiſe chuſe while we live on earth.

Thom in Ioh 12.

But againe, it may be demaunded, why he made him his purſe-bearer, knowing him to be a thiefe?

Why Chriſt made Iudas his purſe-bearer.

To this Aquinas anſwereth, that God uſeth to commit his ſpirituall graces, to his beſt ſervants, and his temporall gifts to thoſe that are more worldly-minded, to ſee if by any means, he may gain them to ſerve him; for the worldlings will ſerve God many times, when God bleſſeth them with all manner of ſtore; therefore Chriſt, knowing Iudas to be a covetous wretch, made him his ſteward, & cõmitted to to his hands all their wealth, to see if this might move him to be true and faithfull vnto him; all this Christ did for him; and yet as the proverb is, Improbus à nullo flectitur obsequio, saue a thiefe from the gallowes, and he will be the first that will seeke to hang thee; so Iudas had put all these blessings in a riven dish, and as the Leopard is said to be most savage vnto them that do most good to him, so doth Iudas here, first betray his Master, that was his best friend, and had done most good vnto him; But we must consider

The nature of the Leopard.

Secondly, why Iudas betrayed Christ? I answer, because he was a most lewd, vicious, and malicious fellow; of whom I may justly say, a Why Iudas betrayed Christ.

Cor excors, anima exanimis, sibi lingua bilinguis,
Frons effrons, amens mens, malesida fides. And

The Evangelist sheweth as plainly as he doth briefly, that because the oyntment, which was powred on Christ was not sold for three hundred pence, and put into his bag, he went vnto the high Priests, and sels Christ for thirty pence; decorum pretium, a goodly price to have for the Lord of heaven and earth: And therefore cleane contrary we read that thirty Iewes were sold for one penny; but for Iudas, we see how the desire of money is the root of all evill; remember what the Poet writes;

Lex talionis.

——— Quid non mortalia pectora cogit
Auri sacra fames?

What an horrible sin is coveteusnes

Or as Iuvenal saith, as briefly as he doth wittily,

——qua reverentia legum,
Quis metus aut pudor est unquam properantis avari?

Iuven Sat. 14.

What will not covetousnesse cause a man to do? What feare of Law, what love of vertue, what shame or honesty can you find in covetous wretches? For, it made Achan hide the wedge of gold, to the losse of his owne life; it made Ahab a murtherer of innocent Naboth; it made Polymnester kill his own nephew Polydorus; and here it makes Iudas to betray his own Lord and Master Iesus Christ, yea, and to be the formost man of all the wicked company to attach his Master, and to shew withall, that, as the old distich saith,

Bern. 2. 5. Nam sævior igni-bus Æstus, servens amor ardet habendi

Non audet stygius dæmon tentare, quod audet
Effrænus monachus, plenaq; fraudis anus:

None is so bad as a lewd Monk, or a wicked Priest; for they are like Ieremies figs, either exceeding good, or extreame evill; either most faithfull for Christ, or most fervent for Antichrist; and yet this unhappy fellow had no reason to give himselfe thus to sin, nor any motive to induce him to dare to steale as he did; for if we consider all circumstances, we shall find that in the house, where he remained, there was poverty; in the company that he went with, there was patience; in the mother which he served, there was humility; and in the master which he had, there raigned charity, and care, that none of his followers should want any thing; and yet for all this, covetousnesse makes Iudas to commit such wickednesse in the house of holinesse; and therefore we can never hope that he would be good in the company of the divell, which was so bad in the society of Christ.

Ier. 14 2.

Thirdly, the Evangelist tels us how he did bring to passe his wicked fact; for he gave them a signe, that whosoever he should kisse, the same was he; and we find that there are six kinds of kisses.

3 How Iudas betrayed Christ.

That there are six kinds of kisses.

The first a whorish kisse; as Salomon saith of the harlot, that she caught a young man, and kissed him.

1 Carnalitatis. Pro. 7. 13.

The second, a chast kisse, as Iacob kissed Rachael.

2 Charitatis. Gen. 29. 11.

The third is a kisse of curtesie, as our Saviour said unto Simon the Pharisee, Thou gavest me no kisse.

2 Humanitatis. Luke 7. 45.

The fourth is a Symbolicall kisse, for a signe of love, as the Apostle saith, greet one

4 Fraternitatis. 2 Cor. 13. 12.

Aretius in loc.

another with an holy kisse; which kisse, Aretius calleth, catholica unionis signum, a most excellent signe and representation of that catholique love and mysticall union of all the faithfull members of Iesus Christ; and though there may be many tokens and testifications of love, as a chearfull countenance, reaching the hand, joyning of armes, or the like, yet is there none so lively or so lovely as the kisse.

5 Calliditas.
2 Sam. 20 9.
2 Sam 15.5.
Sueton. in vit. Neronis cap. 34.
6 Crudelitatis.

The fift is a crafty kisse, as Absolon gave to all the men of Israel that came to his Father David for judgement, but to this end, that he might steale away their hearts from their King.

The sixt is a treacherous kisse, as Nero pupillas matris osculatus est, kissed the paps of his mother, when he was fully resolved to murder her; or as Ioab kissed Amasa, and presently killed him whom he kissed; and thus Iudas kissed Christ, for he had said, Whomsoever I shall kisse, the same is he, hold him fast: Where observe,

Why Iudas gave them a signe.
Ignat in Ep. ad Iob. & vera Ep. Ignat.

First, that he gave them a signe to know him; because it was night when they took him, and because Iames that was called the brother of the Lord, and was afterward Bishop of Ierusalem, was so like him, that it was very hard to know the one from the other,

Os humerosq; Deo similis,——

So like him both in complexion and condition, and in the whole proportion of his body, as if they had been twins of the same wombe, and therefore he was called the brother of the Lord, as S. Hierom saith: And for this cause, lest they should mistake him, and take Iames or some other for him, he gave them a signe to know him.

Hieron. in Gal. 2.

Why the signe that Iudas gave was a kisse.
Beda in Mar 14. Retinens aliquid verecundiæ, non accepit signum violentiæ sed amoris. Plaut. Captiu.

Secondly, that this signe was a kisse, not, as Bede thinketh, retinere aliquid verecundiæ, to use the token of love, and not of violence, for very shame to commit so hainous an offence; for questionlesse, he was past all shame, or els he would never have attempted so shamefull a fact; but he used rather so usuall a thing, to this unusuall end, that he might the more cunningly work his purpose; Nam doli non sunt dati, nisi astu calas; for deceits are no deceits, unlesse they be cunningly carried, and that if this way failed, he might, as he thought, have still retained his place and credit, because he had but dutifully saluted him: And therefore he comes and kissed him, saying, Ave Rabbi, Master, God save you; but herein we see,

Two things observable in this act of Iudas.

1 His arrogancy.
2 His iniquity.
} And

1 His arrogancy.

First, his arrogancy, that he would presume with those lips, under which was the poyson of Aspes, to kisse those lips, in which was found no guile, and joyne that mouth, which was the gate whereat Satan entred, to that mouth, which was the dore whereat the Oracles of God were uttered. Iohn Baptist thought himselfe unworthy to untie the latchet of his shooes, and Iudas will presume to kisse his mouth; and Mary Magdalen thought her selfe sufficiently honoured, to be admitted to stand behind him, and to kisse his feet; yet this bold and insolent traytor will profanely aime at his sacred lips, which instruct the Angels, and distill grace to men; but you may behold the different Issues, and the diverse successe of these kisses; for she that falleth at his feet is received, and he that flieth at his lips, is rejected; she is saved, and he is reproved; and the reason is rendred by Didacus Stella, Quia humiles ad Deum accedentes justificantur, & elati superbia damnantur; because the sinner, that commeth to Christ in humility, shall be justified, when the iustest Pharisee that comes in pride and arrogancy, shall be condemned; and yet all wicked men are ever more presumptuous than the godly, and they are bold and impudent, when the Saints do feare and tremble.

Luke 7 38.
The different behaviour of the Saints and of the wicked, and the different successe.

Did. Stella in loc.

2 His iniquity.

Secondly, his iniquity is herein seene, that in two words he uttereth forth two lies; for he saith, Ave, God save you, to him, whom he desired to perish; and he saith, Rabbi, Master, to him whom he refused to follow; and so you see sweet words, from a poysoned heart; a praying for his life, and a betraying of him to death: and here you may remember what Homer saith,

Ex Spes

Ἐχθρὸς γὸ μοι κεῖνϑ ὁμῶς αἰδαο πύλῃσιν,
Ὅϛ ἕτερον μὲν κεύϑει ἐνὶ φρεσιν ἄλλο δ εἴπη.

That is,

Ille mihi tam exosus est, quam inferni portæ,
Qui aliud animo occultat, aliud ore profert.

Or, as another tranſlateth it,

Tam gravis ille mihi nigri quam limina ditis,
Ore aliud qui fert, aliud ſub pectore celat;

Which I find thus turned into Engliſh,

As dale of death, ſo do I hate that kind;
Whoſe tongue from thought, whoſe mouth diſſents from mind.

Whereby all the world may ſee that this fact of Iudas is an act ſo horribly baſe, that the very Heathen man could ſay, he hates him as the gates of hell, becauſe he will ſay one thing and do another thing.

How our our Saviour ſought to reclaime Iudas, and to bring him to repentance.

And yet behold how our Saviour deales with this wicked Traitor; he kiſſeth him with the kiſſes of his mouth; and what greater ſigne of love? And whereas he might have angrily and juſtly reviled him for his treachery, he doth mildly and kindly ſalute him, by the name of friend; and what better name could he uſe? for Father, Wife, or Children, are but vaine names, unleſſe they be friends, I know when theſe have been deadly enemies, but a friend is above all.

O then, { Si honoras, dulcis Domine, / Inimicum, amici nomine, / Quales erunt, amoris carmine / Qui te canunt & modulamine? }

But ſweet Lord, if thou calleſt him friend that betrayed thee, how graciouſly wilt thou honour them that do ſerve thee? But Queſt. Why doth he call him friend, whom he knew to be a divell? for as he was a man moſt innocent, and therefore deſerved not to be betrayed, ſo he was a God omniſcient, and therefore knew Iudas to be but a traytor, and he was not ignorant how Herod the fox intended to play Iudas part, to kill him in the cradle under the pretence of worſhip; neither could he forget how the divell ſought to perſwade him to approve the verity of his Godhead by the deſtruction of his manhood; and how the Scribes and Phariſees came to him with a Rabbi, Scimus quia verax es; Maſter, we know that thou art true, when their deſire was onely to intrap him in his ſpeech; and therefore why doth he ſo lovingly call him friend, whom he did ſo perfectly know to be his enemie?

John 6.70.

Mat. 2. 8.

Mat. 4. 6.

Mat. 22. 15.

Anſw. It is anſwered, that as the divell is called ἄνϑρωπϑ, a man, and Iudas is called διάβολϑ, a divell, ſo it muſt be underſtood with this difference, that the divell is ἐχθρϑ ἄνϑρωπϑ, the man that is an enemy, and Iudas is φίλϑ διάβολος, a divell that is a friend, becauſe he plaid the divell in the likeneſſe of a friend; and as Chriſt, to deceive the divell, was made man, and tooke our fleſh upon him, ſo Iudas, to betray Chriſt, was changed into a divell, and tooke that ſpirit into him, and yet did appeare in the ſhape of man, when he intended to play the divell; and therefore Chriſt calleth him, as he would ſeeme to be, and not as he knew him to be indeed: and the reaſon hereof is, that although he knew him to be his enemy, yet he deſireth to make him his friend, and therefore he goeth on to recall him to repentance; for in ſaying, wherefore cameſt thou? he ſheweth his compaſſion towards him; becauſe they be verba miſerentis, non querentis, words of pitying him, as if he had ſaid, alas poore wretched man, what doſt thou meane to do? to run from God unto the divell? for Chriſt knew well enough to what end he came: And therefore he addeth, Iudas, betrayeſt thou the Sonne of man with a kiſſe? Iudas is thy name, a name honourable and noble among the Iewes; and wilt thou now ſo ſtaine it, that it ſhall be for ever ſo odious among all Chriſtians, that not any one of them will be called by it, but diſdaine it as a moſt infamous appellation, even for ever; Et tradis, and wilt thou prove a Traitour, to betray, yea and to betray the Sonne of man, and that with a kiſſe? for if thou wouldſt

Why Chriſt calleth Iudas friend.

Aug. Ser. 3. post. pal. ser. 2. de pass. ex Bost. Tuta frequens & via sub amici falle. re nomen; tuta frequens & licentiosa via, crimen habet.

needs betray him, why so hypocritically with a kisse? O signum sacrilegum, O placitum fugiendum, ubi ab osculo incipitur bellum, & per pacis indicium pacis rumpitur sacramentum; O most horrible, and a most hatefull fact, when Warre is begunne with a kisse, and peace is broken, under the colour of Peace! to prove the proverbe true, Quicquid id est, timeo Danaos & dona ferentes; Whatsoever mine enemy doth, yet still I feare him, and I will love rather the wounds of my friends, then the kisses or the gifts of my foes, least they prove like the kisses of Iudas, or the mutuall gifts of Hector and Ajax, to be the chiefe instruments of their mutuall destruction, each by the gift that hee received of the other.

Esay 5.1. But, quid debuit, Nay, quid potuit ultra facere, quod non fecit? What could Christ doe more to recall this Iudas to repentance, then he did? O that he had had the grace, to understand it, and to make a right use of this blessed Sermon of our Saviour Christ; Iudas, betrayest thou the Sonne of man with a kisse? for he desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should repent and live, he desired not the death of Iudas.

Nothing can reclaime an obstinate sinner. Yet nothing could prevaile to doe him good; Te sævæ progenuere feræ; for he was so hardened in his wickednesse, that nothing could bring him to repentance; to shew the fearefull case of those men, that notwithstanding all our preaching will still goe on in their old usuall sinnefull courses, and never turne, untill with Iudas they come, (as it is said of him) into their owne places, that is, the pit of destruction.

Aug. Ser. 117. And therefore, as Cæsar said unto his sonne, as it is thought, Etiam tu Brute; So our Saviour, seeing not a stranger, but, Hominem pacis suæ, Iudas, one of the twelve Apostles, his companion, and his owne familiar friend, which did also eate at his Table, yea, and dipped his hands in the same dish with him, Magnificare supplantationem, to lift up his heele against his Master, his Maker, his Redeemer, Et officio sanguinem fundere, and to betray him so treacherously with a kisse, yea, and also to contemne this his gracious Sermon, as to make no use thereof, this must needs bee a griefe and a sorrow unto him, especially if we consider how he doth alwaies grieve more at our destruction, then he doth at his own sufferings, and most grievous Passions.

The impenitency of Iudas grieved Christ.

What wee should learne from the consideration of this Treason of Iudas. Now the practice of Iudas, to betray his Master with a kisse, should teach all Masters, not to trust every servant too farre; for as all is not honey that is sweet, nor all gold that glistereth; So is not every man a faithfull servant, that saith, Haile Master, God save you: And the reward of Iudas, to hang himselfe, to destroy himselfe, to damne his soule, and with that little gaine he got, to buy a field of bloud for others, and to purchase Hell for himselfe, should teach all servants, to take heede that they betray not their masters, and all men to beware of covetousnesse.

2 The flight of his followers. Secondly, Iudas had no sooner betrayed him, into the hands of sinners; but all his followers presently fled; his best beloved Iohn was now dejected, and the stoutest Peter did follow aloofe, and all the rest did basely hide their heads, and withdraw themselves cleane away: Not long before, he had fed them with his owne body, and refreshed their spirits with his most precious bloud; and yet now they all forsake him which should support him, and he was left alone in the hands of the barbarous souldiers: well he might looke (as the Prophet saith) for some to have pitty upon him; but looke while he would, and looke long inough, yet there was no man to helpe him, no, nor yet to pitty him; for I will smite the shepheard, and all the sheepe shall bee scattered: And what a griefe is it to a man, to see himselfe destitute of all friends, and forsaken of all his familiars, as if heaven and earth had conspired to leave him helpelesse, let any man judge?

Zach. 13.7.

3 The apprehending and binding of Christ. Thirdly, Iudas having given this signe, then the whole cohort; that is, the whole company of armed souldiers, consisting of 1000. men, as Vatablus saith, or of 55. footmen, and 56. horsemen, as others thinke, comes in the midst of the night, with swords swords and staves to take him, and to lay hold upon him, which they might have peaceably taken in the day time, teaching in the Temple, but that as Saint Ambrose saith, Factum congruit temporis, & personis, The fact, and the time, and the persons doe very well agree together; because that a worke of darkenesse, done by the children of darkenesse, was fittest to be done in the time of the greatest darkenesse: and when the souldiers had apprehended him, they presently bound his hands, and perhaps shackled his feete with chaines; because Iudas had willed them before, to hold him fast, and because they would hereby fore-shew, that he should die, they never using to bind any, but those whom they undoubtedly purposed to crucifie, and especially, because the Holy Ghost would hereby signifie, that as Theeves are wont to be bound, so our Saviour Christ was contented to bee bound, not for his owne, but for Adams theft; hee was bound for us, that wee might be loosed from the bonds of sinne; And being thus bound, they drew him by the haires of the head, as Leo seemes to affirme, when he saith, Trahunt volentem trahi, & sinentem sibi fieri quicquid sacerdotum instinctu popularis furor audebat; They drew him, that was willing to bee drawne, and contented to suffer them to doe unto him whatsoever pleased their malicious rage.

Ambr in Mat 26.

Ecce trahebatur passis ipsa comesa virgo cruribus
Virgil. Aeneid. l 1

Leo Ser 7. de pass.

And it may be, they dragged him through the brooke of Cedron, and so made him to drinke of the brooke in the way, as the Psalmist saith; And thus you see how they bound him which came to loosen them, as Saint Cyrill saith: ô Lord Iesus, let this thy binding satisfie thy Fathers wrath, that we be not bound hand and foot, and cast into that utter darkenesse, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth: And so much for the sufferings of Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane.

Psal. 109.

Cyril l. 11 in Iohn c. 37.

CHAP. V.

Of the sufferings of Christ before Annas, Caiphas, Herod, and Pilate.

SEcondly, having heard some part of Christs sufferings, which hee underwent in the Garden of Gethsemane, wee are now to see what he suffered before his Iudges; and first of what he suffered before Annas; for when they had bound him, they brought him first unto Annas, saith the Evangelist: but what was done here, it is not fully agreed; for Saint Augustine, and the common received opinion is, that he was examined here before Annas, and strooke upon the cheeke by the high Priests servant, and denied the first time by S. Peter; but Origen, Tolet, Iansenius, and others, thinke that here was nothing done unto him, but that the souldiers brought him to Annas in ludibrium, to be mocked & scoffed at, and that he, being the chiefe of the Sanhedrim, that is, of the 72. Elders of the Iewes, and Father-in-Law to Caiphas, and to be the High-Priest the yeare following, might assent unto their act, and perhaps give them some money for their paines in taking of him, and for their observance of him, to bring Christ unto him.

2 What Christ suffered before his Iudges.

First, before Annas.

Origen. tract 35. in Iob 2.

Tolet. annot 8 in John.

And I will not discusse which of these is truest, but receiving the last as most probable, I will passe to see what was done unto him in Caiphas house; and here I finde foure speciall parts in this Scene.

Secondly, what he suffered before Caiphas.

1. He is examined by the High-Priest.	These, as I take it, are the most memorable things, that were done before Caiphas.
2. He is strucken by the base servant.
3. He is denied by his owne Apostle.
4. He is most falsly accused by many false witnesses.

First, Here the Iudge of all the world stands to be examined by a wicked man, and he demaunds of Christ two speciall things.

Annas examineth Christ of two things.

{1. Of his Diſciples. 2. Of his Doctrine. } And

First, of his Diſciples.

First, of his Diſciples, hee asked perhaps how many he had, and where they were, or what was become of them; and to this our Saviour answered nothing; because he thought it inough for them to have himselfe, one for all; and though he might have juſtly said, the one hath ſold me, the reſt have forſaken me, and the ſtouteſt of them will, as thou maieſt ſee by and by, forſweare me, that hee ſaw me not, that he knew me not; yet he had rather ſay nothing then ſay evill of them; because, it is not good to ſpeake evill of the teachers of the people; and therefore Conſtantine was wont to ſay, that if he ſaw a Prieſt offend, he would rather cover it with his Gowne, then ſuffer the ſame to be revealed unto the people; Ne inde Laicus peccare licenter aggrediretur: Leſt others knowing the ſame, might thereby take the more liberty of ſinning.

Chriſt would not revcale his ſervants faults to ſhame them.

Theodor. l. 5. c. 11.

2 Of his doctrine two notes of a faithfull teacher. 1 Note. Iohn 3. 20.

Secondly, He is queſtioned about his Doctrine; and to this our Saviour anſwereth; and prefixing two ſpeciall notes of a faithfull teacher,

First, To teach publikely; for I ſpake openly in the world, and not in any ſecret corners, as one that hated the light, which is a great ſuſpition of evill; because, every one that doth evill, hateth the light:

2 Note.

Secondly, To doe it in the Church of God; for I taught in the Temple, and in the Synagogue, and in thoſe places that are appointed for Gods ſervice; further:

He ſaith nothing in particular, that might either commend or diſcommend the ſame; but he biddeth him aske thoſe that were there, about him, what he ſaid; for, it may be, he ſaw ſome ſtanding there, that were his hearers, and could teſtifie unto him what he taught; and he knew it was not the part of a wiſe man, either to praiſe or diſpraiſe himſelfe; for the rule is,

Cato in diſtich. de moribus.

Nec te collaudes, nec te culpaveris ipſum,
Hoc faciunt ſtulti, quos gloria vexat inanis.

And if he had ſpoken any thing to juſtify himself & his doctrine, he knew that muſt be to ſmall purpoſe; Quia illi, quem pro latrone traxerunt, detraxerunt fidem; because in bringing of him there, as a theef & a ſeducer of the people, they had made him of no credit, whatſoever he had ſaid: and therefore he ſaith, he were better to aske of them, which were of better credit with him then hee was, what hee taught; for theſe doe know what I have ſaid: You ſee the wiſedome of our Saviour, and the mildneſſe of his anſwer; Yet this ſerved not the turne to procure him any favour, any juſtice: For 2 How Malchus uſeth our Saviour Chriſt.

Secondly, Our Saviour having thus meekely and diſcreetly anſwered unto the demaund of the High-Prieſt, his ſervant ſtrooke him on the cheeke; it is moſt likely with his fiſt, as hard as he could; and it is thought, this ſervant that ſmote him, was Malchus, whoſe eare Chriſt had formerly healed; a poore beggerly ſlave, which ſheweth his great ingratitude, and proves true what Plautus ſaith; Si quid benefeceris, pluma levior eſt gratia; ſi quid malè feceris, plumbeas gerunt iras; if thou doſt good to any, thy thankes are as light as a feather; if ill, the hatred that thou ſhalt have ſhall be as heavie as lead; and ſuch is this baſe raskall, that like Æſopes Snake, would render unto Chriſt evill for good, and ſtrike our Saviour upon the cheeke; a thing noted by the Apoſtle to be moſt diſdainefull; and therefore Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith Alapa nihil ignominius, nihil contumelioſius; Nothing can be more diſgracefull, then to be ſmitten on the cheeke; and yet I read not of a word that the High-Prieſt ſaid to this wicked ſlave, but ſuffered him to doe this wrong to this innocent man, which was a greater fault in the Maſter then in the ſervant; becauſe the Maſter is bound to reſtraine the wickedneſſe of his ſervants, as much as poſſible lyeth in him; but we ſee, the indulgence of the Maſters doth incourage and imbolden wicked and moſt graceleſſe ſervants, to wrong and abuſe the deareſt Saints of God; they are ready to doe all wickednes, ſweare, ſteale, kill, and what you will for their Maſters; and as the Poet ſaith;

Chryſ. hom. 82. in Iohn.

Chryſ. hom. 2. de incomprehen. dei nat.

Sen

Seu verisare dolos, seu certa accumbere morti: And therfore lege talionis, their masters beare with them, and our Saviour suffers at the hands of both; Neither is this all that he suffereth here; For

Thirdly, he is denyed, by his first, chiefest and his stoutest Apostle; our Saviour foretold him, that he might prepare himself by prayer against this temptation; (Quia tela prævisa minus nocent) that he should denie him thrice; and yet, for all his boasting, that although all men should be offended because of him, yet would not he be offended, He doth here accumulate and heape one sinne upon another; For 3 How Peter denieth him. Of the manifold infirmities of S. Peter. Mat. 26.

First, he fled with the rest, and it may be, before the rest, and left our Saviour all alone.

First, he fled.

Secondly, he waxeth cold, not onely through the coldnesse of the night, but also through feare, which driveth away the bloud, and causeth the same to hide and to congeale it selfe, as it were in some secret corners, as the Poet saith:

Secondly, hee waxeth cold in love.

Gelidusque per ima cucurrit ossa tremor; A trembling feare makes all the members cold, and especially through want of love and affection unto Christ; Nam si amore in Deum corda inflammarentur, perparum aut nihil vis frigorum corporibus esset nocitura; For as carnall love driveth away all cold, as Leander saith unto Hero, So much more he that burneth with the heavenly love of Christ, will scarce feele any outward cold: and therefore Christ saith unto his beloved Spouse, My head is full of dew, and my lockes with the drops of the night; and yet because he loved her, he patiently bore it all: but Peter, it may be, hearing the wicked servants relating, how one had cast him downe to the ground, another had throwne him into the brooke of Cedron, and a third had smote him upon the cheeke, then begins to waxe pale, and fearefull, and to forsake his first love; and therfore he had need to warme his hands at the High-Priests fire, when his heart was cold in the love of God.

Virgil. Æneid. l. 2.

Frigora me postquam gelidi fluxere per artus,
Qui calet in cupido pectore, fugit amor.
Ovidius ep. Leand. Heron.

Thirdly, he denied Christ, with a lie, with an oath, with a curse and that presently, at the voice of a Woman, a silly wench, not any of the greatest Ladies, but a poore serving-maide that kept the doores: O quantum mutatus ab illo Hectore? What, dost thou Peter, deny Christ? who then will confesse him? for thou saidst, that he was the Sonne of the living God, and dost thou now sweare, thou knowest not whence he is? ô Simon, shall I call thee Bar-jonah, the sonne of a dove, or rather, Simon Petrus, a piece of a rocke, of a stonie heart, as the word signifieth; because of the foulenesse of thy fact,

Thirdly, he denieth and forswareth his Master.

Mat. 15. 16.

—When a maides easie breath
Should blow thee downe, and blast thy soule to death.

And yet Christ, though to humble him now, that was so arrogant before, and to teach us to be afraid to fall; for if so great a pillar fell, how much easier may wee be hurled downe if we be not wary? and to erect our hope, that if with this Apostle through infirmity, we doe fall, we should not despaire with Iudas, but still upon our repentance trust in God; yet, as formerly, when he walked upon the water, and began to sinke, Christ upheld him, with an outstretched arme; so now, when he walked through the pathes of death, and was well-nigh swallowed in the gulfe of perdition, Christ looketh upon him with the eyes of mercy, and saveth his soule by his compassionate grace; for hee causeth the Cocke to crow, the dumbe beast, like Balams Asse, to reprove the iniquity of the Apostle; and as not respecting his owne indignity, so much as his servants infelicity, hee looketh backe on him, that had forgot himselfe, and thereby reviving his memory, to thinke upon his masters words, he sent him out to weepe bitterly, that so hee might restore him mercifully.

Why Christ suffered Saint Peter for to fall.

Mat. 14. 31.

Numb. 22. 28.

How mercifully Christ preserveth S. Peter.

Fourthly, he is falsly accused, and charged with the things that he never knew, that he never said; for they sought false witnesses (for true witnesses they could have none) and there came many witnesses against him, but they could not agree, some saying one thing, some another; yet, at last comes two sonnes of Belial, children of their Father the divell, that perverting our Saviours sence, and changing his 4 How Christ is falsely accused of his enemies.

Mark.14.58.

his words, said, they heard him saying, that he could destroy that Temple made with hands, and build another made without hands in three daies; then the High-Priest adjured him by God, to tell them what he was; and when Christ did meekely and mildely say the truth, he furiously rent his cloathes and said, hee blasphemed against God, as if God could, or would blaspheme himselfe, or against himselfe; then all the foolish Clearkes of this wicked Priest did say, Amen.

——Et quæ sibi quisq; timebat
Vnius in miseri exitium conversa tulere:

How all consent to crucifie Christ.

And all of them approving what they knew not, as a just reward for saving many of their wretched lives, they all consent to put him to an accursed death; and then followeth their acclamation, Crucifie him, crucifie him; their saying is doubled and redoubled, he must be put to death; there is nothing else will satisfie these bloud-thirsty men; Rupertus saith, their malice was so great towards him, that they would have reduced him to nothing, or have changed him into another man; Whereupon it followed, that they changed his skin, when they whipped him, they changed his coate, when they mocked him, they changed his estate, when they crowned him, they changed his name, when they said behold the man, they changed his family, when they gave him theeves for his companions, and they changed his life, when they put him to death; such were the injuries they did unto him, the confusion they put upon him, and the false testimonies they bare against him, and so much must he suffer, though he deserves so little; and therefore, he is now to be kept by the base Sargiants and the most barbarous Souldiers, as a condemned man; and to make themselves merry, as at a banquet of Wine, or as if they had beene at an enterlude play, to passe away this tedious night, tedious indeed and dolorous unto him, they doe interchangeably sport at him; and first they mocke him; secondly, they beate him; thirdly, they spit in his glorious face, and so make that face, which the Angels desire to behold, to become so deformed by reason of their blowes and spittles, that it seemed as in a leprosie, and as having neither forme nor beauty; fourthly, they hoodwinke him; fiftly, they beate him with their hands and fists; sixtly, they scoffingly say, prophesie unto us who hath strooken thee: O sweet Iesus Christ!

How the Iewes changed all things in Christ. Rupert. in Iohan.

What grievous things Christ suffered after he was condemned by Caiphas. Esay 53.4.

Virgil Æneid. l. 2.

Quis cladem illius noctis, quis funera fando
Explicet aut possit lachrymis æquare dolorem?

Who is able to expresse thy bitter sufferings, to declare thy heavy thoughts, and to shew forth all thy griefe, which thou endurest throughout all that long and tedious night? And yet, though he could have easily stayed their fury, and have suddenly strucken them all starke dead, with the least word of his mouth, hee opened not his mouth, but he did patiently suffer whatsoever they did violently offer unto him: And when they had done what they would, they consulted and consented to send him unto Pilate.

3 What Christ suffered before Pilate.

How and whereof Christ was accused before Pilate.

And here before Pilate they doe accuse him of two speciall things.

1 Of impiety against God.

First, Of his impiety against God; because (as they said) they found him perverting the Nation and people of the Iewes, and teaching them strange and pernitious doctrines, breaking the Sabboth, condemning their traditions, and no waies observing Moses his Law.

2 Of iniquity against men.

Secondly, Of iniquity against man, no lesse then high Treason against their Liege-Lord and soveraigne Emperour; because hee denied to pay tribute unto Cæsar, and said that himselfe was King.

Acts 5.

How fully they seeke to incense Pilate against Christ.

And the more to induce Pilate to beleeve them, and to incense him against Christ, they said that he began in Galilee; because Galilee had brought forth many seditious and rebellious persons, as Iudas Galilæus, Theudas, and others; and because Pilate had formerly shewed, that hee could not indure the Galileans, not onely because they were under the jurisdiction of Herod, which till that time was a profest enemy unto Pilate, but especially because they had so provoked Pilate, that hee caused the bloud of many of them to bee mingled with their sacrifices.

And

And so they joyne subtilty and iniquity both together; for a subtiller way they could not invent, and a greater iniquity they could not effect; for he truely explained Moses, wherein their sophisticall Rabbies and Pharisaicall Doctors had most falsly corrupted him; and he did not onely bid them give unto Cæsar what belonged unto Cæsar; but he paid tribute unto Cæsar, both for himselfe and for his servants: and therefore as they had most maliciously accused him unto Caiphas, so herein they have most falsely slandered him unto Pilate.

How false was their accusation of him.

But as the darnels may passe for wheate, untill they be sifted; so falshoods may carry the colour of truth, untill they be discussed; and therefore Pilate examineth the matter, and in the carriage of this businesse he doth something well, and in many things ill as I have shewed at large in my Treatise of the Resolution of Pilate, where I referre my Reader, for his fuller satisfaction in this point.

Resolution of Pilate.

Now Pilate having played his part, and understanding (as I shewed you before) that he was of Galilee, he sends him unto Herod; and there the Evangelists say, that Herod and his men of Warre set him at naught, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe; and Christ, though they questioned with him of many things, yet answered nothing: and therefore they derided his silence, and exposed him to the greater laughter; but why so? for men in court, are wont to scoffe at such as are illfavoured in their personage, filthie in their doings, foolish in their speeches, and proud in their conversation, and therefore doe presume more then they deserve, and deserve lesse then they have; and who dare say there was any of these in Christ? for his personage was very beautifull, his conversation very holy, his words exceeding wise, his doctrine very pure, and his workes exceeding vertuous; and yet for all this, he must be made the laughing stocke for all; and the Souldiers, that had formerly imbrued their hands in the blood of the innocents, do now most impiously batter and buffet the Sonne of God; and they disgorge their filthiest foame upon his most glorious face; and to increase their owne sport and his griefe, Induunt eum veste alba, they arrayed him with a white glittering, and a gorgeous raiment.

4 What was done to Christ before Herod. Vbi Jesu non respondebat, ibi ut ovis silebat, hoc est, sicut agnus innocuis non aperuit os suum; ubi vero respondebat ibi sicut pastor docebat. Aug. in Iohan. What are the chiefest things, that are scoffed.

And so, against their wils, they doe herein, after a mysticall manner, sufficiently testifie, both the excellent dignity, and the most innocent probitie of the man; for as Cicero saith, Quod color albus præcipuè decorus Deo est, That the whitest colour is most agreeable to the highest God; So hee appeared many times in white, but never in any other colour; and therefore, not onely the Wise man saith, Let thy garments bee alwaies white, but also the very Saints of Heaven are said to bee clothed in long white robes, and Iuvenal saith, Sufficiunt tunicæ summis ædilibus albæ; that white robes are fittest for the greatest Peeres, even for Kings and Cæsars, saith Iansenius; And the white colour is the chiefest note of joy & innocency; for the Poet wishing for joy, saith, Sumatur fatis decolor alba meis: And, as the ancients by letters did expresse joy or griefe, life or death, as Y to shew the patterne of our humane life, the lower part signifying youth, which is uncertaine which way it will goe, and the upper part, on the right side, the way of vertue, and on the left side the way of vice; and therefore Persius saith of this Letter,

The mystery of clothing Christ in white, expressed.

Cicero l. 2. de legibus.

Revel. 4.

Iuvenal in Satyr.

White what it signifieth.

Cicero pro Milone meminit A literæ salutaris, C autem tristis.

Et tibi, quæ Sameos deduxit litera ramos,
Surgentem dextro monstravit limite callem.

Which one translateth thus.

The branches of the letter first in Samea found,
Of mans life doth shew the high way and ground:

The mystery of Y the Pythagorian letter.

And ⊖, which hath a dart in the middle, was the Character of death, and and therefore was wont to bee set by the Iudges, as a marke upon the heads of those that were condemned to die; whereupon the Poet saith, O multum ante alias infælix litera Theta; And so Tau was the letter of life, so intimated by Ezechiel, and so expressed by the Gentiles, and used as a marke on them that were to be preserved alive; even so they did use to expresse the same things by divers colours,

How the Ancients by letters and colours did use to expresse divers things.

colours, as white to be the ſigne of innocency and abſolution, and blacke to bee the token of guiltineſſe and condemnation, whereupon Ovid ſaith,

Ovid. Met. l. 15.

Mos erat antiquis niveis atriſq́, lapillis,
His damnare reos, illis abſolvere culpa,

The faſhion was in ancient times,
By blacke or white to expreſſe our crimes.

That there are foure ſorts of whiteneſſe.

But you muſt note that there are foure ſorts of whiteneſſe,

{1. Fantaſticall. 2. Superficiall. } { 3. Naturall but changeable 4. Native and unchangeable } in the ſubject wherein it reſideth; For

1 Fantaſticall whiteneſſe.

1. The divell may have a fanaticall and fantaſticall whiteneſſe, when hee transformeth himſelfe into an angell of light; but, as the man, which had a blemiſh of white in his eye, was debarred from the Prieſthood, and was reſembled to the Owle, of whom the naturaliſts yeeld this reaſon, why ſhee cannot ſee in the day time, becauſe of the exceeding great whiteneſſe ſhe hath in her eyes, which doth ſo ſcatter the ſight, that the optiques thereof cannot perfectly diſcerne the cleereſt objects; ſo they which have but ſuch fanaticall purity, and are not cleanſed from their ſins, are to be excluded from Gods preſence.

The Owle why ſhe cannot ſee in the day time.

2 Superficiall whiteneſſe.

2. The ſuperficiall white is, like the painting of a ſepulcher, a whited wall, faire without, like a guilded potſheard, but within full of lothſome rottenneſſe.

3 Naturall whiteneſſe but changeable.

3. The naturall white, but changeable, is like that man, which is borne faire, but is afterward become blacke or Æthiopian-like, by the ſoyle and tawnineſſe of the ſunne; and this notifieth them, that begin in the beauty and brightneſſe of the ſpirit, but end in the frailty and filthineſſe of the fleſh.

4 The native and unchangeable whiteneſſe.

4. The native and unchangeable whiteneſſe is that, which we ſee in the peereleſſe diamond, which will ſhine in a dunghill, and the leaſt piece thereof will give a luſter, though it ſhould be ſevered from the whole; and this was the whiteneſſe of our Saviour Chriſt, wherein hee was pure and milke-white, in all that ever we can imagine, as eſpecially

Chriſt white in all things,

1 Conception. 2 Birth.

1. In his Conception, being conceived by the Holy Ghoſt.

2. In his birth, being borne of an undefiled Virgin.

3 Life. Iames 3.

3. In his life, as having no guile in his mouth, and he is a perfect man that offends not in his tongue, ſaith the Apoſtle.

4 Doctrine.

4. In his doctrine, as correcting all the impure gloſſes of the formall Phariſees, that had corrupted moſt of Gods truthes; and ſo he was pure and white in all things elſe and in nothing tainted or tawned throughout his whole life,

And therefore certainely theſe things, that they ſhould clothe him in white, before they ſend him unto Pilate backe againe,

——Non ſine numine divum,
Eveniunt.——

How Gods providence diſpoſed theſe things.

do apparantly ſhew that they were ſecretly directed herein by divine providence, and declared plainely againſt themſelves, that Chriſt ſhould rather be abſolved, as an innocent, then condemned for a malefactor,

Yet all this would not ſerve, but as he was poſted from Annas to Caiphas, from Caiphas to Pilate, and from Pilate to Herod; ſo now he muſt be returned to Pilate once againe: And although the former Scenes were Tragicall enough; yet were they nothing to theſe that follow; for now begins thoſe dolefull Acts, which prove that ſaying to be moſt falſe;

——Nullum caruit exemplo nefas,

How no age did ever paralell this villany done to Chriſt.

No villanous deed doth want the like, but preſidents may be found as bad as it; for if you aske the daies of old, and ſearch all the Stories of the whole world, ſince the day that it was firſt created, yet ſhall you never be able, to ſhew me ſuch indignities offered to any man, as was here done unto the Son of God; for now Pilate by the approvement of Herod, and the meſſage of his owne wife, who, as the Poet ſaith of Caſſandra,

Tunc

(Tunc etiam fatis aperit Cassandra futuris Ora dei jussu, non unquam credita Teucris.)

Virgil. Æneid. 2.

Did now beginne to Prophesie; nay, to testifie of the truth of Christ his innocency; and therefore presently sent, and earnestly advised her husband, to have nothing to do with that just man; yea and shewed a very good reason for it, because shee had suffered many things that very day, because of him; I say, Pilate hereby perceiving his innocency, and fearing his Deity, and therefore seeking to loose him, deviseth a cruell way to satisfie these bloody Iewes, and to justifie Christ, and so to let him goe; for stripping him out of all his clothes, he caused sixe hangmen, sixe varlets, saith S. Hierome, to scourge him, and whip him, while they could; whereof two whipped him with rods of thornes; and when they had wearied themselves, another two whipped him with ropes, or whipcords tyed and knotted like a Carters whip; and when they were tyred, the other twaine scourged off his very skin with wyres, or little chaines of iron; and the number of his stripes, (as some report it) amount to 5400. or as others say, to 5370. or at the least according to the number of the Band of Souldiers, to 660. a scourging able to kill any man, and would have killed him, but that he was preserved by the God-head to indure, and to suffer a more shamefull death; and when he was thus scourged, the Souldiers platted a Crowne of thornes, and put it upon his head; a goodly Crowne for the King of Kings; for I read of many sorts of Crownes, as of the Triumphall, Laurall, Navall, Murall, and such like, but never till this did I reade of a Crowne of thornes; for this shamefull and this dolefull Diademe was made like a Crowne to delude him, and it was made of thornes to torment him; for it bored his head with two and seaventy wounds, as Osorius saith, and this was to make satisfaction, as among other sins, so likewise pro spinis disserendi, for the thornie questions of our curious heads; and because our eyes are open to behold vanity, and oftentimes filled full of adulteries, as the Apostle speaketh, therefore his eyes were blind-folded; and his adversaries buffeting him, said, prophesie unto us who smote thee? and then they put upon him a purple robe, and scoffingly said, Haile King of the Iewes, and spitefully smote him with their hands.

How Pilate's wife iustified Christ.

Bosquier. de pass. dom. pag. 830.

Cesterus med. 14.

How grievously Christ was scourged.

How hee was Crowned with thornes.

Et compunxerites coronam & stimulenies aguras. Amb. in Luc. 7. lect. 23.

Osorius de Passione Domini.

Cicero de fin. l.

1 Pet. 2. 24.

Luke 22. 64. & Mat. 26. 68.

And after they had thus lashed him almost unto death, and most cruelly divided those Azure channels of his guiltlesse bloud, they bring him out, it may be, by the haire of the head, and expose him to the publike view of the scornefull company; and Pilate saith unto them, Ecce homo, Behold the man; Behold, I say, not your King, to provoke you the more against him, nor yet the Sonne of God, which you say he maketh himselfe to be; for if it were so, he might have easily rescued himselfe out of his enemies hands; But behold a poore silly, miserable, distressed man; and see how he lieth disfigured with wounds, weltring and panting in a crimson River of his owne bloud; and let this sufficient, yea, more then sufficient punishment, suffice to satisfie your rage against him; Quia homo, qui in homine calamitoso est misericors, meminit sui; Because a man pitying an afflicted distressed man, doth thereby shew hee is mindfull of himselfe, who may fall into the same case, that another man is fallen into.

Squallentem barbam, & concretos sanguine crines vulnera, illa gerens, quæ circum plurima muros accepit patrios. Virgil. l. 2. Æneid.

To what end Pilate brought out Christ.

And therefore, let us behold in contemplation, the countenance of this man; Behold, the faireſt among men, being both white and ruddie, the chiefest among tenne thousands, his head being as the most fine gold, his eyes as the eyes of Doves, by the Rivers of waters, his cheekes as a bedde of spices, and his lippes like Lillies dropping sweet smelling Myrrhe.

That we should ever contemplate, how Christ stood before the people in his Robes and Crowne of thornes.

I will not here mention the portrayture, which Publius Lentulus sent unto the Senate of Rome, that he was gracious in aspect, of a smooth brow, of an eburne haire, long and waving like a Nazarite, with a parted beard, and the whole frame of his blessed body so incomparably faire, beyond all the men that ever were, both in feature and favour; for I am not ignorant how apocryphall that description of his lineaments is among sacred writers; and I am not a little sorry to see how grossely many men doe abuse themselves in mis-painting and mis-limming this Lord of life; but as the Scriptures hath decyphered him, we may lawfully behold

P. Lentulus his description of Christ.

Psal.45.2.

How perfect Christ was in all respects.

Psal.45.8.

him, with the eyes of reverence; and they tell us he was fairer then the sonnes of men; which though it be mistically understood; yet is not the literall interpretation to be rejected; for as he was gracious in speech, his lips being full of grace, and valiant in his acts, for hee was mighty in his renowne, and powerfull in his proceedings, for his arrowes piereed the very hearts of his enemies, and magnificent in his whole deportment, for all his garments smell of Myrrhe, Aloes, and Cassia; So no doubt but he had the beauty of perfection, and the perfection of feature; nullus in egregio corpore nævus erat; and yet he that was so beautifull to behold, so fabre in his speech, so powerfull in his workes, so perfect in his waies, so sweet in his behaviour, so ready to shew mercy, so pittifull unto the poore, and so amiable in every thing; behold and see how lavish and prodigall are these prophane and sacrilegious Cannibals of his most divine and sacred bloud, and how he stands here before these wicked Judges, to be judged for us, wicked men; his strength fainting, his heart panting, and his hands bound, that hee could by no meanes wipe off those flouds of teares and bloud that trickled downe his cheekes, and flowed from all the pores and passages of his precious Body; And let this consideration move us to compassionate him, to condemne them them that did it, and especially to detest that (that is, our sinne) which was the onely cause of all this his dolefull sorrowes.

Cant.5.10.

A threefold red.

Esay 63.1.

Cant.2.1.

The holy Church in the Canticles contemplating of her wellbeloved, said, he is white and ruddie, that is, white for the innocency of his life, and ruddie for the bitternesse of his passion; but we find a threefold red, Scarlet, Rosie, and Purple; and Christ was ruddie in each respect; for the Prophet Esay saith, Who is he that commeth from Edom with red garments from Bozra? that is, Scarlet-red: and Christ speaking of himselfe, saith, I am the rose of the field and the Lillie of the vallies; there is rose-all red; and the Evangelist tells us that his enemies put upon him a purple garment; and al this was to shew his bloody sufferings, in his life, in his death, in himselfe, in his members; and this rednesse of Christ was prefigured in the red sea which saved Israel, in the red cowe that was offered in their sacrifices, in the red cord hung out at Rahabs window, and the red thred about Zarahs arme; and all this was to shew unto us, that by much sufferings and many tribulations wee must enter into the kingdome of heaven; because our Scarlet sinnes and bloodie offences doe require the blood of Christ to make attonement for them; and therefore the Apostle saith, that without blood there is no remission.

Passion of Christ how prefigured.

Heb.9.22.

Parcere prostratis scit nobilis ira leonis; at lupus & turpes instans mortientibus ursis, & quæcunq; minor nobilitate fera est. Ovid.

But to returne unto the Iewes, that most envious and malicious people, the more Pilate did to appease them, the more they were inraged against him; for seeing how Pilate sought to loose him, they had taught that unstable multitude of ungratefull people, for all the good works that he did unto them, healing their sicke, restoring their dead, and feeding their soules with the foode of life, to cry out with one consent, Away with him, away with him; crucifie him, crucifie him; And the chiefest of them doe with a threefold argument urge Pilate to condemne our Saviour Christ.

They urge a threefold argument to move Pilate to crucifie Christ.

1 Their Law. Levit.24. Iohn 19.7.

First, That they had a Law, and by their Law he must die; because he maketh himselfe the Sonne of God; so the ignorant and the arrogant Pharisees, and the Doctors of their Law, doe accuse the Author, and the Publisher of the Law; not knowing that ancient rule, Ejus est abrogare, cujus est condere legem, He may lawfully abolish, which hath the power to establish any Law.

2 The friendship of Cæsar. Iohn.19.12.

Secondly, They threaten him, that if he let him loose, he is no friend to Cæsar; a most forcible, though not infallible reason; for who would not then, as the case stood, have almost condemned any man, rather then to be accused by so many audacious impudent men, of high Treason against Cæsar?

3 Their ingaging for him. Mat.27.25.

Thirdly, They doe engage themselves for him, saying, Let his blood be upon us, and upon our Children; Doe thou the deede, let him bee condemned, and if thou feareſt any thing, we are willing to undergoe the danger; let the vengeance of his bloud light on us, and on our Children for ever.

Pilates considerations.

Then Pilate having attentively heard, did most diligently consider al these things. And First,

First, Musing whether he was the Sonne of God or not, He beganne to feare both for what he had already done, in scourging and deluding him, and what he was presently to doe, To passe sentence upon the Sonne of God; for hee assured himselfe, the gods would revenge all wrongs, especially done against themselves; Mezentius felt it for a lesser fault then this; for hee was thrust downe to Hell for saying, The damned spirits should helpe him, if that the gods would not assist him; And therefore he desires Christ to tell him, Quo sanguine cretus, From whence hee was: But to this our Saviour gives him none answer; for to what end should he answer? because hee had already made knowne unto them that hee was the Sonne of God, and that his Father and hee were all one; And this was the chiefest motive, that moved them to convent him, and perswaded them so earnestly to seeke for to condemne him: Neither would hee answer, saith Athanasius, Ne, si respondisset, timiditate & formidine mortis id feciſſe videretur; Least if hee had done so, hee might be thought to have done it for feare of death, and to preserve his life; Or (as others thinke) hee would not answer, least by his eloquence hee should have escaped death; insomuch that Pilate, who unjustly condemned him, justly admired this, that he, which was wont to open his mouth in Parables, and to teach others the way unto eternall life, would not at this time open his mouth to speake one word for himselfe to save his life.

1 Consideration.

Discite iustitiam moniti, & non temnere divos.

Flectere si nequeo superos Acheronta movebo Virgil. Æneid.

Athanas. de passione & cruce.

Why Christ would not answer Pilate, whence he was.

Secondly, Pilate being much affraid, to bee thought an enemy unto Cæsar, and being most willing to please the people, as the Evangelist noteth, hee determined to deliver him to bee crucified; And these were the motives that caused Pilate to condemne our Saviour Christ; and these cause many a man to sin, when we feare man more then God, and are desirous rather to please the people, then to discharge our consciences; from which two fearefull things, good Lord deliver every faithfull soule.

2 Consideration. Marke 15.15.

What moved Pilate to deliver Christ to be crucified.

Thirdly, Because Pilate knew, that for envie the Iewes delivered him to be crucified, and his own conscience by many arguments testified unto him, how unjustly he condemned that just man; therefore, that it might happen unto the Iewes according as they had concluded themselves, His bloud be upon us and upon our children, He taketh water, and washeth his hands, saying, I am innocent from the bloud of this just person; See ye to it; And then he gave sentence, that it should bee as they required, that IESVS CHRIST SHOVLD BE PRESENTLY CRVCIFIED. Ah senceleſſe sinnefull man, a man voide of wisedome, a man destitute of understanding, who was more then blinded with the most palpable blindnesse to commit such an horrible sinne against thy God, and to condemne life to death! Alas, what availeth it thee, to wash thy hands in water, and to defile thy heart with bloud? for how shalt thou answer this? not onely to condemne an innocent, Sed & iisdem labijs illum condemnare quibus pronuntiaveras innocentem? But also with the same lippes to condemne him as guilty, which even now had pronounced him guiltlesse: Surely God may say to thee, as to all those Iudges that follow thy steppes, to make a long speech to justifie themselves, and in few words to condemne the innocent, Out of thine owne mouth will I condemne thee, O thou evill servant, and I will justly condemne thee to eternall death, because thou hast unjustly condemned an innocent man to death: O consider this, yee that forget God, and ye that be called gods on Earth; cleanse your hearts from all evill, and let not your hands deale with wickednesse; so shall you bee innocent from the great offence. And so you see what the Iudge of all the World suffered, before these petty Iudges of this World.

3 Consideration.

Mat. 27.24. The poore shift of Pilate to excuse himselfe.

The sentence of Christs condemnation.

Luke 19.22.

CHAP. VI.

What Chriſt ſuffered in Golgotha, the place where he was crucified.

3 What Chriſt ſuffered in Golgotha. Gen.22.6. 2 Sam.11.14.

THirdly Pilate having paſſed ſentence upon Chriſt to be crucified, the Souldiers take him, and laying his Croſſe, a heavy Croſſe upon his ſhoulders, as Iſaac carried the wood wherewith himſelfe ſhould be ſacrificed, or as Uriah carried the Letters of his owne death, they compelled him to carrie it ſo long as he was able to ſtand under it; then meeting Simon of Cyrene, comming from his perambulation in the fields, they make him carry that Croſſe of Chriſt unto the place of his execution; and then placing the ſame in Golgotha, which was the place where Adam was buried, (as S. Ambroſe thinketh) they nayled and faſtened Chriſt unto it, upon that very day of the weeke that Adam was created; and (as is thought) he was hanged upon this Tree, upon the very ſame houre of the day as Adam did eate of the forbidden Tree: And here wee muſt conſider two eſpeciall things,

Amb.l.5.Ep.19.

Two things conſidered upon the Croſſe. 1 His ſufferings. 2 His paine

Tantum diſtentus ſum, ut corpore nudo in modum tympanica pellis diſtẽto, facile poſſim omnia oſſa mea dinumerari. Bern.de paſſ.c.7.

Death of Chriſt moſt odious in foure reſpects Boſquier.de paſſione Domini.p.847. in fol.

1. The grievous things that he ſuffered.
2. The gracious words that he uttered.

} And

For the firſt, they ſtretched his body, as Saint Bernard ſaith, and then they nailed him to the Croſſe, which was a grievous torment unto any, but eſpecially unto him; becauſe his body of all other men, was the moſt tender, as being onely ſhaped of a Virgins ſubſtance, without any commixture of the male nature; and yet the moſt ſenſible parts of this tender body, muſt be bored and mangled by his cruell enemies; for his feete, that afore were waſhed with Maries teares, muſt now bee teared with iron nayles; and thoſe bleſſed hands, that had wrought ſo many wonderous workes, muſt now be faſtened unto this wooden Croſſe; and there he muſt hang untill he die; Horrendum dictu, A moſt odious and a moſt grievous death, and that in foure reſpects.

1 An accurſed death. Deut 21. Gal.3.13. Tripartit.hiſt.l.1. c.9.

Firſt, Becauſe it was an accurſed death, ſo eſteemed by man, and ſo denounced by God himſelfe, where he ſaith, Curſed is every one that hangeth upon a Tree: And therefore Conſtantine the Great and good, made a Law, that no Chriſtian ſhould be crucified upon a Croſſe.

2 A ſhamefull death. Metellus his wiſe anſwer. Eſay 55.12.

Secondly, becauſe it was an ignominious and a ſhamefull death, inflicted chiefly upon thoſe ſlaves and ſervants, that either falſly accuſed, or treacherouſly conſpired their Maſters death; and it was never impoſed upon free men, unleſſe it were for ſome hainous and notorious crimes, as robbery, murther, ſedition, rebellion, or ſuch like: Metellus challenged by Sertorius to fight a ſingle combate with him, and to determine all that warre by the fall of the vanquiſhed, anſwered, it was not fitting for a Captaine to die a Souldiers death; and yet here behold a greater then Metellus, a greater then Iohn Baptiſt, that was greater then any of the Prophets, hee is numbered with the tranſgreſſors, and the moſt glorious amongſt the ſons of men is put to the moſt baſe and ignominious death.

3 A painefull death. Socrates Hiſt.l.1. c.17.

Thirdly, Becauſe it was a moſt painefull death; for that they were faſtened to the Croſſe, not with any little nayles, but with bigge purpoſely made nayles, that might hold them ſure and faſt enough unto the Croſſe; ſo bigge were the nayles that pierced Chriſt his hands and feete, that being found, they were found ſufficient to make a bridle and a Helmet, as Socrates ſaith; and then the whole waight of their bodies, hanging by theſe parts, made their paine intollerable, and killed them at length without any deadly wound: And therefore Cicero, that moſt eloquent man, which wanted no words to expreſſe any thing elſe, when he came to conſider of this accurſed death, was brought to that paſſe, to that non-plus, as to ſay, Quid dicam in crucem tollere? What ſhall I ſay of that cruell and moſt painfull ſhamefull death of the Croſſe?

Cicero Orat 7 in Ver.

4 A ſlow and a lingring death. Ovid.in Epiſt.

Fourthly, Becauſe it was a ſlow and a lingering death; for that (as the Poet truely ſaith) Mors ſæ minus pœna quam mora mortis habet, To be long in paine, is worſe then then death; a soone dispatched riddance out of paine, being a great favour unto a languishing life; and although in other deaths, they should be quickly dispatched, and soone rid out of all their paine, yet here they hanged, either till their bloud distilled by little and little out of those wounds that were made in their hands and feete, or till they died with the extremity of hunger; unlesse in pittie their tormentors would by violence hasten their much desired death, by a butcherly breaking off their legges, and so dismembring of their tortured bodies, as they did unto those two theeves, that were crucified with our Saviour; And this was the death, the accursed, base, servile, ignominious, and most painefull death, that our Saviour Christ was put unto: It is reported of Aristides, that hee dying by the bite of a Weesell, said, that his death would have beene more pleasant and more acceptable unto him, if he had died more honourably, by the clawes of a Lyon, or a Libbard, and not by the teeth of such a contemptible beast; And what a griefe was it unto the Sonne of God, to be put unto this, I know not whether more shamefull, or more painefull death?

The death of Aristides and what he said of it. Ælian. de var. Hist. l. 13. c. 4.

And besides, it is worth the observing, that they crucified him then, and at that time, when he had delivered their Fathers out of the Land of Egypt, out of the House of Bondage; In commemoration of which benefit, their Passeover was to be celebrated, and a great concourse of people was then ever present at Ierusalem: And further, they did not onely exclude him out of their Citie, and put him to death without their gates, as S. Paul noteth, but they did also consort him with the wicked, and crucified him betwixt two theeves; so cruelly they did deale, and so basely they did esteeme of him.

All circumstances doe aggravate the griefe of Christ upon the Crosse.

Secondly, when a man would have thought by this time, they had beene sufficiently drunke with the bloud of innocency, and their malice having swallowed down so deep a draught, this should now quench their thirst of cruelty; yet behold, where invention failed to finde out such exquisite torments, as might crucifie his body to satisfie their desires, they use their tongues to supply the defects of their hands; for now, after they had thus nayled him to the Crosse, and when his spirits began to faile him, and he even readie to give up the ghost, when as, had he beene but a man, or not a man, but some poore dumbe creature, it might have drawne water from a heart of stone, and wringed out some teares from the eyes of flint, to have seene him in this extremity of insupportable anguish, they begin to revile him with scoffing taunts, and to shoote out their arrowes even bitter words, and he, good man, in stead of the comfort of pitying him, which we use to shew unto the vilest Malefactors in such extremities, and which is some kind of satisfaction unto the sufferer, findes his friends forsaking him, not daring to say, Alas for him; and he seeth his enemies deriding him in the middest of his sorrowes, and shaking their heads at him, and saying, O thou dissembling and disloyall wretch, thou savest others, but thy selfe thou canst not save; thou canst destroy the Temple, and build it againe in three daies; but thou canst not come downe from the Crosse, to preserve thy life; for if thou beest the Son of God, come downe from the Crosse, and we will beleeve in thee: But to this S. Ambrose answereth, O stulte & cæce grex sacerdotũ, nunquid impossibile erat ei, de parvo stipite ligni descendere, qui descendit è cælorum altitudine? O fooliish, blind, and senceleese Flock of Priests, do you think it unpossible for him to come downe from a little piece of wood, which came downe from the height of Heaven? or do you think, that your bonds, or nayles, or fastening of him to the Crosse, were able to detaine him there, when as the Heaven & all the Host of Heaven, were not able to hold him from descending thence and from this ascending to the Crosse? for he came not to free himselfe from death, but to deliver himself to death that he might free us from eternall death: And therfore he patiently suffered all paine, all contempts, and all disgraces; yet they still went on, from one degree of scoffes unto another; for when he, in a most disconsolate state, cried, Eloi, Eloi, Lamasabachthani. They doe in a most barbarous scoffing manner say, Stay, and see if Elias will come to helpe him: And thus was he flouted and derided by all that beheld him, by the Souldiers, by the High-Priests, by them that passed by, yea, a His revilings;

The Iewes voide of all pittie.

How they scoffed at Christ upon the Crosse,

Why Christ came not downe from the Crosse.

Non venit ut se liberaret, qui sub servitute non erat, sed ut nos de servitute redimeret. Amb in 27. Mat.

Mat 27.46.49.

by the very Theeves that were hanged with him; And what is this, but to add an unspeakeable sorrow unto an insufferable paine; and so (as Salomon saith) to grieve him more and more, that was already too much afflicted at the heart.

3 His drinke. How they gave him vinegar to drinke.

Thirdly, When he most lamentably, in the middest of this hotte and grievous conflict with Satan, sinne, and the wrath of God, cried, I thirst; they most despightfully give him vinegar to drinke; a sweet drinke for a dying man, to augment his griefe, but not to quench his thirst.

4 His stripping. How they divided his garments.

Fourthly, They take those blessed Garments, wherewith he had wrought many a Heavenly miracle, and before his face they divide the same among the wicked and most barbarous bloudy Souldiers. And

5 How Christ being dead, they still raged against him

Fiftly, When he was quite dead, their malice still remained alive, so that hee might justly say,

——— Nec mors mihi finiet iras
Sæva, sed in manes manibus arma dabant.

They did most furiously rage against his harmelesse Ghost; for though they saw that he was already dead, yet still they persecute him;

Et miles validis ingentem viribus hastam,
In latus contorsit.

And one of those immane and bloudy Souldiers, pierced his side with such a a mighty speare, that it made so deepe a wound, as that Thomas might well put his hand into the same: And thus did our Saviour suffer in Golgotha, in the fields of Calvery.

Our Saviour suffered 1 Of all men. Divers observable things to bee considered.

